"Here are two causes of demurrer, one assigned originally, and one now at the bar, that this is not a proper bill, as it claims a sole right of fishery against five lords of [74] manors, because *they ought to be considered as distinct trespassers, and that there is no general right that can be established against them, nor any privity between the plaintiffs and them. . . . But there are cases where bills of peace have been brought, though there has been a general right claimed by the plaintiff, and yet no privity between the plaintiffs and defendants, nor any general right on the part of the defendants, and where many more might be concerned than those brought before the court. . . . I think, therefore, this bill is proper, and the more so, because it appears there are no other persons but the defendants who set up any claim against the plaintiffs, and it is no objection that they have separate defenses; but the question is whether the plaintiffs have a general right to the sole fishery, which extends to all the defendants; for, notwithstanding the general right is tried and established, the defendants may take advantage of their several exemptions, or distinct rights."

The demurrer was therefore overruled.

On the other hand, in Bouverie v. Prentice, 1 Bro. Ch. 200, decided in 1783, it was held that a bill would not lie against several tenants of a manor for quit rents, the plaintiff's remedy being at law, and the suit also multifarious as to the different tenants. The Lord Chancellor said:

"Upon what principle two different tenants, of distinct estates, should be brought hither to hear each others rights discussed, I cannot conceive. The court has gone great lengths in bills of this sort, and taking the authority for granted, I cannot conceive on what ground such a suit can stand."

The Chancellor also remarked that, where a number of persons claimed one right in one subject, such a bill may be entertained to put an end to litigation. Here no one issue could have tried the cause between any two of the parties. See also Ward v. Northumberland, 2 Anstr. 469, decided in the Exchequer in 1794. The court in that case held that the suit could not be maintained in equity on the ground of preventing a multiplicity of suits, where the demands against each of the defendants, although of the same nature, were entirely distinct from and unconnected with any other defendant. In *such case each defend-[75] ant had a right to object to the joining of any distinct and unconnected causes of action.

To the same effect is Birkley v. Presgrave, 1 East, 220, 227, decided in the King's bench in 1801. In that case the court said:

"But generally speaking, a court of equity will not take cognizance of distinct and separate claims of different persons in one suit, though standing in the same relative situation."

In Weale v. West-Middlesex Waterworks, 1 Jac. & W. 358, decided in 1820, the Lord Chancellor, in holding that the suit would not lie, referred to the case of York v. Pilkington, and said:

"For where the plaintiffs stated themselves to have the exclusive right, it signified nothing what particular rights might be set up against them; because if they prevailed, the rights of no other persons could stand; and it has been long settled that if any person has a common right against a great many of the King's subjects, inasmuch as he cannot contend with all the King's subjects, a court of equity will permit him to file a bill against some of them; taking care to bring so many persons before the court that their interests shall be such as to lead to a fair and honest support of the public interest; and when a decree has been obtained, then, with respect to the individuals whose interest is so fully and honestly established, the court, on the footing of the former decree, will carry the benefit of it into execution against other individuals who were not parties."

In Marselis v. Morris Canal & Bkg. Co. 1 N. J. Eq. 31, decided in 1830, it was held that the plaintiff could not maintain an action against several defendants to recover matters of different natures against them. It was a suit in equity by several landowners of different lands not coming under a common title, against the defendant for taking their lands for the purposes of its incorporation, and not paying or compensating the owners therefor. It was alleged that the company was insolvent, and it was prayed that an account might be taken and damages awarded to the complainants for the injuries already sustained, and for compensation, and an injunction restraining the company from occupying the land [76] was *asked for. The court held the bill could not be maintained, as the same was multifarious, and said the fact that the plaintiffs had a common interest in the question, and that to sustain the jurisdiction would relieve the necessity of a number of suits at law brought by the separate plaintiffs, would not confer jurisdiction on the court upon any principle of equity.

In Demarest v. Hardham, 34 N. J. Eq. 469, decided in 1881, several persons owning distinct parcels of land, or occupying different dwellings, and having no common interest, sought to restrain a nuisance in consequence of the special injury done to each particular property, and it was held that each must bring a separate suit and obtain relief, if at all, upon his own special wrong. It was said that several persons might join to restrain a nuisance which is common to all and effects each in the same way,—instancing slaughter houses in a populous part of the town, and the offensive and deleterious odors there generated being allowed to diffuse themselves throughout the neighborhood. In such cases all injuriously affected by them may join in the same suit, for in such a case the injury is a common one, and the object of the suit is to give protection to each suitor in the enjoyment of a common right. To the same effect is Rowbotham v. Jones, 47 N. J. Eq. 337, 19 L. R. A. 663, 20 Atl. 731, decided in 1890.

Then there were cases arising by reason of the so-called Schuyler frauds, such as New York & N. H. R. Co. v. Schuyler, 17 N. Y. 592, 602, on demurrer, decided in 1858; again reported on appeal from the judgment on the merits, in 34 N. Y. 30, decided in 1865. These were very complicated questions arising by reason of the frauds referred to, and jurisdiction was maintained upon what might be termed general principles of necessity for the purpose of quieting what would otherwise have been endless litigation, and as stated by Davis, J., in 34 N. Y., the case was not decided upon any one head of equity jurisdiction.

In Third Ave. R. Co. v. New York, 54 N. Y. 159, defendants had commenced seventy-seven actions to recover penalties for violation of a city ordinance. The company commenced this action to restrain their prosecution until the right could be determined in one of the actions, and the suit [77] was maintained *on the ground of thereby preventing vexatious litigation in a multiplicity of suits.

In Saratoga County v. Deyoe, 77 N. Y. 219, questions of the indebtedness of the county upon certain certificates wrongfully issued by its treasurer were complicated with questions of the liability of the county to various holders of the certificates, and the court held a suit in equity could be sustained, making all the holders of the different certificates parties, because a multiplicity of suits would thereby be avoided and the whole question more conveniently and properly disposed of, all the defendants having in fact a common interest.

In Meyer v. Phillips, 97 N. Y. 485, 49

Am. Rep. 538, the suit was sustained as one to quiet the title of plaintiff, the acts threatened by various defendants being under a claim of right, and being of exactly the same nature, the issue being the same in all.

Cases in sufficient number have been cited to show how divergent are the decisions on the question of jurisdiction. It is easy to say it rests upon the prevention of a multiplicity of suits, but to say whether a particular case comes within the principle is sometimes a much more difficult task. Each case, if not brought directly within the principle of some preceding case, must, as we think, be decided upon its own merits and upon a survey of the real and substantial convenience of all parties, the adequacy of the legal remedy, the situations of the different parties, the points to be contested and the result which would follow if jurisdiction should be assumed or denied; these various matters being factors to be taken into consideration upon the question of equitable jurisdiction on this ground, and whether within reasonable and fair grounds the suit is calculated to be in truth one which will practically prevent a multiplicity of litigation, and will be an actual convenience to all parties, and will not unreasonably overlook or obstruct the material interests of any. The single fact that a multiplicity of suits may be prevented by this assumption of jurisdiction is not in all cases enough to sustain it. It might be that the exercise of equitable jurisdiction on this ground, while preventing a formal multiplicity of suits, would nevertheless be attended with more and deeper inconvenience to the defendants than *would be com-[78] pensated for by the convenience of a single plaintiff; and where the case is not covered by any controlling precedent the inconvenience might constitute good ground for denying jurisdiction.

We are not disposed to deny that jurisdiction on the ground of preventing a multiplicity of suits may be exercised in many cases in behalf of a single complainant against a number of defendants, although there is no common title nor community of rights or interest in the subject-matter among such defendants, but where there is a community of interest among them in the questions of law and fact involved in the general controversy.

Is there, upon the complainant's theory of this case, any such common interest among these defendants as to the questions of fact that may be put in issue between them and the plaintiff? Each defendant's defense may, and in all probability will, depend upon totally different facts, upon distinct and particular contracts, made at different times, and in establishing a defense, even of like character, different witnesses would probably be required for each defendant, and no defendant has any interest with another.

In this case from the complainant's own bill, the amount demanded is the full amount of the par value of the shares held by each defendant. In Kennedy v. Gibson, 8 Wall. 498, 505, 19 L. ed. 476, 478, a receiver brought suit to recover from the stockholders of an insolvent national bank the statutory liability imposed upon them, and in the course of the opinion it was stated by the court:

"Where the whole amount is sought to be recovered the proceeding must be at law. Where less is required, the proceeding may be in equity, and in such case an interlocutory decree may be taken for contribution, and the case may stand over for the further action of the court, if such action should subsequently prove to be necessary,—until the full amount of the liability is exhausted."

In Bailey v. Tillinghast, 40 C. C. A. 93, 99 Fed. 801, this statement of the law was recognized, and the cases of Casey v. Galli, 94 U. S. 673, 24 L. ed. 168, and United States v. Knox, 102 U. S. 422, 26 L. ed. 216, were referred to as recognizing the same rule. In United States v. Knox, the court [79] approved and reaffirmed the rule laid down in Kennedy v. Gibson, and one of those rules was that, when the whole amount was sought to be recovered, the proceeding must be at law.

The facts surrounding the present case and the reasons for holding that they do not bring it within the principle of preventing a multiplicity of suits are so well stated in the opinion of McPherson, District Judge, in this case (102 Fed. 790), that we quote the same. After speaking of the alleged conclusiveness of the Minnesota decree upon the question therein decided, the judge continued:

"Thereafter a different question arose for determination, namely, Can the assessment be lawfully enforced against the individuals charged therewith? And in this question the interest of each stockholder is separate and distinct. The bill asserts the conclusiveness of the Minnesota decree upon the defendants, so far as the necessity for the assessment and the amount charged against each stockholder are concerned. Hancock Nat. Bank v. Farnum, 176 U. S. 640, 44 L. ed. 619, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 506. Assuming that position to be sound (and, if I do not so assume it; if these questions are still open for determination, so far as the Pennsylvania stockholders are to be affected,—the bill must fail for want of necessary parties), it is clear that only two classes of questions remain to be decided: The first is whether a given stockholder was ever liable as such; and the second is whether, if he were originally liable, his liability has ceased, either in whole or in part. Manifestly, as it seems to me, the defendants have no common interest in these questions, or in the relief sought by the receiver against each defendant. The receiver's cause of action against each defendant is, no doubt, similar to his cause of action against every other, but this is only part of the matter. The real issue, the actual dispute, can only be known after each defendant has set up his defense, and defenses may vary so widely that no two controversies may be exactly or even nearly alike. If, as is sure to happen, differing defenses are put in by different defendants, the bill evidently becomes a single proceeding only in name. In reality it is a congeries of suits with little relation to each other, except there is a common plaintiff who has similar claims against many persons. But as each of these persons *became[80] liable, if at all, by reason of a contract entered into by himself alone, with the making of which his codefendants had nothing whatever to do, so he continues to be liable, if at all, because he himself, and not they, has done nothing to discharge the liability. Suppose A to aver that his signature to the subscription list was a forgery; what connection has that averment with B's contention that his subscription was made by an agent who had exceeded his powers? or with C's defense that his subscription was obtained by fraudulent representations? or with D's defense that he has discharged his full liability by a voluntary payment to the receiver himself? or with E's defense that he has paid to a creditor of the corporation a larger sum than is now demanded? These are separate and individual defenses, having nothing in common; and upon each the defendant setting it up is entitled to a trial by jury, although it may be somewhat troublesome and expensive to award him his constitutional right. But, even if the ground of diminished trouble and expense may sometimes be sufficient, I should still be much inclined to hesitate before I conceded the superiority of the equitable remedy in the present case. Such a bill as is now before the court is certain to be the beginning of a long and expensive litigation. The hearings are sure to be protracted. Several, perhaps many, counsel will no doubt be concerned, whose convenience must be consulted. The testimony will soon grow to be voluminous. The expense of printing will be large. The costs of witnesses will not in any degree be diminished, and, if some docket costs may be escaped, this is probably the only pecuniary advantage to be enjoyed by this one cumbersome bill over separate actions at law."
188 U. S.

We are in accord with the views thus expressed, and we therefore must deny the jurisdiction of equity, so far as it is based upon the asserted prevention of a multiplicity of suits.

2. There remains the further question of maintaining the suit on the ground that it is ancillary or auxiliary to the decree of the Minnesota court, and aids in its enforcement. We think this contention cannot be sustained.

In the first place, all the nonresident stockholders were but nominal parties in the Minnesota suit. Their names were merely placed in its title. No service of process was ever made *on one of them, and[81] as the suit was not one in which service by publication of process could be ordered, there was nothing in the nature of the suit to give them notice or to enable the court to give judgment against them without their appearing. The court did not assume to give any such judgment. Indeed, the complainant averred there were no means of obtaining jurisdiction over the nonresident stockholders, and the court assumed that it had no jurisdiction over them, and on account of such lack of jurisdiction it only gave judgment against those resident stockholders who were parties to the suit. The complainant claims that the nonresident stockholders are bound because the corporation was a party, not because they were parties to the suit. There is no decree or judgment, therefore, against the stockholders who were nonresidents. The claim that they are bound by certain findings of fact by the court, because of the corporation being a party and in law representing them to that extent, assuming it for this purpose to be well founded, is far from transforming a decree against resident stockholders into one against nonresidents who were not parties to the action. Even assuming that the decree concludes them upon certain facts found in that action, where there was no decree against them, still, another action in another jurisdiction to enforce their liability as originally created by statute cannot, within any reason, be said to be one to enforce the former judgment. Indeed, it is because of the very fact that no judgment was or could be obtained against the nonresident stockholders in the Minnesota suit that the Pennsylvania Federal court is asked to exercise its jurisdiction and give judgment against the defendants on their statutory liability. This does not make the Pennsylvania suit ancillary to the Minnesota decree for the purpose of enforcing it, for there is no decree against them to be enforced. There is only a claim that they are bound by certain facts found in another action to which they were not parties in any but a merely formal and nominal sense.

We think that, upon grounds discussed herein, the judgments of the courts below were right, and they are therefore affirmed.

Mr. Justice Brewer dissented.

[82] *DIAMOND MATCH COMPANY, Appt.,
v.

VILLAGE OF ONTONAGON and George
Ducneau, Treasurer of Said Village.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 82-97.)

Taxes—situation of property in transit—state regulation of interstate commerce.

1. Forest products in transit to a point outside the state may be given by the legislature a situs, for the purpose of taxation, at the place nearest to the last boom or sorting gap of the stream in or bordering on the state in which such products naturally will be last floated during such transit.

2. Transportation of logs partly by water and partly by rail is included in the provision of Mich. act April 8, 1899, making forest products in transit to a point outside the state assessable at the place in the state nearest to the last boom or sorting gap of the stream in or bordering on such state in which they will naturally be last floated during such transit, although the statute also provides that, if the transit "is to be other than through any watercourse in or bordering on" the state, such property shall be assessed at the point where it will naturally leave the state in the ordinary course of its transit.
3. Logs which have been cut and floated down a stream and its tributaries to a boom or sorting gap from which they are to be shipped by rail as needed to a point outside the state are not, while awaiting delivery to the railroad company, the subject of interstate commerce so as to be exempt from state taxation.

[No. 96.]

*Argued and Submitted December 1, 1902.
Decided January 19, 1903.*

A PPEAL from the Circuit Court of the United States for the Western District of Michigan to review a decree which dismissed a bill to restrain the collection of a tax on forest products in transit to a point outside the state. Affirmed.

Statement by Mr. Justice McKenna:

This is a bill in equity to restrain the collection of certain taxes levied under the following law of the state of Michigan:

"Personal property of nonresidents of the state, and all forest products owned by residents or nonresidents or estates of deceased persons shall be assessed in the township or ward where the same may be, to the person having control of the premises, store, mill, dock, yard, piling ground, place of storage, or warehouse where such property is situated in such township, on the 2d Monday of April of the year when the assessment is made, except that where such property is in transit to some place within the state it shall be assessed in such place, except that where such property is in transit to some place without the state it shall be assessed at the place in this state nearest to the last boom or sorting gap of the stream in or bordering on this state in which said property will naturally be last floated during the transit thereof; and in case the transit of any such property is to be other than through any watercourse in or bordering on this state, then such assessment shall be made at the point where such property will naturally leave the state in the ordinary course of its transit; and such property so in transit to any place without the state shall be assessed to the owner or person, persons or corporation, in possession or control thereof; and in case such transit will pass said logs through the booms or sorting gaps, or into the places of storage of any person, persons, or corporation operating upon any such stream, then such property may be assessed to such person, persons, or corporation, and the person, persons, or corporation so assessed for any such property belonging to a nonresident of this state shall be entitled to recover from the owner of such property, by a suit in attachment, garnishment, or for money had and received, any amount which the person, persons, or corporation so assessed is compelled to pay because of such assessment, and shall have a lien upon said property as security against loss or damage because of being so assessed for the property of another, and may retain possession of such property until such lien is satisfied: Provided, further, That any owner or person interested in said property may secure the release of the same from such lien by giving to the person, persons, or corporation so assessed a bond in an amount double the probable tax to be assessed thereon, but not less than the sum of two hundred dollars ($200), with two sufficient securities, conditioned for the payment of such tax by such owner or person interested, and the saving of the person, persons, or corporation assessed from payment thereof, and from costs, damages, and expense on account of his nonpayment, which bond, as to amount and sufficiency of surety, shall be approved by the county clerk of the county in which the assessment is made."

NOTE.—On the limitation of taxing power of a state—see notes to Cass County v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. (Neb.) 2 L. R. A. 188; and Palmer v. State (Tenn.) 8 L. R. A. 280.

On state regulation of interstate or foreign commerce—see notes to Norfolk & W. R. Co. v. Com. (Va.) 13 L. R. A. 107; McCanna & F.

Co. v. Citizens' Trust & Surety Co. 24 C. C. A. 13; Ratterman v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 32 L. ed. U. S. 229; Harmon v. Chicago, 37 L. ed. U. S. 216; Cleveland, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Backus, 38 L. ed. U. S. 1041; and Postal Teleg. Cable Co. v. Adams, 39 L. ed. U. S. 311.

[84] It was contended that the taxes assessed were illegal and *void, "because said taxes were assessed in violation of and repugnant to the general provisions of the Constitution of the United States; and especially because said taxes were assessed in violation of, and said statutes of the state of Michigan are in violation of and repugnant to, those parts of § 8 of article 1 of the Constitution of the United States, which provide that: 'The Congress shall have power . . . to regulate commerce with foreign nations, and among the several states,' and § 10 of said article, which provides that 'no state shall, without the consent of the Congress, lay any imposts or duties on imports or exports, except what may be absolutely necessary for executing its inspection laws.'"

By stipulation the bill was dismissed as to the township of Ontonagon and the township of McMillan. As to the other defendants the bill was submitted on an agreed statement of facts and the pleadings. The court sustained the assessment and dismissed the bill. This appeal was then taken under § 5 of the judiciary act of 1891 [26 Stat. at L. 826, chap. 517, U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 549.]

The following is the stipulation of facts:

"It is hereby further stipulated by and between the complainant and the defendants village of Ontonagon, and George Ducleau, its treasurer, that the following statements of fact are true, and may be used in evidence on the hearing of said cause by either of the parties to this stipulation, subject to objections for immateriality, to wit:

"1. The complainant is a corporation organized and existing under and by virtue of the laws of the state of Illinois, with its principal office and place of business in the city of Chicago, in said state; that it is engaged, and has been from the date of its organization, in the manufacture and sale of matches, and that in the prosecution of its business it purchased and became the owner of a large amount of pine wood, timber, etc., situate on the Ontonagon river and its tributaries in Ontonagon county and other counties in the state of Michigan, and that for many years prior to 1896 it owned and operated extensive sawmills and plant near the mouth of the Ontonagon river, and within the corporate limits of the defendant village of Ontonagon; that, in its usual course of business, it cut or *purchased a [85] sufficient quantity of timber to supply its mills during the following season, not exceeding 40,000,000 of feet, board measure, and placed the same during the winter upon and in said Ontonagon river and its tributaries, there to remain until the breaking up of the ice in said river in spring time, when they were and are driven down the river to the pier jams, booms, and sorting grounds of the complainant, located above said mills, and outside of the limits of defendant, the village of Ontonagon.

"2. That in the summer of the year 1894 extensive forest fires swept over said pine lands of the complainant, and other pine lands, situate on said Ontonagon river, doing great damage to the timber thereon; that in order to preserve the timber so injured by said fire it became and was necessary to cut all of said timber and put the same into the waters of the above-named stream for preservation; that during the winter of 1894 and 1895 said complainant, in order to preserve said timber, was compelled to cut and did cut about 180,000,000 feet of logs, and for the sole purpose of preservation placed the same in said river and its tributaries, there to remain until the complainant could float said logs down said river and streams to its mills to be manufactured into lumber; that it was not the intention or purpose of the complainant after the opening of navigation and during the season of 1896 to remove all said logs but only such amount as could be manufactured at its said mills during the season, and that the capacity of said mills did not exceed about the amount of 40,000,000 feet per annum, as hereinbefore stipulated.

"3. That the navigation of said river and stream is closed by reason of the formation of ice about the 1st of December of each year, and is not open until after the 1st of May, following in each year.

"4. That in the month of August, A. D.

1896, the complainant's said mills were destroyed by fire, and that thereafter it became necessary, and the complainant did transport said logs by the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railway, from Ontonagon to its sawmills located at Green Bay, in the state of Wisconsin. That in the regular prosecution of its business of "manufacturing said logs into lumber, said complainant has not, during any season since 1896, transported a larger quantity of said logs than it could manufacture into lumber at its mills at Green Bay, said quantity being on an average of less than 40,000,000 feet of logs, board measure.

"5. That for the purpose of preserving said logs and preventing the same from floating down said river and into Lake Superior, said complainant was compelled to and has utilized certain jam piers, booms, and appurtenances constructed by the plaintiff across said river, more than 1 mile above the mouth thereof, and beyond the limits of said village of Ontonagon; that by reason of said appliances said logs have been held in said river and upon the banks thereof above said jam piers, booms, etc., said complainant only passing through said piers such quantities as it could transport and manufacture into lumber at its said mills from time to time during each successive season since the year 1896; that during each successive season it has been the usual and necessary practice of the complainant to pass through said piers, booms, etc., such quantities of logs as said railway company could furnish facilities for transportation, thence down the river to the place of delivery, as described in ¶ 2 of another stipulation of facts made herein, to said railway company, to be loaded upon cars for transportation, and that said place of delivery was near the mouth of said river and within the corporate limits of said defendant the village of Ontonagon; that all of said logs so delivered to said railway company are transported over its lines to Green Bay, Wisconsin, leaving the state of Michigan at a point near the village of Iron Mountain, in said state.

"6. That at the close of the season of 1898 the logs in controversy were held by said complainant and detained and preserved by said jam piers, booms, etc., in said Ontonagon river, above and beyond the limits of said defendant the village of Ontonagon, waiting the delivery for transportation, as aforesaid, during the following season of the year 1899, and that all of said logs were a part of the entire quantity cut and put in said river during the winter of 1895 and 1896, and had since that date been so held [87]and detained by the complainant in its "regular course of business; that all of said logs were so held and detained, and by reason of the ice in said river could not be floated down the same until about the middle of May, 1899, and that said logs so assessed, as charged in said bill of complaint, were not at the time said assessment was made, and on the 2d Monday of April, A. D. 1899, were not, except as stated in ¶ 4 of another stipulation, made herein, and never had been, within the corporate limits of the said defendant the village of Ontonagon.

"7. That the logs in controversy at the time said assessment was made by said defendant the village of Ontonagon were and had been for more than one year prior thereto, in the manner above described, held and detained by the complainant within the municipal limits of the township of McMillan, in said county of Ontonagon, and were assessed for the purpose of levying a tax thereon, for the year 1899, by the proper officers of said township of McMillan, claiming the right so to do under the general statutes and laws of the state of Michigan.

"It is further stipulated and admitted by the parties to this stipulation that the assessment of the complainant's logs in controversy was not valid unless it shall be held as a question of law that the defendant the village of Ontonagon had the legal right to assess said logs in said river outside and beyond the geographical limits of said village, as being in transit, under the statutes of the state of Michigan in such case made and provided."

The other stipulation of facts referred to is as follows:

"1. Complainant shipped by rail from the village of Ontonagon to its mills at Green Bay, Wisconsin, for sawing there, the following quantities of logs, at the following times, out of its logs in the Ontonagon river, described in the bill of complaint:

"Forty-two million feet in the season of 1897; 37,000,000 feet in the season of 1898, and 14,000,000 feet in the season of 1899 up to the date of the seizure of logs by the village of Ontonagon for the satisfaction of the tax levied and assessed in and by said village in the year last named.

"2. Within the village of Ontonagon, is, and has been, situated "in and throughout [88] the year 1899 the last boom or sorting gap in said river, from which complainant's logs in said river are taken and placed upon the railroad cars for shipment to its said mills at Green Bay, and said boom or sorting gap is the last place in said river where said logs are floated before shipment by rail as aforesaid.

"3. During the season of 1899, beginning about June 1, and up to the time of the seizure above mentioned, about — million feet of the ten (10) million feet of logs mentioned in the bill of complaint, were driven down the said river from the boom, pier jam, or sorting grounds outside of said village, to the boom or sorting gap within said village, above described, and shipped thence by rail to complainant's said mills at Green Bay.

"4. About 500,000 feet of complainant's said logs in said river have been (in said river or slough) constantly within said village since 1898, for the purpose of shipment by rail to the destination as aforesaid.

"5. The village of Ontonagon is a duly incorporated village under the general law of Michigan, to wit: act No. 3 of the Laws of Michigan of the year 1895, entitled 'An Act to Provide for the Incorporation of Villages within the State of Michigan, and Defining Their Powers and Duties,' and is situate on said river and in the township of Ontonagon, one of the defendants herein.

"6. The water transit of said logs of complainant has heretofore always ceased since the burning of complainant's mills, described in the bill of complaint, in said village, whence the same are shipped by rail as aforesaid.

"7. Said river and its tributaries are streams of water or rivers, all within the state of Michigan and within the county of Ontonagon (and as to some small part within the counties of Gogebic and Houghton) in which county of Ontonagon said village is situated.

[89] "8. Pursuant to and in accordance with the acts of the legislature of Michigan mentioned in the answer of said village in this suit, namely, act No. 319 of the Laws of 1893, and act No. 263 of the year 1895, and pursuant to and in accordance with a vote of the electors of the said village, duly held therein, *and pursuant to, and in accordance with the action of its council, said village, in the year 1894, borrowed the sum of thirty thousand dollars ($30,000), and issued and sold its bonds therefor, and in the year 1895 borrowed the further sum of twelve thousand dollars ($12,000), and issued its bonds therefor; and all of said bonds, being in principal and interest about forty thousand dollars ($40,000), were, at the date of filing the bill of complaint in this cause, outstanding, and said bonds outstanding constitute a valid charge against said village and against the taxable property thereof."

Mr. Edwin Walker argued the cause and filed a brief for appellant:

The village of Ontonagon had no power to assess property for taxation and levy taxes thereon, except as specifically conferred by the general or special statutes of the state of Michigan.

Cooley, Taxn. pp. 96, 209, 474; Dill. Mun. Corp. 4th ed. § 763; Re Second Ave. M. E. Church, 66 N. Y. 395; Re Washington Avenue, 69 Pa. 352, 8 Am. Rep. 255; English v. People, 96 Ill. 566.

The state of Michigan could not by legislative grant authorize the village of Ontonagon to impose a tax upon the property of nonresidents, when the situs of such property was beyond its municipal limits and jurisdiction.

Wells v. Weston, 22 Mo. 384, 66 Am. Dec. 627; Re Assessment of Lands, 60 N. Y. 398; Trigg v. Glasgow, 2 Bush, 594; St. Louis v. Wiggins Ferry Co. 11 Wall. 430, 20 L. ed. 194.

The statute of the state of Michigan, under and by authority of which the complainant's property was assessed for taxation, is in contravention of, and repugnant to, the Constitution of the United States.

Coc v. Errol, 116 U. S. 517, 29 L. ed. 715, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 475; The Daniel Ball, 10 188 U. S.

Wall. 557, 19 L. ed. 999; State Freight Tax Case, 15 Wall. 272, sub nom. Philadelphia & R. R. Co. v. Pennsylvania, 21 L. ed. 161.

Mr. T. L. Chadbourne submitted the cause for appellees:

Michigan is not the only state having legislation of this sort. There is similar legislation in at least Wisconsin and Maine.

Wis. Rev. Stat. 1878, § 1040; Farmingdale v. Berlin Mills Co. 93 Me. 333, 45 Atl. 39.

The statute has frequently been passed upon by the supreme court of Michigan, and no question of its validity under the state Constitution has, so far as the cases show, ever been raised.

Corning v. Masonville Twp. 74 Mich. 177, 41 N. W. 831; Pardee v. Freesoil Twp. 74 Mich. 81, 41 N. W. 867; Elk Rapids Iron Co. v. Helena Twp. 117 Mich. 211, 75 N. W. 455.

Logs are in transit when they are situate upon a body of water intended to act as a means of transport, and destined to some point upon the stream or water beyond where they lie.

Elk Rapids Iron Co. v. Helena Twp. 117 Mich. 211, 75 N. W. 455; Mitchell v. Lake Twp. 126 Mich. 367, 85 N. W. 865.

The logs were not exempt from state taxation in consequence of the Constitution of the United States.

Coe v. Errol, 116 U. S. 517, 29 L. ed. 715, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 475.

Mr. Justice McKenna delivered the opinion of the court:

The contention of appellant is presented in three propositions: (1) That the village of Ontonagon had no power to assess the property under its charter; (2) that the legislature could not confer such power; (3) that the property was in the course of transportation within the meaning of the commerce clause of the Constitution of the United States.

1. This proposition is unimportant. If the charter did not, the statute of 1899 did, authorize the assessment.

2. To sustain this proposition would embarrass the power of the state,—indeed, make it impotent to deal with the conditions there existing. The statute, no doubt, was enacted as a means to subject property to taxation which had no definite or enduring locality, and because of the clash or confusion of jurisdictions. In such circumstances experience, probably, demonstrated that property escaped taxation or was difficult to tax, or that controversies arose. It was competent for the legislature to defeat either result by giving moving property a definite situs as of some day. Nor is that power impugned by the principle that protection is the consideration of taxation. There is protection during the transit through the municipalities of the state and at its termination in the state,—protection accommodated to the kind of property and as efficient as links are to the continuity of a chain.

There is nothing in the cases cited by appellant which sustains the opposite view. Trigg v. Glasgow, 2 Bush, 594, seems to have turned upon the interpretation of a state statute. Under a statute of the state the town of Glasgow was authorized to subscribe to the stock of a railroad, and by the [91] charter of "the town it was the duty of the trustees to "levy an ad valorem tax on the property, both real and personal, within said town that is listed for state purposes, including the amount given in under the equalization law, sufficient," etc.

By an amendatory act it was provided that "all the taxable property in said town on the 10th of April shall be subject to taxation for the payment of said subscription;" and it also provided that the taxable property in said town which may have been removed without its limits between the 1st of January and the 10th of April, for the purpose of evading the tax, should be listed for taxation.

The court held, as we understand its opinion, that property to be subject to taxation under the statute must be in the town. If it had been taken out to avoid taxation, it was subject to taxation when brought back.

St. Louis v. Wiggins Ferry Co. 11 Wall. 423, 20 L. ed. 192, was also an interpretation of the state statute. The city of St. Louis had power to tax all property within the city. It was held under the circumstances of the case that the ferryboats of the ferry company had their situs in the state of Illinois. It was said:

"Their relation to the city was merely that of contact there, as one of the termini of their transit across the river in the prosecution of their business. The time of such contact was limited by the city ordinance. Ten minutes was the maximum of the stay they were permitted to make at any one time. The owner was, in the eye of the law, a citizen of that state, and from the inherent law of its nature could not emigrate or become a citizen elsewhere. As the boats were laid up on the Illinois shore when not in use, and the pilots and engineers who ran them lived there, that locality, under the circumstances, must be taken to be their home port. They did not so abide within the city as to become incorporated with and form a part of its personal property."

In Wells v. Weston, 22 Mo. 384, 66 Am. Dec. 627, and Re Assessments of Lands, 60 N. Y. 398, the property taxed was real estate.

The purpose of the statute of Michigan is to assess the forest products of the state, —things which are a part of the general [92] "property of the state. Those "in transit" are assessable according to their destination. If that be "some place within the state," the property is to be "assessed in such place;" if that be "some place without the state," the property is to be assessed at the place in the state "nearest to the last boom or sorting gap of the same in or bordering on the state in which said property will naturally be the last floated during the transit thereof."

But it is also provided that "in case the transit of any such property is to be other than through any watercourse in or bordering on this state, then such assessment shall be made at the point where such property will naturally leave the state in the ordinary course of its transit."

We may assume for the present that the property was in transit and to some place without the state. Was the "transit to be other than through any watercourse in or bordering on" the state? The appellant contends that it was, because it was to be by water and by rail; in other words, the transit was not to be exclusively "through any watercourse." But to give that meaning to the statute, words must be added to it. It must be made to read other than exclusively or wholly or entirely "through any watercourse." One of these words must be added to make the sense contended for. The word "other" is used to express a difference,—the difference being between a transit which is and one which is not through any (the word is significant) watercourse.

The transit in controversy was to be through (by means of) the Ontonagon river, certainly a watercourse, and by the Chicago, Milwaukee, & St. Paul Railway, and therefore the property was properly assessed by the village of Ontonagon, that being the place in the state nearest to the last boom or sorting gap of the stream in or bordering on the state in which said property naturally would be and was intended to be last floated during the transit thereof.

3. Was the transit interstate commerce? We agree with counsel that it is unimportant in determining an answer whether the transit "was by water or by railroad, or both water and railroad." But no purpose to burden interstate commerce is *evident [93] in the statute, and the power of the state to tax everything which is part of what has been called "the general property," or "the general mass of property," of the state, is undoubted. But things which have been brought to a state may not have reached that condition. Things intended to be sent out of a state, but which have not left it, may not have ceased to be in that condition. The exact moment in either case may not be easy to point out,—may be confused by circumstances,—and the confident assignment of the property as subject or not subject to taxation is not easily made. Fortunately we are not without illustrations in prior cases, and in Kelley v. Rhoads, 188 U. S. 1, ante, 359, 23 Sup. Ct. Rep. 259, decided concurrently with this, we express the principles of decision.

In Brown v. Houston, 114 U. S. 622, 29 L. ed. 257, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1091, the property (coal in barges) had reached the state, but was yet in the boats in which it had been brought into the state. While on the barges it was offered for sale. It was held it had become part of the property of the state and was subject to taxation. Pittsburg & S. Coal Co. v. Bates, 156 U. S. 577, 39 L. ed. 538, 5 Inters. Com. Rep. 30, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 415, had facts assimilating it to the case at bar, and it was affirmed on the authority of Brown v. Houston. As in the latter case, the tax was on coal in barges shipped from the mines in Pennsylvania, and consigned to New Orleans, Louisiana. The coal, however, had not reached, as the coal in Brown v. Houston, its exact destination. To accommodate the exigencies of the owner's business, the barges, "about one hundred in number, were stopped and moored in the Mississippi river, at a convenient mooring place about 9 miles above the port of Baton Rouge." The coal was held subject to taxation.

In Coe v. Errol, 116 U. S. 517, 29 L. ed. 715, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 475, logs which had been cut in the state of Maine, and others which had been cut in the state of New Hampshire, were floated in course of transit down a stream in New Hampshire to the town of Errol, in the latter state; thence to be floated down the Androscoggin river to the state of Maine. The town of Errol assessed upon the property a county, town, school, and highway tax. The tax was sustained by the supreme court of the state of New Hampshire as to the logs cut [94] in that state, and abated as to *those cut in Maine. The judgment was affirmed by this court.

Mr. Justice Bradley, delivering the opinion of the court, expressed the contentions of the parties in two questions:

"Are the products of a state, though intended for exportation to another state, and partially prepared for that purpose by being deposited at a place or port of shipment within the state, liable to be taxed like other property within the state?"

"Do the owner's state of mind in relation to the goods,—that is, his intent to export them,—and his partial preparation to do so, exempt them from taxation? This is the precise question for solution."

It is obvious that like questions could be framed upon the facts of the case at bar to express the propositions presented. Mr. Justice Bradley's observations, therefore, become pertinent and decisive. He discussed every consideration. He clearly exhibited the extent of the power of the state over the property within it, whether in motion or at rest, though destined for points out of it. He said:

"There must be a point of time when they [goods destined to other states] cease to be governed exclusively by the domestic law, and begin to be governed and protected by the national law of commercial regulation, and that moment seems to us to be a legitimate one for this purpose, in which they commence their final movement for transportation from the state of their origin to that of their destination. When the products of the farm or the forest are collected and brought in from the surrounding country to a town or station serving as an entrepot for that particular region, whether on a river or on a line of railroad, such products are not yet exports, nor are they in process of exportation, nor is exportation begun until they are committed to the common carrier for transportation out of the state to the state of their destination, or have started on their ultimate passage to that state. Until then it is reasonable to regard them as not only within the state of their origin, but as a part of the general mass of property of that state, subject to its jurisdiction, and liable to taxation there if not taxed by reason of their being intended for exportation, but taxed without *any discrimination, in the usual [95] way and manner in which such property is taxed in the state."

And further:

"But no definite rule has been adopted with regard to the point of time at which the taxing power of the state ceases as to goods exported to a foreign country or to another state. What we have already said, however, in relation to the products of a state intended for exportation to another state will indicate the view which seems to us the sound one on that subject, namely that such goods do not cease to be part of the general mass of property in the state, subject as such to its jurisdiction and to taxation in the usual way, until they have been shipped or entered with a common carrier for transportation to another state, or have been started upon such transportation in a continuous route or journey. We think that this must be the true rule on the subject. It seems to us untenable to hold that a crop or a herd is exempt from taxation merely because it is, by its owner, intended for exportation. If such were the rule in many states there would be nothing but the lands and real estate to bear the taxes. Some of the western states produce very little except wheat and corn, most of which is intended for export; and so of cotton in the southern states. Certainly, as long as these products are on the lands which produce them, they are part of the general property of the state. And so we think they continue to be until they have entered upon their final journey for leaving the state and going into another state. It is true, it was said in the case, The Daniel Ball, 10 Wall. 557, 565, sub nom. The Daniel Ball v. United States, 19 L. ed. 1002: 'Whenever a commodity has begun to move as an article of trade from one state to another, commerce in that commodity between the states has commenced.' But this movement does not begin until the articles have been shipped or started for transportation from the one state to the other. The carrying of them in carts or other vehicles, or even floating them, to the depot where the journey is to commence, is no part of that journey."

These cases are referred to in Kelley v. Rhoads, 188 U. S. 1, ante, 359, 23 Sup. Ct. Rep. 259, as defining the taxing power of a state. And their substance is declared to be "that while the property is at rest for an indefinite *time awaiting transportation, [96] or awaiting a sale at its place of destination, or at an intermediate point, it is subject to taxation. But if it be actually in transit to another state, it becomes the subject of interstate commerce, and is exempt from local assessment."

In further specialization of these propositions we may say that the cases establish that there may be an interior movement of property which does not constitute interstate commerce, though property come from or be destined to another state. In the one case, though it have not reached its place of disembarkation or delivery it may be taxed. 114 U. S. 622, 29 L. ed. 257, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1091. In the other case, until it be shipped or started on its final journey it may be taxed. 116 U. S. 517, 29 L. ed. 715, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 475.

The case at bar falls within this principle. It is alleged in the bill that during the winters of 1895 and 1896 the plaintiff cut, hauled, and put into the Ontonagon river and its tributaries 180,000,000 feet of logs for the purpose of saving, protecting, and preserving the same; that said lumber was more than plaintiff could utilize in any one season at its mills, and it was not, therefore, the intention at the opening of the streams to make a clean drive of the same, but only to take down the streams the following spring and summer, and each succeeding driving season, the number complainant could utilize; that complainant was, at the time the logs were cut and put in the streams, an owner of lumber mills situated at or near the corporate limits of the village of Ontonagon; that said mills were destroyed by fire in the fall of 1896, and were not rebuilt, and that after the destruction thereof plaintiff destined the logs for its mills at Green Bay, Wisconsin, but that it was not its intention to take to said mills during any one summer any more than sufficient for its purposes, and not to exceed generally 20,000,000 feet,—according to the stipulation 40,000,000 feet. The route of the logs from the forests to the mills is described as follows:

"They are driven down the tributaries of said Ontonagon river into the stream of said river, and thence down said Ontonagon river to a point at or near the mouth thereof, in the township of Ontonagon, to the sorting grounds and pier jams of the complainant; they are then loaded aboard cars and shipped by rail to Green Bay, Wisconsin, via the Chicago, Milwaukee, & St. Paul Railway, and pass out of the state of Michigan at a point near the village of Iron Mountain, in said state."

The number of the logs shipped by rail from Ontonagon to Green Bay before the levy of the tax complained of is given in the stipulation of facts, and it is stipulated that "about 500,000 feet of complainant's said logs in said river have been (in said river or slough) constantly within said village since 1898, for the purpose of shipment by rail to the destination as aforesaid."

The appellant's contention is that the movement of the logs commenced at the opening of navigation of the river (presumably in the spring or summer of 1896 and 1897), and from that date were in continuous transit as subjects of interstate commerce, and exempt from taxation. The contention is more extreme than that made and rejected in Coe v. Errol.

Decree affirmed.

CORNELIUS K. G. BILLINGS and Albert M. Billings Ruddock, Plffs. in Err.,
v.

PEOPLE OF THE STATE OF ILLINOIS.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 97-104.)

Constitutional law—inheritance tax—equal protection—classification.

The equal protection of the laws is not denied by the Illinois inheritance tax law because, under that statute as interpreted and enforced by the state courts, certain life estates may be taxed when the remainder is to lineal descendants of the decedent, but not when the remainder is to collateral heirs or strangers in blood.

[No. 106.]

*Argued and Submitted December 4, 1902.
Decided January 19, 1903.*

[N ERROR to the Supreme Court of the State of Illinois to review a judgment which affirmed a judgment order of the County Court of Cook County assessing an inheritance tax on certain life estates. Affirmed.

See same case below, 189 Ill. 472, 59 N. E. 798.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. James F. Meagher argued the cause, and, with Mr. William D. Guthrie, filed a brief for plaintiffs in error:

A statute is not constitutional which selects particular individuals from a class or locality, and subjects them to peculiar rules, or imposes upon them special obligations or burdens from which others in the same locality or class are exempt.

Cooley, Const. Lim. 6th ed. 481, 483.

The legislature may regulate the devolution of property, but when it so regulates it must treat the constituents of a class alike; and when it discriminates against constituents of a class, it invades the constitutional right of the constituents thus discriminated against.

NOTE.—On inheritance and succession taxes—see notes to Re Howe (N. Y.) 2 L. R. A. 825; Wallace v. Myers (C. C. S. D. N. Y.) 4 L. R. A. 171; Com. v. Ferguson (Pa.) 10 L. R. A. 240; Re Romaine (N. Y.) 12 L. R. A. 401; Magoun v. Illinois Trust & Sav. Bank, 42 L. ed. U. S. 1037.

As to the validity of class legislation—see State v. Goodwill (W. Va.) 6 L. R. A. 621, and note; State v. Loomis (Mo.) 21 L. R. A. 789, and note.

As to constitutional equality of privileges, immunities, and protection—see Louisville Safety Vault & T. Co. v. Louisville & N. R. Co. (Ky.) 14 L. R. A. 579, and note.

Frorer v. People, 141 Ill. 180, 16 L. R. A. 492, 31 N. E. 395.

An individual is denied the equal protection of the laws if his property is subjected by the state to higher taxation than is imposed upon like property of other individuals in the same community.

Fire Asso. of Philadelphia v. New York, 119 U. S. 110, 30 L. ed. 342, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 108.

No person in a class shall be treated otherwise than or differently from every other person in the same class, under the like circumstances.

Connolly v. Union Sewer Pipe Co. 184 U. S. 540, 46 L. ed. 679, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 431; Magoun v. Illinois Trust & Sav. Bank, 170 U. S. 293, 42 L. ed. 1043, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 594; State v. Julow, 129 Mo. 163, 29 L. R. A. 257, 31 S. W. 781.

The power of the state to classify is not denied; but "the power of the state stops at injustice."

Southern P. Co. v. Railroad Comrs. 78 Fed. 236.

The classification must be based upon some reasonable ground.

Kentucky Railroad Tax Cases, 115 U. S. 321, sub nom. Cincinnati, N. O. & T. P. R. Co. v. Kentucky, 29 L. ed. 414, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 57; Re Grice, 79 Fed. 627; Cooley, Taxn. 215; State v. Loomis, 115 Mo. 307, 21 L. R. A. 789, 22 S. W. 350.

Such classification "must be so general as to bring within its limit all those who are in substantially the same situation or circumstances."

Lippman v. People, 175 Ill. 101, 51 N. E. 872; Ritchie v. People, 155 Ill. 98, 29 L. R. A. 79, 40 N. W. 454; Frorer v. People, 141 Ill. 171, 16 L. R. A. 492, 31 N. E. 395.

The devolution of property upon death involves a transaction which is a fit and proper subject of taxation, wholly irrespective of the power to regulate such devolution.

Knowlton v. Moore, 178 U. S. 41, 44 L. ed. 969, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 747.

Even if the power to levy an inheritance tax depended upon the right to regulate inheritance to the fullest extent that may be argued on behalf of the defendant in error, nevertheless the constitutional guaranty of equal laws would be applicable.

Magoun v. Illinois Trust & Sav. Bank, 170 U. S. 283, 42 L. ed. 1037, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 594.

The taxing power must be exercised impartially and by equal laws, and taxes must be imposed without discrimination upon all persons fairly within the same class and exercising like rights or privileges.

Kentucky Railroad Tax Cases, 115 U. S. 321, sub nom. Cincinnati, N. O. & T. P. R. Co. v. Kentucky, 29 L. ed. 414, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 57; Hayes v. Missouri, 120 U. S. 68, 30 L. ed. 578, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 350; Giozza 188 U. S.

v. Tiernan, 148 U. S. 657, 37 L. ed. 599, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 721; Cotting v. Kansas City Stock Yards Co. 183 U. S. 79, sub nom. Cotting v. Godard, 46 L. ed. 92, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 30; Connolly v. Union Sewer Pipe Co. 184 U. S. 540, 46 L. ed. 679, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 431.

Mr. Howland J. Hamlin submitted the cause for defendant in error:

Plaintiffs in error have no right to the legacy before the inheritance tax is paid, which entitles them to complain of the tax as against the state. They have no title until the tax is paid. The tax is not imposed upon their property nor upon them, but upon the right of their testator to devise the estate.

United States v. Perkins, 163 U. S. 625, 41 L. ed. 287, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1073; State v. Dalrymple, 70 Md. 924, 3 L. R. A. 372, 17 Atl. 82; Plummer v. Coler, 178 U. S. 115, 44 L. ed. 998, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 774; New York v. Roberts, 171 U. S. 658, 43 L. ed. 323, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 58.

The classification here complained of is based upon a reasonable ground.

Magoun v. Illinois Trust & Sav. Bank, 170 U. S. 283, 42 L. ed. 1037, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 594.

The constitutionality of the Illinois inheritance tax law is not now open to review.

Kochersperger v. Drake, 167 Ill. 122, 41 L. R. A. 446, 47 N. E. 321; Magoun v. Illinois Trust & Sav. Bank, 170 U. S. 283, 42 L. ed. 1037, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 594.

Mr. Justice McKenna delivered the opinion of the court:

The case presents the question of the constitutionality, under the 14th Amendment of the Constitution of the United States, of § 2 of the inheritance tax law of the state of Illinois. The constitutionality of the law was passed upon in Magoun v. Illinois Trust & Sav. Bank, 170 U. S. 283, 42 L. ed. 1037, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 594, and is there set out. As much of § 2 as is necessary to quote is as follows:

"Sec. 2. When any person shall bequeath [99] or devise any property or interest therein or income therefrom to mother, father, husband, wife, brother and sister, the widow of the son, or a lineal descendant during the life or for a term of years, or [and] remainder to the collateral heir of the decedent, or to the stranger in blood, or to the body politic or corporate, at their decease, or on the expiration of such term, the said life estate or estates for a term of years shall not be subject to any tax, and the property so passing shall be appraised immediately after the death at what was the fair market value thereof at the time of the death of the decedent in the manner hereinafter provided, and after deducting therefrom the value of said life estate, or term of years, the tax transcribed by this act on the remainder shall be immediately due and payable to the treasurer of the proper county, and, together with the interests thereon, shall be and remain a lien on said property until the same is paid; . . .” [Starr & C. Anno. Stat. 1896, p. 3529, ¶ 317.]

It is claimed, however, that the question presented in this case was not passed upon in Magoun v. Illinois Trust & Sav. Bank. If this be not so, if this case cannot be distinguished from that, it follows necessarily that the judgment sought to be reviewed must be affirmed.

The proceedings originated in the county court of Cook county, Illinois, which entered a judgment order assessing taxes, under the law in controversy, upon the property and estates passing to the plaintiffs in error. The order was affirmed by the supreme court of the state. 189 Ill. 472, 59 N. E. 798.

Albert M. Billings, a resident of Chicago, died in that city February 7, 1897. He left surviving him a widow, Augusta S. Billings; a son, Cornelius K. G. Billings, one of the plaintiffs in error, and grandson Albert M. Billings Ruddock, who is the other plaintiff in error. He also left a son by a former marriage, with whom this record is not concerned. His estate was very large, and he devised and bequeathed it all to his wife, excepting certain reservations, during her natural life. How it should be divided then, the will proceeded to provide as follows:

[100] “I do also herein give and bequeath to my son Cornelius *Kingsley Garrison Billings, and to my grandson Albert M. Billings Ruddock, to be held and owned by them at the death of my wife Augusta S. Billings as is hereinafter explained and set forth, all the property and estate herein bequeathed to her my wife not otherwise disposed of by my said executors hereinafter named, in the manner following, to wit: Two thirds thereof to my son C. K. G. Billings and one third thereof to my grandson Albert M. Billings Ruddock, to be held and owned by them as above stated during their lifetime, and should my son C. K. G. Billings die, not leaving a living child or children of his own issue, the property herein bequeathed to him shall revert and be held and owned by my grandchild Albert M. Billings Ruddock during his lifetime, and should my grandson Albert M. Billings Ruddock die not leaving a child or children of his own issue, then all the property and estate herein bequeathed to him shall revert and become the property and estate of my brother John D. Billings (should he be alive at that time) and my living nephews and nieces who shall be living at the time of the death of my said grandson, as aforesaid, said brother, nieces, and nephews to share and share alike in said estate.”

The will therefore created a life estate in the widow in the entire estate, and at her death life estates of two thirds and one third of the property bequeathed respectively to the testator's son and grandson, the plaintiffs in error.

The widow renounced the provision made for her, and elected to take in lieu thereof her dower and legal share, and the estates to the plaintiffs in error accrued at once. The county court appointed an appraiser to fix the fair market value of the estates for the purpose of assessing the inheritance tax as provided by the statute. “The widow's dower award,” to quote from the opinion of the supreme court, “and one third of the personalty were appraised at the total sum of $2,363,151.75, the tax upon which, after deducting the $20,000 exemption, was fixed at $23,443.53. The life interest (as it was decreed to be) of said Cornelius in the two thirds bequeathed to him was appraised at $2,472,118.75, and, after deducting his exemption of $20,000, the tax to be paid by him was assessed at $24,821.18. *This in-[101] cluded the specific devise of real estate valued at $30,000. The life interest of Albert M. Billings Ruddock in the one-third interest bequeathed to him was appraised at $1,408,374.77, and, after deducting his exemption of $20,000, his tax was assessed at $14,043.74. This included also the tax on a specific devise to him of real estate valued at $16,000. The court, in approving the appraiser's report, found that Cornelius K. G. Billings took a life estate in the two thirds of the residuary estate bequeathed to him, and that there was a remainder therein of the value, at the testator's death, of $864,584.70, which had not vested, and that there was a remainder in the one third bequeathed to Albert M. Billings Ruddock for life of the value of $250,976.95, which had not vested, and ordered that the tax on these remainders be postponed until they shall have become vested.”

The widow was an appellant in the supreme court of the state, but she is not a party here.

The assignment of error is “that the statute is in contravention of the 14th Amendment to the Constitution of the United States of America, in that the classification of life tenants is arbitrary and unreasonable, and denies to the plaintiffs in error, as life tenants, the equal protection of the laws; because the statute, as interpreted and enforced by the state courts, taxes life estates where the remainder is to lineals, but does not tax, and expressly exempts, similar life estates where the remainder is to collaterals or to strangers in blood.”

Turning to the Magoun Case, we find that the objection made to the statute was that it denied to the appellant the equal protection of the laws, and the somewhat elementary and lengthy discussion in the opinion was induced by the grounds upon which, and the ability with which, the statute was attacked. It is very certain that no consideration was omitted from the arguments at bar which could have aided the court to form a judgment. If there had been a proper classification there could not have been the denial of the equal protection of the laws, and we therefore expressed and illustrated the principle upon which it should be based. We said it was established by cases that classification must be based on some reasonable ground. *It could not be a "mere arbitrary selection." But what is the test of an arbitrary selection? It is difficult to exhibit it precisely in a general rule. Classification is essentially the same in law as it is in other departments of knowledge or practice. It is the grouping of things in speculation or practice because they "agree with one another in certain particulars and differ from other things in those same particulars." Things may have very diverse qualities, and yet be united in a class. They may have very similar qualities, and yet be cast in different classes. Cattle and horses may be considered in a class for some purposes. Their difference are certainly pronounced. Salt and sugar may be associated in a grocer's stock for a grocer's purposes. To confound them in use would be very disappointing. Human beings are essentially alike, yet some individuals may have attributes or relations not possessed by others, which may constitute them a class. But their classification—indeed, all classification—must primarily depend upon purpose—the problem presented. Science will have one purpose, business another, and legislation still another. The latter, of course, on account of the restraints upon the legislature, may not be legal,—may not be within the power of the legislature. To dispute that power, however, is not the same thing as to dispute a classification, and yet that there may be dependence,—more freedom of classification in some instances,—has been indicated by the cases. A state cannot regulate interstate commerce, however accurate its classification of objects may be. On the other hand, the taxing power of a state is one of its most extensive powers. It cannot be exercised upon persons grouped according to their complexions. It can be exercised if they are grouped according to their occupations. A state may regulate or suppress combinations to restrict the sale of products. The power cannot be exerted to forbid combinations among those who buy products, and permit combinations among those who raise or grow products. 184 U. S. 540, 46 L. ed. 679, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 431. And yet, exercising its taxing power, it has been decided, that a state may make that discrimination. 179 U. S. 89, 45 L. ed. 102, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 43. Other illustrations may be taken from the cases which tend to the same end. If the purpose *is within the legal powers of the legislature, and the classification made has relation to that purpose (excludes no persons or objects that are affected by the purpose, includes all that are), logically speaking, it will be appropriate; legally speaking, a law based upon it will have equality of operation. And, excluding our right to consider policies or assume legislation, we have many times said that a state in its purposes and in the execution of them must be allowed a wide range of discretion, and that this court will not make itself a harbor in which can be found "a refuge from ill-advised, unequal, and oppressive" legislation. 102 U. S. 691, 26 L. ed. 238.

These principles were announced in the Magoun Case, and found to sustain the Illinois statute. We said "There are three main classes in the Illinois statute, the first and second being based, respectively, on lineal and collateral relationship to the testator or intestate, and the third being composed of strangers to his blood and distant relatives. The latter is again divided into four subclasses dependent upon the amount of the estate received. The first two classes, therefore, depend upon substantial differences, differences which may distinguish them from each other, and them or either of them from the other class,—differences, therefore, which 'bear a just and proper relation to the attempted classification'—the rule expressed in Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Ellis, 165 U. S. 150, 41 L. ed. 666, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 255. And if the constituents of each class are affected alike, the rule of equality prescribed by the cases is satisfied. In other words, the law operates 'equally and uniformly upon all persons in similar circumstances.'"

But it is insisted that the classification sustained in the Magoun Case "related solely to the graduated feature of the tax." In the case at bar, it is said, the question is "whether or not the Illinois legislature can discriminate against constituents of a certain class, and apply different rules for the taxation of its members. Life tenants constitute but a single class, and the incidents of such an estate, the source thereof, the extent, the dominion over and quality of interest in the tenant, is the same irrespective of the ultimate vesting of the remainder. The tax *is not upon the property, but [104] is upon the person succeeding to the property."

Undoubtedly, life tenants, regarded simply as persons, may be in legal contemplation the same; estates for life, regarded simply as estates with their attributes also in legal contemplation, may be said to be the same, but that is not all that is to be considered, nor is it determinative. We must regard the power of the state over testate and intestate dispositions of property, its power to create and limit estates, and, as resulting, its power to impose conditions upon their transfer or devolution. It is upon this power that inheritance-tax laws are based, and we said, in the Magoun Case, that the power could be exercised by distinguishing between the lineal and collateral relatives of a testator. There the amount of tax depended upon him who immediately received; here the existence of the tax depends upon him who ultimately receives. That can make no difference with the power of the state. No discrimination being exercised in the creation of the class, equality is observed. Crossing the lines of the classes created by the statute, discriminations may be exhibited, but within the classes there is equality.

Judgment affirmed.

AMERICAN COLORTYPE COMPANY,
Appt.,
v.

CONTINENTAL COLORTYPE COMPANY,
William J. Maas, Baxter J. Fierlein,
Henry Freese, Henry E. Schultz, O. H.
Quetsch, and J. O. M. Seibert.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 104-108.)

Courts—jurisdiction—diverse citizenship—assigned claim.

The jurisdiction of a circuit court of the United States, on the ground of diverse citizenship, of a suit by a foreign corporation against residents of the state, is not defeated on the theory that plaintiff is suing as the assignee of a domestic corporation, where the bill, although emphasizing the existence of certain contracts between defendants and its assignor, and alleging that it became substituted for such assignor as a party thereto, contains allegations which show that the parties, having the old contracts before them, entered into new agreements determined by reference to the terms of the old contracts, but none the less personal and immediate.

[No. 440.]

Submitted December 22, 1902. Decided January 19, 1903.

APPPEAL from the Circuit Court of the United States for the Northern District of Illinois to review a judgment which dismissed for want of jurisdiction a bill in a suit sought to be maintained therein on the ground of diverse citizenship. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. A. M. Pence, Otto C. Butz, and Amos C. Miller submitted the cause for appellant. Messrs. Lackner, Butz, & Miller were on the brief:

The complainant's case rests, not merely upon the assignment of the contracts with the defendants, but upon new agreements made directly with these defendants.

21 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 660; Chapin v. Longworth, 31 Ohio St. 423; McKinney v. Alvis, 14 Ill. 33.

As to the secrets communicated by the complainant directly to the defendants, the complainant's right to relief is entirely clear, even in the absence of the allegations respecting a novation.

Harrison v. Glucose Sugar Ref. Co. 58 L. R. A. 915, 53 C. C. A. 484, 116 Fed. 304; O. & W. Thum Co. v. Tloczynski, 114 Mich. 149, 38 L. R. A. 200, 72 N. W. 140; Eastman Kodak Co. v. Reichenbach, 79 Hun, 183, 29 N. Y. Supp. 1143; Westervelt v. National Paper & Supply Co. 154 Ind. 673, 57 N. E.

NOTE.—As to diverse citizenship as ground of Federal jurisdiction—see Shipp v. Williams, 10 C. C. A. 247, and note; Mason v. Dullagham, 27 C. C. A. 296, and note; Seddon v. Virginia, T. & C. Steel & I. Co. (C. C. W. D. Va.) 1 L. R. A. 108, and note; Myers v. Murray, N. & Co. (C. C. S. D. Iowa) 11 L. R. A. 216, and note. And see note to Roberts v. Lewis, 36 L. ed. U. S. 579.

552; Little v. Gallus, 4 App. Div. 569, 38 N. Y. Supp. 487; Morison v. Moat, 21 L. J. Ch. N. S. 248; 1 High. Inj. § 19; 1 Story, Eq. Jur. § 323; 2 Story, Eq. Jur. § 953; Chadwick v. Covell, 151 Mass. 190, 6 L. R. A. 839, 23 N. E. 1068; Peabody v. Norfolk, 98 Mass. 452, 96 Am. Dec. 664; Salomon v. Hertz, 40 N. J. Eq. 400, 2 Atl. 379; Yovatt v. Wingard, 1 Jac. & W. 394; Hopkins, Unfair Trade, § 67.

The Federal court, clearly having jurisdiction to grant the relief asked as to the trade and business secrets communicated to the defendants, even in the absence of any novation, may adjudicate upon the other matters inseparably connected therewith.

Evans v. Durango Land & Coal Co. 25 C. C. A. 531, 49 U. S. App. 320, 80 Fed. 433.

Mr. John C. Mathis submitted the cause for appellees. Messrs. Shope, Mathis, Zane & Weber were on his brief:

Novation requires that there must always be a discharge of a precedent contract as a consideration for the creation of a new contract.

Anson, Contracts, 8th ed. Huffcut, 289, *p. 235; Cuxon v. Chadley, 3 Barn. & C. 591; Barnes v. Hekla F. Ins. Co. 56 Minn. 38, 57 N. W. 314; Liversidge v. Broadbent, 4 Hulst. & N. 603; American Paper-Bag Co. v. Van Nortwick, 3 C. C. A. 274, 9 U. S. App. 25, 52 Fed. 752; 6 Harvard Law Rev. 184; McKinney v. Alvis, 14 Ill. 33; Hayward v. Burke, 151 Ill. 121, 37 N. E. 846.

The substitution of one creditor for another is ordinarily treated as an assignment.

21 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 662.

Where a new party comes into a contract by transfer, there is no release of the party transferring, who is bound by the contract.

Chapin v. Longworth, 31 Ohio St. 421.

No new contract is pleaded, but it is expressly stated that the transferee came into the existing contract in place of the transferor. Such a transfer falls within the terms of the assignment statute.

Plant Investment Co. v. Jacksonville, T. & K. W. R. Co. 152 U. S. 71, 38 L. ed. 358, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 483.

Mr. Justice Holmes delivered the opinion of the court:

This is a bill in equity brought in the circuit court for the northern district of Illinois by a New Jersey corporation against an Illinois corporation and private persons, citizens of Illinois. Upon demurrer the bill was dismissed for want of jurisdiction, on the ground, as is certified, that it was a bill to recover the contents of a chose in action in favor of an assignee, the assignors being citizens of Illinois. The case comes here by appeal. The prayers of the bill are for injunctions to prevent the defendants Maas, Fierlein, Freese, and Schultz assisting the defendant company or the defendants Quetsch and Seibert in the three-color printing business, revealing secret processes, etc., until different specified dates. The main ground of the prayers is the contracts to be mentioned, and the question is whether the claim stated by the plaintiff is a claim as assignee.

The plaintiff is the assignee of the assets and good will of the National Colortype Company, the American Three-Color Company, Illinois corporations, and the Osborne Company, a New Jersey corporation, and was formed on March 1, 1902, for the purpose of consolidating the three. Among the more important contracts which purported to be transferred were two between the National Colortype Company and Maas and Fierlein respectively. By the former, Maas [106] was employed as superintendent *of the plat-making department, and agreed to remain in the company's employment and not to accept employment from others in the business of three-color printing for five years from December 1, 1901, and not to become interested in any way in that business in the United States, east of the Rocky Mountains, or divulge any secrets or processes relating to that business, for ten years from the day mentioned. By the other contract Fierlein was employed as salesman, and agreed to devote his whole time and attention to the interest and business of the company for two years from the same date. There was a similar contract with the defendant Freese, expiring May 1, 1903, but containing a promise by him never to divulge any of the secrets, methods, or practices of the company, and agreeing that his going to work for any others engaged in similar business should be considered a breach of the promise just set forth.

The bill alleges that Maas, knowing of the transfer, consented to it, announced his intention of holding the plaintiff to the contract with him, remained in its employ in the same capacity, accepted the stipulated salary, and was instructed in valuable secrets, and that the complainant, by the consent of all parties, became substituted as a party to the contract in place of the National Colortype Company. There are shorter but similar allegations concerning Fierlein and Freese. An independent contract with the defendant Schultz is alleged, which has expired, but it is alleged that by virtue of his employment he also has become possessed of trade secrets and processes belonging to plaintiff.

The bill goes on to allege that Maas and Fierlein, while in the plaintiff's employment and pay, conspiring with the defendants Quetsch and Seibert, got up the defendant corporation as a rival to the plaintiff, induced the defendants Freese and Schultz to enter its service, have taken over their own special skill and knowledge of the plaintiff's secrets to the hostile camp, and, in short, will ruin the plaintiff if they are permitted to go on.

We are of opinion that a case is stated within the jurisdiction of the court. It is true that the starting point for the relations between the plaintiff and its employees was [107] what purported to *be an assignment. It is true that the bill emphasizes this aspect of the case, and states the evidence more accurately than the result. But those circumstances do not change the legal conclusion from the facts set forth. The allegations show that, having the old contract before them, the parties came together under a new agreement, which was determined by reference to the terms of that contract, but which none the less was personal and immediate. Maas, Fierlein, and Freese, who were under contract with the National Colortype Company, agreed to work for the plaintiff instead. The plaintiff accepted their promises, and gave a consideration for them by undertaking personally to pay. It does not matter that the bill calls this becoming substituted as the employer and as a party to the old contracts. The plaintiff could not become substituted to a strictly personal relation. All that it could do was to enter into a new one which was exactly like that which had existed before. Service is like marriage, which, in the old law, was a species of it. It may be repeated, but substitution is unknown. Arkansas Valley Smelting Co. v. Belden Min. Co. 127 U. S. 379, 387, 32 L. ed. 246, 248, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1308.

It may be that the form of the allegation was suggested by the hope to get some help from the written documents when the plaintiff comes to the proof, as against difficulties raised by the statute of frauds. We have nothing to do with that. It is quite manifest that the plaintiff, if it prevails, will not do so on the ground that, by virtue of the transfer to it, it can claim the beneficial interest in the original agreements, and thus is an assignee within the definition given in Plant Investment Co. v. Jacksonville, T. & K. W. R. Co. 152 U. S. 71, 77, 38 L. ed. 358, 360, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 483; if it recovers it will recover on a promise made directly to it upon a consideration which it has furnished. This test is recognized in Thompson v. Perrine, 106 U. S. 589, 593, 27 L. ed. 298, 300, 1 Sup. Ct. Rep. 564, 568, although the doctrine there quoted from Mr. Justice Story, that the holder of a note payable to bearer recovers on a new promise made directly to himself, has been controverted elsewhere, and, indeed, long has smouldered as a dimly burning question of the law. Holtzendorff, Rechtslexicon, sub v. Inhaberpapiere, ad fin. (3d ed. 365, 371). Compare Abbott v. Hills, 158 Mass. 396, 397, 33 N. E. 592, Story, Conf. L. 8th ed. § 344.

*What we have said suggests the answer [108] to the objection that a novation is not set forth. The allegations seem to mean that the old company was discharged, but this is not a question of novation. We are dealing with a new bilateral contract made up of mutual undertakings to serve and to pay. The implication that the old contract is discharged is material only so far as it shows that the plaintiff's rights can be enforced without unjustly disregarding the rights of a third person.

It is unnecessary to consider whether an independent ground of jurisdiction is shown in the threatened revelation of trade secrets, or to discuss the different position of the defendant Schultze. Whether the obligation not to disclose secrets be independent of the express contract, or not, a case is made out. The question of independence will not arise unless a difficulty is encountered in the evidence because of the statute of frauds, but that is not a matter of pleading. We have not to consider how far the injunction should go in case the plaintiff succeeds, or anything except the objection that the plaintiff is suing as an assignee.

Decree reversed.

PETER NELSON and Henry Nelson, Plffs. in Err.,
v.

NORTHERN PACIFIC RAILWAY COMPANY.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 108-156.)

Railroad land grants—effect of order, of withdrawal based on map of general route—land within exterior limits—occupancy in good faith.

1. The alternate odd-numbered sections within the exterior limits of the general route of the Northern Pacific Railway Company were not so vested in that company by the mere filing of the map of general route and a withdrawal order based thereon as not to be subject to occupancy in good faith by homestead settlers prior to the definite location of the road, although the act of July 2, 1864, chap. 217 (13 Stat. at L. 365), § 6, declares that the "odd sections of land hereby granted shall not be liable to sale or entry or pre-emption before or after they are surveyed, except by said company," since this section must be read in connection with § 3, which restricts the grant to such odd-numbered sections as are free from pre-emption or other claims or rights at the date of definite location, and authorizes the company to select other lands in lieu of any found at that date to be "occupied by homestead settlers."
2. Continuous occupation of public land, with a bona fide intention to acquire it under the homestead laws as soon as it should be surveyed, constitutes, when begun prior to the definite location by the Northern Pacific Railroad Company of its route, a "claim" upon the land within the meaning of the act of Congress of July 2, 1864, chap. 217 (13 Stat. at L. 365), § 3, restricting the grant in aid of such railroad to such odd-numbered sections within specified general limits as were free from pre-emption or "other claims or rights" at the date of definite location, and authorizing the company to select other lands in lieu of any found at that date to be "occupied by homestead settlers."
3. One who in good faith occupies unsurveyed public land within the exterior limits of the general route of the Northern Pacific Railroad Company, after an order of withdrawal based on the map of general route, but before the definite location of the road, is entitled to perfect his title under the homestead laws as soon as the land is surveyed, by act of Congress of May 14, 1880 (21 Stat. at L. 140, U. S. Comp. Stat., 1901, p. 1382), chap. 89, § 3, in force when the occupancy was begun, which allows one who has settled or "shall hereafter" settle on public lands, with a view to acquiring them under the homestead laws, the same time to file his homestead application and perfect his original entry as is allowed to settlers under the pre-emption laws, and declares that his rights shall relate back to the date of settlement.

[No. 44.]

Argued October 16, 17, 1902. Decided January 26, 1903.

IN ERROR to the Supreme Court of the State of Washington to review a judgment which reversed a judgment of the Superior Court of Kittitas County in favor of defendant in a suit to recover the possession of real property. Reversed.

See same case below, 22 Wash. 521, 61 Pac. 703.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. James Hamilton Lewis argued the cause, and, with Messrs. C. H. Aldrich, Thomas B. Hardin, and Ralph Kaufman, filed a brief for plaintiffs in error:

Manifestly it was contemplated by the act of July 2, 1864, chap. 217, § 3 (13 Stat. at L. 365), that rights of pre-emption, or other claims or rights, might accrue or become attached to the land after the general route was fixed and before the line of definite location was established.

Northern P. R. Co. v. Sanders, 166 U. S. 636, 41 L. ed. 1145, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 671.

The filing of the map of general route gave the railroad no claim to any specific lands within the exterior limits of such route on either side of the road, and title does not attach to specific sections until they are identified by an accepted map of definite location of the line of road to be constructed.

Menotti v. Dillon, 167 U. S. 720, 42 L. ed. 338, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 945; Northern P. R. Co. v. McCormick, 36 C. C. A. 560, 94 Fed. 936.

Therefore, with an honest settlement for homestead purposes, an honest improvement preceding the filing of the accepted map of location gave a precedent right to the settler. It was a "right," or claim of right, as contradistinguished from claims attached (which latter word is not in the section now referred to).

Menotti v. Dillon, 167 U. S. 722, 42 L. ed. 339, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 945; Grubbs v. United States, 40 C. C. A. 513, 105 Fed. 314.

No declaration or promulgation by the department officer could affect these rights of the settler theretofore attaching to him,—particularly where the granting act of Congress reserved no such power or privilege in such administrative officer.

Northern P. R. Co. v. Smith, 171 U. S. 269, 43 L. ed. 161, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 794; Northern P. R. Co. v. Sanders, 166 U. S. 636, 41 L. ed. 1144, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 671.

The words of these acts should be construed in the most limited manner possible, so as to give the settler the greatest opportunity to enjoy the object and purpose of the acts.

NOTE.—As to land grants to railroads—see note to Kansas P. R. Co. v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. 28 L. ed. U. S. 794.

Tarpey v. Madsen, 178 U. S. 219, 44 L. ed. 1044, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 849.

No word can be construed into the act when apparently purposely omitted.

Sioux City & St. P. R. Co. v. United States, 159 U. S. 349, 40 L. ed. 177, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 17.

The words "free from . . . claims or rights" mean free from any claim of right or right of claim to the land.

Northern P. R. Co. v. Musser-Sauntry Land, Logging & Mfg. Co. 168 U. S. 608, 42 L. ed. 598, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 205.

In the absence of any express provision indicating otherwise, a grant of public lands only applied to lands which are free from existing claims.

Northern P. R. Co. v. McCormick, 36 C. C. A. 560, 94 Fed. 938.

If there were at the time of the filing of the map of definite location an actual existing claim, even though it might turn out to be wholly unfounded, the land thus claimed would not pass by the grant.

Northern P. R. Co. v. DeLacey, 174 U. S. 635, 43 L. ed. 1115, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 791.

No order made by the commissioner could be effective in discriminately holding up land anywhere from entry. The law is that the land attaching to the Northern Pacific could only so happen when definite map of location had been filed and accepted.

Southern P. R. Co. v. United States, 46 C. C. A. 712, 109 Fed. 921; United States v. Oregon & C. R. Co. 176 U. S. 28, 44 L. ed. 358, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 261.

The mere filing of the general route only indicated for the company's purpose, the line through and to which it would ultimately file its map, taking along such route, now suggested, such land as may be free from claim at the time of the filing of the map of definite location.

Northern P. R. Co. v. Musser-Sauntry Land, Logging & Mfg. Co. 168 U. S. 608, 42 L. ed. 598, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 205; Menotti v. Dillon, 167 U. S. 720, 42 L. ed. 338, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 945; Northern P. R. Co. v. McCormick, 36 C. C. A. 560, 94 Fed. 939.

This court has inclined to treat such a withdrawal order as of no value, or as most limited in its effect, being contrary to the purpose of the law and inconsistent with the spirit of the granting acts.

Hewitt v. Schultz, 180 U. S. 139, 45 L. ed. 463, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 309; Powers v. Slight, 180 U. S. 173, 45 L. ed. 479, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 319; Southern P. R. Co. v. Bell, 183 U. S. 675, 46 L. ed. 383, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 232.

Mr. James B. Kerr argued the cause, and, with Mr. C. W. Bunn, filed a brief for defendant in error:

Upon the fixing of the general route of the Northern Pacific Railroad, in 1873, and the issuance of the order of withdrawal by the Commissioner of the General Land Office, the land in question was no longer subject to homestead entry.

188 U. S.

Buttz v. Northern P. R. Co. 119 U. S. 55, 30 L. ed. 330, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 100; St. Paul & P. R. Co. v. Northern P. R. Co. 139 U. S. 1, 35 L. ed. 77, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 389; United States v. Southern P. R. Co. 146 U. S. 570, 36 L. ed. 1091, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 152; Northern P. R. Co. v. Amacker, 175 U. S. 564, 44 L. ed. 274, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 236; Hewitt v. Schultz, 180 U. S. 139, 45 L. ed. 463, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 309.

The action of the Interior Department in rejecting Nelson's application upon the ground that when he made his settlement, in 1881, the land had been for many years withdrawn from entry, is in accordance with the construction of the Department placed on this and similar grants. This construction has been unchanged from the beginning.

Northern P. R. Co. v. Pressey, 2 Land Dec. 551; Northern P. R. Co. v. Miller, 7 Land Dec. 100; McClure v. Northern P. R. Co. 9 Land Dec. 155; Northern P. R. Co. v. Collins, 14 Land Dec. 484; Central P. R. Co. v. Beck, 19 Land Dec. 100; Re Northern P. R. Co. 27 Land Dec. 505; Re Southern P. R. Co. 30 Land Dec. 247.

The decisions of this court are uniform that no rights can be acquired, under the public land laws, to lands withdrawn.

Wolsey v. Chapman, 101 U. S. 755, 25 L. ed. 915; Wood v. Beach, 156 U. S. 548, 39 L. ed. 528, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 410; Northern P. R. Co. v. Musser-Sauntry Land, Logging & Mfg. Co. 168 U. S. 604, 42 L. ed. 596, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 205.

The court will not overrule the construction placed upon acts of Congress by the executive officers of the government charged with their administration, except for cogent reasons, or unless that construction is manifestly erroneous.

United States v. Johnston, 124 U. S. 236, 31 L. ed. 389, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 446; United States v. Alabama G. S. R. Co. 142 U. S. 615, 35 L. ed. 1134, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 306; Hewitt v. Schultz, 180 U. S. 139, 45 L. ed. 463, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 309.

Mere occupancy at the date of definite location is insufficient to except land from a railroad grant.

Northern P. R. Co. v. Colburn, 164 U. S. 383, 41 L. ed. 479, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 98; Tarpey v. Madsen, 178 U. S. 215, 44 L. ed. 1042, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 849.

Mr. Justice Harlan delivered the opinion of the court:

"The Northern Pacific Railway Company [110] brought this action in one of the courts of the state of Washington to recover from the plaintiffs in error the southeast quarter of section twenty-seven, township twenty, north of range fourteen, east of the Willamette meridian, in Kittitas county, in that state,—the company claiming to be the owner in fee, and alleging that the defendants were in unlawful possession of the land.

The defendants denied each of the allegations of the petition, and the case was tried under a stipulation of facts, which for the purpose of the trial were conceded to be true. The facts so conceded were as follows:

The company is a corporation of Wisconsin, and succeeded, prior to the commencement of this action, to whatever right, title, or claim the Northern Pacific Railroad Company had, if any, to the land in dispute. The latter corporation was created by an act of Congress approved July 2d, 1864, chap. 217, granting lands in aid of the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from Lake Superior to Puget sound on the Pacific coast by the northern route, and by the acts and joint resolutions of Congress supplemental thereto and amendatory thereof. 13 Stat. at L. 365. We will hereafter refer to those sections of the act, upon the construction of which the decision of this case mainly depends.

The railroad company duly accepted in writing the terms of the act of Congress, and on the 29th day of December A. D. 1864, such acceptance was served on the President of the United States.

The company fixed the general route of its road extending coterminous with said land, and within 40 miles thereof, by filing a plat of such route with the Commissioner of the General Land Office August 20th, 1873. Thereafter, on November 1st, 1873, that officer transmitted to the register and receiver of the land office for the district in which the land was situate the following letter of instructions:

[111] **"Gentlemen:—The Northern Pacific Railroad Company having filed in this department a map showing the general route of their branch line, from Puget sound to a connection with their main line near Lake Pend d'Oreille in Idaho territory, I have caused to be prepared a diagram which is herewith transmitted, showing the 40-mile limits of the land grant along said line, extending through your district, and you are hereby directed to withhold from sale or entry all the odd-numbered sections falling within these limits not already included in the withdrawal for the main-line period. The even sections are increased in price to $2.50 per acre, subject to pre-emption and homestead entry only. This withdrawal takes effect from August 15th, 1873, the date when the map was filed by the company with the Secretary of the Interior, as required by the 6th section of the act of July 2d, 1864, organizing said company."*

The letter of the Commissioner and the diagram therein referred to were received and filed in the local land office November 17th, 1873.

The land in dispute was within the 40-mile limit of the land grant as designated in the diagram.

On December 6th, 1884, the railroad company definitely located the line of its railroad, coterminous with and within less than 40 miles of the land in controversy, by filing a plat of such line, approved by the Secretary of the Interior, in the office of the Commissioner of the General Land Office; and prior to November 18th, 1886, it constructed and completed a section of 40 miles of railroad and telegraph line extending over the line of definite location and coterminous with the land here in controversy. The President of the United States having appointed three commissioners to examine the same, and the commissioners, having performed that duty, reported to the Secretary on the 18th day of November, 1886, that the lines were completed in all respects as required by the act of Congress.

On the 30th of November, 1886, the Secretary transmitted that report to the President with a recommendation that the railroad and telegraph line be accepted, and on the 7th day of December, 1886, the President approved that recommendation.

*The United States executed and delivered, May 10th, 1895, to the railroad company its letters patent, purporting to convey to the company the above tract under the terms and provisions of the act of 1864, and the various acts and joint resolutions of Congress supplemental thereto and amendatory thereof.

In the year 1881, three years before the definite location of the road, the defendant Henry Nelson went upon the above land and occupied it, and has since continuously resided thereon. It is agreed that he was at the time qualified to enter public lands under the act of Congress approved May 20th, 1862 (12 Stat. at L. 392, chap. 75), entitled "An Act to Secure Homesteads to Actual Settlers on the Public Domain," and under the various acts supplemental thereto and amendatory thereof.

The land when occupied was unsurveyed, and was not surveyed until 1893. But as soon as surveyed Nelson attempted to enter it under the homestead laws of the United States in the proper United States district land office. His application was, however, rejected by the register and receiver because, in their opinion, it conflicted with the grant to the Northern Pacific Railroad Company.

The defendant Peter Nelson is in the occupancy of a portion of the land in question under license from his codefendant Henry Nelson.

Upon the facts so stipulated, the judgment was that the railroad company was not the owner, had no claim to, and was not entitled to the possession of the land in dispute, and that the defendant Henry Nelson was entitled to remain in possession by virtue of the homestead laws of the United States. Upon appeal to the supreme court of Washington that judgment was reversed, and the cause remanded with directions to enter judgment for the company.

*1. Before considering the merits of the case it is proper to remark that although the railroad company holds the patent of the United States for the land in controversy, the defendant, according to the laws of the state, was entitled to judgment, if it appeared that he was equitably entitled to possession as against the plaintiff. Hill's Anno. Codes & Statutes, 530 et seq.; Burmeister v. Howard, 1 Wash. Terr. 208.

2. We have seen that the Northern Pacific Railroad Company was created by the act of Congress of July 2d, 1864, chap. 217, making a grant of lands in aid of the construction of the road from Lake Superior to Puget sound. When that grant was made substantially the entire country between those points was untraveled as well as uninhabited except by Indians, very few of whom, at that time, were friendly to the United States. The principal object of the grant, as will appear from its language, was to secure the safe and speedy transportation of the mails, troops, munitions of war, and public stores, by means of a railroad and telegraph, and to that end, and in order to bring the public lands into market, it was deemed important to encourage the settlement of the country along the proposed route. The public lands in that vast region were unsurveyed, and it was not known when they would be surveyed. Congress, of course, knew that if immigrants accepted the invitation of the government to establish homes upon the unsurveyed public lands, they would do so in the belief that the lands would be surveyed, that their occupancy would be respected, and that they would be given an opportunity to perfect their titles in accordance with the homestead laws.

Such was the situation when the act of July 2d, 1864, was passed. Necessarily the act must be interpreted in the light of that situation. It should not be so interpreted as to justify the charge that the government laid a trap for honest immigrants who risked the dangers of a wild, unexplored country, in order that they might establish homes for themselves and their families. And it should not be supposed that Congress [114] had in view *only the interests of the company, which, with the aid of a munificent grant of lands, was empowered to connect Lake Superior and Puget sound with a railroad and telegraph line.

Let us now see what is the fair import of the act of 1864, under which both parties claim possession.

By the 3d section of that act, it was, among other things, provided as follows, to wit: "That there be, and hereby is, granted to the 'Northern Pacific Railroad Company,' its successors and assigns, for the purpose of aiding in the construction of said railroad and telegraph line to the Pacific coast, and to secure the safe and speedy transportation of the mails, troops, munitions of war, and public stores over the route of said line of railway, every alternate section of public land, not mineral, designated by odd numbers, to the amount of twenty alternate sections per mile, on each side of said railroad line, as said company may adopt, through the territories of the United States, and ten alternate sections of land per mile on each side of said railroad whenever it passes through any state, and whenever on the line thereof the United States have full title, not reserved, sold, granted, or otherwise appropriated, and free from pre-emption or other claims or rights at the time the line of said road is definitely fixed, and a plat thereof filed in the office of the Commissioner of the General Land Office; and whenever, prior to said time [of definite location], any of said sections or parts of sections shall have been granted, sold, reserved, occupied by homestead settlers, or pre-empted, or otherwise disposed of, other lands shall be selected by said company in lieu thereof, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, in alternate sections, and designated by odd numbers, not more than 10 miles beyond the limits of said alternate sections. . . ."

By the 6th section of the act it was, among other things, provided as follows:

"§ 6. And be it further enacted, That the President of the United States shall cause the lands to be surveyed for 40 miles in width on both sides of the entire line of said road, after the general route shall be fixed, and as fast as may be required by the construction of said railroad; and the odd sections of *land hereby granted shall not be [115] liable to sale, or entry, or pre-emption, before or after they are surveyed, except by said company, as provided in this act." The stipulation of facts omits the latter part of § 6; but of the words omitted this court will take judicial notice. They are as follows: "But the provisions of the act of September, eighteen hundred and forty-one, granting pre-emption rights, and the acts amendatory thereof, and of the act entitled 'An Act to Secure Homesteads to Actual Settlers on the Public Domain,' approved May twenty, eighteen hundred and sixty-two, shall be, and the same are hereby, extended to all other lands on the line of said road, when surveyed, excepting those hereby granted to said company. And the reserved alternate sections shall not be sold by the government at a price less than two dollars and fifty cents per acre, when offered for sale."

The railroad company insists that after the order of withdrawal from "sale or entry" made in 1873 by the Commissioner of the Land Office, and based upon its map of general route, no right could be acquired by a settler upon any odd-numbered alternate section of land within the 40-mile limit indicated by the map of general route. As the lands in question were not surveyed until 1893, the company's contention means that during the twenty years succeeding the withdrawal in 1873 all the sections covered by the map of general route which would, upon a survey, appear to be odd-numbered alternate sections, were absolutely excluded from occupancy by any settler having in view the homestead laws.

The defendant insists that the act of 1864 recognized the right of an immigrant to occupy any section of the public lands on the general route up to the time of the definite location of the road, provided it was done in good faith with the intention to perfect his title under the homestead laws whenever it became possible to do so, and that if at the time of definite location it appeared that he was in the occupancy of an odd-numbered alternate section the railroad company could not disturb him.

[116] By the 6th section of the act of July 2d, 1864, it was declared that the odd sections "hereby granted," that is, by that act granted, should not be liable to sale, entry, or pre-emption before *or after they were surveyed, except by the company, as provided in the act. But we have also seen, looking at the 3d section, which was the granting section of the act, that Congress did not grant every odd-numbered alternate section within the general limits specified, but only the odd-numbered alternate sections to which the United States had full title, and which had not been previously reserved, sold, granted, or otherwise appropriated, and which were free from pre-emption or "other claims or rights" at the time the line of the road was definitely fixed—giving to the railroad company the right to select lands, within certain limits, in place of such as were found, at the date of definite location, to have been disposed of or to be "occupied by homestead settlers."

The first inquiry is whether the railroad company acquired any vested interest in the land in dispute by reason merely of the acceptance by the Land Department of its map of general route, or by reason merely of the withdrawal order of 1873. In other words, Did the land, after the general route was established, become segregated from the public domain and cease to be a part of the public lands, so as not to be subject to occupancy, in good faith, by homestead settlers, prior to definite location? These questions have a direct bearing on the present issues; for, if Congress did not intend—as, we think, it did not—that the railroad company should acquire any vested interest in these lands, prior to definite location, we can understand why it excluded from its grant any lands "occupied by homestead settlers" at the time of the definite location of the road.

The above questions are, we think, distinctly answered in the negative by recent decisions of this court. Let us see if such be not the case.

In St. Paul & P. R. Co. v. Northern P. R. Co. 139 U. S. 1, 5, 35 L. ed. 77, 79, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 389, it was held that, after a map of a general route was filed and up to definite location, the grant to the railroad company was in the nature of a "float," and land which previously to definite location had been reserved, sold, granted, or otherwise appropriated, or upon which there was a pre-emption "or other claim or right," did not pass by the grant of Congress.

[117] In United States v. Northern P. R. Co. 152 U. S. 284, 296, 298, 38 L. ed. 443, 448, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 598, 603, 604, *the court said: "The act of 1864 granted to the Northern Pacific Railroad Company only public land, . . . free from pre-emption or other claims or rights at the time its line of road was definitely fixed, and a plat thereof filed in the office of the Commissioner of the General Land Office."

In Northern P. R. Co. v. Sanders, 166 U. S. 620, 634, 636, 41 L. ed. 1139, 1144, 17 410

Sup. Ct. Rep. 671, 676, it was adjudged that the railroad company "acquired, by fixing its general route, only an inchoate right to the odd-numbered sections granted by Congress, and no right attached to any specific section until the road was definitely located and the map thereof filed and accepted. Until such definite location it was competent for Congress to dispose of the public lands on the general route of the road as it saw proper." In the same case the court, after observing that as the lands there in dispute were not free from claims at the date of definite location, it was of no consequence what was done with them after date, proceeded: "The only ground upon which a contrary view can be rested is the provision in the 6th section of the act of 1864, that 'the odd sections of land hereby granted shall not be liable to sale or entry or pre-emption before or after they are surveyed, except by said company, as provided by this act.' But this section is not to be construed without reference to other sections of the act. It must be taken in connection with § 3, which manifestly contemplated that rights of pre-emption or other claims and rights might accrue or become attached to the lands granted after the general route of the road was fixed and before the line of definite location was established. Literally interpreted, the words above quoted from § 6 would tie the hands of the government so that even it could not sell any of the odd-numbered sections of the lands after the general route was fixed,—an interpretation wholly inadmissible in view of the provisions in the 3d section. The 3d and 6th sections must be taken together, and so taken it must be adjudged that nothing in the 6th section prevented the government from disposing of any of the lands prior to the fixing of the line of definite location, or, for the reasons stated, from receiving, under the existing statutes, applications to purchase such lands as mineral lands."

*The principles announced in the Sanders [118] Case were reaffirmed in Menotti v. Dillon, 167 U. S. 703, 720, 42 L. ed. 333, 338, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 945, 951, the court adding: "It is true, as said in many cases, that the object of an executive order withdrawing from pre-emption, private entry, and sale, lands within the general route of a railroad, is to preserve the lands, unencumbered, until the completion and acceptance of the road. But where the grant was, as here, of odd-numbered sections, within certain exterior lines, 'not sold, reserved, or otherwise disposed of by the United States, and to which a pre-emption or homestead claim may not have attached, at the time the line of said road is definitely fixed,' the filing of a map of general route and the issuing of a withdrawal order did not prevent the United States, by legislation, at any time prior to the definite location of the road, from selling, reserving, or otherwise disposing of any of the lands which, but for such legislation, would have become, in virtue of such definite location, the property of the railroad company."

In United States v. Oregon & C. R. Co. 176 U. S. 28, 43, 44 L. ed. 358, 364, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 261, 266, which involved the conflicting claims of two railroad companies to certain lands, and required the court to determine the effect of a map of general route filed by the Northern Pacific Railroad Company, as well as the extent of the grant made to it, the court said: "If, therefore, the Perham map of 1865 were conceded for the purposes of the present discussion to have been sufficient as a map of 'general route,'—and nothing more can possibly be claimed for it,—these lands could not be regarded as having been brought by that map (even if it had been accepted) within the grant to the Northern Pacific Railroad Company, and thereby have become so segregated from the public domain as to preclude the possibility of their being earned by other railroad companies under statutes enacted by Congress after the filing of that map and before any definite location by the company of its line." In the same case: "In opposition to the views we have expressed, it may be said that the clause in the act of July 25th, 1866 (14 Stat. at L. 239, chap. 242), providing for the selection under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior of lands for the Oregon company in lieu of any that should 'be found to have been granted, sold, reserved, occupied by [119] homestead settlers, *pre-empted, or otherwise disposed of,' shows that Congress did not intend to include in, but intended to exclude from, the grant to that company any lands that could have been earned by the Northern Pacific Railroad Company by definitely fixing its route and filing its map of definite location. Undoubtedly those lands would be regarded as having been appropriated when the route of the Oregon road was definitely located, if prior to that date the route of the Northern Pacific Railroad had been definitely fixed, and if such lands were within the exterior lines of that route. But, as we have said, these lands were within the limits of the grant of July 25th, 1866, and had not, at that time or when the route of the Oregon road was definitely located, been appropriated for the benefit of the Northern Pacific Railroad Company, for the reason that the latter company had not then filed any map of definite location. The Northern Pacific Railroad Company could take no lands except such as were unappropriated at the time its line was definitely fixed. It accepted the grant of 1864 subject to the possibility that Congress might, before its line was definitely fixed, authorize other railroad corporations to appropriate lands within its general route, allowing it to select other lands in lieu of any so appropriated. The lands here in dispute were consequently subject to be disposed of by Congress when the act of 1866 was passed; and (the line of the Northern Pacific railroad not having been definitely located prior to the passage of the forfeiture act 188 U. S.

of 1890 (26 Stat. at L. 496, chap. 1040, U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 1598), the Oregon Company became entitled to take the lands and to receive patents therefor in virtue of its accepted map of definite location." See also Wilcox v. Eastern Oregon Land Co. 176 U. S. 51, 44 L. ed. 368, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 269, and Messinger v. Eastern Oregon Land Co. 176 U. S. 58, 44 L. ed. 370, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 271.

The cases above cited definitely determine that the railroad company acquired no vested interest in any particular section of land until after a definite location as shown by an accepted map of its line; and that until definite location the land covered by the map of general route was a "float," that is, at large.

In support of the proposition that the railroad company acquired an interest in the lands in dispute, upon its general route being established, reference has been made to some expressions *in the opinion of Mr. [120 Justice Field in Buttz v. Northern P. R. Co. 119 U. S. 55, 71, and 72, 30 L. ed. 330, 336, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 100, 197, to the effect that when the general route of that road was made known by a map duly filed and accepted, "the law withdraws from sale or pre-emption the odd sections to the extent of 40 miles on each side. The object of the law in this particular is plain; it is to preserve the land for the company to which, in aid of the construction of the road, it is granted." But it is evident, in view of both prior and subsequent decisions, that this language is not to be taken literally or apart from the other portions of the opinions of the eminent jurist who delivered the judgment of the court. If, upon the filing and acceptance of the map of general route, the law withdrew the odd-numbered sections, then the previous holding in many cases that until definite location the grant was a float, with no interest in specific sections being acquired by the railroad company, would be meaningless; and there would be some difficulty in Congress appropriating such lands prior to definite location. Indeed, it is manifest that the court did not mean to announce any new doctrine in the Buttz Case; for Mr. Justice Field, when delivering judgment in that case, said that the charter of the Northern Pacific Railroad Company contemplated "the filing by the company, in the office of the Commissioner of the General Land Office, of a map showing the definite location of the line of its road, and limits the grant to such alternate odd sections as have not at that time been reserved, sold, granted, or otherwise appropriated, and are free from pre-emption, grant or other claims or rights. . . . Nor is there anything inconsistent with this view of the 6th section as to the general route, in the clause in the 3d section making the grant operative only upon such odd sections as have not been reserved, sold, granted, or otherwise appropriated, and to which pre-emption and other rights and claims have not attached, when a map of the definite location has been filed."

Further, we had occasion in Northern P.

R. Co. v. Sanders and United States v. Oregon & C. R. Co. above cited, to limit the broad language in the Buttz Case which implied that after the general route was fixed the land was withdrawn by the law for the [121] railroad company. We *said in the last-named case: "This language was too broad if it is construed to express the thought that public lands, when within the exterior lines of a 'general route,' are 'appropriated' from the time the map of such route is filed, so as to prevent them from being granted by Congress to and from being earned by another railroad corporation prior to the filing of a map of definite location by the company designating such general route."

It results that the railroad company did not acquire any vested interest in the land here in dispute in virtue of its map of general route or the withdrawal order based on such map; and if such land was not "free from pre-emption or other claims or rights," or was "occupied by homestead settlers" at the date of the definite location on December 8th, 1884, it did not pass by the grant of 1864. Now, prior to that date, that is, in 1881, Nelson, who is conceded to have been qualified to enter public lands under the homestead act of May 20th, 1862, went upon and occupied this land and has continuously resided thereon. The land was not surveyed until 1893, but as soon as it was surveyed he attempted to enter it under the homestead laws of the United States, but his application was rejected, solely because, in the judgment of the local land officers, it conflicted with the grant to the Northern Pacific Railroad Company. He was not a mere trespasser, but went upon the land in good faith, and, as his conduct plainly showed, with a view to residence thereon, not for the purposes of speculation, and with the intention of taking the benefit of the homestead law by perfecting his title under that law, whenever the land was surveyed. And for fourteen years before the railroad company by an ex parte proceeding, and without notice to him, so far as the record shows, obtained from the Land Office a recognition of its claim, and for sixteen years before this action was brought, he maintained an actual residence on this land. It is so stipulated in this case. As the railroad had not acquired any vested interest in the land where Nelson went upon it, his continuous occupancy of it, with a view, in good faith, to acquire it under the homestead laws as soon as it was surveyed, constituted, in our opinion, a [122] claim upon the land *within the meaning of the Northern Pacific act of 1864; and as that claim existed when the railroad company definitely located its line, the land was, by the express words of that act, excluded from the grant.

This view protects the bona fide settler in his home, established upon the invitation of the government under great difficulties, and does no injustice to the railroad company; for, after restricting the grant to such odd-numbered sections of lands, within specified lateral limits, as were free from pre-emption or "other claims or rights" at the time the line of the road was definitely fixed, Congress, in the act of 1864, as we have seen, proceeded: "And whenever, prior to said time [of definite location] any of said sections or parts of sections shall have been granted, sold, reserved, occupied by homestead settlers, or pre-empted or otherwise disposed of, other lands shall be selected by said company in lieu thereof," etc. The words "occupied by homestead settlers" show that Congress intended by the charter of the Northern Pacific Railroad Company—whatever it may have intended as to other companies receiving grants of public lands—that occupancy by a homestead settler, with the intention to take the benefit of the homestead laws, constituted a claim which, existing at the date of definite location, would exclude from the grant land that might otherwise be covered by it. If Congress did not intend thus to protect the occupancy of homestead settlers, the reference to lands being "occupied by homestead settlers," at date of definite location, was meaningless, and it was useless to reserve to the company the privilege of selecting lands in lieu of those lost by such occupancy. Congress knew, when passing the act of 1864, that one going west to establish his home could not know whether the unsurveyed land occupied by him would be an even-numbered or odd-numbered section. Hence, the provision in § 3 in relation to odd-numbered sections "occupied by homestead settlers." The efficacy of such a provision could not be destroyed except by further legislation. It is as if Congress had in words declared that among the "other claims or rights" of which the land must be free at the time of definite location in order that the railroad company might take, were claims arising *out of occupancy by [123] homestead settlers. Such settlers Congress, in effect, declared should be protected in their rights, and the railroad company should be reimbursed by lieu lands near by. Nelson's occupancy, we have seen, commenced in 1881, while the definite location of the road occurred in 1884. That he occupied and continuously resided upon the land in dispute as a homestead settler after 1881 is admitted.

If it be said that Nelson's claim was that of mere occupancy, unattended by formal entry or application for the land, the answer is that that was a condition of things for which he was not in anywise responsible, and his rights, in law, were not lessened by reason of that fact. The land was not surveyed until twelve years after he took up his residence on it, and under the homestead law he could not initiate his right by formal entry of record until such survey. He acted with as much promptness as was possible under the circumstances.

In Ard v. Brandon, 156 U. S. 537, 543, 39 L. ed. 524, 526, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 406, 409, this court said: "The law deals tenderly with one who, in good faith, goes upon the public lands with a view of making a home thereon. If he does all that the statute prescribes as the condition of acquiring rights, the law protects him in those rights, and does not make their continued existence depend alone upon the question whether or no he takes an appeal from an adverse decision of the officers charged with the duty of acting upon his application." In the same case the court quoted with approval these words from Clements v. Warner, 24 How. 394, 397, 16 L. ed. 695, 696: "The policy of the Federal government in favor of settlers upon public lands has been liberal. It recognizes their superior equity to become the purchasers of a limited extent of land, comprehending their improvements, over that of any other person."

[124] In the recent case of Tarpey v. Madsen, 178 U. S. 215, 219, 44 L. ed. 1042, 1044, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 849, 850,—which was a contest between the Central Pacific Railroad Company and a pre-emptor who sought to avail himself of the act of September, 1841,—it was found as a fact that the land in dispute had on it, at the date of definite location (which was on October 20th, 1868), the improvements of a bona fide settler; and one of the questions in the case was how far the rights of the settler, based upon a bona fide occupancy, were affected [124] by *the absence of a local land office in which could be made some record of his application or entry. This court said: "It is true that there was then no local land office in which those seeking to make pre-emption or homestead entries could file their declaratory statements or make entries, and the want of such an office is made by the supreme court of the state one of the main grounds for holding that the land did not pass to the railroad company. We agree with that court fully in its discussion of the general principles involved in the failure of the government to provide a local land office. The right of one who has actually occupied, with an intent to make a homestead or pre-emption entry, cannot be defeated by the mere lack of a place in which to make a record of his intent. . . . If Olney was in possession of this tract before October 20, 1868 [date of definite location], with a view of entering it as a homestead or pre-emption claim, and was simply deprived of his ability to make his entry or declaratory statement by the lack of a local land office, he could, undoubtedly, when such office was established, have made his entry or declaratory statement in such way as to protect his rights." In the present case, the settler waited from 1881 to 1893 for the land to be surveyed, and as soon as that was done he attempted to enter it under the homestead law in the proper office, but his claim was overruled upon the theory, unfounded in law, that the land was covered by the railroad grant.

So far we have proceeded on the ground that, as the act of 1864 granted to the railroad company the alternate sections to which at the time of definite location the United States had full title, not reserved, sold, granted, or appropriated, and which were free from pre-emption or other claims or rights at date of definite location, and authorized the company to select other lands in lieu of those then found to be "occupied by homestead settlers," Congress excluded from the grant any land so occupied with the intention to perfect the title under the homestead laws whenever the way to that end was opened by a survey.
188 U. S.

3. But the case of the appellant does not depend entirely upon this view of the act of 1864. It is placed on impregnable ground by the act of May 14th, 1880, chap. 89, entitled, "An Act for the Relief of Settlers on Public Lands," and which was in force when, *in 1881, Nelson settled upon the [125] land in dispute. The act is as follows: "1. That when a pre-emption homestead, or timber-culture claimant shall file a written relinquishment of his claim in the local land office the land covered by such claim shall be held as open to settlement and entry without further action on the part of the Commissioner of the General Land Office." § 2. In all cases where any person has contested, paid the land-office fees, and procured the cancelation of any pre-emption, homestead, or timber-culture entry he shall be notified by the register of the land office of the district in which such land is situated of such cancelation, and shall be allowed thirty days from date of such notice to enter said lands: Provided, That said register shall be entitled to a fee of one dollar for the giving of such notice, to be paid by the contestant, and not to be reported. § 3. That any settler who has settled, or who shall hereafter settle, on any of the public lands of the United States, whether surveyed or unsurveyed, with the intention of claiming the same under the homestead laws, shall be allowed the same time to file his homestead application and perfect his original entry in the United States Land Office as is now allowed to settlers under the pre-emption laws to put their claims on record, and his right shall relate back to the date of settlement, the same as if he settled under the pre-emption laws." 21 Stat. at L. 140, U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 1392.

The 3d section of this statute is a distinct confirmation of the rights of a qualified person who had theretofore settled or should thereafter settle "on any of the public lands of the United States, whether surveyed or unsurveyed, with the intention of claiming the same under the homestead laws;" though, of course, no lands could be deemed of that character which had prior to such settlement become vested in a railroad company in virtue of an accepted map of definite location. It is, as we have seen, a fixed principle in the law relating to the administration of the public lands that a railroad grant is a mere float until definite location, and that prior to that date all lands, within the exterior limits of a general route, are entirely at the disposal of the government, to be appropriated as it desires. The railroad company, as already shown, acquired, by its accepted map of general route, no interest in any specific [126]lands, but *only a right to take those to which, at the date of definite location, the United States had full title, and upon which there was no claim, and which were not "occupied by homestead settlers." It was, therefore, competent for the United States by the act of 1880—which was four years prior to the definite location of the Northern Pacific railroad—to give additional rights to those who had then settled or might thereafter in good faith settle upon any of the public lands. Some who have made comments on this act seem to overlook the broad language of § 3, and to forget that that section embraces, not only those who had theretofore, but those who might thereafter, settle on the public lands, whether surveyed or unsurveyed. Nelson settled on unsurveyed public land, in which the railroad company had no vested or specific interest, and the 3d section of the act of 1880 was purposeless if it did not allow him to perfect his title under the homestead laws, as soon as the land was surveyed.

The meaning we have given to the words "occupied by homestead settlers" in the act of 1864, and what has been said about the act of 1880, finds support in decisions of the Land Department. It will be well, in view of the far-reaching consequences of the decision in the present case, to refer to some of those decisions.

In Southern P. R. Co. (Branch) v. Lopez (1884) 3 Land Dec. 130, 131, Secretary Teller said that the act of July 27th, 1866, 14 Stat. at L. 292, chap. 278, relating to the Southern Pacific Railroad Company, "granted only such lands as were 'not reserved, sold, granted, or otherwise appropriated, and free from pre-emption or other claims or rights,' at date of definite location; and provided that 'whenever, prior to said time, any of said sections or parts of sections shall have been occupied by homestead settlers, pre-empted,' etc., lieu lands might be taken." It will be observed that this was the language of the Northern Pacific act of 1864. The Secretary proceeded: "Now a homestead entry, which must be made on surveyed lands, would be within the descriptive terms 'other claims' without doubt; but the question material to the case before me, wherein the land was not surveyed, is whether a homestead settlement on 27]unsurveyed *land, with a view to entering it when surveyed, is within said terms. I think it is. Construing together the granting words and those respecting the lieu land selection, it is evident that one of the 'other claims or rights' excepting land from the operation of the grant was 'occupation [occupied] by homestead settlers.' The word 'occupied' and the idea conveyed by it were foreign to the homestead law at date of this act, as an essential element in the reservation of land. I need not recite the numerous decisions of the courts and of the Land Department, which settle the principle that under the homestead law it is the 'entry' which reserves land (except for the short period during which it is reserved by settlement under the act of May 14th, 1880), and not any occupation by the claimant before or after it. The language of the granting act is therefore peculiar in this respect, and we are to suppose that it was used deliberately, with knowledge of then-existing law, and for a special and important purpose. We must interpret it in accordance with this evident purpose. Congress was aware that by this act it was making grants of land far beyond the line of the government surveys, in regions occupied and to be occupied largely by settlers awaiting the advent of the surveyor to prefer their claims. By § 6 the homestead law was extended to the even sections after survey, and expressly withheld from the odd sections before and after survey, and yet in § 3 land 'occupied by homestead settlers' was excepted from the grant. Congress knew that unsurveyed land could not be 'entered' as homesteads; it had in terms prohibited homestead 'entry' on these lands; it was aware that only by such 'entry' could a claim be appropriated and reserved from the grant, without express exception; and therefore in the use of the words 'occupied by homestead settlers' it intended to make such express exception, and to indicate a different kind of appropriation by a class of settlers not within the letter of the homestead law, though clearly within its spirit, namely, those who had made a home on the public domain in advance of the surveys, with the intention of subsequently claiming it under said law. If this was not the purpose, then the employment of the peculiar language referred to was a vain and useless thing; and such a *thing we are not to sup-]128]pose Congress had done (92 U. S. 733, 23 L. ed. 634). It therefore follows that the land claimed by Lopez, whose proofs are not questioned in any particular, and who preferred his claim promptly upon survey, was 'occupied by a homestead settler' when the grant to this company took effect, and hence excepted from the operation of the grant."

In Northern P. R. Co. v. Anrys (1890) 10 Land Dec. 258, 259, which was a contest between the Northern Pacific Railroad Company and a homesteader who had settled on unsurveyed public lands, Secretary Noble said: "It is urged that the land was not subject to the operation of the homestead law at the date of Newland's settlement, because unsurveyed, and that the homestead claim could have attached only by entry. But it must be remembered that the rights of the parties here must be determined by a proper construction of the railroad grant rather than of the general homestead law. It must be admitted that the ruling in the case at bar is in line with those of the Department for many years. In the case of Southern P. R. Co. (Branch) v. Lopez, 3 Land Dec. 130, the question here presented was fully discussed in connection with a grant framed in words identical with those used in the grant for the Northern Pacific company, and it was held that a homestead settlement on unsurveyed land with a view to entering it when surveyed is within the term 'other claims,' and that 'it is evident that one of the "other claims or rights" excepting land from the operation of the grant was "occupation by homestead settlers."' In support thereof it was urged that Congress was aware that by the act in aid of a road extending across the western half of the continent, it was making a grant far beyond the line of government surveys, in regions occupied and to be occupied largely by settlers awaiting the advent of the surveyor to prefer their claims. In this view I concur. It seems beyond question that it was to protect such settlers as described above that Congress excepted from the operation of the grant tracts 'occupied by homestead settlers.' Had Congress intended to extend its protection only to those who had made entry, it would have said so in other and appropriate words. The ordinary exception of 'lands to which a *homestead right has attached' would have fully protected that class of settlers. But Congress went further and made occupation the test instead of entry. I do not deem it necessary to cite cases to show that the views of the Department on this point have not changed."

In Spicer v. Northern P. R. Co. 10 Land Dec. 440, 443, the rights of an Indian were disputed by the Northern Pacific Railroad Company under the act of March 3d, 1875, 18 Stat. at L. 402, 420, chap. 131 (U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, pp. 1419, 1420), extending the benefit of the homestead laws of the United States, with certain restrictions upon the title when obtained, to Indians twenty-one years of age, or the head of a family having abandoned the tribal relations. Secretary Noble said: "The provisions of this act were in force at the date when the company's rights attached on definite location of its road, and, if the matters alleged relative to the claim of the Indian, Enoch, be true, he was at that date, and had been for many years prior thereto, living upon the land in question, as his home, with the intention to acquire title thereto, as a homestead; he had valuable and permanent improvements thereon, and had cultivated the same for many years, during all of which time he claimed it as his home. Such a claim, it seems to me, is clearly covered by the excepting clause of the grant to the company, and, if proven, would be sufficient, in my judgment, to defeat the claim of the company to the land. True, the Indian had put no claim of record for the land, but it is well settled by departmental rulings that while such omission might defeat the claim as against a subsequent settler who duly places his claim of record, it will not defeat such claim as against the United States, and the land covered thereby will be excepted from the operation of any grant for the benefit of a railroad company attaching subsequently to the inception of the settlement right. Northern P. R. Co. v. Evans, 7 Land Dec. 131, and authorities there cited. It is also well settled that a claim resting on settlement, residence, and improvements, acquired 188 U. S.

quired prior to the date when the company's rights attached under its grant, is sufficient to except the land covered thereby from the operation of such grant."

In Northern P. R. Co. v. McCrimmon, 12 Land *Dec. 554, it was said: "In support [130] of this appeal, counsel for the railroad company contend that Thomas did not claim the land as government land, but as railroad land, and that, although the land was excepted from the withdrawal on general route, yet Thomas did not insist upon the right to take it as government land, but was satisfied to claim it under the railroad company. Under the ruling of the Department, as announced in the cases of Northern P. R. Co. v. Bowman, 7 Land Dec. 238, and Northern P. R. Co. v. Potter, 11 Land Dec. 531, the only question to be determined, is, whether there was a settlement on the land at date of definite location by one having the qualification to enter the land under the settlement laws, and, if these facts are shown, the land would be excepted from the operation of the grant, although such settler might not have known of his right, but held the land under the belief that it was railroad land."

In Northern P. R. Co. v. Plumb, 16 Land Dec. 80, it appeared that the land in dispute was within the primary limits of the company's grant as shown by map of definite location filed July 6th, 1882, and was also within the limits of the withdrawal on map of general route filed February 21st, 1872. Secretary Noble said: "The only question raised by the appeal is as to whether the occupancy shown by Plumb was sufficient to defeat the grant. It appears that in 1881 Plumb took possession of the tract in question, together with an adjoining 40-acre tract, upon which he resided. In the spring of 1882 he broke the entire tract in question and inclosed it with a fence, and has since had possession of and improved the land. He had never exercised the pre-emption right, and was therefore duly qualified to claim the land under his settlement right. In 1886 he contracted to purchase the adjoining 40 acres, upon which he had resided, from the company, and at the hearing it was sought to show that he also claimed the land in question under the grant at the date of the definite location of the road, but the testimony will not warrant such a finding. Being in possession of the land in question at the date of the definite location of the road with valuable improvements thereon, and duly qualified to assert a right thereto under the settlement *laws, he had such a right [131] to the land as served to defeat the grant, and the fact that the claim subsequently asserted by him was under a different law from those providing for settlement can in nowise affect his rights in the premises. Being excepted from the grant by reason of his settlement, Plumb was at liberty to seek title from the government under any law under which such lands might be taken."

In Northern P. R. Co. v. Benz, 19 Land Dec. 229, the land in dispute was within the limits of the grant to the company, as shown by map of definite location filed July 6th, 1882, and was covered by the withdrawal upon general route of February 21st, 1872. Secretary Smith said: "The present contest is between the railroad company on one part and Hoy and Benz on the other. If it can be made to appear affirmatively by good and sufficient testimony that either of these parties, Hoy or Benz, was in possession of said land July 6, 1882, when the line of the road opposite thereto was definitely fixed, and, at the same time, had the right to perfect title to the same under the pre-emption or homestead laws, such possession excepted the land from the grant to the railroad company and reduced the contest to one between Hoy and Benz; or, rather, to one between Hoy and the legal representatives of Benz, he having died since entering his appeal." It was found that on July 6th, 1882, Hoyt was a competent entryman under the homestead laws.

What has been said as to the meaning and scope of the acts of 1864 and 1880 is not inconsistent with anything decided in Maddox v. Burnham, 156 U. S. 544, 39 L. ed. 527, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 448, and Wood v. Beach, 156 U. S. 548, 39 L. ed. 528, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 410.

In Maddox v. Burnham the question was as to the rights of a homestead occupant as against a certain railway company. Referring to the 3d section of the act of 1880, the court said: "By this section for the first time the right of a party entering land under the homestead law was made to relate back to the time of his settlement. But this act was passed long after the rights of the railway company had accrued and the legal title had passed to it. It is not operative, therefore, to divest such legal title, or enlarge, as against such title, any equitable rights which the defendant theretofore [132] had." This was a case, therefore, in "which the claim based upon occupancy accrued after the legal title had become vested in the railroad company, not a case in which the grant was, as here, a float with no right attached to any specific section.

In Wood v. Beach—which was a contest between a homestead settler and a railway company—it appeared that the map of the line of definite location was filed December 6th, 1866, and a withdrawal followed in 1867, while the occupation and settlement of the homesteader did not commence until June 8th, 1870. Of course, the legal title to the sections granted vested in the railway company upon the filing and acceptance of the map of definite location. Besides the withdrawal in 1867 was pursuant to the express command of the act of Congress of July 26th, 1866, 14 Stat. at L. 290, chap. 270, § 4, which provided that as soon as the railway company should "file with the Secretary of the Interior maps of its line, designating the route thereof, it shall be the duty of said Secretary to withdraw from the market the lands granted by this act in such manner as may be best calculated to effect the purposes of this act and subserve the public interest." It might well be, therefore, that one whose right, resting upon occupancy, had accrued, as in Maddox v. Burnham, after the legal title passed to the railroad company, or one who, as in Beach v. Wood, did not settle upon the public lands until after the railroad company had definitely located its road, and after the lands had been withdrawn from market pursuant to the directions of an express act of Congress, could not, as against the railroad company, acquire an interest in them by virtue of the act of 1880.

Nor is there any conflict between the decision now rendered and Northern P. R. Co. v. Colburn, 164 U. S. 383, 41 L. ed. 479, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 98; for, as appears from the opinion and record in that case, the land there claimed to have been occupied by a homestead settler, at the date of definite location, was surveyed public land, and the good faith of the occupation was not manifested by an entry, or an attempt at entry, at any time in the local land office. It was held that the inchoate right of the homesteader must be initiated by a filing in the land office. In the present case, as we have seen, the land occupied was unsurveyed, and at the *time of such occupancy, the land [133] being unsurveyed, there could not then have been any filing or entry in the land office.

The case before us is altogether different. Nelson's occupancy occurred after the passage of the act of 1880. While that act did not apply to a railroad company which had acquired the legal title, by definite location of its road, it distinctly recognized the right prior to such time to settle upon the public lands, whether surveyed or unsurveyed, with the intention of claiming the same under the homestead laws. In occupying the land here in dispute Nelson did not infringe upon any vested right of the railroad company; for there had not been at the date of such occupancy in 1881 any definite location of the line of the railroad, and the land, so occupied, with other lands embraced by the map of general route, constituted only a "float," the company having, at most, only an inchoate interest in them, a right to acquire them, if, at the time of definite location, it was not "occupied by homestead settlers" nor encumbered with "other claims or rights." The withdrawal merely from "sale or entry" in 1873, based only on a map of the general route of the road, did not identify any specific sections, was not expressly directed or required by the act of 1864, was made only out of abundant caution and in accordance with a practice in the Land Department, and did not and could not affect any rights given to homestead occupants by Congress in the acts of 1864 and 1880. Besides, the order made in 1873 to withhold from sale or entry all the odd-numbered sections falling within the limits of the general route was without practical value so far as the land in dispute was concerned; for such land had not been surveyed, and there could not have been any sale or entry of unsurveyed lands. At any rate, the order of withdrawal directing the local land office to withhold from "sale or entry" the odd-numbered sections within the limits of the general route could not prevent the occupancy of one of those sections prior to definite location by one who in good faith intended to claim the benefit of the homestead law; this, because such right of occupancy was distinctly recognized by the act of 1864. But if this were not so, the act of 1880, in its application to public lands, which had not become already vested in some company or person, must be held to have so modified the order of withdrawal based merely on general route, that such order would not affect any occupancy or settlement made in good faith, as in the case of Nelson, after the passage of that act, and prior to definite location. This conclusion cannot be doubted, because the act of 1880 made no exception of public lands covered by orders of withdrawal from sale or entry based merely on general route, and because also public lands, which had not become vested in the railroad company, by the definite location of its line, were subject to the power of Congress.

It results that the Supreme Court of the State of Washington erred in not affirming the judgment of the court of original jurisdiction in favor of the defendants.

The judgment must be reversed, and the cause remanded for such further proceedings as may not be inconsistent with this opinion.

Reversed.

Mr. Justice Brewer, with whom Mr. Justice Brown and Mr. Justice Shiras concur, dissenting:

I dissent from the judgment in this case. It overrules a unanimous judgment of this court, one which for nearly twenty years has been a guide to the Land Department in the construction of the Northern Pacific railroad grant. Further, in effect it declares that an entire section in the act of Congress making the grant, a section which from the inception of the work of construction has always been regarded by the parties interested as a provision intended to secure to the company the full measure of lands granted, is meaningless, and gave the company absolutely no protection whatever.

It is admitted that the company fixed the general route of its road coterminous with the road in controversy and within 40 miles thereof, by filing a plat of such route with the Commissioner of the General Land Office on August 20, 1873, and that on November 1, 1873, the odd-numbered sections within the 40-mile limits of this route were by the Land Department withdrawn from sale or entry and the even-numbered sections increased in price to $2.50, notice of which order was immediately filed in the local land office. In 1881, eight years thereafter, the plaintiff in error for the first time entered upon the lands and commenced its occupation. It is also admitted that by construction of its road the company has perfected its title to its land grant. Now, when the company filed its map of general route and obtained from the Land Department the order of withdrawal, it believed that it acquired something. It did not suppose that it was doing a vain and useless thing. It did not believe that Congress had cheated it with a delusive expectation of a benefit which it did not intend to give.

Was it justified in such belief? To answer this it is well to look back to the condition of things at the time the granting act was passed. In 1862, Congress created the Union Pacific Railroad Company to build a railroad from the Mississippi river to the Pacific ocean along the only then frequented line of travel. It made to the company a land grant, one fourth the size of the Northern Pacific grant, and agreed to lend it $16,000 and upwards per mile to aid in the construction, taking a first mortgage on the road as security for the loan. Notwithstanding this grant of land, this loan of money, and the fact that the road was to be along the only frequented line of travel, capital could not be induced to invest in the enterprise. Two years thereafter, and in 1864, Congress passed an amendatory act which doubled the land grant, making it half as large as that of the Northern Pacific, and agreed to take as security for its loan a second mortgage, giving to the company the right to place a first mortgage on the road in an amount equal to the government loan. And only after this large financial assistance and increased land grant was the work of construction commenced. On the same day Congress passed the act incorporating the Northern Pacific Railroad Company and making to it its grant. It promised no assistance in money, but only in lands. In order to give the company assurance that it would obtain its full grant it placed in the act § 6, the section which this court now holds is absolutely ineffectual therefor. That section reads:

"And be it further enacted, That the President of the United States shall cause [136] the lands to be surveyed for forty miles in width on both sides of the entire line of said road, after the general route shall be fixed, and as fast as may be required by the construction of said railroad; and the odd sections of land hereby granted shall not be liable to sale, or entry, or pre-emption before or after they are surveyed, except by said company, as provided in this act; but the provisions of the act of September, eighteen hundred and forty-one, granting pre-emption rights, and the acts amendatory thereof, and of the act entitled 'An Act to Secure Homesteads to Actual Settlers on the Public Domain,' approved May, twenty, eighteen hundred and sixty-two, shall be, and the same are hereby, extended to all other lands on the line of said road, when surveyed, excepting those hereby granted to said company. And the reserved alternate sections shall not be sold by the government at a price less than two dollars and fifty cents per acre, when offered for sale."

At the time of the passage of the act the entire body of the country from the western boundary of Minnesota to the Cascade Range was unoccupied, untraveled, and almost wholly unexplored. As said by Senator Hendricks, when the bill was before the Senate: "Everybody can see at a glance that it is a work of national importance. It proposes to grant lands in a northern latitude where, without the construction of a work like that, the lands are comparatively without value to the government. No person acquainted with the condition of that section of country supposes that there can be very extensive settlements until the government shall encourage those settlements by the construction of some work like this." And by Senator Harlan, the chairman of the Committee on Public Lands: "The Committee on Public Lands agree to report this bill favorably on account of the vast consequence that will attach to the completion of the road. The land is to be conveyed to the company only as the road progresses. The committee were of opinion that if the road should be built the government could well afford to give one half the land, for the distance of 40 miles on each side of the road, to secure its completion. If it should not be built, no lands will have been conveyed." In other words, the proposition was to give half of the lands [137] within 40 miles *of the road to the company, —not to give as much land as would be equal to half the lands within 40 miles of the road, but to give half of those lands. The difference is obvious. The construction of a railroad increases the value of contiguous lands. Congress doubles the price of the even-numbered sections which it retains. It makes no little difference to a company whether it receives lands along the line of the road which it constructs, lands which have been increased in value by reason thereof, or an equal amount of lands hundreds of miles away, and not so increased in value.

The withdrawal was not left to the discretion of the company, but was to be made by the President, after the general route had been fixed, and "as fast as may be required by the construction of said railroad." True, the language is that he "shall cause the lands to be surveyed;" but this, coupled with the prohibition against sale or entry, was tantamount to a direction to withdraw, and has always been so regarded by the Land Department and all parties interested. Thus he was to determine whether the time had arrived for a withdrawal. The withdrawal was in fact made. The President exercised his judgment and decided that the time had arrived for a withdrawal, and the Land Department through all its officials proceeded to act accordingly. The direction in the withdrawal was "to withhold from sale or entry all the odd-numbered sections falling within these limits." Surely this action of the President and the Land Department is entitled to the highest consideration. As said by Chief Justice Marshall, in Cohen v. Virginia, 6 Wheat. 264, 418, 5 L. ed. 257, 294: "Great weight has always been attached, and very rightly attached, to cotemporaneous exposition." See the many authorities on this proposition collected in Fairbank v. United States, 181 U. S. 283, 307, 45 L. ed. 862, 872, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 648.

But notwithstanding this section, notwithstanding the action of the executive officers in directing a withdrawal of this land from sale or entry, it is now held by the court that it was subject to homestead entry, and that the entryman acquired a right to obtain title by an entry made eight years after the withdrawal. Of course, as I said, such a ruling nullifies the section. A withdrawal from sale or entry which leaves unaffected *the right of purchase or entry is an [138] irreconcilable contradiction. But can there be any reasonable doubt as to the meaning of § 6, or that Congress intended exactly what was done by the executive officers, to wit, the withdrawal of all the odd sections within the 40-mile limit from sale, entry, or pre-emption? The significant words are these: "The odd sections of land hereby granted shall not be liable to sale, or entry, or pre-emption, before or after they are surveyed, except by said company." Now it is said in the opinion of the majority that § 3 defines what is "hereby granted" as "every alternate section" to which "the United States have full title, not reserved, sold, granted, or otherwise appropriated, and free from pre-emption or other claims or rights at the time the line of said road is definitely fixed," that those lands, and those only, are the ones not liable to sale, entry, or pre-emption, except by the company. It will help to write out the sentence with a substitution for the words "hereby granted" of the definition thereof which is presented, and it will read substantially as follows: The odd sections of land within the withdrawal limits to which the United States have full title, not reserved, sold, granted, or otherwise appropriated, and free from pre-emption or other claims or rights at the time the line of the road is definitely fixed, shall not from the time of the withdrawal until the filing of the map of definite location be liable to sale, entry, or pre-emption before or after they are surveyed, except by the company. Or, to put it in another form, the odd sections within the withdrawal limits, which no one purchases or enters before the filing of the map of definite location, shall not be purchased or entered by anybody except the company. It would be a failure of due respect to Congress to use language adequately expressive of the absurdity of such legislation. But Congress never meant any such thing. While it may be that the use of the words "hereby granted" was unfortunate, yet what was intended is clear. Congress intended to grant the odd-numbered sections and retain the even-numbered, and while in the granting clause some qualifications were placed in respect to the odd-numbered sections, in order to protect individual rights then existing, or which Congress might [139]*thereafter specifically create, yet as Congress was here not attempting a precise definition of what should pass by the grant, it used the term "granted lands" as descriptive generally of the odd-numbered sections, to distinguish them from the lands retained, the even-numbered sections. It obviously intended that no rights should be acquired, either by sale, entry, or pre-emption, to any of the odd-numbered sections after the filing of the map of general route, and this whether the lands were surveyed or unsurveyed. This is made clear by the last sentence in the paragraph. It says, "and the reserved alternate sections shall not be sold by the government at a price less than $2.50 per acre." Clearly that meant all the even-numbered sections, and not simply those which happened to be alternate to odd-numbered sections passing to the company. The truth is that in § 3 Congress defines specifically and carefully the lands which it granted. Its attention was directed in that clause to the matter of definition. While in § 6 it was not attempting to define, but to provide for a withdrawal before the filing of the map of definite location, and was simply endeavoring to make effective rights which it intended should accompany such withdrawal.

Again, in Hewitt v. Schultz, 180 U. S. 139, 45 L. ed. 463, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 309, it was held that the withdrawal directed by Congress in § 6 coupled with the provision extending homestead and pre-emption rights to all other lands on the line of the road, created an implied prohibition of any withdrawal of lands within the indemnity limits provided in § 3. It is unquestioned that, whenever a grant had been made of lands, the power of the Land Department to withdraw such body of lands, as might seem reasonably necessary for the satisfaction of the grant, had been frequently upheld by this court. See the long list of cases cited in the dissenting opinion on page 159. There is no express prohibition of like action by the Land Department in respect to lands within the Northern Pacific indemnity limits, and the judgment was based solely on the implied prohibition above referred to. The opinion of the court rested mainly on the rulings of the Land Department, as primarily expressed in the opinion of Secretary Vilas in Northern P. R. Co. v. Miller, 7 Land Dec. 100, from whose opinion large quotations were made, and in respect to rulings of the Land Department generally, it was said, conceding that the question involved was one of doubt (p. 157, L. ed. p. 472, Sup. Ct. Rep. p. 315):

[140]"It is the settled doctrine of this court," as was said in United States v. Alabama Great Southern R. Co. 142 U. S. 615, 621, 35 L. ed. 1134, 1136, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 306, 308, "that, in case of ambiguity, the judicial department will lean in favor of a construction given to a statute by the department charged with the execution of such statute, and, if such construction be acted upon for a number of years, will look with disfavor upon any sudden change, whereby parties who have contracted with the government upon the faith of such construction may be prejudiced."

188 U. S.

Turning to the opinion of Mr. Secretary Vilas, we find him saying (pp. 110, 111, 113, 119):

"But a peculiarity in legislation of this character is found in the 6th section of the act, in which a provision authorized the 'general route' to be fixed, and required lands to be surveyed for 40 miles in width on both sides of the entire line so fixed, and directed that the odd-numbered sections granted by the act should not be liable to sale or entry or pre-emption before or after they were surveyed, except by said company. In the language of the Supreme Court, in Buttz v. Northern P. R. Co. 119 U. S. 71, 30 L. ed. 336, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 100: The act of Congress not only contemplates the filing by the company, in the office of the Commissioner of the General Land Office, of a map showing the definite location of the line of its road, and limits the grant to such alternate odd sections as have not, at that time, been reserved, sold, granted, or otherwise appropriated, and are free from pre-emption, grant, or other claims or right, but it also contemplates a preliminary designation of the general route of the road, and the exclusion from sale, entry, or pre-emption of the adjoining odd sections within 40 miles on each side until the definite location is made.

"The facts which have been recited show beyond all reasonable question that the privilege given to the company of fixing, first, a line of general route, upon the basis of which the odd-numbered sections within 40-mile limits on either side were *to be [141] withdrawn from sale or entry or pre-emption before and after survey, was fully exercised by the company in Washington territory, from the eastern boundary to the mouth of the Walla Walla river, and thence along the Columbia to the first range line west of the Willamette principal meridian, and thence north to the international boundary, by its filing and the department's approval of its maps of location on the 30th of July, 1870. These maps and the action taken thereon fully met every requirement of the statute in that behalf. The company, by resolution, fixed this line as the basis of withdrawal, made its formal request that the land should be withdrawn thereon, the line was plainly and sufficiently described, the department accepted it, and applied the statutory consequence by directing the local land officers in Washington territory to withdraw the odd-numbered sections along that line as far north as the town of Steilacoom, first, for a width of 20 miles on either side, and, later in the same year, within the limit of an additional 20 miles; and also by increasing the minimum price of the even-numbered sections within the same limits to $2.50 per acre. Thus, the action of the company and of the department co-operated to give official determination to the fact upon which the statute became applicable, both to withdraw the odd-numbered sections and to double the minimum price of the even-numbered sections, and both effects were formally recognized and declared. It cannot be doubted that, had no other action been taken before the line of the road for construction was definitely located, this action in regard to the line of the general route of 1870 must have remained continuously operative upon all lands within the limit of 40 miles on either side of the line so established. So obvious is this, indeed, that from the mouth of the Walla Walla river, westwardly along the Columbia, that withdrawal remains to this day obligatory and operative by force of the statute and of that location. . . . By virtue of that withdrawal the odd-numbered sections within 40 miles of all that portion of the route lying east of the Columbia remained for nearly two years at least segregated from the public domain, and all purchasers of the even-numbered [142] sections *were required to pay the double minimum price for the land they bought. . . . Having provided the condition upon which a withdrawal of the public domain should be operative upon a preliminary general route for the benefit of this company, without any latitude of authority for any other, the legislative will must be regarded as exclusive of any other. . . . Thus, the meaning of the act appears to be that the provisional line of general route should, in the first place, be taken as the line upon which the grant was made, and, during the period while no other line was fixed than such line of general route, the lands in the odd-numbered sections within 40 miles should be taken as the granted lands, and, therefore, they are declared by the statute to be the 'hereby granted' lands." (The italics are mine.)

Thus the court held that, because by § 6 the odd-numbered sections were withdrawn from sale or entry, and at the same time it was declared that the homestead and pre-emption laws should apply to all other lands, there was an implied prohibition upon the Land Department's withdrawal of odd-numbered sections within the indemnity limits. Now it is held that the withdrawal directed by § 6 and made by the Secretary of the Interior was absolutely meaningless and secured nothing to the company. If the withdrawal directed by § 6 intended nothing, accomplished nothing, it should not have been made the basis for an implied prohibition of the hitherto unquestioned power of the Land Department to withdraw lands in indemnity limits. There is an incongruity in the two decisions which, to my mind, is, to use no stronger expression, both sad and startling.

Further, the Land Department did in fact withdraw from sale or entry all the odd-numbered sections within the 40-mile limits of the general route,—and this withdrawal included the tract in controversy as well as the other odd-numbered sections,—and notice thereof was filed in the local land office, and this many years before the plaintiff in error went upon the land. As 420 heretofore stated, the power of the Land Department to withdraw from private entry lands which it has reason to believe may be necessary to satisfy a land grant has never been denied. *It is a power which has been [143] exercised again and again from the inception of land grants. In one case (Wolcott v. Des Moines Nav. & R. Co. 5 Wall. 681, 18 L. ed. 689), we sustained a withdrawal made by the department beyond the real terminus of the grant on the ground that there was some doubt where the grant terminated, and therefore the department was justified in making the withdrawal cover any possible conclusion as to such terminus. There was in the Northern Pacific act no prohibition on the Land Department's exercise of this customary power. Indeed, as I have shown, it was held in Hewitt v. Schultz, 180 U. S. 139, 45 L. ed. 463, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 309, that the express direction to withdraw lands in the place limits was the foundation of an implied prohibition on a withdrawal of lands within the indemnity limits. The purpose and effect of a withdrawal are not to vest any title in the beneficiary of the grant, but to preserve the lands from private entry in order that when the time arrives the grantee may receive the full measure of its grant. As said in Menotti v. Dillon, 167 U. S. 703, 720, 721, 42 L. ed. 333, 339, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 945, 951: "It is true, as said in many cases, that the object of an executive order withdrawing from pre-emption, private entry, and sale lands within the general route of a railroad, is to preserve the lands, unencumbered, until the completion and acceptance of the road. . . . That order took these lands out of the public domain as between the railroad company and individuals, but they remained public lands under the full control of Congress, to be disposed of by it in its discretion at any time before they became the property of the company under an accepted definite location of its road."

This language was quoted with approval in United States v. Oregon & C. R. Co. 176 U. S. 28, 48, 44 L. ed. 358, 366, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 261.

Again, in Northern P. R. Co. v. Musser-Sauntry Land, Logging & Mfg. Co. 168 U. S. 604, 607, 42 L. ed. 596, 597, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 205, 206, we said:

"The withdrawal by the Secretary in aid of the grant to the state of Wisconsin was valid, and operated to withdraw the odd-numbered sections within its limits from disposal by the land officers of the government under the general land laws. The act of the Secretary was in effect a reservation."

And the same doctrine has been affirmed in many cases.

*Turning to the rulings of the Land Department, in Hestetun v. St. Paul, M. & M. R. Co. 12 Land Dec. 27, 28, it was said by Secretary Noble:

"The legal effect of the withdrawal is to preclude the disposal of the land covered thereby under any of the land laws. In other words, so long as the withdrawal remains in force, the land covered thereby is simply held for the purpose for which the withdrawal was made."

And again, in the same volume, in Re Chicago, St. P. M. & O. R. Co. (pp. 259, 261):

"In the case of Riley v. Welles [154 U. S. 578 and 19 L. ed. 648, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1166], referred to and quoted in the Shire Case [10 Land Dec. 85], it was said by the Supreme Court that settlement upon and possession of land within the limits of an executive withdrawal were 'without right,' and that the subsequent recognition by the land officers of such settlement and possession, and the permission to the party to make proof and entry under the pre-emption law, and the issuing patent 'were acts in violation of law and void.' This case of Riley v. Welles has never been overruled or modified, but has been referred to and approved in a number of the decisions of the Supreme Court, and must therefore be accepted as expressing the opinion of that tribunal as to the absolute invalidity of settlements upon lands withdrawn by executive order."

In Re Hans Oleson, 28 Land Dec. 25, 31, Secretary Bliss thus defined the word "withdrawal":

"In the nomenclature of the public land laws the word 'withdrawal' is generally used to denote an order issued by the President, Secretary of the Interior, Commissioner of the General Land Office, or other proper officer, whereby public lands are withheld from sale and entry under the general land laws, in order that presently or ultimately they may be applied to some designated public use, or disposed of in some special way. Sometimes these orders are not made until there is an immediate necessity therefor, but more frequently the necessity for their making is anticipated."

And in the same volume (Inman v. Northern P. R. Co.) the same Secretary uses this language (pp. 95, 100):

[145] "From the authorities cited the following rules are clearly *deducible: First. Subject only to the control and power of disposition remaining in Congress, an anticipatory withdrawal, whether legislative or executive, during the time it remains in force, withholds the lands embraced therein from other appropriation or disposition, and prevents the acquisition of any legal or equitable title or right by settlement or entry in violation of such withdrawal."

Similar declarations may be found in almost every volume of the Land Decisions.

In the execution of this Northern Pacific land grant many withdrawals were made as called for from time to time along the line of general route, and the Land Department has uniformly recognized the validity and effect of such withdrawals. In Northern P. R. Co. v. Pressey, 2 Land Dec. 551, it appeared that Pressey settled upon a tract within 40 miles of the line of general route; that the lands at the time of his settlement were unsurveyed; that after survey he made application for a homestead entry, and it was held that he acquired no rights by 188 U. S. U. S., Book 47.

his settlement, inasmuch as the land had been withdrawn by order of the Land Department, Secretary Teller saying (p. 553):

"The settlement by Pressey upon the odd section was clearly in violation of the order of withdrawal, and he could acquire no rights or equities under such a settlement."

In Northern P. R. Co. v. Miller, 7 Land Dec. 100, a case in which the implied prohibition of the withdrawal of indemnity lands was first distinctly decided in the Land Department, Secretary Vilas said (p. 110) in reference to the withdrawal of lands within the place limits of the line of general route:

"Thus the action of the company and of the department co-operated to give official determination to the fact upon which the statute became applicable, both to withdraw the odd-numbered sections and to double the minimum price of the even-numbered sections, and both effects were formally recognized and declared. It cannot be doubted that, had no other action been taken before the line of the road for construction was definitely located, this action in regard to the line of the general route of 1870 must have remained continuously operative upon all *lands within the limit of 40 miles on [146] either side of the line so established. So obvious is this, indeed, that from the mouth of the Walla Walla river, westwardly along the Columbia, that withdrawal remains to this day obligatory and operative by force of the statute and of that location.

"If authority be wanting to so manifest a proposition, it is found in the following language of the Supreme Court in the case already referred to."

In McClure v. Northern P. R. Co. 9 Land Dec. 155, in an opinion by Secretary Noble, it was held that, "when the map of general route was filed, the withdrawal thereunder became at once effective, and reserved from general disposal the odd-numbered sections embraced therein."

In Northern P. R. Co. v. Collins, 14 Land Dec. 484, it was again decided by the same secretary that "lands withdrawn for the benefit of said grant are not subject to settlement."

In Central P. R. Co. v. Beck, 19 Land Dec. 100, which was also a settlement upon unsurveyed land within the place limits of the general route of the road, and in which a withdrawal had been ordered in accordance with the provisions of the act making the grant, Secretary Smith, sustaining the title of the railroad company, said (p. 103):

"I am clearly of the opinion that, after the withdrawal made upon the map of general route, no rights could be acquired adverse to the company by settlement upon the land, and that a settlement so made, even though it existed at the date of the filing of the map of definite location, would not serve to except the land settled upon from the operation of the grant to said company."

In the very last volume of the Land Decisions (vol. 30, p. 247), in respect to the Southern Pacific Railroad Company, whose granting act contained a similar provision in reference to withdrawal on the filing of a map of general route, it was said by Secretary Hitchcock (p. 249):

[147] "As between individual claimants and the company no claim could be predicated upon settlement or entry made after the filing of the map of general route, and as against such claims the grant in effect was operative from April 3, 1871, the date upon which the map of general route was filed."

So that from the beginning until the present time in construing this grant and others containing like provision there has been an unbroken line of decisions in the Land Department to the effect that a withdrawal made on the filing of the map of general route prevents any private claims attaching to the odd-numbered sections of land; and this whether the lands were surveyed or unsurveyed. Indeed, when Congress in the 6th section expressly declared that the lands "shall not be liable to sale or entry or pre-emption before or after they are surveyed," it would seem as though it had made every provision which language was capable of expressing to reserve from private entry for the benefit of the railroad company all odd-numbered sections, surveyed or unsurveyed, within the place limits of the line of general route.

I have already quoted from Hewitt v. Schultz in reference to the duty of following, in case of ambiguity, the construction given to a statute by the department charged with the execution of such statute. That doctrine was there applied although it appeared that the practice of the department during the building of the railroad had been one way and only changed after its completion, and the latter construction was upheld by this court as the ruling of the department. It was said (p. 156, L. ed. p. 472, Sup. Ct. Rep. p. 315):

"It was admitted at the hearing that the construction of the Northern Pacific act of 1864 announced by Secretary Vilas had been adhered to in the administration of the public lands by the Land Department. We are now asked to overthrow that construction by holding that it was competent for the Land Department, immediately upon the definite location of the line of the railroad, to withdraw from the settlement laws all the odd-numbered sections within the indemnity limits as defined by the act of Congress. If this were done it is to be apprehended that great, if not endless, confusion would ensue in the administration of the public lands, and that the rights of a vast number of people who have acquired homes under the pre-emption and homestead laws, in reliance upon the ruling of Secretary Vilas and his successors in office, would be destroyed."

[148] "Now we have a case in which the ruling of the department has been unchanged from the commencement to the present time,—a ruling which Secretary Vilas in 7 Land Dec. supra, called "so manifest a proposition," and it is wholly disregarded. The recent and temporary ruling of the Land Department was in the former case sustained in order, as was said, to protect the settler. Here the continuous practice of the department is disregarded, and the patent issued by it to the railroad company is overthrown.

Still again, the company, by reason of § 6, believing that a withdrawal was to be made which should operate to its benefit, filed a map of general route, and a withdrawal was made of the odd-numbered sections of land. It is now held that such withdrawal did not withdraw the odd-numbered sections from entry and sale, but they remained still open to entry or purchase under the land laws. If that be the true construction, it follows that, whereas, if the company had filed no map of general route, no one would know where its line of road was to be until after it filed the map of definite location, and then the title would attach to all odd-numbered sections not burdened with existing claims. But by filing the map of general route, as it did eleven years before filing the map of definite location, it notified everybody of the proposed route, and so all settlers could take advantage of that knowledge and enter the odd-numbered sections contiguous thereto. Having this knowledge of where the line was to be located, of course settlers would come as near to that line as possible, in order to take advantage of the increased value coming from the construction of the road, and so taking advantage of the notice given would deplete the grant of lands which Congress had intended for the benefit of the company.

But this question has been definitely decided by this court. Buttz v. Northern P. R. Co. 119 U. S. 55, 30 L. ed. 330, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 100. That was an action brought by the railroad company for the possession of a tract of land within 40 miles of the general route as also of the line of definite location of plaintiff's road. The defendant entered upon the land in October, 1871, he at the time possessing all the qualifications of a pre-emptor and intending *to obtain title by [149] pre-emption. At that time the tract was, with others, in the occupation of the Sioux Indians. An agreement for the surrender by the Indians of all their rights was ratified on May 19, 1873. On May 26, 1873, the company filed in the Land Department its map of definite location. The defendant was therefore in occupation of the tract with intent to pre-empt it for seven days after the rights of the Indians had ceased and before the filing of the map of definite location. So if the opinion of the court now announced had prevailed the defendant was entitled to hold that tract as against the company. On the 11th of August, 1873, he presented his application for entry, which was refused, and refused because it was within the 40-mile limit, as shown by a map of general route filed on February 21, 1872. This presents the precise question here involved. The unanimous opinion of the court sustained the action of the Land Department in refusing defendant's application to enter, and confirmed the title of the railroad company. In the course of the opinion, by Mr.

Justice Field, it was said (p. 72, L. ed. p. 336, Sup. Ct. Rep. p. 108):

"When the general route of the road is thus fixed in good faith, and information thereof given to the Land Department by filing the map thereof with the Commissioner of the General Land Office, or the Secretary of the Interior, the law withdraws from sale or pre-emption the odd sections to the extent of 40 miles on each side. The object of the law in this particular is plain; it is to preserve the land for the company to which, in aid of the construction of the road, it is granted. . . . Nor is there anything inconsistent with this view of the 6th section as to the general route, in the clause in the 3d section making the grant operative only upon such odd sections as have not been reserved, sold, granted, or otherwise appropriated, and to which pre-emption and other rights and claims have not attached, when a map of the definite location has been filed. The 3d section does not embrace sales and pre-emptions in cases where the 6th section declares that the land shall not be subject to sale or pre-emption. The two sections must be so construed as to give effect to both, if that be practicable."

[150] This decision, rendered seventeen years ago, has never hitherto *been overruled. It was reaffirmed in St. Paul & P. R. Co. v. Northern P. R. Co. 139 U. S. 1, 17, 18, 35 L. ed. 77, 84, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 389, 394, 395, in which, speaking for a unanimous court, Mr. Justice Field said:

"Besides the withdrawal made by the Secretary of the Interior of lands within the 40-mile limit, on the 13th of August, 1870, preserved the lands for the benefit of the Northern Pacific railroad from the operation of any subsequent grants to other companies not specifically declared to cover the premises. The Northern Pacific act directed that the President should cause the lands to be surveyed 40 miles in width on both sides of the entire line of the road, after the general route should be fixed and as fast as might be required by the construction of the road, and provided that the odd sections of lands granted should not be liable to sale, entry, or pre-emption before or after they were surveyed, except by the company. They were therefore excepted by that legislation from grants, independently of the withdrawal by the Secretary of the Interior. His action in formally announcing their withdrawal was only giving publicity to what the law itself declared. The object of the withdrawal was to preserve the land unencumbered until the completion and acceptance of the road. . . . After such withdrawal no interest in the lands granted can be acquired, against the rights of the company, except by special legislative declaration, nor, indeed, in the absence of its announcement, after the general route is fixed."

In the opinion of the majority some later cases are referred to which are said to qualify the decision in Buttz v. Northern P. R. Co. But even the slightest attention to what was decided in those cases shows that in no manner do they qualify or limit that decision so far as it affects the present question. Before noticing those cases it is well to consider what was the purpose and effect of § 6. It was not a granting section. It did not purport to give title to anything to the company. Its whole scope and effect was to withdraw from sale, entry, or pre-emption the odd-numbered sections in order that when the company filed its map of definite location it might secure those odd-numbered sections. The grant was *made only by § 3 and attached to particular[15] lands when the map of definite location was filed, but the proposition laid down in the Buttz Case—and the proposition I am contending for here—is that this plaintiff in error could acquire nothing by his entry upon an odd-numbered section after the filing of the map of general route and the withdrawal; that the tract was therefore free from a claim of any kind when the map of definite location was filed, and so there was nothing to prevent the railroad company from receiving title.

Now the cases referred to are St. Paul & P. R. Co. v. Northern P. R. Co. 139 U. S. 1, 35 L. ed. 77, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 389; United States v. Northern P. R. Co. 152 U. S. 284, 38 L. ed. 443, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 598; Northern P. R. Co. v. Sanders, 166 U. S. 620, 41 L. ed. 1139, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 671; Menotti v. Dillon, 167 U. S. 703, 42 L. ed. 333, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 945; United States v. Oregon & C. R. Co. 176 U. S. 28, 44 L. ed. 358, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 261; Wilcox v. Eastern Oregon Land Co. 176 U. S. 551, 44 L. ed. 368, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 269, and Messinger v. Eastern Oregon Land Co. 176 U. S. 58, 44 L. ed. 370, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 271. After quoting from the opinions in some,—the court sums up by saying: "The cases above cited definitely determine that the railroad company acquired no vested interest in any particular section of land until after a definite location was shown by an accepted map of its line." This is a proposition among the A, B, C's of public land law and needed no authorities in support thereof. But that proposition throws no light on the question as to the scope of the withdrawal given by § 6, and when the cases themselves are referred to not one of them conflicts with the proposition I have heretofore laid down. I have already shown what was decided in St. Paul & P. R. Co. v. Northern P. R. Co. and need not repeat. In United States v. Northern P. R. Co. it appeared that the Northern Pacific Railroad Company had attempted to locate a line from Portland directly north to Puget sound, and in 1865 had filed a map of the general route thereof. Such a line was not within the authority granted by the act of Congress incorporating the Northern Pacific Railroad Company. On May 4, 1870, Congress made a land grant to the Oregon Central Railroad Company which included some of the lands within the 40-mile limits of the above-mentioned general route. On May 31, 1870, and twenty-seven days after the grant to the Oregon Central Railroad *Company, Congress passed[152] an act which authorized the Northern Pacific company to construct a line from Portland to Puget sound, with the privileges and grants provided for in the original act of incorporation, and it was held that the rights of the Oregon Central Railroad Company antedated and were superior to those of the Northern Pacific. First in time, first in right, is as to lands within place limits the settled rule of railroad land grants. What possible bearing this decision can have upon the case before us it is hard to conceive. In Northern P. R. Co. v. Sanders the lands in controversy were claimed as mineral lands, and applications for entry of them as such were pending in the Land Department. The court had held in Barden v. Northern P. R. Co. 154 U. S. 288, 38 L. ed. 992, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1030, that mineral lands did not pass under the grant to the railroad company, and that whether they were known or not known to be mineral lands at the time of the filing of the map of definite location was immaterial. Of course, it followed that whether they were known or not known at the time of the filing of the map of the general route was also immaterial. The lands were of such a character as could not in any event pass to the railroad company any more than the even-numbered sections. They were not withdrawn by filing the map of general route; they did not pass by filing the map of definite location. The four remaining cases all proceeded upon the one proposition that the mere filing of the map of general route does not preclude Congress from making subsequently thereto and prior to the filing of the map of definite location—that is, prior to the time when title vested in the company—any other specific grant of the reserved lands. In other words, until the proposed grantee shall have done all that is necessary to vest title in it, there remains in Congress the power to make other disposition of the lands. But this was no new doctrine in the public land law. It was laid down in Frisbie v. Whitney, 9 Wall. 187, 19 L. ed. 668; in the well-known Yosemite Valley Case, 15 Wall. 77, sub nom. Hutchings v. Low, 21 L. ed. 82; and has been followed in many cases since. Of course, Congress could, at any time before the filing of the map of definite location and while the title of the company was still inchoate, reserve any *of the lands for military or other purposes, or make a specific grant of them to individuals or corporations. But, as said in St. Paul & P. R. Co. v. Northern P. R. Co. 139 U. S. 1, 35 L. ed. 77, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 389, “after such withdrawal no interest in the lands granted can be acquired against the rights of the company, except by special legislative declaration,” and in this case there has been no such legislative declaration.

[153]

But it is said that the case of the plaintiff in error is “placed on impregnable ground by the act of May 14, 1880 (chap. 89 [21 Stat. at L. 140, U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 1392]).” I pass the proposition that this is a general act for the relief of settlers on public lands and the familiar doctrine that a general law passed after a special act does not interfere with the provisions of that act, provided there is room for the operation of both, and there is ample room for the operation of this act on public lands generally without interfering with the special provisions made in the Northern Pacific grant. But the act itself has no force whatever as applied to the present question. The provision is that one who is a settler on any of the public lands of the United States “with the intention of claiming the same under the homestead laws, shall be allowed the same time to file his homestead application and perfect his original entry in the United States Land Office as is now allowed to settlers under the pre-emption laws to put their claims on record, and his right shall relate back to the date of settlement, the same as if he had settled under the pre-emption laws.” If we turn to the pre-emption law we find (Rev. Stat. § 2264) that a person intending to pre-empt shall, “within thirty days after the date of such settlement, file with the register of the proper district a written statement.” That is, the pre-emptor had thirty days after settlement within which to make his entry, while when we turn to the homestead law (Rev. Stat. § 2290) we find that a party seeking to homestead “shall, upon application to the register of the land office in which he is about to make such entry, make affidavit . . . that his entry is made for the purpose of actual settlement and cultivation.” In other words, his right is initiated by the application to enter, and does not relate back to any settlement, and this statute simply gives him a right of thirty days’ occupancy before *making his[154] application to enter. How such a statute, equalizing the rights of one seeking to make a homestead entry with those of one seeking to make pre-emption, can have any pertinency to the question before us, passes my comprehension.

Again, several pages of the opinion are taken up with references to quotations from opinions in the Land Department as to the meaning of the term “occupied by homestead settlers.” Here, again, I am unable to see the pertinency of these references. If there had been no withdrawal, and the question arose as to the effect of plaintiff in error’s occupancy of the land as against the rights of the company obtained by the map of definite location, these authorities might be worth considering, but they throw no light upon the effect of the withdrawal, which is the question before us.

The fact that this tract was not surveyed at the time the plaintiff in error entered upon it, nor until after the completion of the road, is immaterial. By the terms of § 6 the prohibition against sale, entry, or pre-emption extended to lands “before or after they are surveyed.” Reference is made to several cases in which we held that the rights of a settler were not lost by the failure of the government to make a survey prior to his occupation. But those decisions were to the effect that the settler loses nothing by the neglect of the government. Here it is held that he gains something. If the survey had been completed before he commenced his occupation, and he could not then enter an odd-numbered section, he could not, in face of the prohibition of the section, enter the land after it had been surveyed. If, instead of going upon that had been surveyed, the settler chose to go into unsurveyed territory, he took his chances of placing his improvements upon an odd or even-numbered section. If he placed them upon what proved to be an odd-numbered section, he acquired no right as against the grant to the company. If he put them on what proved to be an even-numbered section, he would be compelled to pay the government double price. In the latter event does anyone for a moment suppose that it would be an answer to the demand for a double price that the government had failed to make a survey before he [155] chose to occupy the land and make improvements thereon? The construction placed by the majority, not only takes from the railroad company the land which was granted to it, but deprived the government of that which it intended to obtain, a double price for the lands it reserved for sale.

Finally, I may say this decision clouds the title to all the lands granted to the railroad company. At the time the map of definite location was filed, as well as at the time the road was completed, there was not on the records of the Land Department a single word or mark which indicated to anybody that plaintiff in error was on the land or claiming it, or that the title of the railroad company was other than perfect. But because plaintiff in error was on the land it is held that the patent of the government to the railroad company conveyed to it no title, and that this occupant by parol testimony may show the fact of his occupancy and overthrow the record title. Yet this court unanimously held in Northern P. R. Co. v. Colburn, 164 U. S. 383, 41 L. ed. 479, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 98, that mere occupation, unaccompanied by the filing of a claim in the land office, did not exclude a tract from the operation of the land grant. And that there was no oversight or lack of attention to this particular matter is shown by the fact that the United States promptly filed a brief of thirty-six pages, quoting the principal land decisions referred to in the opinion of the majority, and asked the court to reconsider its decision, which application was denied without dissent. Indeed, as appears from the authorities cited in that opinion, the conclusion was in accord with prior rulings, to the effect that there must be something of record in the Land Department to support the contention of an adverse right. That unanimous opinion of the court is put one side by the assertion that the land there in controversy had been surveyed, while in this it had not been. No distinction was made in the discussion between surveyed and unsurveyed lands, no suggestion that it affected the question in 188 U. S.

the slightest degree, and, as we have seen, the prohibition against sale, entry, or pre-emption in § 6 extended to lands unsurveyed as well as surveyed. How can one say in respect to any tract claimed by the railroad company that it was not at the time of the filing of the map of definite location in the [156] occupation of someone intending to pre-empt or homestead it? If such occupation is sufficient to avoid the patent of the United States, has the company sure title to any lands?

I think the judgment ought to be affirmed.

ANDREW W. SMYTHE, William H. Byrnes, Administrator of the Succession of Edward Conery, Deceased, et al., Pliffs. in Err.,

v.

UNITED STATES.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 156-183.)

Official bond—of superintendent of Mint—destruction of Treasury notes by fire—measure of damages—form of judgment.

1. The destruction of moneys in the custody of the superintendent of the Mint at New Orleans by a fire occurring without his fault or negligence is no defense to a suit upon his official bond, conditioned for the faithful discharge of his duties according to the laws of the United States, which require him safely to keep such moneys as come to his hands by virtue of his office.
2. The amount of Treasury notes charred by fire, but in condition to be identified as to amount and date of issue, cannot be allowed as a credit in a suit on the official bond of the superintendent of the Mint at New Orleans to recover the amount of a shortage in his accounts, where no claim for such credit was first presented to the accounting officers of the Treasury, as is required by U. S. Rev. Stat. §§ 951, 957 (U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, pp. 695, 698), in order to make a claim for a credit available on the trial.
3. The face value of Treasury notes destroyed by fire while in the custody of the superintendent of the Mint at New Orleans, and not the cost to the United States government of issuing new notes, is the measure of damages in an action on his official bond, conditioned for the safe keeping of the moneys in his custody, to recover the amount of a shortage in his accounts caused by the destruction of such notes.
4. The sureties on the bond of the superintendent of the Mint at New Orleans, conditioned for the faithful discharge of his duties according to the laws of the United States, must be deemed to have signed it in view of the requirement of U. S. Rev. Stat. § 3624 (U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 2418), that interest on any unpaid balance due from one accountable for public moneys shall be computed from the time when he received such moneys.

NOTE.—On the liability of sureties on bonds of public officers—see notes to Postmaster General v. Early, 6 L. ed. U. S. 577; and American Surety Co. v. Pauly, 42 L. ed. U. S. 987.

5. An absolute judgment against the administrator of a surety on the official bond of a Federal official, rendered by a Federal court sitting in Louisiana, is not objectionable on the theory that it should have been against the administrator, payable only in due course of administration, since, if by the law of that state the judgment is so payable, it will be thus interpreted and enforced, subject to the priority given to the Federal government by U. S. Rev. Stat. §§ 3466, 3467 (U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 2314), in the distribution of the proceeds of the estate of any person indebted to the United States, whose estate is insufficient to pay all debts against it.

[No. 88.]

Argued November 12, 1902. Decided January 26, 1903.

IN ERROR to the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit to review a judgment which affirmed a judgment of a Circuit Court in favor of the United States in a suit upon the official bond of the superintendent of the Mint at New Orleans. Affirmed.

See same case below, 46 C. C. A. 354, 107 Fed. 376.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Walker Brainerd Spencer argued the cause, and, with Messrs. William Grant, J. D. Rouse, B. McCloskey, and E. Howard McCaleb, filed a brief for plaintiffs in error:

The liability of a fiscal officer of the United States is that of a simple bailee.

United States v. Thomas, 15 Wall. 337, 21 L. ed. 89.

A bailee is excused from liability for property destroyed in his possession by fire.

2 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 748; Story, Bailments, § 29; Meridian Fair & Exposition Asso. v. North Birmingham Street R. Co. 70 Miss. 808, 12 So. 555.

Loss of public money by shipwreck will relieve an officer from liability to account therefor.

United States v. Humason, 6 Sawy. 199, Fed. Cas. No. 15,421.

The sums stipulated, in a bond of the ordinary form, to be paid by the obligor, are a penalty or security for the performance of the condition, and not liquidated damages, or an amount absolute to be paid upon its breach.

Davis v. Gillett, 52 N. H. 126; Astley v. Weldon, 2 Bos. & P. 346; Street v. Rigby, 6 Ves. Jr. 815; Price v. Green, 16 Mees. & W. 346; Davies v. Penton, 6 Barn. & C. 216; Higginson v. Weld, 14 Gray, 165; Smith v. Wainwright, 24 Vt. 97; Richards v. Edick, 17 Barb. 260; Taylor v. Sandiford, 7 Wheat. 13, 5 L. ed. 384; Wallis v. Carpenter, 13 Allen, 19.

If the contract be to perform several acts, or else to pay the sum specified, that sum will always be regarded by the courts as a penalty, and not as liquidated damages.

Swift v. Crow, 17 Ga. 609; Astley v. Weldon, 2 Bos. & P. 346; Kemble v. Farren, 6

Bing. 141; Davies v. Penton, 6 Barn. & C. 216; Niver v. Rossman, 18 Barb. 50.

Where bonds are given for the performance of covenants, and the breach does not imply the payment of a sum certain, and damages do not follow as a mathematical sequence, as in case of interest, "the bond ascertains the damage by consent of the parties. If, therefore, the defendant pays the plaintiff the whole stated damages, what can he desire more?"

Brangwin v. Perrot, 2 W. Bl. 1190; Clark v. Bush, 3 Cow. 151; Higginson v. Weld, 14 Gray, 165.

The officers of the government have always construed the condition of such bonds to be an obligation to indemnify.

Bosbyshell v. United States, 23 C. C. A. 581, 39 U. S. App. 474, 77 Fed. 944; United States v. Prescott, 3 How. 578, 11 L. ed. 734; United States v. Dashiell, 4 Wall. 182, 18 L. ed. 319; United States v. Keebler, 9 Wall. 83, 19 L. ed. 574; Boyden v. United States, 13 Wall. 17, 20 L. ed. 527; Bevans v. United States, 18 Wall. 56, 20 L. ed. 531; United States v. Thomas, 15 Wall. 337, 21 L. ed. 89.

A bond for the faithful performance of the duties of a public office is an obligation to indemnify against loss.

United States v. Morgan, 11 How. 154, 13 L. ed. 643; United States v. Moore, 2 Brock. 317, Fed. Cas. No. 15, 802.

Mr. William A. Maury also argued the cause for plaintiffs in error.

Assistant Attorney General Beck argued the cause, and, with Mr. Charles H. Robb, filed a brief for defendant in error:

A custodian of the public funds under his contract evidenced by a penal bond is something more than an ordinary bailee.

Throop, Pub. Off. §§ 222, 223; 2 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 466; United States v. Prescott, 3 How. 578, 11 L. ed. 734; United States v. Morgan, 11 How. 154, 13 L. ed. 643; United States v. Dashiell, 4 Wall. 182, 18 L. ed. 319; United States v. Keebler, 9 Wall. 83, 19 L. ed. 574; Boyden v. United States, 13 Wall. 17, 20 L. ed. 527; United States v. Thomas, 15 Wall. 337, 21 L. ed. 89; Bosbyshell v. United States, 23 C. C. A. 581, 39 U. S. App. 474, 77 Fed. 944, affirming 73 Fed. 616; State ex rel. Mississippi County v. Moore, 74 Mo. 413, 41 Am. Rep. 322; State v. Nevin, 19 Nev. 162, 7 Pac. 650; Com. v. Comly, 3 Pa. St. 372; Hancock v. Hazzard, 12 Cush. 112, 59 Am. Dec. 171; New Providence v. McEachron, 33 N. J. L. 339; State use of Wyandot County v. Harper, 6 Ohio St. 607, 67 Am. Dec. 363; Halbert v. State, 22 Ind. 125; Morbeck v. State, 28 Ind. 86; Ross v. Hatch, 5 Iowa, 149; Taylor Dist. Twp. v. Morton, 37 Iowa, 551.

There is an established difference between a duty created merely by law, and one to which is added the obligation of an express undertaking.

Bevans v. United States, 13 Wall. 56, 20 L. ed. 531.

Only two defenses are sufficient to discharge from liability. These defenses are "the act of God" and "the act of a public enemy." Even robbery is not regarded as sufficient.

Boyd v. United States, 13 Wall. 17, 20 L. ed. 527; New Providence v. McEachron, 33 N. J. L. 339; State use of Wyandot County v. Harper, 6 Ohio St. 607, 67 Am. Dec. 363; Halbert v. State, 22 Ind. 125.

The plea non est damnificatus does not avail against an obligation to do specific things.

3 Enc. Pl. & Pr. p. 663, note 1; 4 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. pp. 694, 695, note 1; Hicks v. Hoos, 44 Mo. App. 579.

Defendants were not entitled in this action to a credit for the charred notes.

Yates v. United States, 32 C. C. A. 507, 61 U. S. App. 124, 90 Fed. 57; United States v. Fletcher, 147 U. S. 664, 37 L. ed. 322, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 434.

Mr. Justice Harlan delivered the opinion of the court:

[157] This was an action upon the official bond of Andrew W. Smythe as superintendent of the Mint of the United States at New Orleans to recover the sum of $25,000 with 6 per cent interest from April 1st, 1893, until paid,—that being the amount found due to the United States at the date of the examination, adjustment, and statement of his accounts by the proper officers of the Treasury. The sureties on the bond were Edward Conery and David Chambers McCann.

The bond was conditioned that the superintendent should "faithfully and diligently perform, execute, and discharge, all and singular, the duties of said office according to the laws of the United States, then this obligation to be void and of no effect, otherwise to remain in full force and value."

When this bond was executed it was provided by § 3500 (U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 2339) that every officer of the Mint, before entering upon the duties of his office, should take an oath faithfully and diligently to perform the duties thereof; by § 3501 (U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 2339), that the superintendent, before entering upon his office, should become bound to the United States, with one or more sureties, in a named sum, "with condition for the faithful and diligent performance of the duties of his office;" by § 3503 (U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 2340), that the superintendent of each Mint "shall have the control thereof, the superintendence of the officers and persons employed therein, and the supervision of the business thereof, subject to the approval of the director of the Mint;" by § 3504 (U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 2340), that "he shall keep and render quarter-yearly to the director of the Mint, for the purpose of adjustment according to such forms as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury, regular and faithful accounts of the transactions with the other officers of the Mint and the depositors;" and by § 3506 (U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 2341), that "the superintendent of each Mint shall receive and safely keep, until legally withdrawn, 188 U. S.

all moneys or bullion which shall be for the use or the expenses of the Mint."

It appeared in the evidence that the defendant Smythe, as superintendent of the Mint, received various sums of money in United States Treasury notes, and that upon a statement of his accounts by the proper officers of the Treasury there was a deficit of $25,000.

The defense was that the $25,000 of Treasury notes was placed by the superintendent in a tin box in the steel vault *pro-[158] vided by the government for the safe keeping of public funds in his custody, and that the notes while in that box were charred, burnt, and destroyed by fire that occurred in the vault, without any negligence on the part of the superintendent, or his agents or employees.

The government insisted at the trial that, even if the Treasury notes were destroyed, in the manner and to the amount claimed, without negligence on the part of the superintendent, nevertheless he was liable on his bond,—its contention being that he was under the obligations, practically, of an insurer in respect of all public funds coming to his hands, and could not be relieved, unless the loss occurred by the act of God or the public enemy. This view was approved by the circuit court, which, at the conclusion of the evidence, directed a verdict against the defendants, and judgment was accordingly rendered for the full amount claimed by the United States. The court added the following words to its memorandum of reasons for that direction: "In this cause there has been no charge or intimation that Dr. Smythe was personally at fault or blameable in any way. Such fault or negligence as may have been shown in the cause is attributable to his subordinates, and in no manner to him."

The circuit court of appeals approved the view taken by the circuit court, and affirmed the judgment. The opinion of the former court is reported in 46 C. C. A. 354, 107 Fed. 376.

*As the circuit court and the circuit court [163] of appeals both held that the question of the liability of Smythe was determined for the government by the decisions of this court,—which view the defendants controverted,—we must ascertain the import of those decisions. This course is made necessary by the contention of the defendants that the latest decision of this court, to which reference will be presently made, modified the earlier decisions upon which the government relies.

The first case is that of United States v. Prescott, 3 How. 578, 587, 11 L. ed. 734, 738. That was an action on the bond of a receiver of public moneys, conditioned for the faithful performance of his duties, and that he "shall well, truly, and faithfully, keep safely, without loaning or using, all the public moneys collected by him, or otherwise at any time placed in his possession and custody, till the same had been, or should be, ordered by the proper department or officer of the government to be transferred or paid out," etc.

The defense was that the money for the nonpayment of which the United States sued had been feloniously stolen, taken, and carried away from his possession by some unknown person or persons without fault or negligence on his part, and notwithstanding he had used ordinary care and diligence in keeping it. The receiver contended that he was liable only as a depository for hire, unless his liability was enlarged by the special contract to keep safely, which he insisted was not the case.

The court said: "This is not a case of bailment, and consequently the law of bailment does not apply to it. The liability of the defendant Prescott arises out of his official bond, and *principles which are founded upon public policy." Again: "The condition of the bond has been broken, as the defendant Prescott failed to pay over the money received by him when required to do so; and the question is whether he shall be exonerated from the condition of his bond on the ground that the money has been stolen from him. The objection to this defense is that it is not within the condition of the bond, and this would seem to be conclusive. The contract was entered into on his part, and there is no allegation of failure on the part of the government. How, then, can Prescott be discharged from his bond? He knew the extent of his obligation when he entered into it, and he has realized the fruits of this obligation by the enjoyment of the office. Shall he be discharged from liability, contrary to his own express undertaking? There is no principle on which such a defense can be sustained. The obligation to keep safely the public money is absolute, without any condition, express or implied, and nothing but the payment of it when required can discharge the bond. . . . Public policy requires that every depository of the public money should be held to a strict accountability; not only that he should exercise the highest degree of vigilance, but that 'he should keep safely' the moneys which come to his hands. Any relaxation of this condition would open a door to frauds, which might be practised with impunity. A depository would have nothing more to do than to lay his plans and arrange his proofs, so as to establish his loss, without laches on his part. Let such a principle be applied to our postmasters, collectors of the customs, receivers of public moneys, and others, who receive more or less of the public funds, and what losses might not be anticipated by the public? No such principle has been recognized or admitted as a legal defense. . . . As every depository receives the office with a full knowledge of its responsibilities, he cannot, in case of loss, complain of hardship. He must stand by his bond, and meet the hazards which he voluntarily incurs."

The next case is that of United States v. Morgan, 11 How. 154, 158, 13 L. ed. 643, 645. That was an action upon the bond of a collector of customs, conditioned that he "has truly and faithfully executed and discharged, and shall continue truly and faithfully to execute *and discharge, all the duties of the said office." The condition was alleged to have been broken in that the collector had not paid over large sums of money collected for the United States, and by not making seasonable returns of his accounts. [165]

The court characterized as an erroneous impression that the collector "was acting as a bailee, and under the responsibilities of only the ordinary diligence of a depository as to the canceled notes, when in truth he was acting under his commission and duties by law, as collector, and under the conditions of his bond. The collector is no more to be treated as a bailee in this case than he would be if the notes were still considered for all purposes as money. He did not receive them as a bailee, but as a collecting officer. He is liable for them on his bond, and not on any original bailment or lending. And if the case can be likened to any species of bailment in forwarding them, by which they were lost, it is that of a common carrier to transmit them to the Treasury, and in doing which he is not exonerated by ordinary diligence, but must answer for losses by larceny, and even robbery. 2 Salk. 919; 8 Johns. 213; Angell, Carr. §§ 1, 9."

In United States v. Dashiell, 4 Wall. 182, 18 L. ed. 319,—which was an action on the bond of a paymaster in the army for not paying over or accounting for public money that came into his hands,—the defense was that without any want of proper care and vigilance on the part of the paymaster a certain part of the moneys had been stolen from him. The trial court held that the theft or robbery, if satisfactorily proved, was a good defense. But this court held otherwise upon the authority of United States v. Prescott and United States v. Morgan, above cited, and reversed the judgment.

Substantially the same question arose in United States v. Keebler, 9 Wall. 83, 19 L. ed. 574, which was an action upon a bond of a postmaster in North Carolina. The bond was conditioned, among other things, that the obligor would well and truly discharge the duties of postmaster, and keep safely, without lending, using, depositing in banks, or exchanging for other funds than as allowed by law, all the public money at any time in his custody, till the same was ordered by the Postmaster General to be *transferred or paid out. In the spring of [166] 1861, after the Civil War commenced, the postmaster was still in office, and had in his hands $330 of postoffice money belonging to the United States. At that time the United States was indebted to one Cleumens, a mail contractor in that region, for postal service, in a sum exceeding $300. In August, 1861, the Confederate Congress passed an act appropriating the balances in the hands of such postmasters of the United States as at the commencement of the war resided within the limits of the Confederate states, to the pro rata payment of claims against the United States for postal service. The postmaster paid the $330 in his hands to Clemmens—relying upon the above act of the Confederate Congress and an official order from the Confederate Postoffice Department directing him to make such payment. It was admitted in the case that throughout the year 1862 the Confederate government had force sufficient at its command to enforce its orders, and did enforce the orders of such government, in that part of North Carolina in which Salem was situated, and “that no protection was afforded to the citizens of that part of the state by the government of the United States during that term.”

After observing that the postmaster had no right to select a creditor of the United States and pay what he might suppose the government owed him, the court said that “the acts of the Confederate Congress can have no force as law in divesting or transferring rights, or as authority for any act opposed to the just authority of the Federal government.” Referring to the statement of facts made in the case, and which were substantially as above recited, it said: “This statement falls far short of showing the application of any physical force to compel the defendant to pay the money to Clemmens. Nor is it in the least inconsistent with the fact that he might have been desirous and willing to make the payment. It shows no effort or endeavor to secure the funds in his hands to the government, to which he owed both the money and his allegiance. Nor does it prove that he would have suffered any inconvenience, or been punished by the Confederate authorities, if he had refused to pay the draft of the insurrectionary postoffice *department on him. [167] We cannot see that it makes out any such loss of the money, by inevitable overpowering force, as could, even on the mere principle of bailment, discharge a bailee. We cannot concede that a man who, as a citizen, owes allegiance to the United States, and as an officer of the government holds its money or property, is at liberty to turn over the latter to an insurrectionary government, which only demands it by ordinances and drafts drawn on the bailee, but which exercises no force or threat of personal violence to himself or property in the enforcement of its illegal orders.” The court, reaffirming the doctrine of the Prescott, Morgan and Dashiel Cases, held that in an action on the bond of an officer receiving public funds the right of the government to recover does not rest on an implied contract of bailment, but on the express contract in the bond to pay over the funds.

In Boyden v. United States, 13 Wall. 17, 24, 20 L. ed. 527, 529, which was an action upon the bond of a receiver of public moneys,—the defense being that the receiver had been by irresistible force robbed of the moneys sued for,—the court said: “Were a receiver of public moneys, who has given bond for the faithful performance of his duties as required by law, a mere ordinary bailee, it might be that he would be relieved by proof that the money had been destroyed by fire, or stolen from him, or taken by irresistible force. He would then be bound only to the exercise of ordinary care, even though a bailee for hire. The contract of bailment implies no more, except in the case of common carriers, and the duty of a receiver, virtute officii, is to bring to the discharge of his trust that prudence, caution, and attention which careful men usually bring to the conduct of their own affairs. He is to pay over the money in his hands as required by law, but he is not an insurer. He may, however, make himself an insurer by express contract, and this he does when he binds himself in a penal bond to perform the duties of his office without exception. There is an established difference between a duty created merely by law and one to which is added the obligation of an express undertaking. The law does not compel to impossibilities, but it is a settled rule that if performance of an express engagement becomes impossible *by reason of [168] anything occurring after the contract was made, though unforeseen by the contracting party and not within his control, he will not be excused.” Again, in the same case: “It is true that in Prescott's Case the defense set up was that the money had been stolen, while the defense set up here is robbery. But that can make no difference unless it be held that the receiver is a mere bailee. If, as we have seen, his liability is to be measured by his bond, and that binds him to pay the money, then the cause which renders it impossible for him to pay is of no importance, for he has assumed the risk of it.”

At the same term of the court the case of Bevans v. United States, 13 Wall. 56, 60, 20 L. ed. 531, 532, was determined. That was a suit upon a bond executed by Bevans, a receiver of public moneys, in a land district of Arkansas. The court reaffirmed the rule announced in the Prescott Case, and said that “it is not to be overlooked that Bevans was not an ordinary bailee of the government. Bailee he was undoubtedly, but by his bond he had insured the safe keeping and prompt payment of the public money which came to his hands. His obligation was therefore not less stringent than that of a common carrier, and in some respects it was greater,”—citing United States v. Prescott. In the same case the court said, in reference to that part of the defense attributing the loss of the money in question to the action of the Confederate power: “It may be a grave question whether the forcible taking of money belonging to the United States from the possession of one of her officers or agents lawfully holding it, by a government of paramount force, which at the time was usurping the authority of the rightful government, and compelling obedience to itself exclusively throughout a state, would not work a discharge of such officers or agents, if they were entirely free from fault, though they had given bond to pay the money to the United States. This question has been thoroughly argued, but we do not propose to consider it, for its decision is not necessary to the case."

The question thus reserved from decision arose and was decided in United States v. Thomas, 15 Wall. 337, 341, 342, 346, 347, 350, 352, 21 L. ed. 89, 91-94. That was an action on the bond of a surveyor of *customs at Nashville, he being also a depositary of public moneys at that city. The special defense was that the moneys in question were seized by the Confederate authorities against the will and consent of the surveyor, and by the exercise of force which he was unable to resist, he being a loyal citizen and endeavoring faithfully to perform his duty. The court said: "This case brings up squarely the question whether the forcible seizure, by the rebel authorities, of public moneys in the hands of loyal government agents, against their will and without their fault or negligence, is or is not a sufficient discharge from the obligations of their official bonds. The precise question has not as yet been decided by this court. As the Rebellion has been held to have been a public war, the question may be stated in a more general form, as follows: Is the act of a public enemy in forcibly seizing or destroying property of the government in the hands of a public officer, against his will and without his fault, a discharge of his obligation to keep such property safely, and of his official bond, given to secure the faithful performance of that duty and to have the property forthcoming when required?"

"That overruling force arising from inevitable necessity, or the act of a public enemy, is a sufficient answer for the loss of public property when the question is considered in reference to an officer's obligation arising merely from his appointment, and, aside from such a bond as exists in this case, seems almost self-evident. . . . These provisions [prescribing the conditions of the bonds of receivers, etc.] show that it is the manifest policy of the law to hold all collectors, receivers, and depositaries of the public money to a very strict accountability. The legislative anxiety on the subject culminates in requiring them to enter into bond, with sufficient sureties, for the performance of their duties, and in imposing criminal sanctions for the unauthorized use of the moneys. Whatever duty can be inferred from this course of legislation is justly exacted from the officers. No ordinary excuse can be allowed for the non-production of the money committed to their hands. Still, they are nothing but bailees. To call them anything else, when they are expressly forbidden to touch or use the public money except as *directed, would be an abuse of terms. But they are special bailees, subject to special obligations. It is evident that the ordinary law of bailment cannot be invoked to determine the degree of their responsibility. This is placed on a new basis. To the extent of the amount of their official bonds, it is fixed by special contract, and the policy of the law as to their general responsibility for amounts not covered by such bonds may be fairly presumed to be the same." Referring to the adjudged cases, the court said: "It appears from them all (except, perhaps, the New York case) that the official bond is regarded as laying the foundation of a more stringent responsibility upon collectors and receivers of public moneys. It is referred to as a special contract by which they assume additional obligations with regard to the safe keeping and payment of those moneys and as an indication of the policy of the law with regard to the nature of their responsibility. But, as before remarked, the decisions themselves do not go the length of making them liable in cases of overruling necessity." The opinion concludes: "No rule of public policy requires an officer to account for moneys which have been destroyed by an overruling necessity, or taken from him by a public enemy without any fault or neglect on his part."

We think the government is quite correct in its conclusion that the Thomas Case does not materially modify the decisions in previous cases. The general rule announced in those cases—and the question need not be discussed anew—is that the obligations of a public officer, who received public moneys under a bond conditioned that he would discharge his duties according to law, and safely keep such moneys as came to his hands, by virtue of his office, are not to be determined by the principles of the law of bailment, but by the special contract evidenced by his bond conditioned as above stated; consequently, it is no defense to a suit brought by the government upon such a bond that the moneys, which were in the custody of the officer, had been destroyed by fire occurring without his fault or negligence. This rule, so far from being modified by the Thomas Case, is reaffirmed by it, subject, however, to the exception (which, indeed, some of the prior cases had, in effect, *intimated) that it was a valid defense [171] that the failure of the officer to account for public moneys was attributable to overruling necessity or to the public enemy. The case now before us is not embraced by either exception. The result is that the special defense here made cannot, in view of former adjudications, avail the superintendent or his sureties.

It is appropriate here to say that the rule established by this court in the Prescott Case has been enforced by numerous decisions in state courts. In Com. v. Comly, 3 Pa. St. 372, which was an action on the bond of a collector of tolls, conditioned that he would "account for and pay over all moneys he may receive for tolls," and in which the defense was that the moneys sued for had been stolen from the collector, the court said: "The opinion of the court in the case of the United States v. Prescott is founded in sound policy and sound law. The responsibility of a public receiver is determined, not by the law of bailment, which is called in to supply the place of a special agreement where there is none, but by the condition of his bond. The condition of it in this instance was to account for and pay over the moneys to be received; and we would look in vain for a power to relieve him from the performance of it. . . . The keepers of the public moneys, or their sponsors, are to be held strictly to their contract, for if they were to be let off on shallow pretenses, delinquencies, which are fearfully frequent already, would be incessant. A chancellor is not bound to control the legal effect of a contract in any case; and his discretion, were he at liberty to use it, would be influenced by considerations of general policy." To the same effect are Hancock v. Hazzard, 12 Cush. 112, 59 Am. Dec. 171; New Providence v. McEachron, 33 N. J. L. 339; State ex rel. Wyandotte County v. Harper, 6 Ohio St. 607, 67 Am. Dec. 363; Halbert v. State ex rel. Martin County, 22 Ind. 125; Morbeck v. State ex rel. Jackson Twp. 28 Ind. 86; Ross v. Hatch, 5 Iowa, 149; Taylor Dist. Twp. v. Morton, 37 Iowa, 551.

We hold that, as the accounts of the defendant Smythe showed a deficit of $25,000 in the moneys in his custody as superintendent of the Mint, the government was entitled to a judgment for that amount, unless, as the defendants contend, they were entitled to at least a credit for $1,182, which, it is alleged, was the amount of [172] Treasury notes not entirely destroyed by the fire, but were only charred and were taken possession of by government agents after the fire, and found to be in condition to be identified as to amount and date of issue.

A complete answer to this suggestion is to be found in §§ 951 and 957 of the Revised Statutes (U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, pp. 695, 698) reproduced from the act of March 3d, 1797 (1 Stat. at L. 514, chap. 20). Those sections are as follows:

§ 951. "In suits brought by the United States against individuals, no claim for a credit shall be admitted upon trial, except such as appear to have been presented to the accounting officers of the Treasury, for their examination, and to have been by them disallowed, in whole or in part, unless it is proved to the satisfaction of the court that the defendant is, at the time of the trial, in possession of vouchers not before in his power to procure, and that he was prevented from exhibiting a claim for such credit at the Treasury by absence from the United States or by some unavoidable accident."

§ 957. "When suit is brought by the United States against any revenue officer or other person accountable for public money, who neglects or refuses to pay into the Treasury the sum or balance reported to be due to the United States, upon the adjustment of his account, it shall be the duty of the court to grant judgment at the return term, upon motion, unless the defendant, in open court (the United States Attorney being present), makes and subscribes an oath that he is equitably entitled to credits which had been, previous to the commencement of the suit, submitted to the accounting officers of the Treasury, and rejected; specifying in the affidavit each particular claim so rejected, and that he cannot then safely come to trial. If the court, when such oath is made, subscribed, and filed, is thereupon satisfied, a continuance until the next succeeding term may be granted. Such continuance may also be granted when the suit is brought upon a bond or other sealed instrument, and the defendant pleads non est factum, or makes a motion to the court, verifying such plea or motion by his oath, and the court thereupon requires the production of the original bond, contract, or other paper certified in the affidavit. And no continuance shall be granted except as herein provided."

*The defendants do not appear to have [173] submitted to the accounting officers of the Treasury any request or claim for a credit for the $1,182, and no such claim could be made for the first time at the trial. Before it could have been made there should have been affirmative proof by the defendants that it was presented to the proper accounting officer, and rejected, unless, indeed, such facts had appeared from the exemplified accounts produced and relied upon by the government. If such claim had been presented to the proper officers before suit, and been disallowed, it would still have been open to the defendants at the trial to insist upon its being recognized and allowed. These conclusions are unavoidable in view of the former decisions of this court. United States v. Giles, 9 Cranch, 212, 216, 3 L. ed. 708, 710; Thelusson v. Smith, 2 Wheat. 396, 4 L. ed. 271; United States v. Wilkins, 6 Wheat. 135, 143, 5 L. ed. 225, 227; Walton v. United States, 9 Wheat. 651, 6 L. ed. 182; Cox v. United States, 6 Pet. 202, 8 L. ed. 370; United States v. Ripley, 7 Pet. 25, 8 L. ed. 595; United States v. Fillebrown, 7 Pet. 48, 8 L. ed. 603; United States v. Robeson, 9 Pet. 319, 9 L. ed. 142; United States v. Hawkins, 10 Pet. 125, 9 L. ed. 369; United States v. Laub, 12 Pet. 1, 9 L. ed. 977; United States v. Bank of the Metropolis, 15 Pet. 377, 10 L. ed. 774; Gratiot v. United States, 4 How. 112, 11 L. ed. 898; United States v. Buchanan, 8 How. 105, 12 L. ed. 1006; De Groot v. United States, 5 Wall. 431, 18 L. ed. 703; United States v. Eckford, 6 Wall. 484, sub nom. United States v. Tillon, 18 L. ed. 920; United States v. Gilmore, 7 Wall. 491, 19 L. ed. 282; Halliburton v. United States, 13 Wall. 63, 20 L. ed. 533.

It is said, however, that the government has not suffered any substantial damage by the destruction of its own obligations, and that in no event is it entitled to a judgment for more than nominal damages, or at most for only such amount in damages as would meet the cost of reprinting new Treasury notes to take the place of those destroyed by fire. If this view be sound, a public officer, receiving United States Treasury notes for the government, under a bond to safely keep them and pay them over to the United States whenever required by law or ordered to do so, could deliberately destroy or burn them, and, then admitting that he had done so, could prevent any judgment against him, except one that would cover merely the cost and trouble of printing new notes. Such a proposition cannot be entertained for a moment. The plea of non damnifica-

[174] tus has *no place in such a case as this. The Treasury notes that came to the hands of superintendent Smythe was money belonging to the United States, and could be used, at its pleasure, in the business of the government. By their destruction, if they were destroyed by fire in the manner claimed, the United States was deprived of so much money, and the condition of the officer's bond that he would safely keep the moneys in his custody and turn them over to the government, when required, cannot be met by the suggestion that the government, if it so elects, can replace the notes destroyed by other notes, and thus make itself whole, less the cost of printing new notes. It is for the government, guided by the legislation of Congress, to determine when it shall or may issue new Treasury notes, and it cannot be compelled to issue them in order to reimburse itself for the loss of those in the hands of an officer who was required, by the terms of his bond, to deliver them to the Treasury, but did not do so. The government can stand upon the terms of its special contract with the superintendent, and insist that he has not discharged his duties by safely keeping the moneys that came to his hands, and which he undertook to pay over, when required. It is sufficient in this case to say that the loss of the notes here in question cannot be attributed to overruling necessity, or to any public enemy, and as they came to the hands of superintendent Smythe, and as he did not keep the condition of his bond, the government can look for reimbursement to that bond.

This view, it is contended, is not consistent with what was said in United States v. Morgan, 11 How. 154, 158, 13 L. ed. 643, 645, above cited. It appeared in evidence in that case that the collector received nearly $100,000 for duties in Treasury notes, and canceled them. The notes were then put up in a bundle to be sent to the Treasury Department, through the postoffice, and orders were given to the servant accustomed to deliver packages there to deliver those. But the bundle was stolen or lost. It appeared, also, that two of the notes for $500 each were altered and soon afterwards presented to the collector in payment of other duties, and were received by him as genuine. The court, in that case, [175] as already shown, reaffirmed the principle announced in United States v. Prescott. After observing that the duty of the collector was to return the canceled notes to the Treasury Department, and that he was technically liable for not having done so, the court said: "The rule of damage would be the amount of the notes,—unless it appeared, as here, that they had been canceled, and unless it was shown that the government had suffered, or was likely to suffer, damage less than their amount. How much is the real damage, under all the circumstances, is a question of fact for the jury, and should be passed on by them at another trial. Only that amount; rather than the whole bond, need, in a liberal view of the law, and of his bond, be exacted; and that amount neither he nor his sureties can reasonably object to paying, when he, by the neglect of himself or his agent, has caused all the injury which he is in the end required to reimburse. And if any equities exist to relieve him from that, none of which are seen by us, it must be done by Congress, and not the courts of law. Anything less than this—any less strict rule, in the public administration of the finances—would leave everything loose or unsettled, and cause infinite embarrassments in the accounting offices, and numerous losses to the government. . . . Finally, we decide on this last question as a matter of law this, and this only, namely, that the collector is liable for all the actual damages sustained by his not returning the notes as required by law and official circulars; or for not putting them in the postoffice so as to be returned. 5 Stat. at L. 203, chap. 2. But how much this damage was is a matter of proof before the jury, fixing the real amount likely to happen from their getting into circulation again, as two of them did here, from delay and inconvenience in obtaining the proper vouchers to settle accounts, from the want of evidence at the Department that the notes had been redeemed, or from any other direct consequence of the breach of the condition of his bond and of his instructions under it." The court had previously said, in its opinion: "We doubt whether, under all the circumstances, after canceled, they [the Treasury notes] can be regarded as money or money's worth, for the purpose of sustaining this action; yet it is clear that they still possess some value as vouchers, and as evidence for the Treasury Department *that they have been re-

[176] deemed. It is still clear, also, that though canceled, the Treasury Department, unless having possession of them, is exposed to expense and loss by their being altered, and the cancelation removed or extracted, and their getting again into circulation, as two did here, and being twice paid by the government."

The injury, that might probably have come to the government by reason of the neglect of the collector in the Morgan Case was such that the court could not, as in the present case, give any peremptory instruction to the jury. It could not have said, in the former case, that canceled Treasury notes were to be regarded as money, or that the government was entitled to judgment for the face amount of those notes, prior to their being canceled. Nor could it say, as matter of law, that the government was, in fact, damaged by not having the canceled Treasury notes as vouchers. Such being the case, it was held that it was for the jury, under such evidence as might be adduced, to say what actual injury, if any, accrued to the United States by reason of the nondelivery of the canceled Treasury notes.

The present case cannot be controlled by the rule laid down in the Morgan Case. Here the Treasury notes received by Smythe were not canceled, and could be used as money. They were not safely kept, nor were they destroyed through overruling necessity or by the public enemy. Hence, there was a breach of his bond, and as the amount of the Treasury notes which he failed to deliver to the government was clearly shown, there was nothing in this case to refer to the jury. There was no question of damage to be ascertained by a jury; for if under the circumstances disclosed the defendants were liable at all, the government, as matter of law, was entitled to a judgment for the full amount shown to have been received by the superintendent and not paid over by him, as required by his bond.

It remains to consider some minor objections to the judgment. It is contended that it was error to give interest on the amount of the judgment from April 1st, 1893, the date from which the accounts of the superintendent were stated at the Treasury Department.

[177] *The alleged fire occurred June 24th, 1893, and on February 9th, 1894, notice of the deficiency in the superintendent's account was given to his sureties, as required by the act of August 8th, 1888 (25 Stat. at L. 387, chap. 787, U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 1208). And this action was brought August 7th, 1894. Interest, it is insisted, was recoverable, at most, only from the date of the notice to the sureties. This objection is met by § 3624 of the Revised Statutes (U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 2418), which provides: "Whenever any person accountable for public money neglects or refuses to pay into the Treasury the sum or balance reported to be due to the United States, upon the adjustment of his account, the First Comptroller of the Treasury shall institute suit for the recovery of the same, adding to the sum stated to be due on such account the commissions of the delinquent, which shall be forfeited in every instance where suit is commenced and judgment obtained thereon, and an interest of 6 per centum per annum, from the time of receiving the money until it shall be repaid into the Treasury."

This statute is mandatory, and the sureties on the bond of superintendent Smythe must be held to have signed it in view of the requirement as to the date from which interest should be computed. It is not denied that the Treasury notes in question were received at least as early as April 1st, 1893.

It is also said that it was error, under the law of Louisiana, to have rendered an absolute judgment against Byrnes, the administrator of the succession of Conery, deceased; that if any judgment was rendered it should have been against the administrator, payable only in due course of administration. This objection is quite technical. If by the law of Louisiana the judgment is so payable, it will be thus interpreted and enforced, subject, of course, to the priority given to the government in the distribution of the proceeds of the estate of any person indebted to the United States whose estate is insufficient to pay all debts against it. Rev. Stat. §§ 3466, 3467 (U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 2314).

The judgment of the Circuit Court of Appeals, affirming the judgment of the Circuit Court, is affirmed.

*Mr. Justice Peckham, dissenting:

[17

I dissent from the conclusion arrived at in the opinion of the court, and from the judgment thereon. I agree as to the general character and extent of the liability of an officer intrusted with the care and custody of public moneys, as stated in the cases cited in the opinion upon that subject. But those cases do not touch the question involved. It is undisputed that the property, for the loss of which the defendants have been held, consisted of $25,000 of Treasury notes of the government of the United States; in other words, it consisted of the written promise of the government to pay money upon presentation of the notes. There was evidence also, at least sufficient to go to the jury, to prove that most of these notes were wholly destroyed by fire, so that there was no possibility of their being thereafter presented for payment or redemption. Treasury notes amounting to about $1,100 were not so far destroyed as to be incapable of identification or presentation for payment, and they were taken possession of and retained by the government, and yet the government also recovered judgment for their amount. Assuming the liability of the obligors in the bond to respond for all the damage sustained by the government by reason of this destruction by fire, the question is, What damage has the government suffered?

Within the case of United States v. Morgan, 11 How. 154, 13 L. ed. 643, cited in the opinion of the court, that question should have been submitted to the jury under instructions that the defendant was not liable for the amount of the face of the notes in case they had been totally destroyed by the fire, but only for such cost and expense as the government might incur by reason of the replacing of the notes destroyed, including cost of paper, printing, engraving, and the trouble and inconvenience caused the government, etc., together with the cost, if necessary or more convenient to the government, of the transportation of other notes to take the place of those destroyed.

This suit is upon the bond, which, as it seems to me, is plainly one of indemnity. The legal purport of such a bond is to indemnify the government from any loss occasioned by any dereliction of the obligor. In [179] case of a breach of the bond, the amount which the government would be entitled to recover would be measured by the loss incurred. If the loss were shown to have been the sum of $5 or merely nominal, the plaintiff could not recover $1,000, or the penalty of the bond. It is conceded in the present case that what the defendant and his sureties have been adjudged to answer for, as a breach of the bond, was because $25,000 (less about $1,100) of Treasury notes of the United States, in the custody of the superintendent, had been burnt and destroyed by fire. I concede that the bondsmen would be responsible for any loss thereby occasioned to the United States, even though without negligence on the part of the officer in whose custody the money had been placed.

In Morgan's Case, 11 How. 154, 13 L. ed. 643, there was a suit by the United States against a collector of revenue. It appeared in evidence that the collector had collected about $100,000 for duties in Treasury notes, and had canceled them. The notes were then put in a bundle and sent to the Treasury Department through the postoffice, but the bundle was lost or stolen. The circuit court gave judgment to the government in the amount of the penalty of the bond, which judgment this court reversed, and in its opinion said:

"The rule of damage would be the amount of the notes, unless it appeared, as here, that they had been canceled, and unless it was shown that the government had suffered, or was likely to suffer, damage less than their amount. How much is the real damage, under all the circumstances, is a question of fact for the jury, and should be passed on by them at another trial. Only that amount, rather than the whole bond, need, in a liberal view of the law, and of his bond, be exacted; and that amount neither he nor his sureties can reasonably object to paying, when he, by the neglect of himself or his agent, has caused all the injury which he is in the end required to reimburse.

[180] . . . Finally, we decide on this last question as a matter of law this, and this only, namely, that the collector is liable for all the actual damages sustained by his not returning the notes as required by law and official circulars; or for not putting *them in the postoffice so as to be returned. 5 Stat. at L. 203, chap. 2. But how much this damage was, is a matter of proof before the jury, fixing the real amount likely to happen from their getting into circulation again, as two of them did here, from delay and inconvenience in obtaining the proper vouchers to settle accounts, from the want of evidence at the department that the notes had been redeemed, or from any other direct consequence of the breach of the condition of his bond, and of his instructions under it."

The attempt made to distinguish the present case from that of United States v. Morgan does not seem to me to be successful. Indeed the case before us presents a stronger case of a substantial defense than that of Morgan's.

To refuse this defense of a burning and total destruction of the notes leaves the strange and anomalous spectacle of a recovery by the government on account of a damage which in fact and in law it has not sustained. The recovery must be upon the contract, evidenced by the bond, to safely keep and pay over, and in default to pay the damage up to the penalty of the bond. This is the contract, and that there has been a breach may be admitted at once, but the question on the part of the obligors in the bond then comes back, What damage has the government suffered by reason of the failure to keep the contract? for it is only the damage which the government in fact has sustained that we have contracted to pay. How can it be said, with the slightest reference to fact, that the damage amounts to the face of the notes when those notes are simply the promise of the government to pay upon their presentation, and the possibility of such presentation has ceased to exist?

But the right to set up and prove a defense of this character seems to be denied on some view of public policy, the propriety of which I admit I fail to recognize, and I also fail to recognize the legal power of the court to deny to the obligors the validity of a defense which shows that no damage, or a less amount than claimed, has been sustained, because of any assumed public policy. It is a case of contract, and not of policy.

The denial of the sufficiency of the defense seemingly rests upon the ground that it is against the interests of the government,*and [181] therefore is against the public policy of the United States, to permit any defense to be interposed in an action upon this kind of a bond; that, no matter how clearly it may be proved that no damage has been sustained by the government, and therefore there is nothing which the obligors have contracted to pay, still the full amount of the face of the notes must be paid to the government in order to reimburse it for a loss it has never in fact sustained. And it is proof of this very fact which is refused on the ground of public policy. Can the government maintain the proposition that if it has suffered in truth no loss it can nevertheless recover either the penalty of the bond or any less sum? This is to change the legal import of the bond. But it is nevertheless maintained that it is against public policy to permit proof of a fact which if it really existed would undoubtedly constitute a defense to the claim made by the government. That kind of a public policy which prevents a legal defense I cannot understand. I can and do appreciate a public policy that refuses to admit the sufficiency of a defense that the property was lost by or stolen from the officer without any fault on his part. The officer and his sureties have frequently endeavored to have the government bear the loss which has actually been sustained, because it happened without any fault on the part of the officer; but the courts have held that such defense is insufficient on the ground that it is against public policy to recognize it as an answer to defendant's obligation to pay over, because it would tend to diminish the care which the officer would otherwise take of the property intrusted to his custody, and would lead the government into an investigation of the facts surrounding or causing the loss, under very great disadvantages, and therefore as the loss had in fact occurred, and one or the other of the parties must bear it, the courts have said he must bear it in whose custody it had been placed by the government when it was stolen or destroyed, and the proffered answer has been held to be no defense to the contract to pay over, existing in the bond, which has therefore been enforced. The courts simply decided what the contract between the parties meant, but they did not decide that a legal defense, showing there was no damage, could not be interposed.

[182] *Here, however, it seems to me plain there is no question of public policy as to what should constitute a defense. The amount of damage is what the defendants have promised to pay, and nothing more. Consequently, what is damage must be shown. Now that is a question of fact, and if no damage has in fact been sustained, it is the legal right of the defendant to prove it, and it cannot, as I think, be denied him on any question of public policy. This is to me a new application of the doctrine of public policy to a strictly legal defense to the obligation contained in a contract sued upon, where both parties acknowledge the validity of such contract, and the defense is founded upon the terms of the contract about whose legal meaning there cannot, as it seems to me, be any difference of opinion.

Upon the other branch of the subject, the case shows that at least $1,182 in Treasury notes were saved, although charred, and were taken possession of by the agents of the government, and were identified as to the amount and date of issue. The defendants insisted there could be no recovery for this sum, as the government already had the notes in its possession, but this objection was overruled. The sections of the Revised Statutes of the United States (951, 957 [U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, pp. 695, 698]), set forth in the opinion, are said to render this defense insufficient, for the reason that the defendants had not submitted their claim for audit to the accounting officers of the Treasury. These sections are, as stated, simply reproductions of the act of 1797, which was in force when the Morgan Case, 11 How. 154, 13 L. ed. 643, was decided, and it is not mentioned therein as an answer to the defense set up by defendants. Probably the provision was not regarded as applicable, although it must be admitted the record does not affirmatively show the nonpresentation of the matter to the Treasury officials. But, in my judgment, the sections have no application to this case. The defendants are not seeking a claim or credit against the government, and the provision applies to such a case, while here the question is as to how much the government has been damaged, and when it is shown that, in any event, it has in fact received $1,182 of the $25,000 it claimed, it seems to me that, upon any basis of liability, such fact reduces the claim on the part of the government, not [183] by reason *of a credit, but because the defendant never was liable to the extent claimed, and in proving the facts which show there never was any such liability, it cannot, as it seems to me, be said that the defendants thereby claim a credit. They claim no such thing, but they do claim, first, that the government has failed to prove a cause of action for any more than a nominal sum; or, second, for any greater sum than $23,818, being the difference between $25,000 and the $1,182 already received, and this is the extent of the cause of action proved by the government, after all the facts are in evidence.

188 U. S.

The recovery in this case was not for the whole penalty of the bond, which was $100,000, but judgment was prayed for and recovered to the extent of $25,000, the whole amount of the notes, not deducting the $1,182 already received by the government. This shows that the recovery was at least based upon the amount of the damage, and not upon the penalty; and it therefore further shows that it was indemnity, pure and simple, which the government claimed. Therefore it was necessary for it to prove the damage, and in proving the defense, at least as to $1,182, the defendants were not proving a credit, but disproving to that extent the cause of action of the plaintiff.

For the reasons thus stated, I am in favor of reversing the judgment of the court below, and I dissent from the opinion of this court directing an affirmance.

I am authorized to state that Mr. Justice Shiras concurs in this dissent.

*JOSEPH H. BEALS, Plff. in Err., [184 v.

JAMES J. CONE and Lyman Robison, Dfts. in Err.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 184-188.)

Error to state court — Federal question — suit as to mining claim — questions of general law—estoppel—res judicata.

1. The mere fact that an action is brought in a state court, under U. S. Rev. Stat. §§ 2325, 2326 (U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, pp. 1429, 1430), in support of an adverse mining claim, does not of itself entitle the defeated party to a writ of error from the Supreme Court of the United States.
2. Whether statements made on a hearing, before the Land Department, of a protest against a mineral entry, work an estoppel in pais which amounts to a defense to a claim of title under a subsequent entry, involves no Federal question which will give the Supreme Court of the United States jurisdiction to review the judgment of a state court.
3. A ruling of a state court adverse to plaintiff's claim that the decision by the Land Department of a question of fact on the hearing of a protest filed by him and others against defendants' original mineral entry was res judicata in an adverse suit in which defendants rely on a subsequent entry is not the decision of a Federal question which will give the Supreme Court of the United States jurisdiction to review the judgment of the state court.

NOTE.—On writs of error from United States Supreme Court to state courts—see notes to Hamblin v. Western Land Co. 37 L. ed. U. S. 267; Kipley v. Illinois, 42 L. ed. U. S. 998; and Re Buchanan, 39 L. ed. U. S. 884.

[No. 84.]

Argued November 11, 12, 1902. Decided January 26, 1903.

IN ERROR to the Supreme Court of the State of Colorado to review a judgment which affirmed a judgment of the District Court of the County of El Paso in favor of defendants in a suit in support of an adverse mining claim. Dismissed.

See same case below, 27 Colo. 473, 62 Pac. 948.

Statement by Mr. Justice Brewer:

This is what is known in the mining regions as an "adverse suit," brought under the authority of §§ 2325 and 2326, Rev. Stat. (U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, pp. 1429, 1430), in the district court of the county of El Paso, Colorado, to contest the right of defendants to a patent for the Ophir lode mining claim. The plaintiff claimed a portion of this ground as a part of his own mining claim, and the question presented was as to the priority of right thereto of the respective parties by virtue of discovery and location. Judgment was rendered in the district court in favor of the defendants, which judgment was affirmed by the supreme court of the state. 27 Colo. 473, 62 Pac. 948. Thereupon the case was brought here on writ of error.

[185] In the complaint, plaintiff averred that on or about January 1, 1893, and ever since, he was the owner and in possession of the Tecumseh lode mining claim; that on or about April 1, 1896, the defendants wrongfully entered upon a parcel of said claim, to wit, all that part thereof included within the exterior lines of the Ophir lode mining claim, and that they have ever since *wrongfully withheld the possession of said parcel from the plaintiff. The answer denied the allegations of the complaint, and pleaded as a second defense that before the alleged discovery of the Tecumseh lode mining claim, to wit, on February 3, 1892, the defendants or their grantors were and defendants still are the owners of the Ophir lode mining claim; and that by reason of such ownership they are entitled to the possession of the ground in dispute. To this answer a replication was filed, setting forth that defendants on February 10, 1893, made a mineral entry which included said Ophir lode; that subsequently plaintiff, with others, filed a protest against that portion of the entry which related to the Ophir lode,—such protest charging, among other things, that there had been no discovery of any vein, lode, ledge, or deposit of mineral therein; that on a hearing there was an adjudication by the Commissioner of the General Land Office, affirmed by the Secretary of the Interior, that no discovery had been made, and canceling the entry. Plaintiff also alleged that at the hearing on said protest Cone, one of the defendants, testified that no vein had been discovered in the Ophir claim and no work done on any lode therein during the year 1893, and that the plaintiff was induced by such testimony to go to large expenditures in exploring for mineral in the ground in conflict between the two claims, the defendants knowing at all times that such expenditures were being made in reliance upon the truth of such testimony. In other words, the plaintiff in his replication pleaded two defenses to defendants' claim of title: First, res judicata by reason of the action of the Secretary of the Interior in setting aside the original application for entry of the Ophir lode; and, second, estoppel by reason of the testimony given by one of the defendants. A demurrer to this replication was sustained, and the case went to trial upon the complaint and answer.

Mr. H. B. Johnson argued the cause and filed a brief for plaintiff in error:

A defense based upon laws of the United States gives rise to a Federal question, as much as a claim asserted in a complaint.

Anderson v. Carkins, 135 U. S. 483, 34 L. ed. 272, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 905; Murdock v. Memphis, 20 Wall. 590, 22 L. ed. 429.

A Federal question was involved.

Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Chicago, 166 U. S. 226, 41 L. ed. 979, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 581.

This court will review the decision of the lower court on both the law and the facts, so far as it may be necessary to determine the validity of any right set up or claimed under an act of Congress.

Republican River Bridge Co. v. Kansas P. R. Co. 92 U. S. 315, 23 L. ed. 515.

Federal questions, even if raised for the first time by petition for a rehearing, will be reviewed by this court where they were considered and determined by the state court.

Mallett v. North Carolina, 181 U. S. 589, 45 L. ed. 1015, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 730.

A claim that to construe the act of Congress allowing and requiring a vein to be discovered at any place within the limits of the claim, as in harmony with a state statute requiring this vein to be in the discovery shaft, would prejudice our title, right, privilege, and immunity claimed under that act, makes a case arising under the laws of the United States.

Cooke v. Avery, 147 U. S. 375, 37 L. ed. 209, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 340.

The refusal to consider the question as to whether the state statute construed as requiring the discovery of a vein in the discovery shaft is in conflict with the act of Congress allowing such discovery at any place within the limits of the claim was equivalent to denying the right, title, privilege, and immunity claimed under and by virtue of such conflict.

Des Moines Nav. & R. Co. v. Iowa Home-
188 U. S.

stead Co. 123 U. S. 552, 31 L. ed. 202, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 217.

It clearly appears that the supreme court of Colorado regarded the pleadings, offers of instructions, objections to instructions, offers of evidence, and objections to evidence, as sufficient forms by which to assert claims of right, title, privilege, and immunity under the various acts of Congress to which we have alluded, and, in the main, has actually decided these questions, and denied such right, title, privilege, and immunity; and this operates to give jurisdiction to this court.

F. G. Oxley Stave Co. v. Butler County, 166 U. S. 648, 41 L. ed. 1149, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 709.

A Federal question raised for the first time in the supreme court, and actually decided on its merits by that court, is reviewable here, notwithstanding it may not have been raised in the trial court.

Sully v. American Nat. Bank, 178 U. S. 289, 44 L. ed. 1072, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 935.

No particular form of words or phrases in which the claim of Federal rights must be asserted has ever been declared necessary. It is sufficient if it appears from the record that such rights were specially set up or claimed in the state court in such manner as to bring them to the attention of the court.

Green Bay & M. Canal Co. v. Patten Paper Co. 172 U. S. 58, 43 L. ed. 364, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 97.

Mr. Charles S. Thomas argued the cause, and, with Messrs. William H. Bryant and Harry H. Lee, filed a brief for defendants in error:

If the Federal question was not called to the attention of the state court, and prior to any motion or petition for rehearing, no writ of error can lie to such court.

Loeber v. Schroeder, 149 U. S. 581, 37 L. ed. 858, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 934; Texas & P. Co. v. Southern P. Co. 137 U. S. 48, 34 L. ed. 614, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 10; Butler v. Gage, 138 U. S. 52, 34 L. ed. 869, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 235; Winona & St. P. R. Co. v. Plainview, 143 U. S. 391, 36 L. ed. 200, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 530; Bushnell v. Croke Min. & Smelting Co. 148 U. S. 682, 37 L. ed. 610, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 771; Leeper v. Texas, 139 U. S. 462, 35 L. ed. 225, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 577; Lamar Canal Co. v. Amity Land & Irrig. Co. 26 Colo. 380, 58 Pac. 600; Armstrong v. Athens County Treasurer, 16 Pet. 281, 10 L. ed. 965.

This court will not resort to forced inferences and conjectural reasoning, or to even probable suppositions of the points raised and decided, in order to sustain jurisdiction.

Ocean Ins. Co. v. Polleys, 13 Pet. 157, 10 L. ed. 105.

A mention of a Federal question in the petition for the writ of error is insufficient to give the supreme court jurisdiction.

Leeper v. Texas, 139 U. S. 462, 35 L. ed. 225, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 577; Tripp v. Santa Rosa Street R. Co. 144 U. S. 126, 36 L. ed. 372, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 655.

188 U. S. U. S., Book 47.

The record must show affirmatively that some Federal question was involved.

Brown v. Colorado, 106 U. S. 95, 27 L. ed. 132, 1 Sup. Ct. Rep. 175; Boughton v. American Exch. Nat. Bank, 104 U. S. 427, 26 L. ed. 765; Michigan C. R. Co. v. Michigan Southern R. Co. 19 How. 378, 15 L. ed. 689.

The definitions given by the state court to the term "vein or lode" in the Federal mining statute, and the necessity of their presence in the discovery shaft of a mining claim, do not invest this court with power to review the decision.

Bushnell v. Croke Min. & Smelting Co. 148 U. S. 682, 37 L. ed. 610, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 771.

No jurisdiction to review can attach to this court simply because the plaintiffs in error may have claimed a right under a Federal statute.

Blackburn v. Portland Gold Min. Co. 175 U. S. 586, 44 L. ed. 283, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 222; Colorado Cent. Consol. Min. Co. v. Turek, 150 U. S. 138, 37 L. ed. 1030, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 35; Gillis v. Stinchfield, 159 U. S. 658, 40 L. ed. 295, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 131.

A suit to quiet title to a mining claim involves no Federal question.

California Oil & Gas Co. v. Miller, 96 Fed. 17.

A suit brought in support of an adverse claim is not one arising under the laws of the United States in such sense as to confer Federal jurisdiction.

Shoshone Min. Co. v. Rutter, 177 U. S. 505, 44 L. ed. 864, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 726.

When a Federal question is raised in the state courts, the party who brings the case to this court cannot raise here another Federal question which was not raised below.

Chapin v. Fye, 179 U. S. 127, 45 L. ed. 119, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 71.

If the decision of the state court is based upon a state of facts which remove the alleged Federal question out of the case, this court has no jurisdiction to review.

Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. Ferris, 179 U. S. 602, 45 L. ed. 337, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 231; Yazoo & M. Valley R. Co. v. Adams, 180 U. S. 41, 45 L. ed. 415, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 256.

If the decision of the state court rests on an independent ground of law not involving any Federal question, or on a ground broad enough to sustain it without reference to such a question, the Supreme Court has no jurisdiction.

Eustis v. Bolles, 150 U. S. 361, 37 L. ed. 1111, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 131; Dower v. Richards, 151 U. S. 658, 38 L. ed. 305, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 452; Missouri P. R. Co. v. Fitzgerald, 160 U. S. 556, 40 L. ed. 536, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 389; Osborne v. Florida, 164 U. S. 650, 41 L. ed. 586, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 214; Wade v. Lawder, 165 U. S. 624, 41 L. ed. 851, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 425; Hale v. Lewis, 181 U. S. 473, 45 L. ed. 959, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 677.

Questions of fact, when once settled in the courts of a state, are not subject to review in this court.

Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Call Pub. Co. 181 U. S. 92, 45 L. ed. 765, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 561; Dower v. Richards, 151 U. S. 658, 38

L. ed. 305, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 452; Egan v. Hart, 165 U. S. 188, 41 L. ed. 680, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 300; Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Chicago, 166 U. S. 226, 41 L. ed. 979, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 581; Hedrick v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. 167 U. S. 673, 42 L. ed. 320, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 922; Gardner v. Bonestell, 180 U. S. 362, 45 L. ed. 574, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 399.

On error to a state court, this court cannot consider an alleged Federal question, when it appears that the Federal right thus relied upon had not by adequate specification been called to the attention of the state court, and had not been by it considered, not being necessarily involved in the determination of the case.

Yazoo & M. Valley Co. v. Adams, 180 U. S. 41, 45 L. ed. 415, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 256; Powell v. Brunswick County, 150 U. S. 440, 37 L. ed. 1137, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 166; Capital City Dairy Co. v. Ohio, 183 U. S. 238, 46 L. ed. 171, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 120.

[186]*Mr. Justice Brewer delivered the opinion of the court:

The jurisdiction of this court is denied. The validity of a treaty or statute of or authority exercised under the United States was not drawn in question in the state courts, nor was the validity of a statute of or authority exercised under the state of Colorado challenged on the ground of being repugnant to the Constitution, treaties, or laws of the United States. So that the jurisdiction of this court depends on whether some title, right, privilege, or immunity of a Federal nature was specially set up and claimed by the plaintiff in error and denied by the state courts. Rev. Stat. § 709 (U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 575).

The mere fact that this is an action brought under §§ 2325 and 2326, Rev. Stat. (U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, pp. 1429, 1430), in support of an adverse claim, does not of itself entitle the defeated party to a writ of error. Although brought under the authority of a Federal statute, the questions involved may be only of general or local law. Blackburn v. Portland Gold Min. Co. 175 U. S. 571, 44 L. ed. 276, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 222; Shoshone Min. Co. v. Rutter, 177 U. S. 505, 44 L. ed. 864, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 726.

Two questions of law arose on the pleadings. Both were presented by the demurrer to the replication; one, a question of estoppel; the other, of res judicata. The estoppel was not one of record, but in pais, arising, as contended, from contradictory statements made by one of the defendants at a different time and place. Whether such statements work an estoppel depends, not upon the Constitution or any law of Congress, involves no Federal question, but is determined by rules of general law.

With respect to the other question, this may be said: The validity of the denial of the original application for entry was not challenged. It was accepted as conclusive, and a subsequent entry was relied upon. The rule of res judicata was, however, invoked by plaintiff on the ground that a question of fact had been decided in the first application, which, as alleged, was conclusive between the parties in this action. But the applicability of the rule depends on the fact that the parties to the two actions or proceedings are the same, and also acting in the same right. Here the parties to the prior proceeding were the applicants *for the patent and the United States, and the matters decided bound them, and them only. The fact that this plaintiff, with others, filed a protest against the entry did not make them parties to the application to the extent that they were concluded by a decision either way. There is no suggestion in the pleadings that the protestants were in any way interested in the ground applied for, or that they were acting other than as good citizens, seeking to prevent a wrong upon the government. Their standing in the proceeding was in the nature of amici curiæ. As such, whatever the result, no rule of res judicata could be invoked by or against them. Hence, the ruling on the demurrer was not concerning the effect of a decision made by the Land Department upon the parties to the proceeding, but a mere determination that one who was not a party could not claim the advantages of a party. It is not open to question that the trial court properly sustained the demurrer to this portion of the replication. To call this the decision of a Federal question adverse to the plaintiff is so manifestly without foundation that it may rightfully be disregarded.

The record of the trial, which took place before a jury, is voluminous,—the bill of exceptions, containing the testimony, the instructions, and the proceedings on the motion for a new trial, filling 436 printed pages. The testimony was mainly directed to such matters of fact as the time and place of discovery of mineral, the character of the veins, the per cent of mineral, and the general nature of the rock formations in which the veins were alleged to have been discovered. From the beginning of the trial to the end of the testimony there appears no single distinct claim based upon the Constitution or statutes of the United States. No statute of the state of Colorado was questioned, nor was any title, right, privilege, or immunity under the Constitution or laws of the United States specially set up or claimed. In the instructions asked and refused, as well as in those given, there is only a general mention of the laws of the United States, and none of any particular statute. In the motion for a new trial, as well as in the assignments of error in the supreme court of the state, there is not the slightest reference to the Constitution, the laws of the United States, or *any section or part thereof. And in the opinion of the supreme court, outside of the matters of estoppel and res judicata before referred to, there is nothing to even suggest that it was requested to consider any question of a title, right, privilege, or immunity under the Constitution or laws of the United States.

Indeed, while this case has evidently been hotly contested, yet the matters which were subjects of controversy and determination were questions of fact concerning the time, extent, and effect of the alleged discoveries of mineral, and also alleged wrongs in respect to the jury. To those matters, and to those alone, was the attention of the parties and the courts directed. Counsel for plaintiff in error has filed an elaborate brief of 240 printed pages, which is able and exhaustive, both on questions of mining law and the conduct of the trial. One cannot, however, fail to be impressed, after a perusal thereof, with the fact of a failure to recognize that there is no general right to a writ of error from this court to the courts of a state; that there is but a special right, a right to bring such cases, and such cases only, as disclose a Federal question distinctly ruled adversely to the plaintiff in error. We fail to see that any title, right, privilege, or immunity of a Federal nature was specially set up and claimed. Very likely the construction and the effect of Federal statutes were, in a general way, discussed and considered, but nowhere do we find that special setting up or claiming of a Federal right which justifies us in taking jurisdiction. As we have stated, the validity of no Federal statute was denied in the state courts. Neither did the plaintiff in error, prior to the judgment of affirmance in the supreme court, challenge the validity of any state statute on the ground of its repugnance to paramount Federal law.

The writ of error is dismissed.

[189]*ISABELLA F. BLACKSTONE, Individually and as Executrix of the Last Will and Testament of Timothy B. Blackstone, Deceased, Plff. in Err.,
v.

NATHAN L. MILLER, Comptroller of the State of New York, and Edward M. Grout, Comptroller of the City of New York.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 189-207.)

Taxation — succession taxes — debts due nonresident decedent — contracts — impairment of obligation — constitutional law — double taxation — full faith and credit — privileges and immunities.

1. A state may tax the transfer, under the will of a nonresident, of debts due the decedent by its citizens.

NOTE.—On inheritance and succession taxes—see notes to Re Howe (N. Y.) 2 L. R. A. 824; Wallace v. Myers (C. C. S. D. N. Y.) 4 L. R. A. 171; Com. v. Ferguson (Pa.) 10 L. R. A. 240; Re Romaine (N. Y.) 12 L. R. A. 401; and Magoun v. Illinois Trust & Sav. Bank, 42 L. ed. U. S. 1037.

As to what laws are void as impairing obligation of contracts—see notes to Franklin County Grammar School v. Bailey (Vt.) 10 L. R. A. 405; Fletcher v. Peck, 3 L. ed. U. S. 162; McCanna & F. Co. v. Citizens' Trust & Surety Co. 24 C. C. A. 20; and Montana Ore Pur-

2. The obligation of a contract cannot be said to be impaired by a statute in force when the contract was made.
3. The beneficiaries under the will of a nonresident cannot invoke the Federal Constitution to prevent the taxation, under the New York inheritance-tax law, of the transfer, under such will, of debts due the decedent by its citizens, because the entire inheritance is taxable in the state of the decedent's domicile.
4. Full faith and credit are not denied a judgment of an Illinois court taxing the entire inheritance under the will of a resident of that state, by a tax imposed under the New York inheritance-tax law on the transfer, under such will, of debts due the decedent by citizens of the latter state.
5. None of the privileges and immunities of citizens of the state of New York are denied the beneficiaries under the will of a nonresident by a tax imposed under the New York inheritance-tax law, on the transfer, under such will, of debts due the decedent by citizens of that state.
6. The imposition of a tax, under the New York inheritance-tax law, on the transfer, under the will of a nonresident, of debts due the decedent by residents of that state, does not violate the 14th Amendment to the Federal Constitution.

[No. 423.]

Argued January 5, 6, 1903. Decided January 26, 1903.

IN ERROR to the Surrogates' Court of New York County, in the State of New York, to review a decree of that court imposing an inheritance tax on property passing under the will of a nonresident, which decree was entered in pursuance of an order of the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court of that State, which was affirmed by the Court of Appeals. Affirmed.

See same case below in Appellate Division of Supreme Court, 69 App. Div. 127, 74 N. Y. Supp. 508; and in Court of Appeals, 171 N. Y. 682, 64 N. E. 1118.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Edward W. Sheldon argued the cause and filed a brief for plaintiff in error:

The established principles of taxation prohibit the taxation of intangible property owned by nonresidents.

McCulloch v. Maryland, 4 Wheat. 316, 4 L. ed. 579; Northern C. R. Co. v. Jackson, 7 Wall. 262, 19 L. ed. 88; State Tax on Foreign-held Bonds, 15 Wall. 300, sub nom. Cleveland, P. & A. R. Co. v. Pennsylvania, 21 L. ed. 179; Savings & Loan Soc. v. Multi- chasing Co. v. Boston & M. Consol. Copper & S. Min. Co. 35 C. C. A. 12.

As to full faith and credit to be given to state records and judicial proceedings—see Lindley v. O'Reilly (N. J.) 1 L. R. A. 79, and note; Cumington v. Belchertown (Mass.) 4 L. R. A. 131, and note; Rand v. Hanson (Mass.) 12 L. R. A. 574, and note. And see notes to Wiese v. San Francisco Musical Fund Soc. (Cal.) 7 L. R. A. 578; Darby v. Mayer, 6 L. ed. U. S. 367; and Mills v. Duryee, 3 L. ed. U. S. 411.

nomah County, 169 U. S. 421, 42 L. ed. 803, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 392; Bristol v. Washington County, 177 U. S. 133, 44 L. ed. 701, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 585; San Francisco v. Mackey, 22 Fed. 602; Walker v. Jack, 31 C. C. A. 462, 60 U. S. App. 124, 88 Fed. 576; Kirtland v. Hotchkiss, 42 Conn. 426, 19 Am. Rep. 546, Affirmed in 100 U. S. 491, 25 L. ed. 558; Balk v. Harris, 124 N. C. 467, 45 L. R. A. 260, 32 S. E. 799; Scrapps v. Fulton County Bd. of Review, 183 Ill. 278, 55 N. E. 700; Hayward v. Christian County Bd. of Review, 189 Ill. 235, 59 N. E. 601; Matzenbaugh v. People, 194 Ill. 108, 62 N. E. 546; South Nashville Street R. Co. v. Morrow, 87 Tenn. 438, 2 L. R. A. 853, 11 S. W. 348; Howell v. Gordon, 127 Mich. 517, 86 N. W. 1042; Ellsworth v. Brown, 53 Me. 519; Catlin v. Hull, 21 Vt. 152; Flanders v. Cross, 10 Cush. 514; State, Potter, Prosecutor, v. Ross, 23 N. J. L. 517; Hopkins v. Baker, 78 Md. 363, 22 Atl. 477, 28 Atl. 284; Balk v. Harris, 124 N. C. 467, 45 L. R. A. 260, 32 S. E. 799; Mobile v. Baldwin, 57 Ala. 61, 29 Am. Rep. 712; Augusta v. Dunbar, 50 Ga. 387; Johnson v. DeBary-Baya Merchants' Line, 37 Fla. 499, 37 L. R. A. 518, 19 So. 640; State v. Smith, 68 Miss. 79, 8 So. 294; Liverpool & L. & G. Ins. Co. v. Board of Assessors, 51 La. Ann. 1028, 45 L. R. A. 524, 25 So. 970; Court v. O'Connor, 65 Tex. 334; Prairie Cattle Co. v. Williamson, 5 Okla. 488, 49 Pac. 937; Worthington v. Sebastian, 25 Ohio St. 1; Buck v. Miller, 147 Ind. 586, 37 L. R. A. 384, 387, 45 N. E. 647, 47 N. E. 8; Louisville v. Shirley, 80 Ky. 71; Hutchinson v. Oskaloosa Bd. of Equalization, 67 Iowa, 183, 25 N. W. 121; Finch v. York County, 19 Neb. 50, 56 Am. Rep. 741, 26 N. W. 339; Sanford v. Spencer, 62 Wis. 230, 22 N. W. 465; Re Jefferson, 35 Minn. 215, 28 N. W. 256; Arapahoe County v. Cutter, 3 Colo. 349; Holland v. Silver Bow County, 15 Mont. 460, 27 L. R. A. 797, 39 Pac. 575; Johnson v. Oregon City, 2 Or. 327; Walla Walla v. Moore, 16 Wash. 339, 47 Pac. 753; Re Fair, 128 Cal. 607, 61 Pac. 184; Barnes v. Woodbury, 17 Nev. 383, 30 Pac. 1068; Cooley, Taxn, 2d ed. pp. 21, 22; Rorer, Interstate Law, p. 281; Judson, Taxn. 1893, § 397, p. 507.

These principles have been embodied in the New York statutory scheme.

People ex rel. Lemmon v. Feitner, 167 N. Y. 1, 60 N. E. 265; Re Hellman, 77 App. Div. 355, 79 N. Y. Supp. 201; New York v. McLean, 170 N. Y. 374, 63 N. E. 380; Dewey v. Des Moines, 173 U. S. 193, 43 L. ed. 665, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 379; Bristol v. Washington County, 177 U. S. 133, 44 L. ed. 701, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 585; People v. Equitable Trust Co. 96 N. Y. 387; Re Enston, 113 N. Y. 174, sub nom. People v. Sherwood, 3 L. R. A. 464, 21 N. E. 87.

The principles apply with equal force to transfer or succession taxes.

Kintzing v. Hutchinson, 7 W. N. C. 226, Fed. Cas. No. 7,834; Re Bronson, 150 N. Y. 1, 34 L. R. A. 238, 44 N. E. 707; Re Preston, 75 App. Div. 250, 78 N. Y. Supp. 91; Re Phipps, 77 Hun, 325, 28 N. Y. Supp. 330, Affirmed in 143 N. Y. 641, 37 N. E. 823; Re Chabot, 44 App. Div. 340, 60 N. Y. Supp. 927; Re Abbett, 29 Misc. 567, 61 N. Y. Supp. 1067; Coleman's Estate, 159 Pa. 231, 28 Atl. 137.

If the indebtedness of the trust company could upon any theory be regarded as property within the state of New York, it was not taxable in that state because it was only transitorily there.

Hays v. Pacific Mail S. S. Co. 17 How. 596, 15 L. ed. 254; People ex rel. Parker Mills v. New York Tax Comrs. 23 N. Y. 242; People ex rel. Hoyt v. New York City & County Tax & A. Comrs. 23 N. Y. 224; 24 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 435; 25 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, pp. 142, 143; State Metropolitan L. Ins. Co., Prosecutor, v. Newark, 62 N. J. L. 74, 40 Atl. 573; Herron v. Keeran, 59 Ind. 472, 26 Am. Rep. 87; Standard Oil Co. v. Buchelor, 89 Ind. 1; Coe v. Errol, 116 U. S. 517, 29 L. ed. 715, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 475; Corning v. Masonville Twp. 74 Mich. 177, 41 N. W. 831; State, Detmold, Prosecutor, v. Engle, 34 N. J. L. 425; State, Lehigh & W. Coal Co., Prosecutor, v. Carrigan, 39 N. J. L. 35; Com. v. American Dredging Co. 122 Pa. 386, 1 L. R. A. 237, 2 Inters. Com. 221, 15 Atl. 443; Re Romaine, 127 N. Y. 80, 12 L. R. A. 401, 27 N. E. 759; Re Leopold, 35 Misc. 370, 71 N. Y. Supp. 1032; State Trust Co. v. Chehalis County, 24 C. C. A. 584, 48 U. S. App. 190, 79 Fed. 282.

In attempting to assess the property of a nonresident, the burden is upon the taxing authority to establish the jurisdictional conditions.

Corn v. Cameron, 19 Mo. App. 573; McLean v. Jephson, 123 N. Y. 142, 9 L. R. A. 493, 25 N. E. 409.

A construction of the statute which permits double taxation should be avoided.

2 Cook, Corp. § 567; Tennessee v. Whitworth, 117 U. S. 129, 29 L. ed. 830, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 645; People ex rel. Savings Bank v. Coleman, 135 N. Y. 231, 31 N. E. 1022; People ex rel. Hoyt v. New York City & County Tax & A. Comrs. 23 N. Y. 224; People ex rel. Darrow v. Coleman, 119 N. Y. 137, 7 L. R. A. 407, 23 N. E. 488; Re James, 144 N. Y. 6, 38 N. E. 961; Detroit Citizens' Street R. Co. v. Detroit, 125 Mich. 673, 85 N. W. 96, 86 N. W. 809.

Where any doubt exists as to liability to a succession tax, the doubt should be resolved in favor of the person sought to be taxed.

Re Enston, 113 N. Y. 174, sub nom. People v. Sherwood, 3 L. R. A. 464, 21 N. E. 87; Re James, 144 N. Y. 6, 38 N. E. 961; Re Harbeck, 161 N. Y. 211, 55 N. E. 850; United States v. Wigglesworth, 2 Story, 369, Fed. Cas. No. 16,690; Re Bronson, 150 N. Y. 6, 34 L. R. A. 238, 44 N. E. 707; Re Vassar, 127 N. Y. 1, 27 N. E. 394; Re Stewart, 131 N. Y. 274, 14 L. R. A. 836, 30 N. E. 184; Re Fayerweather, 143 N. Y. 114, 38 N. E. 278; United States v. Isham, 17 Wall. 496, 21 L. ed. 728; Ruckgaber v. Moore, 104 Fed. 947; Hooper v. Shaw, 176 Mass. 190, 57 N. E. 361.

The taxation, in this proceeding, of the debts due Mr. Blackstone from residents of New York, would be unconstitutional.

Vanhorne v. Dorrance, 2 Dall. 304, 1 L. ed. 391; Culder v. Bull, 3 Dall. 386, 1 L. ed. 648; St. Louis v. Wiggins Ferry Co. 11 Wall. 423, 20 L. ed. 192; Delaware Railroad Tax, 18 Wall. 206, sub nom. Minot v. Philadelphia, W. & B. R. Co. 21 L. ed. 888; Ex parte Yarbrough, 110 U. S. 651, 28 L. ed. 274, 4 Sup. Ct. Rep. 152; Adams Exp. Co. v. Ohio State Auditor, 165 U. S. 194, 41 L. ed. 683, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 305, dissenting opinion; Dewey v. Des Moines, 173 U. S. 193, 43 L. ed. 665, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 379.

The proceedings under review impair the obligation of the contracts made between Mr. Blackstone and the Trust Company and Cuyler, Morgan & Co.

State Tax on Foreign-held Bonds, 15 Wall. 300, sub nom. Cleveland, P. & A. R. Co. v. Pennsylvania, 21 L. ed. 179; Tappan v. Merchants' Nat. Bank, 19 Wall. 490, 22 L. ed. 189; Murray v. Charleston, 96 U. S. 432, 24 L. ed. 760; Kirtland v. Hotchkiss, 100 U. S. 491, 25 L. ed. 558; Gloucester Ferry Co. v. Pennsylvania, 114 U. S. 196, 29 L. ed. 158, 1 Inters. Com. Rep. 382, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 826; New York, L. E. & W. R. Co. v. Pennsylvania, 153 U. S. 628, 38 L. ed. 846, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 952; Dewey v. Des Moines, 173 U. S. 193, 43 L. ed. 665, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 379; New Orleans v. Stempel, 175 U. S. 309, 44 L. ed. 174, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 110; Re Bronson, 150 N. Y. 1, 34 L. R. A. 238, 44 N. E. 707; Central Trust Co. v. Chattanooga, R. & C. R. Co. 68 Fed. 685; Walker v. Jack, 31 C. C. A. 462, 60 U. S. App. 127, 88 Fed. 576; Goldgart v. People, 106 Ill. 25; Liverpool & L. & G. Ins. Co. v. Board of Assessors, 51 La. Ann. 1028, 45 L. R. A. 524, 25 So. 970; Detroit v. Lewis, 109 Mich. 155, 32 L. R. A. 439, 66 N. W. 958.

The proceedings under review deny full faith and credit to the public acts and judicial proceedings of the state of Illinois.

Hilton v. Guyot, 159 U. S. 113, 40 L. ed. 95, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 139; Hampton v. M'Connel, 3 Wheat. 234, 4 L. ed. 378; Mills v. Duryee, 7 Cranch, 481, 3 L. ed. 411.

The proceedings under review deny to citizens of Illinois some of the privileges and immunities of citizens of New York.

Ward v. Maryland, 12 Wall. 418, 20 L. ed. 449.

The privileges and immunities of citizens of the United States are privileges and immunities arising out of the nature and essential character of the national government, and granted or secured by the Constitution of the United States.

Giozza v. Tiernan, 148 U. S. 657, 37 L. ed. 599, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 721; Duncan v. Missouri, 152 U. S. 377, 38 L. ed. 485, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 570.

Where there is discrimination in favor of resident as against nonresident taxpayers, the latter are denied the equal protection of the laws.

Savings & Loan Soc. v. Multnomah County, 169 U. S. 421, 42 L. ed. 803, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 392; Lowe v. Kansas, 163 U. S. 81, 41 L. ed. 188 U. S.

L. ed. 78, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1031; Duncan v. Missouri, 152 U. S. 377, 38 L. ed. 485, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 570; Reagan v. Farmers' Loan & T. Co. 154 U. S. 362, 38 L. ed. 1014, 4 Inters. Com. Rep. 560, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1047. See also Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Ellis, 165 U. S. 150, 41 L. ed. 666, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 255; Tinsley v. Anderson, 171 U. S. 101, 43 L. ed. 91, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 805.

As it is attempted in this proceeding to assess a tax on property which is not within the jurisdiction of the state of New York, and to enforce that tax against the legatees, they are threatened with forcible deprivation of their property without due process of law.

Pennoyer v. Neff, 95 U. S. 714, 24 L. ed. 565; Scott v. McNeal, 154 U. S. 46, 38 L. ed. 902, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1108.

If jurisdiction to tax is absent, the statute and the machinery to execute it do not constitute due process of law.

St. Louis v. Wiggins Ferry Co. 11 Wall. 423, 20 L. ed. 192; Stuart v. Palmer, 74 N. Y. 183, 30 Am. Rep. 289; Cooley, Const. Lim. 607.

Mr. Louis Marshall argued the cause, and, with Mr. Julius Offenbach, filed a brief for defendants in error:

Legatees and devisees take their bequests and devises subject to this tax imposed upon the succession to property.

Re Merriam, 141 N. Y. 479, 36 N. E. 505; Re Hoffman, 143 N. Y. 329, 38 N. E. 311; United States v. Perkins, 163 U. S. 625, 41 L. ed. 287, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1073; Scholey v. Rew, 23 Wall. 331, 23 L. ed. 99; Magoun v. Illinois Trust & Sav. Bank, 170 U. S. 283, 42 L. ed. 1037, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 594; Knowlton v. Moore, 178 U. S. 41, 44 L. ed. 969, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 747; Plummer v. Coler, 178 U. S. 115, 44 L. ed. 998, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 774.

The constitutionality of a tax on the succession to property is no longer open to question.

Magoun v. Illinois Trust & Sav. Bank, 170 U. S. 283, 42 L. ed. 1037, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 594.

The courts of New York have had occasion frequently to apply this statute to the succession to personal property of nonresidents which at the time of the death of the decedent was within the state.

Re Romaine, 127 N. Y. 80, 12 L. R. A. 401, 27 N. E. 759; Re Houdayer, 150 N. Y. 37, 34 L. R. A. 235, 44 N. E. 718.

Deposits in banks have been held assessable under this system of legislation, in other cases.

Re Burr, 16 Misc. 89, 38 N. Y. Supp. 811; Re Morejon, N. Y. Law Journal, July 3, 1891; Re Bondon, N. Y. Law Journal, March 1, 1892; Re Speers, 6 Ohio S. & C. P. Dec. 398.

The construction by the court of appeals of New York of this statute is to be regarded as an authoritative declaration of what the law of New York is, which will be adopted by this court.

Leffingwell v. Warren, 2 Black, 599, 17 L. ed. 261; Randall v. Brigham, 7 Wall. 523, 19 L. ed. 285; Morley v. Lake Shore & M. S.

R. Co. 146 U. S. 167, 36 L. ed. 928, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 54; Burgess v. Seligman, 107 U. S. 33, 27 L. ed. 365, 2 Sup. Ct. Rep. 10; Flash v. Conn., 109 U. S. 379, 27 L. ed. 970, 3 Sup. Ct. Rep. 263; Bueher v. Cheshire R. Co. 125 U. S. 584, 31 L. ed. 799, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 974; German Sav. Bank v. Franklin County, 128 U. S. 538, 32 L. ed. 524, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 159; Amy v. Watertown, 130 U. S. 318, 32 L. ed. 952, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 530; Gormley v. Clark, 134 U. S. 348, 33 L. ed. 914, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 554; Detroit v. Osborne, 135 U. S. 500, 34 L. ed. 262, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1012; Halsted v. Buster, 140 U. S. 277, 35 L. ed. 485, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 782; Bauserman v. Blunt, 147 U. S. 647, 37 L. ed. 316, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 466; Balkan v. Woodstock Iron Co. 154 U. S. 189, 38 L. ed. 957, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1010; Hartford F. Ins. Co. v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 175 U. S. 108, 44 L. ed. 92, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 33; Wade v. Travis County, 174 U. S. 499, 43 L. ed. 1060, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 715; Williams v. Eggleston, 170 U. S. 311, 42 L. ed. 1050, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 617; New Orleans v. Stempel, 175 U. S. 309, 44 L. ed. 174, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 110.

This principle has even been applied in cases where the jurisdiction of this court has been invoked because of an asserted impairment of contract rights arising from the effect given to subsequent legislation, in respect to which the duty is imposed upon this court to exercise an independent judgment as to the nature and scope of the contract.

Board of Liquidation of City Debt v. Louisiana, 179 U. S. 622, 45 L. ed. 347, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 263; Yazoo & M. Valley R. Co. v. Adams, 181 U. S. 580, 45 L. ed. 1011, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 729.

For all practical purposes the deposits of the decedent which have been made the basis of the assessment of the tax under consideration are moneys within the state of New York.

Bluefields Banana Co. v. Board of Assessors, 49 La. Ann. 43, 21 So. 627; Parker v. Strauss, 49 La. Ann. 1173, 22 So. 329.

The deposit with the United States Trust Company did not partake of the nature of a general deposit, but was a special deposit in trust.

Jenkins v. Neff, 163 N. Y. 320, 57 N. E. 408, Affirmed in 186 U. S. 230, 46 L. ed. 1140, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 905.

But treating the deposit of the proceeds of these shares of stock as an ordinary deposit, it is nevertheless believed that it was property of the decedent within the state of New York.

Downes v. Phœnix Bank, 6 Hill, 297; Payne v. Gardiner, 29 N. Y. 146; Howell v. Adams, 68 N. Y. 321; Munger v. Albany City Nat. Bank, 85 N. Y. 587; Boughton v. Flint, 74 N. Y. 482; Smiley v. Fry, 100 N. Y. 265, 3 N. E. 186; Dickinson v. Leominster Sav. Bank, 152 Mass. 49, 25 N. E. 12; Girard Bank v. Penn Twp. Bank, 39 Pa. 92, 80 Am. Dec. 507; United States v. Wardwell, 172 U. S. 48, 43 L. ed. 360, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 86; Parker v. Strauss, 49 La. Ann. 1173, 22 So. 329.

Under the law of New York, debts owing by a resident of the state to a nonresident are attachable in an action brought against the latter, and the domicile of the debtor is treated as the situs of the property.

Dunlop v. Paterson F. Ins. Co. 12 Hun, 627, Affirmed in 74 N. Y. 145, 30 Am. Rep. 283; Douglass v. Phœnix Ins. Co. 138 N. Y. 209, 20 L. R. A. 110, 33 N. E. 938; Emtree v. Hanna, 5 Johns. 101; Williams v. Ingersoll, 89 N. Y. 508; Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Sturm, 174 U. S. 710, 43 L. ed. 1144, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 797.

An executor or administrator appointed in one state cannot as such sue or be sued in his representative capacity in another.

Hopper v. Hopper, 125 N. Y. 402, 12 L. R. A. 237, 26 N. E. 457; Lawrence v. Lawrence, 3 Barb. Ch. 74; Re Webb, 11 Hun, 124; Flandrow v. Hammond, 13 App. Div. 325, 43 N. Y. Supp. 143; Johnson v. Wallis, 112 N. Y. 230, 2 L. R. A. 828, 19 N. E. 653; Petersen v. Chemical Bank, 32 N. Y. 22, 88 Am. Dec. 298; Judy v. Kelley, 11 Ill. 211, 50 Am. Dec. 455; McGarvey v. Darnall, 134 Ill. 367, 10 L. R. A. 861, 25 N. E. 1005; Johnson v. Powers, 139 U. S. 156, 35 L. ed. 112, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 525; Vaughan v. Northrup, 15 Pet. 1, 10 L. ed. 639; Aspden v. Nixon, 4 How. 467, 11 L. ed. 1059; Reynolds v. Stockton, 140 U. S. 254, 35 L. ed. 464, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 773; Lawrence v. Nelson, 143 U. S. 222, 36 L. ed. 134, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 440; Overby v. Gordon, 177 U. S. 222, 44 L. ed. 745, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 603; Wyman v. Halstead, 109 U. S. 654, sub nom. Wyman v. United States, 27 L. ed. 1068, 3 Sup. Ct. Rep. 417; Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Sturm, 174 U. S. 714, 43 L. ed. 1146, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 797.

A tax of the kind now under consideration "has some of the characteristics of a duty on the administration of the estates of deceased persons."

Minot v. Winthrop, 162 Mass. 113, 26 L. R. A. 259, 38 N. E. 512; Frothingham v. Shaw, 175 Mass. 59, 55 N. E. 623.

Such duties are levied in respect of the control which every government has over property within its jurisdiction, irrespective of the domicile of the decedent.

Laidlay v. Lord Advocate, L. R. 15 App. Cas. 468; Hanson. Death Duties, 2, 63.

It must be conceded that it was within the power of the New York legislature to place a succession tax upon the tangible property within the state of a nonresident decedent.

Callahan v. Woodbridge, 171 Mass. 595, 51 N. E. 176; Re Romaine, 127 N. Y. 80, 12 L. R. A. 401, 27 N. E. 759; Re Whiting, 150 N. Y. 27, 34 L. R. A. 232, 44 N. E. 715; Alvany v. Powell, 55 N. C. (2 Jones Eq.) 51.

It is within the power of the state to which resort must be had for the purpose of reducing to possession property of a decedent, whether a resident or a nonresident, by those succeeding to his ownership, to impose such restrictions and conditions on the rights of succession as it may see fit to create, whether the property to be reduced to possession is tangible or intangible, real or personal, and even though it may be a mere credit.

People ex rel. Hoyt v. New York City & County Tax & A. Comrs. 23 N. Y. 224; People ex rel. Westbrook v. Ogdensburgh, 48 N. Y. 390; Re Romaine, 127 N. Y. 80, 12 L. R. A. 401, 27 N. E. 759; People ex rel. Jefferson v. Smith, 88 N. Y. 576; Kirtland v. Hotchkiss, 100 U. S. 491, 25 L. ed. 558; Savings & Loan Soc. v. Multnomah County, 169 U. S. 421, 42 L. ed. 803, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 392; Re Whiting, 150 N. Y. 30, 34 L. R. A. 232, 44 N. E. 715; Hervey v. Rhode Island Locomotive Works, 93 U. S. 664, 23 L. ed. 1003; Warner v. Jaffray, 96 N. Y. 254, 48 Am. Rep. 616; Walworth v. Harris, 129 U. S. 365, 32 L. ed. 715, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 340; Security Trust Co. v. Dodd, 173 U. S. 628, 43 L. ed. 835, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 545; Pullman's Palace Car Co. v. Pennsylvania, 141 U. S. 18, 35 L. ed. 613, 3 Inters. Com. Rep. 595, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 876; Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Sturn, 174 U. S. 714, 43 L. ed. 1144, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 797; New Orleans v. Stempel, 175 U. S. 309, 44 L. ed. 174, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 110; Clason v. New Orleans, 46 La. Ann. 1, 14 So. 306; Bristol v. Washington County, 177 U. S. 133, 44 L. ed. 701, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 585; Re Jefferson, 35 Minn. 215, 28 N. W. 256; Eidman v. Martinez, 184 U. S. 578, 46 L. ed. 697, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 515; Moore v. Ruckgaber, 184 U. S. 593, 46 L. ed. 705, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 521; Greves v. Shaw, 173 Mass. 205, 53 N. E. 372; Small's Estate, 151 Pa. 1, 25 Atl. 23, 28; People ex rel. Hoyt v. New York City & County Tax & A. Comrs. 23 N. Y. 224; Kingman County v. Leonard, 57 Kan. 531, 34 L. R. A. 810, 46 Pac. 960; Allen v. National State Bank, 92 Md. 509, 52 L. R. A. 760, 48 Atl. 78.

The sovereign to whom resort must be had for authority to reduce the deposit to possession may impose a tax upon the right to reduce such property to possession, in lieu of absorbing the entire deposit.

Mager v. Grima, 8 How. 490, 12 L. ed. 1168; United States v. Perkins, 163 U. S. 625, 41 L. ed. 287, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1073. See also State v. Dalrymple, 70 Md. 294, 3 L. R. A. 372, 17 Atl. 82; Plummer v. Coler, 178 U. S. 115, 44 L. ed. 998, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 774; Magoun v. Illinois Trust & Sav. Bank, 170 U. S. 288, 42 L. ed. 1041, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 594.

The statute on which the tax is predicated does not impair the obligation of the contract.

Pinney v. Nelson, 183 U. S. 144, 46 L. ed. 125, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 52; Lehigh Water Co. v. Easton, 121 U. S. 388, 30 L. ed. 1059, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 916. See also Central Land Co. v. Laidley, 159 U. S. 103, 40 L. ed. 91, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 80; McCullough v. Virginia, 172 U. S. 102, 43 L. ed. 382, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 134.

The tax is not rendered unconstitutional because there is a possibility that the decedent's estate may be subjected to double taxation.

Davidson v. New Orleans, 96 U. S. 97, 24 L. ed. 616; Dycr v. Osborne, 11 R. I. 321, 188 U. S.

23 Am. Rep. 460; Frothingham v. Shaw, 175 Mass. 59, 55 N. E. 623; People v. Home Ins. Co. 92 N. Y. 347; Home Ins. Co. v. New York, 119 U. S. 129, 30 L. ed. 350, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1385; Coe v. Errol, 116 U. S. 524, 29 L. ed. 718, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 475; Knowlton v. Moore, 178 U. S. 53, 44 L. ed. 975, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 747.

The decision sought to be reviewed does not deny full faith and credit to any public acts, records, or judicial proceedings in the state of Illinois.

Bonaparte v. Baltimore City Appeal Tax Ct. 104 U. S. 592, 26 L. ed. 845; C. N. Nelson Lumber Co. v. Loraine, 22 Fed. 69; Johnson v. Powers, 139 U. S. 156, 35 L. ed. 112, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 525; Stacy v. Thrasher, 6 How. 44, 12 L. ed. 337.

The statute does not deprive the plaintiff in error of any of the privileges and immunities of citizens of the state of New York.

Mager v. Grima, 8 How. 490, 12 L. ed. 1168; Wallace v. Myers, 4 L. R. A. 171, 38 Fed. 184, Appeal Dismissed, in 154 U. S. 523, 38 L. ed. 1080, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1155; Brown v. Houston, 114 U. S. 622, 29 L. ed. 257, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1091.

The act does not deny the equal protection of the law.

Magoun v. Illinois Trust & Sav. Bank, 170 U. S. 283, 42 L. ed. 1037, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 594; Orr v. Gilman, 183 U. S. 278, 46 L. ed. 196, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 213.

It does not deprive the plaintiff in error of her property without due process of law.

Davidson v. New Orleans, 96 U. S. 97, 24 L. ed. 616; Hagar v. Reclamation Dist. No. 108, 111 U. S. 701, 28 L. ed. 569, 4 Sup. Ct. Rep. 663; Spencer v. Merchant, 125 U. S. 345, 31 L. ed. 763, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 921; Palmer v. McMahon, 133 U. S. 660, 33 L. ed. 772, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 324; Lent v. Tillson, 140 U. S. 316, 35 L. ed. 419, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 825; Pittsburgh, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Backus, 154 U. S. 421, 38 L. ed. 1031, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1114; Fallbrook Irrig. Dist. v. Bradley, 164 U. S. 168, 41 L. ed. 392, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 56; Merchants' & Mfrs. Nat. Bank v. Pennsylvania, 167 U. S. 467, 42 L. ed. 236, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 829.

Mr. Justice Holmes delivered the opinion of the court:

This is a writ of error to the surrogates' court of the county of New York. It is brought to review a decree of the court, sustained by the appellate division of the supreme court (69 App. Div. 127, 74 N. Y. Supp. 508), and by the court of appeals (171 N. Y. 682, 64 N. E. 1118), levying a tax on the transfer by will of certain property of Timothy B. Blackstone, the testator, who died domiciled in Illinois. The property consisted of a debt of $10,692.24, due to the deceased by a firm, and of the net sum of $4,843,456.72, held on a deposit account by the United States Trust Company of New York. The objection was taken seasonably upon the record that the transfer of this property could not be taxed in New York consistently with the Constitution of the United States.

The deposit in question represented the proceeds of railroad stock sold to a syndicate and handed to the trust company, which, by arrangement with the testator, held the proceeds subject to his order, paying interest in the meantime. Five days' notice of withdrawal was required, and if a draft was made upon the company it gave [203] its check upon one of its banks *of deposit. The fund had been held in this way from March 31, 1899, until the testator's death on May 26, 1900. It is probable, of course, that he did not intend to leave the fund there forever, and that he was looking out for investments, but he had not found them when he died. The tax is levied under a statute imposing a tax "upon the transfer of any property, real or personal. . . . 2. When the transfer is by will or intestate law, of property within the state, and the decedent was a nonresident of the state at the time of his death." Laws 1896, chap. 908, § 220, amended, Laws 1897, chap. 284, 3 Rev. Stat. Codes & Gen. Laws, 3d ed. 1901, p. 3592. The whole succession has been taxed in Illinois, the New York deposit being included in the appraisal of the estate. It is objected to the New York tax that the property was not within the state, and that the courts of New York had no jurisdiction; that if the property was within the state it was only transitorily there (Hays v. Pacific Mail S. S. Co. 17 How. 596, 599, 600, 15 L. ed. 254, 255), that the tax impairs the obligation of contracts, that it denies full faith and credit to the judgment taxing the inheritance in Illinois, that it deprives the executrix and legatees of privileges and immunities of citizens of the state of New York, and that it is contrary to the 14th Amendment.

In view of the state decisions it must be assumed that the New York statute is intended to reach the transfer of this property if it can be reached. New Orleans v. Stempel, 175 U. S. 309, 316, 44 L. ed. 174, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 110; Morley v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. 146 U. S. 162, 166, 36 L. ed. 925, 928, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 54. We also must take it to have been found that the property was not in transitu in such a sense as to withdraw it from the power of the state, if otherwise the right to tax the transfer belonged to the state. The property was delayed within the jurisdiction of New York an indefinite time, which had lasted for more than a year, so that this finding at least was justified. Kelley v. Rhoads, 188 U. S. 1, ante, 359, 23 Sup. Ct. Rep. 259. Both parties agree with the plain words of the law that the tax is a tax upon the transfer, not upon the deposit, and we need spend no time upon that. Therefore the naked question is whether the state has a right to tax the transfer of such deposit by will.

[204] *The answer is somewhat obscured by the superficial fact that New York, like most other states, recognizes the law of the domicile as the law determining the right of universal succession. The domicile, naturally, must control a succession of that kind. Universal succession is the artificial continuance of the person of a deceased by an executor, heir, or the like, so far as succession to rights and obligations is concerned. It is a fiction, the historical origin of which is familiar to scholars, and it is this fiction that gives whatever meaning it has to the saying mobilia sequuntur personam. But being a fiction it is not allowed to obscure the facts, when the facts become important. To a considerable, although more or less varying, extent the succession determined by the law of the domicile is recognized in other jurisdictions. But it hardly needs illustration to show that the recognition is limited by the policy of the local law. Ancillary administrators pay the local debts before turning over the residue to be distributed, or distributing it themselves, according to the rules of the domicile. The title of the principal administrator, or of a foreign assignee in bankruptcy,—another type of universal succession,—is admitted in but a limited way or not at all. See Crapo v. Kelly, 16 Wall. 610, 21 L. ed. 430; Chipman v. Manufacturers' Nat. Bank, 156 Mass. 147-149, 30 N. E. 610.

To come closer to the point, no one doubts that succession to a tangible chattel may be taxed wherever the property is found, and none the less that the law of the situs accepts its rules of succession from the law of the domicile, or that by the law of the domicile the chattel is part of a universitas and is taken into account again in the succession tax there. Eidman v. Martinez, 184 U. S. 578, 586, 587, 592, 46 L. ed. 697, 702, 704, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 515. See Mager v. Grima, 8 How. 490, 493, 12 L. ed. 1168; Coe v. Errol, 116 U. S. 517, 524, 29 L. ed. 715, 717, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 475; Pullman's Palace Car Co. v. Pennsylvania, 141 U. S. 18, 22, 35 L. ed. 613, 616, 3 Inters. Com. Rep. 595, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 876; Magoun v. Illinois Trust & Sav. Bank, 170 U. S. 283, 42 L. ed. 1037, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 594; New Orleans v. Stempel, 175 U. S. 309, 44 L. ed. 174, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 110; Bristol v. Washington County, 177 U. S. 133, 44 L. ed. 701, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 585; and for state decisions, Re Romaine, 127 N. Y. 80, 12 L. R. A. 401, 27 N. E. 759; Callahan v. Woodbridge, 171 Mass. 595, 51 N. E. 176; Greves v. Shaw, 173 Mass. 205, 53 N. E. 372; Allen v. National State Bank, 92 Md. 509, 52 L. R. A. 760, 48 Atl. 78.

No doubt this power on the part of two states to tax on different *and more or less [20] inconsistent principles leads to some hardship. It may be regretted, also, that one and the same state should be seen taxing on the one hand according to the fact of power, and on the other, at the same time, according to the fiction that, in successions after death, Mobilia sequuntur personam and domicile governs the whole. But these inconsistencies infringe no rule of constitutional law. Coe v. Errol, 116 U. S. 517, 524, 29 L. ed. 715, 717, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 475; Knowlton v. Moore, 178 U. S. 41, 44 L. ed. 969, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 747.

The question, then, is narrowed to whether a distinction is to be taken between tangible chattels and the deposit in this case. There is no doubt that courts in New York and elsewhere have been loath to recognize a distinction for taxing purposes between what commonly is called money in the bank and actual coin in the pocket. The practical similarity more or less has obliterated the legal difference. Re Houdayer, 150 N. Y. 37, 34 L. R. A. 235, 44 N. E. 718; New Orleans v. Stempel, 175 U. S. 309, 316, 44 L. ed. 174, 178, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 110; City Nat. Bank v. Charles Baker Co. 180 Mass. 40, 42, 61 N. E. 223. In view of these cases and the decision in the present case, which followed them, a not very successful attempt was made to show that by reason of the facts which we have mentioned, and others, the deposit here was unlike an ordinary deposit in a bank. We shall not stop to discuss this aspect of the case, because we prefer to decide it upon a broader view.

If the transfer of the deposit necessarily depends upon and involves the law of New York for its exercise, or, in other words, if the transfer is subject to the power of the state of New York, then New York may subject the transfer to a tax. United States v. Perkins, 163 U. S. 625, 628, 629, 41 L. ed. 287, 288, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1073; McCullough v. Maryland, 4 Wheat. 316, 429, 4 L. ed. 579, 607. But it is plain that the transfer does depend upon the law of New York, not because of any theoretical speculation concerning the whereabouts of the debt, but because of the practical fact of its power over the person of the debtor. The principle has been recognized by this court with regard to garnishments of a domestic debtor of an absent defendant. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Sturm, 174 U. S. 710, 43 L. ed. 1144, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 797. See Wyman v. Halstead, 109 U. S. 654, sub nom. Wyman v. United States ex rel. Halstead, 27 L. ed. 1068, 3 Sup. Ct. Rep. 417. What gives the debt validity? Nothing but the fact that the law of the place where the debtor is will [206] make him pay. It does not matter that the law would not need to be invoked in the particular case. Most of us do not commit crimes, yet we nevertheless are subject to the criminal law, and it affords one of the motives for our conduct. So, again, what enables any other than the very creditor in proper person to collect the debt? The law of the same place. To test it, suppose that New York should turn back the current of legislation, and extend to debts the rule still applied to slander, that actio personalis moritur cum persona, and should provide that all debts hereafter contracted in New York and payable there should be extinguished by the death of either party. Leaving constitutional considerations on one side, it is plain that the right of the foreign creditor would be gone.

Power over the person of the debtor confers jurisdiction, we repeat. And this being so, we perceive no better reason for denying the right of New York to impose a succession tax on debts owed by its citizens 188 U. S.

than upon tangible chattels found within the state at the time of the death. The maxim, Mobilia sequuntur personam, has no more truth in the one case than in the other. When logic and the policy of a state conflict with a fiction due to historical tradition, the fiction must give way.

There is no conflict between our views and the point decided in the case reported under the name of State Tax on Foreign-held Bonds, 15 Wall. 300, sub nom. Cleveland, P. & A. R. Co. v. Pennsylvania, 21 L. ed. 179. The taxation in that case was on the interest on bonds held out of the state. Bonds and negotiable instruments are more than merely evidences of debt. The debt is inseparable from the paper which declares and constitutes it, by a tradition which comes down from more archaic conditions. Bacon v. Hooker, 177 Mass. 335, 337, 58 N. E. 1078. Therefore, considering only the place of the property, it was held that bonds held out of the state could not be reached. The decision has been cut down to its precise point by later cases. Savings & L. Soc. v. Multnomah County, 169 U. S. 421, 428, 42 L. ed. 803, 805, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 392; New Orleans v. Stempel, 175 U. S. 309, 319, 320, 44 L. ed. 174, 180, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 110.

In the case at bar the law imposing the tax was in force before the deposit was made, and did not impair the obligation of the contract, if a tax otherwise lawful ever can be said to have that effect. Pinney v. Nelson, 183 U. S. 144, 147, 46 L. ed. 125, 127, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 52. The fact *that two [207] states, dealing each with its own law of succession, both of which the plaintiff in error has to invoke for her rights, have taxed the right which they respectively confer, gives no cause for complaint on constitutional grounds. Coe v. Errol, 116 U. S. 517, 524, 29 L. ed. 715, 718, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 475; Knowlton v. Moore, 178 U. S. 53, 44 L. ed. 975, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 747. The universal succession is taxed in one state, the singular succession is taxed in another. The plaintiff has to make out her right under both in order to get the money. See Adams v. Batchelder, 173 Mass. 258, 53 N. E. 824. The same considerations answer the argument that due faith and credit are not given to the judgment in Illinois. The tax does not deprive the plaintiff in error of any of the privileges and immunities of the citizens of New York. It is no such deprivation that if she had lived in New York the tax on the transfer of the deposit would have been part of the tax on the inheritance as a whole. See Mager v. Grima, 8 How. 490, 12 L. ed. 1168; Brown v. Houston, 114 U. S. 622, 635, 29 L. ed. 257, 261, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1091; Wallace v. Myers, 4 L. R. A. 171, 38 Fed. 184. It does not violate the 14th Amendment. See Magoun v. Illinois Trust & Sav. Bank, 170 U. S. 283, 42 L. ed. 1037, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 594. Matters of state procedure and the correctness of the New York decree or judgment, apart from specific constitutional objections, are not open here. As we have said, the question whether the property was to be regarded as in transitu, if material, must be regarded as found against the plaintiff in error.

Decree affirmed.

Mr. Justice White dissents.

[208] *CONNECTICUT MUTUAL LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY, Petitioner,
v.
 SALLIE E. HILLMON.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 208-220.)

Appeal — objection to peremptory challenges — when available — sufficiency of exception — instructions — evidence — declarations of conspirators.

1. The objection that plaintiff on the trial of two consolidated cases was allowed six, instead of three, peremptory challenges, is not available to a defendant who used but two of the three peremptory challenges to which, under U. S. Rev. Stat. § 815 (U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 629), it was entitled.
2. An exception to the refusal to give a requested instruction is sufficient to raise the question of the propriety of that portion of the general charge which affirms the contrary of such request.
3. A requested instruction that an affidavit produced by defendant on cross-examination, to impeach the credibility of the witness who made it, may be considered, in connection with the affiant's deposition, as evidence against the plaintiff of the facts therein stated under oath, with like effect as his deposition,—should be given where such affidavit is introduced in evidence by plaintiff on the cross-examination of another witness.
4. Declarations of the parties to an alleged conspiracy by an insured and others to defraud an insurance company, which relate to their purpose and were made about the time the policy was taken out, are, where there is evidence of the existence of the conspiracy, admissible in evidence against the beneficiary in a suit on such policy, although she is not alleged to have been a party to such conspiracy.

[No. 94.]

Argued November 13, 14, 1902. Decided February 2, 1903.

ON WRIT of Certiorari to the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Eighth Circuit to review a judgment which affirmed a judgment of the Circuit Court for the District of Kansas in favor of plaintiff in a suit on a policy of life insurance.

NOTE.—On the sufficiency of exceptions—see notes to State v. Hope (Mo.) 8 L. R. A. 608; Shinners v. Proprietors of Locks & Canals (Mass.) 12 L. R. A. 554; and Moore v. Bank of Metropolis, 10 L. ed. U. S. 172.

On the admissibility of acts and declarations of conspirators—see notes to Casey v. Cincinnati Typographical Union No. 3 (C. C. S. D. Ohio) 12 L. R. A. 197; People v. McQuade (N. Y.) 1 L. R. A. 273; and Lincoln v. Claflin, 19 L. ed. U. S. 106.

Reversed and remanded, with instructions to grant a new trial.

See same case below, 46 C. C. A. 668, 107 Fed. 834.

Statement by Mr. Justice Brown:

This was an action begun July 13, 1880, by Sallie E. Hillmon, in the circuit court of the United States for the district of Kansas, to recover the amount of a policy of insurance ($5,000), issued by the company March 4, 1879, upon the life of John W. Hillmon, her husband, in which the plaintiff was named as beneficiary. Plaintiff made the usual allegations of compliance with the terms of the policy, and averred that the assured had died March 17, 1879, thirteen days after the policy was issued, and that due proofs had been forwarded to the company. Other actions were also brought against the New York Life Insurance Company and the Mutual Life Insurance Company of New York, upon policies of insurance issued by them *upon the same [209] life, which actions were subsequently compromised.

Defendant interposed a general denial, and for a special defense set up, in substance, that on or before November 30, 1878, John W. Hillmon, John H. Brown, Levi Baldwin, and divers other persons to defendant unknown, fraudulently conspiring to cheat and defraud defendant, procured a large amount of insurance on the life of Hillmon, to wit: $10,000 in the New York Life, by policy dated November 30, 1878; $10,000 in the Mutual Life, by policy dated December 10, 1878; and $5,000 in the Connecticut Mutual Life, by the policy in suit, dated March 4, 1879; that thereafter, in pursuance of such conspiracy, Hillmon, Brown, and Baldwin falsely represented to defendant and others that said Hillmon had died, and that a certain dead body which they had procured was that of Hillmon, whereas in truth Hillmon "was not and is not dead," but has kept himself concealed under assumed names for the purpose of consummating the conspiracy.

As a third defense the company set up a release by plaintiff of all her claims against it under the policies.

Actions having been begun upon all three of these policies, an order was entered July 14, 1882, consolidating them for trial. Two trials of the three consolidated cases resulted in disagreements of the jury. On February 29, 1888, judgments in each were rendered for the plaintiff, which, upon writs of error, were reversed by this court and the cases remanded for a new trial. 145 U. S. 285, 36 L. ed. 707, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 909. The material facts of the case are fully set forth in that report, and will not be here repeated, except so far as they are pertinent to the questions before this court for consideration. After two more trials of the consolidated cases, which resulted in disagreements of the jury, a compromise was effected between the plaintiff and the New York Life, which was followed by dismissal of the action against that company. Thereafter, and on January 9, 1895, an order previously entered consolidating the two remaining actions for trial was continued in force against the objection of each defendant, and the consolidated cases again came on for trial, resulting in separate judgments November 18, 1899, against both [210] companies. To reverse *this, defendant sued out a writ of error from the circuit court of appeals, and upon hearing in that court the judgment was affirmed with one dissent. 46 C. C. A. 668, 107 Fed. 834. The Mutual Life sued out a similar writ of error, but compromised the case before it was heard in the circuit court of appeals.

Mr. William G. Beale argued the cause, and, with Messrs. Buell McKeever, Gilbert E. Porter, and James W. Green, filed a brief for petitioner:

If, as between the plaintiff and each defendant, the parties could not, as to the same jury, be given their exact rights on the one hand and limited to their exact rights on the other, the only alternative was to sever the causes and try them separately.

Stroh v. Hinchman, 37 Mich. 490; State v. Stoughton, 51 Vt. 365; Cruce v. State, 59 Ga. 90.

If one consenting to a joint trial does not waive a right, a fortiori one who is compelled against his will to a joint trial ought not to be deprived of it.

State v. Durein, 29 Kan. 691.

The right of peremptory challenge on the part of defendants cannot be abridged by uniting cases for trial.

United States v. Marchant, 12 Wheat. 480, 6 L. ed. 700.

Equally the conclusion has been repudiated that the peremptory challenges of the state or of a plaintiff can be multiplied by the same process.

Thompson, Trials, § 45; Proffatt, Jury Trial, § 164; Savage v. State, 18 Fla. 909; Wiggins v. State, 1 Lea, 738; Mahan v. State, 10 Ohio, 234; State v. Earle, 24 La. Ann. 38, 13 Am. Rep. 109; Schoeffler v. State, 3 Wis. 823.

By the error committed in granting the plaintiff below too many challenges it is to be presumed, in the absence of proof to the contrary, that petitioner was injured. An error will not be regarded as harmless unless it affirmatively appears so clearly as to be beyond doubt that it was not and could not have been prejudicial.

Decry v. Cray, 5 Wall. 795, 18 L. ed. 653; Gilmer v. Higley, 110 U. S. 47, 28 L. ed. 62, 3 Sup. Ct. Rep. 471.

The connection of the individuals in the unlawful enterprise being shown, every act and declaration of each member of the confederacy in pursuance of the original concerted plan, and with reference to the common object, is, in contemplation of law, the act and declaration of them all, and is therefore original evidence as against each of them.

1 Greenl. Ev. § 184a; King v. Hardwick, 11 East, 578; Lincoln v. Claflin, 7 Wall. 132, 19 L. ed. 106; Wiborg v. United States, 163 188 U. S.

U. S. 632, 41 L. ed. 289, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1127, 1197; State v. Johnson, 40 Kan. 266, 19 Pac. 749; State v. Rogers, 54 Kan. 683, 39 Pac. 219; Cuyler v. McCartney, 40 N. Y. 221; Walsh v. People, 88 N. Y. 458; Smith v. National Ben. Soc. 123 N. Y. 85, 9 L. R. A. 616, 25 N. E. 197; State v. Thompson, 69 Conn. 720, 38 Atl. 868; State v. Spalding, 19 Conn. 237, 48 Am. Dec. 158; People v. Bentley, 75 Cal. 407, 17 Pac. 436; State v. Walker, 98 Mo. 95, 9 S. W. 646, 11 S. W. 1133; Hart v. Hicks, 129 Mo. 99, 31 S. W. 351; State v. Winner, 17 Kan. 298; Spies v. People, 122 Ill. 1, 229, 12 N. E. 865, 17 N. E. 898.

Under this rule all evidence is relevant and admissible, which tends to show motive and preparation for what was done, or which furnishes indications of what was passing in the party's mind upon that subject.

Stephen, Digest of Ev. p. 19.

Concurrently with this runs this principle in most cases, that statements or other utterances are admissible where the material point is that under the circumstances the statement was made, and not that in itself it was true or false.

1 Greenl. Ev. § 101; Mutual L. Ins. Co. v. Hillmon, 145 U. S. 296, 36 L. ed. 710, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 909.

This conspiracy is still pending, and will so continue as long as these suits to enforce the fraudulent contract are being prosecuted by this plaintiff.

Jack v. Mutual Reserve Fund Life Asso. 51 C. C. A. 36, 113 Fed. 49.

The defendant having carefully reserved exception to the ruling of the court in refusing an instruction asked for, it was not then necessary to except again to that portion of the charge which embodied a contrary statement of the law.

Long-Bell Lumber Co. v. Stump, 30 C. C. A. 260, 57 U. S. App. 546, 86 Fed. 574.

When the plaintiff put in evidence, and the court admitted without objection, the sworn statement of a witness, the plaintiff then represented the witness to be credible as to that statement, assumed the responsibility for his veracity, and became estopped to impeach his allegations.

1 Greenl. Ev. § 442.

Messrs. Gilbert E. Porter, William G. Beale, James W. Green, and Edward S. Isham filed a brief in support of the petition for certiorari.

Mr. L. B. Wheat argued the cause, and, with Messrs. C. F. Hutchings and John H. Atwood, filed a brief for respondent:

After the jury were all in the box, the plaintiff in error still had, but waived, a peremptory challenge, and thereby accepted the twelve men in the box; this was tantamount to a waiver of all objections to any thereof.

Florence, E. D. & W. V. R. Co. v. Ward, 29 Kan. 354.

There is a wide difference between overruling a challenge that a party is entitled to, and sustaining a challenge that a party is not entitled to; and it is generally held that it is not substantial error to excuse a juror upon a challenge based upon insufficient grounds, where an unexceptionable jury has been obtained,—and especially where the complaining party has not exhausted his peremptory challenges.

Stout v. Hyatt, 13 Kan. 232; Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Franklin, 23 Kan. 74; Northern P. R. Co. v. Herbert, 116 U. S. 642, 29 L. ed. 755, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 590; Hopt v. Utah, 120 U. S. 430, 30 L. ed. 708, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 614; Spies v. Illinois, 123 U. S. 131, 31 L. ed. 80, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 21.

A written statement which only purports to be a narrative of past transactions cannot be evidence, either of a conspiracy, or of anything therein stated.

Logan v. United States, 144 U. S. 309, 36 L. ed. 445, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 617; State v. Johnson, 40 Kan. 268, 19 Pac. 749; Connecticut Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Hillmon, 46 C. C. A. 668, 107 Fed. 839; People v. Collum, 122 Cal. 186, 54 Pac. 589; State v. Hinkle, 33 Or. 93, 54 Pac. 155; Sparf v. United States, 156 U. S. 56, 39 L. ed. 345, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 273.

A matter, the validity of which is at issue in legal proceedings, cannot be set up as a bar thereto.

Broom, Legal Maxims, 4th London ed. 6th Am. ed. p. 128.

A transaction between two parties ought not to operate to the disadvantage of a third.

Broom, Legal Maxims, 4th London ed. 6th Am. ed. p. 704.

The supposed statements of Baldwin were mere hearsay, and not admissible.

2 Jones, Ev. 673-681, §§ 299-302; 1 Greenl. Ev. § 124.

The opening statement is conclusive against plaintiff in error that it did not elaim, and went into the trial on the proposition and statement that it did not elaim, that defendant in error was party to any fraud or conspiracy.

Lindley v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. 47 Kan. 432, 28 Pac. 201; Oscanyan v. Winchester Repeating Arms Co. 103 U. S. 261, 26 L. ed. 539.

The excluded statements of Levi Baldwin were not competent against defendant in error under any rule of law in relation to conspiracy.

State v. Johnson, 40 Kan. 268, 19 Pac. 749; Logan v. United States, 144 U. S. 309, 36 L. ed. 445, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 617; Connecticut Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Hillmon, 46 C. C. A. 668, 107 Fed. 839.

The declarations of co-conspirators, to be admissible against other than the one making them, must of course be made in furtherance of, and not in frustration of, the common object; and the existence of the conspiracy cannot be shown by the admission or declaration of one conspirator.

1 Jones, Ev. § 255.

To make the declarations of one conspirator evidence against the others, they must be made in furtherance of the common criminal design. Mere admissions or narrations of what has taken place, which have no tendency to promote the common criminal intent, are inadmissible against anyone but him who made it.

State v. Johnson, 40 Kan. 268, 19 Pac. 749.

It was not competent to prove by conversation between Baldwin and Crew that Baldwin had previously paid part of the premiums; that would be a narrative of past transactions.

Ibid.

It was not competent to prove by anything he said that he was or had been the agent of defendant in error. Agency cannot be thus proved.

Donaldson v. Everhart, 50 Kan. 718, 32 Pac. 405; St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. Kinman, 49 Kan. 631, 31 Pac. 126.

Mr. Justice Brown delivered the opinion of the court:

We shall have occasion to notice but few of the 108 assignments of errors in this case.

1. Several of these relate to an order of consolidation, and to the ruling of the court giving to the plaintiff six peremptory challenges to the jury, while each defendant had but three.

On June 14, 1882, the three original cases were first consolidated for trial, and so remained through all the trials which took place prior to the settlement with the New York Life. The propriety of this consolidation was affirmed by this court upon its first appearance here in 145 U. S. 285, 36 L. ed. 707, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 909. A stipulation appears to have been entered into October 16, 1899, between the attorneys for the plaintiff and the attorneys for the three defendants, to set aside the order of consolidation, and a motion was made for an order to that effect, which was overruled, and the order of consolidation was continued in force as to the two remaining defendants. It would seem that the court refused to be controlled by the stipulation. We see no reason to doubt the propriety of this order, nor does it appear to have been seriously contested. But its effect upon the number of peremptory challenges to which the defendant was entitled is made the subject of dispute. Upon the former hearing of this case it was held that the consolidation of the three cases there considered *did not im- [211] pair the right of each of the three defendants to three peremptory challenges under Rev. Stat. § 819 (U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 629). But the question was left undecided whether the right of the plaintiff was multiplied, so that she became entitled on the last trial to six peremptory challenges, or only to three.

The circuit court was of opinion that, as, under our ruling, the two defendants were, under Rev. Stat. § 819 (U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 629), each entitled to three peremptory challenges, or six in the aggregate, the plaintiff was also entitled to six. This is the converse of the proposition established by this court when the case was first here.

The argument of the defendant in this connection is that under the ruling of the court each defendant was treated as one party and the plaintiff as two parties; that it gave the plaintiff more challenges than she would have had in one case, treating the causes of action as distinct, and the plaintiff entitled to her three challenges in each case, with the result that each defendant, without its consent, and against its protest, was compelled to try its own cause before a jury to which it was given only one half as many peremptory challenges as were given to the plaintiff. The consequence was that each defendant was prejudiced by the fact that every additional peremptory challenge allowed to the plaintiff beyond three makes arbitrarily a vacancy which may be filled in spite of the defendant by a juror, whom it might and would have challenged if it had an opportunity to do so. The substance of the argument is that, it having been held upon the former hearing here, that each defendant lost no right by the consolidation, and was entitled to as many challenges as if no such consolidation had taken place, the plaintiff was not entitled to any more challenges than she would have been entitled to in case the consolidation had not taken place. Quite a number of cases are cited in support of this proposition: Savage v. State, 18 Fla. 909; Wiggins v. State, 1 Lea, 738; Mahan v. State, 10 Ohio, 234; State v. Earle, 24 La. Ann. 38, 13 Am. Rep. 109; Schoeffler v. State, 3 Wis. 823; Thompson, Trials, § 45; Proffatt, Trial by Jury, § 164. The case of Spies v. People, 122 Ill. 1, 12 N. E. 865, 17 N. E. 898, is to the contrary.

[212] Conceding that the great weight of authority supports the *proposition of the defendant, we are still of opinion that it is not entitled to take advantage of it, inasmuch as it made but two peremptory challenges, waiving its right to a third, and thereby acquiesced in the composition of the jury. The only effect of allowing the plaintiff six peremptory challenges was to put three additional men upon the jury, which the defendant could not challenge, and if it had exhausted its peremptory challenges it might perhaps claim to have been prejudiced by the fact that three men had been put upon the jury which it was not entitled to challenge; but, having failed to exhaust its peremptory challenges, it stands in no position to complain that it was deprived of the right to challenge others. Stout v. Hyatt, 13 Kan. 232, 241; Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Franklin, 23 Kan. 74; Flurence, E. D. & W. Valley R. Co. v. Ward, 29 Kan. 354; Atlas Min. Co. v. Johnston, 23 Mich. 36; Grand Rapids Booming Co. v. Jarvis, 30 Mich. 308.

2. Error is charged in the refusal to instruct the jury that "the statement signed and sworn to by John H. Brown on the 4th day of September, 1879, having been introduced in evidence by the plaintiff, may be considered in connection with the deposition of John H. Brown as evidence of the facts stated under oath, against the plaintiff, 188 U. S.

with like effect as the deposition of John H. Brown, and may also be considered as affecting the credibility of said Brown as a witness."

In lieu thereof the court charged the jury that Brown's statement, signed and sworn to by him, was not affirmative evidence of the truth of any matter therein contained or mentioned, and that it should not be considered by the jury except as affecting the credibility of the evidence of Brown in his deposition. To determine the correctness of this construction, it is necessary to consider the circumstances under which the evidence was produced. The alleged death of Hillmon was said to have occurred in March, 1879. Upon the trial plaintiff offered and read in evidence the deposition of John H. Brown, taken on December 30, 1881, who swore generally that he was employed by Hillmon driving a team, and afterwards in taking care of and feeding hogs; that he started with him from Lawrence for Wichita for the purpose of locating a cattle ranch, and that *Hillmon was acci- [213] dentally killed by the discharge of a gun in the hands of Brown. To contradict this testimony William J. Buchan, a witness put upon the stand by the defendants, swore that in the spring or summer of 1879, but a few months after the alleged death, he met Brown by appointment at Lexington, and was told by him that he was uneasy about the affair; that it was not Hillmon that was killed, but another man, but that Hillmon had got away and they were hunting for him; that he wanted to get out of it himself and to turn state's evidence, and that he wanted witness to see the attorney for the insurance company and let up on hunting for him if he would go on the stand and tell the truth about the whole affair. Upon the cross-examination of Buchan the plaintiff offered in evidence an affidavit made by Brown on September 4, 1879, in which he repeated the substance of the conversation testified to by Buchan, and stated that instead of Hillmon being killed it was another man whom Hillmon shot. This affidavit had already been produced, though not formally put in evidence by the defendant on the cross-examination of Brown. It was under these circumstances that the court ruled that the affidavit was not affirmative evidence of any truth or matter contained in it, and should not be considered, except as affecting the credibility of the evidence of Brown given in his deposition.

It is insisted in behalf of the plaintiff that, as no exception was taken to this part of the charge, its propriety cannot be questioned at this time; but as an exception was properly taken to the refusal of the court to charge that the statement, having been introduced in evidence by the plaintiff, may be considered, in connection with Brown's deposition, as evidence of the facts therein stated under oath, with like effect as his deposition, we think there was sufficient to raise the point that the affidavit was not to be treated merely as affecting Brown's credibility, but as substantial evidence in favor of the plaintiff. Having excepted to the refusal to give a certain instruction, it was not necessary to repeat such exception when the contrary of such request was given in the general charge. As defendant had raised the point in one form, it was not necessary to repeat it in another.

[214] *As this statement of Brown's had already been produced by the defendant upon the cross-examination of Brown, to impeach his credibility as a witness, and he had been cross-examined as to its contents, it is difficult to see why it was introduced by the plaintiff in connection with the cross-examination of Buchan. It was evidently put in for some purpose, and it is difficult to assign any other than to make it a piece of independent testimony, since, in view of Brown's deposition to the contrary, the plaintiff might still have argued that the statement or affidavit, if ever made, was false. As now claimed, it was introduced for the purpose of explaining why the plaintiff consented to release her claim against the insurance company, though it seems to have been quite unnecessary in this connection, since its statements were already in evidence as part of Brown's cross-examination. Conceding that, as a piece of independent testimony, a mere affidavit was not admissible, it was competent for the defendant to waive this objection, and to treat it as other testimony in the case offered by the plaintiff. Under such circumstances, it is something more than an admission by the witness that he had made statements inconsistent with his testimony upon the subject. For whatever purpose it was introduced, and in view of the fact that it was offered generally and without limitation as to its purpose, it became a piece of plaintiff's evidence, to be weighed and considered like any other testimony in the case. We do not undertake to say that the plaintiff was absolutely bound by it and estopped to deny its truth, in view of Brown's deposition to the contrary, but we think it was giving it too little effect to charge the jury that it could only be considered as impeaching the credibility of Brown; and we do not think defendant was asking too much in instruction number 44, that it might be considered in connection with the deposition of Brown as evidence of the facts therein stated under oath, against the plaintiff, with like effect as the deposition. 1 Greenl. Ev. § 442. The words "with like effect" were evidently intended to instruct the jury that the deposition and the affidavit were each independent of the other and each affirmative testimony—not, however, that they were of equal weight.

[215] *Suppose, for example, the only evidence of the identity of the body found had been the testimony of Brown. It doubtless would have been correct to charge that the utmost effect of his affidavit, if it had been formally introduced upon cross-examination, would be to destroy his testimony as given in the deposition. His credit as a witness being thus destroyed, the fact of Hillmon's death would be regarded as not proven, and the plaintiff would be considered as having failed to establish her case. But, upon the other hand, as the affidavit had not been put in upon the cross-examination of Brown, and the plaintiff read it as part of her case, it must necessarily be considered as a piece of independent evidence to be weighed in connection with the deposition, and the jury was necessarily left to consider which of the two, when taken in connection with the other testimony in the case, was to be considered as the more credible. The general rule undoubtedly is that, when a party offers a witness, he thereby generally represents him as worthy of belief, and while, under the peculiar circumstances of the case, this rule would not apply any more to the affidavit than to the deposition, the plaintiff, by putting both in evidence, without restriction as to the purpose of so doing, places them on the same level, and cannot be heard to say that the affidavit may not be considered as testimony of the facts therein sworn to as well as the deposition.

3. Several assignments are based upon the exclusion of the testimony of the witnesses Phillips, Blythe, Crew, and Carr, as to acts performed and declarations made by the alleged coconspirators John W. Hillmon, John H. Brown, and Levi Baldwin, after evidence had been introduced establishing such conspiracy. That considerable evidence of a conspiracy between these three parties had been introduced and at a very considerable length is not denied, and the main objection to the introduction of the acts and declarations of the above witnesses was based upon the ground that the plaintiff, the wife of Hillmon, was not alleged to have been a party to such conspiracy.

The proposed testimony of Phillips, who was a physician, and had been called professionally by Baldwin to his house in the summer or fall of 1878, related to certain inquiries made *by Baldwin as to the effect [216] of death upon bodies. In this connection defendant offered to prove that Baldwin asked the witness if he had any insurance upon his life, and said he had been thinking about taking out some himself, and in the same conversation asked Phillips how long before a dead body would decompose after it was buried. He further asked if it "would not be a good scheme to get a good insurance on your life and go down south and get the body of some Greaser and pawn it off as your body and get the money?"

The witness Blythe, a lawyer and fire insurance agent, an acquaintance of John W. Hillmon and Levi Baldwin, testified that they had called at his office in the autumn of 1878, asked him concerning life insurance, how to get it, what were good companies, how they should make application, whether a person could travel in different countries without forfeiting the insurance, what proceedings were necessary to collect insurance upon death, what length of time would be required, etc., and that a week or ten days before this conversation he had met Baldwin alone on the street. Defendant thereupon asked what was said by Baldwin at that time, and offered to prove that Baldwin asked the witness if he knew anything about life insurance and about the companies; and that a friend, a relative or connection, wanted to get some insurance, and he wanted to know if witness could recommend some good company to him. Whereupon witness told him how to do it.

By the witness Crew the defendant offered to prove the following testimony, all of which was excluded by the court, namely, that witness resided in the spring of 1879 in Lawrence, Kansas; was acquainted with both Mrs. Hillmon and Baldwin, and that, as receiver of a local bank, he had several notes of Baldwin's for collection, all of which were overdue. Two of the notes were secured by mortgage on real estate and one by chattel mortgage; that he had talked of foreclosing the mortgages, as he had been unable to collect either principal or interest; that Baldwin told him a part of the money represented by his indebtedness had been furnished to insure the life of John W. Hillmon; that in the latter part of March of that year (the conversation having taken [217] place a few days before the first of *March) he had heard of Hillmon's death; that at this time he had a conversation with Baldwin regarding the latter's indebtedness to the bank, in which Baldwin told him to let his matters rest, as he was then on his way west after the body of Hillmon; that he had arranged for a portion of the insurance on the life of Hillmon, and that as soon as he got it he would be able to straighten up all his affairs; that Baldwin stated that he was to have $10,000 of this insurance; that witness had acquainted himself thoroughly with Baldwin's financial condition and found him in very straitened circumstances, having some property, but all mortgaged, and mostly all mortgaged twice, and that his indebtedness was pressing him severely.

The witness Alexander Carr testified that he knew both Baldwin and Hillmon, and that in March, 1879, he and Baldwin were out together buying stock some time after the 10th of March. The witness was then asked what conversation he had with Baldwin in regard to any business transaction between him and Hillmon, and offered to prove that witness was talking one day to Baldwin about himself and Carr going into a sheep ranch together; "and one day he was speaking about that he was under 'brogue' with John W. Hillmon, and he said he and Hillmon had a scheme under 'brogue,' and he said that if that worked out all right he was all right."

All this testimony was ruled out, apparently upon the ground that declarations made by Baldwin were not admissible against the other conspirators to prove the existence of the conspiracy if not made in their presence; that these declarations were mere admissions or narrations of what had already taken place and were not made in furtherance of a common design, while it was under way or in process of execution so as to form a part of the res gestæ; and for the further reason that the testimony was not admissible against the plaintiff, who was not alleged by the insurance company to have ever become a party to the alleged combination to defraud the insurance company, either by an original participation in the scheme, or by subsequently adopting it.

While we are not called upon to express an opinion upon the question whether the mere proof of a conspiracy to defraud the *defendant by the procurement of an insur-[218] ance upon Hillmon's life with the view of ultimately collecting the amount of the policies by a false pretense of his death would be sufficient to avoid the policies as having been obtained by fraud, without proof that such conspiracy had been consummated by compassing the death of another party and passing off the body of the deceased as that of Hillmon, the fact still remains that there was evidence of a conspiracy to procure a large amount of insurance upon the life of Hillmon and to procure in some way the body of another man to pass off as that of Hillmon, and thereby to obtain the amount of these policies, nominally, at least, for the benefit of Hillmon's wife. It is true the plaintiff is not alleged to have been a party to such conspiracy, although she was named as beneficiary in the policies, but her husband is alleged to have been a party, and any fraud perpetrated by him at the time the policies were taken out was available as a defense by the company in an action by her.

These questions and declarations of Baldwin to the four witnesses above stated were made either just before or just after the policy was taken out. They were not so much narratives of what had taken place as of the purpose Baldwin had in view, and we know of no substantial reason why they do not fall within the general rule stated by Greenleaf (1 Greenl. Ev. § 111), that every act and declaration of each member of the conspiracy, in pursuance of the original concerted plan, and with reference to the common object, is, in contemplation of law, the act and declaration of them all, and is therefore original evidence against each of them. The conspiracy then existed and was still pending. Smith v. National Ben. Soc. 123 N. Y. 85, 9 L. R. A. 616, 25 N. E. 197.

These declarations, taken together, tend to show that Baldwin, who seems to have taken the most active part in the transactions connected with this policy, was heavily indebted, and being pressed by his creditors; that he expected in some way to obtain a large part of Hillmon's insurance, and that he was also desirous of going into a sheep ranch with Hillmon, with whom he declared he had a scheme under consideration by which they could raise the necessary funds; that such scheme consisted in obtaining *insurance upon Hillmon's life,[219] and then going south and getting the body of some other person and pass it off as the body of the insured, and thus recover the amount of the policy. This testimony was certainly corroborative of other testimony in the case, which both courts below agreed as establishing prima facie evidence of a conspiracy, and which was to the effect that Baldwin and Hillmon had been intimate acquaintances for eight or ten years prior to 1879; that Baldwin, who appears to have been a man of considerable means, had employed Hillmon in various capacities connected with his farm, and that during his visits at Lawrence, Hillmon generally stayed at his house. Hillmon there first met his wife, who was a cousin of Baldwin's, and worked at his house. Hillmon was a man of no property, and after his marriage he and his wife occupied a single room in the house of one Mary Judson, and did their cooking upon her stove. Baldwin and Hillmon became interested in life insurance, and consulted various agents as to their companies and about methods of collection in case of loss. In a conversation with one Wiseman in February, 1879, Hillmon stated that he was going west on business and might get killed; asked about proofs of death; what the widow must do to get her insurance money and what evidence she would have to furnish if he were killed. Under these circumstances he took out insurance for $25,000, the annual premium for which amounted to $600. There were various other items of testimony of the same character, which the courts below regarded as sufficient prima facie evidence of a conspiracy.

Under the circumstances we think the evidence of the four witnesses in question should have been submitted to the jury, and that such testimony was admissible as against the plaintiff, though she was not alleged to be a party to the conspiracy, upon the theory that any fraudulent conduct on the part of the insured in procuring the policy, or in procuring the dead body of another to impersonate himself, was binding upon her. It is well settled that the fraud of the insurer's agent in the procurement of the policy is binding upon the principal. Millville Mut. M. & F. Ins. Co. v. Collierd, 38 N. J. L. 480; National L. Ins. Co. v. Minch, 53 N. Y. 144; Oliver v. Mutual Commercial Marine Ins. Co. 2 Curt. C. C. 277, Fed. Cas. No. 10,498; Burruss v. National Life Asso. 96 Va. 543, 32 S. E. 49.

[220] *A number of other alleged errors are embraced in the assignments, but we see none to which we find it desirable to call attention. For the error in the instruction regarding Brown's affidavit and in ruling out the declarations of the four witnesses named, the judgment of the Court of Appeals is reversed, and the case remanded to the Circuit Court for the District of Kansas, with instructions to grant a new trial.

Mr. Justice Brewer and Mr. Justice White dissented.

JAMES H. EASTON, Plff. in Err.,

v. v.

STATE OF IOWA.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 220-239.)

National banks—state regulation—receiving deposits when insolvent.

So far as Iowa Code, §§ 1884, 1885, attempts to prohibit national banks from receiving deposits when insolvent, and prescribes a punishment for a violation of such prohibition by any officer or agent thereof, it is invalid as an attempt to control and regulate the business operations of national banks.

[No. 92.]

Argued January 14, 15, 1903. Decided February 2, 1903.

IN ERROR to the Supreme Court of the State of Iowa to review a judgment which affirmed a conviction in the District Court of Winneshiek County for the offense of having received, as president of a national bank, a deposit with knowledge of the insolvency of such bank. Reversed.

See same case below, 113 Iowa, 516, 85 N. W. 795.

Statement by Mr. Justice Shiras:

In 1898, in the district court of Winneshiek county, state of Iowa, James H. Easton was indicted, *tried, and found guilty, [221] and sentenced to imprisonment in the penitentiary of Iowa at hard labor for a term of five years, under the provisions of a statute of that state, for the offense of having received, as president of the First National Bank of Decorah, Iowa, a deposit of $100 in money in said bank, at a time when the bank was insolvent, and when such insolvency was known to the defendant.

At the trial it was contended, on behalf of the defendant, that the statute of Iowa, upon which the indictment was found, did not, and was not intended to, apply to national banks, organized and doing business under the national bank acts of the United States, or to the officers and agents of such banks; and that, if the state statute should be construed and held to apply to national banks and their officers, the statute was void in so far as made applicable to national banks and their officers. Both these contentions were overruled by the trial court, and thereupon an appeal was taken to the supreme court of the state of Iowa, and by that court, on April 12, 1901, the judgment of the district court was affirmed. The cause was then brought to this court by a writ of error allowed by the Chief Justice of the supreme court of Iowa.

Mr. H. T. Reed argued the cause, and, with Mr. C. W. Reed, filed a brief for plaintiff in error:

Where an act is authorized to be done by a valid law of the United States, such act is thereby withdrawn from the operation of the criminal laws of the state; such a law excludes any by the state upon the subject unless expressly permitted by the law of Congress; and the performance of such an act in pursuance of and as authorized by such law cannot be punished by the state as an offense against any of its laws.

NOTE.—As to criminal liability for receiving deposit in bank with knowledge of its insolvency—see note to Com. v. Junkin (Pa.) 31 L. R. A. 124.

M'Culloch v. Maryland, 4 Wheat. 425, 4 L. ed. 606; Osborn v. Bank of United States, 9 Wheat. 738, 6 L. ed. 204; Ohio v. Thomas, 173 U. S. 276, 43 L. ed. 699, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 455; Prigg v. Pennsylvania, 16 Pet. 539, 10 L. ed. 1060; Brown v. Maryland, 12 Wheat. 449, 6 L. ed. 689; Farmers' & M. Nat. Bank v. Dearing, 91 U. S. 29, 23 L. ed. 196; Schollenberger v. Pennsylvania, 171 U. S. 1, 43 L. ed. 49, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 757; Re Loney, 134 U. S. 372, sub nom. Thomas v. Loney, 33 L. ed. 949, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 584; Re Neagle, 135 U. S. 1, sub nom. Cunningham v. Neagle, 34 L. ed. 55, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 658; Cook County Nat. Bank v. United States, 107 U. S. 445, 27 L. ed. 537, 2 Sup. Ct. Rep. 561; Re Waite, 81 Fed. 359; Com. ex rel. Torrey v. Ketner, 92 Pa. 372, 37 Am. Rep. 692; Allen v. Carter, 119 Pa. 192, 13 Atl. 70; State v. Menke, 56 Kan. 77, 42 Pac. 350; People v. Fonda, 62 Mich. 401, 29 N. W. 26.

If a person does only that which an act of Congress or the Federal Constitution authorizes or recognizes as a legitimate act, the state has no power to say that such act constitutes a crime.

Ohio v. Thomas, 173 U. S. 276, 43 L. ed. 699, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 453; Re Waite, 81 Fed. 359; Re Neagle, 135 U. S. 1, sub nom. Cunningham v. Neagle, 34 L. ed. 55, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 658; Prigg v. Pennsylvania, 16 Pet. 539, 10 L. ed. 1060; Hall v. DeCuir, 95 U. S. 499, 24 L. ed. 552; Brown v. Maryland, 12 Wheat. 436, 6 L. ed. 684; Schollenberger v. Pennsylvania, 171 U. S. 1, 43 L. ed. 49, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 757; Leisy v. Hardin, 135 U. S. 100, 34 L. ed. 128, 3 Inters. Com. Rep. 36, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 681; Rhodes v. Iowa, 170 U. S. 412, 42 L. ed. 1088, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 664. See also Re Loney, 134 U. S. 372, sub nom. Thomas v. Loney, 33 L. ed. 949, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 584; Re Blackbird, 109 Fed. 139; Peters v. Malin, 111 Fed. 244.

The effect of the national banking act upon state laws is to suspend the operation of those previously enacted, and to render invalid those subsequently enacted, in so far as they affect the persons and subject-matter covered by the acts of Congress.

Sturges v. Crowninshield, 4 Wheat. 122, 4 L. ed. 529; Tua v. Carriere, 117 U. S. 201, 29 L. ed. 855, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 565; Harbaugh v. Costello, 184 Ill. 110, 56 N. E. 363.

State legislation which conflicts or in any manner interferes with a law of Congress, or attempts to regulate or control rights or privileges granted thereby, is impotent, no matter under what power of the state it is claimed to have been enacted.

Gibbons v. Ogden, 9 Wheat. 1, 6 L. ed. 23; Crandall v. Nevada, 6 Wall. 42, 18 L. ed. 188 U. S. U. S., Book 47.

747; Henderson v. New York, 92 U. S. 259, sub nom. Henderson v. Wickham, 23 L. ed. 543; Lawton v. Steele, 152 U. S. 133, 38 L. ed. 385, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 499; Barbier v. Connolly, 113 U. S. 27, 28 L. ed. 923, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 357.

In all cases where it is necessary to determine whether or not a right secured by the Constitution or some law of the United States has been violated by a state statute or municipal ordinance, the Supreme Court of the United States will place its own independent construction upon such state law.

Jefferson Branch Bank v. Skelly, 1 Black. 436, 17 L. ed. 173; Proprietors of Bridges v. Hoboken Land & Improv. Co. 1 Wall. 116, 17 L. ed. 571; Delmas v. Merchants' Mut. Ins. Co. 14 Wall. 661, 20 L. ed. 757; Butz v. Muscatine, 8 Wall. 575, sub nom. United States ex rel. Butz v. Muscatine, 19 L. ed. 490; Northwestern University v. Illinois, 99 U. S. 309, 25 L. ed. 387; Yick Wo v. Hopkins, 118 U. S. 356, 30 L. ed. 220, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1064; Scott v. McNeal, 154 U. S. 34, 38 L. ed. 896, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1108.

The bank had the legal right to continue its business in the usual manner, though actually insolvent and known to be so by its managing officers, until the Comptroller of the Currency should take possession of its assets and place them in the hands of a receiver.

McDonald v. Chemical Nat. Bank, 174 U. S. 610, 43 L. ed. 1106, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 787.

A bank or other corporation is not prevented from continuing its business, in the absence of a statute, simply because it is insolvent, but it may continue its business in the usual manner until it is prevented from doing so by the proper tribunal, and its affairs put in process of liquidation as authorized by the law creating it.

Sutton Mfg. Co. v. Hutchinson, 11 C. C. A. 320, 24 U. S. App. 145, 63 Fed. 501; Coler v. Allen, 52 C. C. A. 389, 114 Fed. 609; American Exch. Nat. Bank v. Ward, 55 L. R. A. 356, 49 C. C. A. 611, 111 Fed. 782.

Mr. Charles F. Brown also argued the cause, and, with Mr. John J. Crawford, filed a brief for plaintiff in error:

Congress is the sole judge of the necessity for the incorporation of national banks, and of all matters pertaining to the extent of their powers, the manner of conducting and transacting business, and the regulation thereof.

M'Culloch v. Maryland, 4 Wheat. 425, 4 L. ed. 606; Osborn v. Bank of United States, 9 Wheat. 738, 6 L. ed. 204; Legal Tender Case, 110 U. S. 421, sub nom. Julliard v. Greenman, 28 L. ed. 204, 4 Sup. Ct. Rep. 122.

An attempt of a state to define the duties of national banks or control the conduct of their officers is absolutely void when such attempted exercise of authority conflicts with the law of the United States, and either frustrates the purpose of the national legislation, or impairs the efficiency of the Federal government to discharge the duties for the purpose of which they were created.

Davis v. Elmira Sav. Bank, 161 U. S. 275, 40 L. ed. 700, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 502.

A national bank is an instrument or agency of the Federal government in everything that it does as a bank.

Osborn v. Bank of United States, 9 Wheat. 738, 6 L. ed. 204.

The national banking act does not prohibit or forbid the receipt of deposits by a bank when insolvent, at any time before it is taken out of the control of its officers by the Comptroller of the Currency acting under the provisions of the national banking act.

State v. Fields, 98 Iowa, 748, 62 N. W. 653; McDonald v. Chemical Nat. Bank, 174 U. S. 610, 43 L. ed. 1106, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 787.

A state has no power to legislate in reference to national banks, or to alter or supplement any of the provisions of the national banking act.

United States v. Fisher, 2 Cranch, 358, 2 L. ed. 304; McCulloch v. Maryland, 4 Wheat. 425, 4 L. ed. 606; Farmers' & M. Nat. Bank v. Dearing, 91 U. S. 29, 23 L. ed. 196; Prigg v. Pennsylvania, 16 Pet. 539, 10 L. ed. 1060; Hall v. De Cuir, 95 U. S. 499, 24 L. ed. 552; Leisy v. Hardin, 135 U. S. 100, 34 L. ed. 128, 3 Inters. Com. Rep. 36, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 681.

To continue business when insolvent is not necessarily a fraud or a crime on the part of a bank or an individual engaged in business.

McDonald v. Chemical Nat. Bank, 174 U. S. 610, 43 L. ed. 1106, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 787; Fusz v. Spaunkhorst, 67 Mo. 256.

The means and agencies provided and selected by the Federal government as necessary and convenient to the exercise of its functions cannot be subject to the taxing power of the states; and the Federal government is without power to tax the corresponding means and agencies of the states.

Cooley, Taxn. chap. 3, pp. 56-58.

States cannot tax a bank chartered by Congress as a fiscal agent of the government.

McCulloch v. Maryland, 4 Wheat. 316, 4 L. ed. 579; Osborn v. Bank of United States, 9 Wheat. 738, 6 L. ed. 204.

Nor the loans of the United States contracted under the power conferred by the government to borrow money.

Weston v. Charleston, 2 Pet. 449, 7 L. ed. 481; New York ex rel. Bank of Commerce v. New York City & County Tax Comrs. 2 Black, 620, 17 L. ed. 451.

Nor the revenue stamps issued by the United States.

Palfrey v. Boston, 101 Mass. 329, 3 Am. Rep. 364.

Nor the salary or emoluments of Federal officers.

Dobbins v. Erie County, 16 Pet. 435, 10 L. ed. 1022.

The Federal government cannot tax the salaries of state officers.

Ward v. Maryland, 12 Wall. 418, 20 L. ed. 449; The Collector v. Day, 11 Wall. 117, sub nom. Buffington v. Day, 20 L. ed. 122; Freedman v. Sigel, 10 Blatchf. 327, Fed. Cas. No. 5,080.

454

Nor the judicial processes of state courts.

Moore v. Quirk, 105 Mass. 49, 7 Am. Rep. 499; Carpenter v. Snelling, 97 Mass. 455; People ex rel. Barbour v. Gates, 43 N. Y. 40; Green v. Holway, 101 Mass. 243, 3 Am. Rep. 339.

Nor require stamps upon bonds of state officers.

State ex rel. Lakey v. Garton, 32 Ind. 1, 2 Am. Rep. 315. See also Cooley, Const. Lim. pp. 481-484.

The states can exercise no concurrent or independent power in reference to the management of such institutions, where, by reason of the nature of the institution or the purpose to be served, such power must necessarily be exercised by the national government exclusively.

Gilman v. Philadelphia, 3 Wall. 730, 16 L. ed. 101.

Mr. Charles W. Mullan argued the cause and filed a brief for defendant in error:

The construction of a state statute by the highest court of the state in which it is enacted will be followed by the Federal courts.

Bucher v. Cheshire R. Co. 125 U. S. 582, 31 L. ed. 798, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 974; Bacon v. Northwestern Mut. L. Ins. Co. 131 U. S. 264, 33 L. ed. 131, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 787; Ankeny v. Clark, 148 U. S. 354, 37 L. ed. 479, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 617; Adams Exp. Co. v. Ohio State Auditor, 165 U. S. 219, 41 L. ed. 695, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 305.

The receipt of a deposit of money by an insolvent bank is a fraud.

Meadowcroft v. People, 163 Ill. 65, 35 L. R. A. 176, 45 N. E. 303; St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. Johnston, 133 U. S. 566, 33 L. ed. 683, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 390; Anonymous, 67 N. Y. 598; Cracie v. Hadley, 99 N. Y. 131, 52 Am. Rep. 9, 1 N. E. 537; New York Breweries Co. v. Higgins, 79 Hun, 250, 29 N. Y. Supp. 416; Wasson v. Hawkins, 59 Fed. 233; American Trust & Sav. Bank v. Gueder & P. Mfg. Co. 150 Ill. 340, 37 N. E. 227; First Nat. Bank v. Strauss, 66 Miss. 479, 6 So. 232.

The Constitution of the United States does not secure to anyone the privilege of defrauding the public.

Plumley v. Massachusetts, 155 U. S. 461, 39 L. ed. 223, 5 Inters. Com. Rep. 590, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 154.

National banks organized under the acts of Congress are subject to state legislation, except where such legislation is in conflict with some act of Congress, or where it tends to impair or destroy the utility of such banks as agents or instrumentalities of the United States, or interferes with the purpose of their creation.

First Nat. Bank v. Kentucky, 9 Wall. 361, 19 L. ed. 703; McClellan v. Chipman, 164 U. S. 356, 41 L. ed. 461, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 85; Waite v. Dowley, 94 U. S. 533, 24 L. ed. 182.

The existence of the states is absolutely necessary to the existence of the Federal government as at present constituted.

Lane County v. Oregon, 7 Wall. 76, 19 L. ed. 104; Union P. R. Co. v. Peniston, 18

188 U. S.

Wall. 31, 21 L. ed. 792; Texas v. White, 7 Wall. 725, 19 L. ed. 237.

Any theory, therefore, which, in its logical conclusion, leads to the destruction of a state government, and of the sovereign right of that state to exercise control over the persons and property within its boundaries, equally tends to the destruction of the Federal Union.

No doctrine can be recognized by this court as a sound principle of law, which takes from the state its sovereign rights and powers; as the destruction of such rights and powers is a menace to the existence of the national government.

Union P. R. Co. v. Peniston, 18 Wall. 31, 21 L. ed. 787.

The power to punish an officer of a national bank for the commission of a fraud in receiving deposits when the bank is insolvent and is known by him to be insolvent, has been left by Congress wholly to the states.

Cross v. North Carolina, 132 U. S. 139, 33 L. ed. 290, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 47; Teal v. Felton, 12 How. 284, 13 L. ed. 990; Moore v. Illinois, 14 How. 13, 14 L. ed. 306; Com. v. Tenney, 97 Mass. 50; Hoke v. People, 122 Ill. 511, 13 N. E. 823; Com. v. Luberg, 94 Pa. 85.

All that the Federal authority can do is to see that the states do not, under cover of the police power, invade the sphere of national sovereignty, obstruct or impede the exercise of any authority which the Constitution has confided to the nation, or deprive any citizen of rights guaranteed by the Federal Constitution.

Cooley, Const. Lim. 6th ed. 704, 706; United States v. Dewitt, 9 Wall. 41, 19 L. ed. 593; Licence Cases, 5 How. 504, 12 L. ed. 256; Passenger Cases, 7 How. 283, 12 L. ed. 702; Slaughter-House Cases, 16 Wall. 36, 21 L. ed. 394; Patterson v. Kentucky, 97 U. S. 503, 24 L. ed. 1116; United States v. Cruikshank, 92 U. S. 555, 23 L. ed. 592; State v. Noyes, 47 Me. 189.

The police power of a state cannot be alienated even by an express grant. It is a power and responsibility which legislatures cannot divest themselves of, if they would.

Thorpe v. Rutland & B. R. Co. 27 Vt. 149, 62 Am. Dec. 625; Boston Beer Co. v. Massachusetts, 97 U. S. 33, 24 L. ed. 992; Stone v. Mississippi, 101 U. S. 814, 25 L. ed. 1079.

The 14th Amendment to the Federal Constitution does not take from the states the police powers reserved at the time of the adoption of the Constitution.

Slaughter-House Cases, 16 Wall. 36, 21 L. ed. 394; Barbier v. Connolly, 113 U. S. 27, 28 L. ed. 923, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 357; Mugler v. Kansas, 123 U. S. 623, 31 L. ed. 205, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 273.

The police power of a state is coextensive with self-protection, and is not inaptly termed "the law of overruling necessity." It is that inherent plenary power in the state which enables it to prohibit all things hurtful to the welfare and comfort of society.

Lake View v. Rose Hill Cemetery, 70 Ill. 191, 22 Am. Rep. 71.
188 U. S.

Fraud is a trespass upon the rights of others, and may therefore always be punished.

Tiedeman, Pol. Power, 291.

An insolvent bank has no right to continue business or to receive deposits. When it becomes insolvent it is the duty of its officers to at once close its doors, decline deposits, and discontinue business.

Anonymous, 67 N. Y. 598; Cragie v. Hadley, 99 N. Y. 133, 52 Am. Rep. 9, 1 N. E. 537; St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. Johnston, 133 U. S. 566, 33 L. ed. 683, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 390; American Trust & Sav. Bank v. Guelder & P. Mfg. Co. 150 Ill. 336, 37 N. E. 227; First Nat. Bank v. Strauss, 66 Miss. 479, 6 So. 232.

Mr. Justice Shiras delivered the opinion of the court:

Those portions of the Iowa statute whose validity is the question in this case consist of §§ 1884 and 1885 of the Code of that state, and are in the following terms:

"Sec. 1884. No bank, banking house, exchange broker, deposit office, firm, company, corporation, or person engaged in the banking, brokerage, exchange, or deposit business, shall, when insolvent, accept or receive on deposit, with or without interest, any money, bank bills or notes, United States Treasury notes or currency, or other notes, bills, checks, or drafts, or renew any certificate of deposit.

"Sec. 1885. If any such bank, banking house, exchange broker, deposit office, firm, company, corporation, or person shall receive or accept on deposit any such deposits, as aforesaid, when insolvent, any owner, officer, director, cashier, manager, member, or person knowing of such insolvency, who shall knowingly receive or accept, be accessory, or permit, or connive at receiving or accepting on deposit therein, or thereby, any such deposits, or renew any certificate of deposit, as aforesaid, shall be guilty of a felony, and, upon conviction, shall be punished by a fine not exceeding ten thousand dollars, or by imprisonment in the penitentiary for a term of not more than ten years, or by imprisonment in the county jail not more than one year, or by both fine and imprisonment."

At the trial evidence was adduced tending to show, and the jury found, that the defendant, being engaged in the banking business, as an officer, to wit, president of the First National Bank of Decorah, on the 21st day of August, A. D. 1896, did, as president of said bank, receive and accept on deposit in said bank the sum of $100 in law-<sup>[228]</sup>ful paper money and of the value of $100, from one John French, the bank being then and there insolvent, and the defendant then and there well knowing that the said bank was insolvent.

It will be observed that national banks or banking associations are not specifically named in the statute; and it was, hence, argued, on behalf of the defendant, that such institutions are not within the enactment. As, however, the state courts, following a previous decision of the supreme court of Iowa, in the case of State v. Field, 98 Iowa, 748, 62 N. W. 653, held that the statute was applicable to all banks, whether organized under the laws of the state or the acts of Congress, we must accept that construction as correct, and confine our consideration to the question whether, as so construed, the act is within the jurisdiction of the state.

It is obvious that the two sections of the statute, above quoted, must be read together as one enactment. If § 1884, regarded as applicable to national banks, is a valid exercise of power by the state, then the penalties declared in § 1885 can be properly enforced; but if § 1884 must be held invalid as an attempt to control and regulate the business operations of national banks, then the penal provisions of § 1885 cannot be enforced against their officers. In other words, the validity of the mandatory and of the penal parts of the statute must stand or fall together.

What, then, is the character of a state law which forbids national banks, when insolvent, from accepting or receiving on deposit, with or without interest, any money, bank bills or notes, United States Treasury notes or currency, or other notes, bills, checks, or drafts, or renewing any certificate of deposit?

The answer given by the supreme court of Iowa to this question is as follows:

"The acts of Congress provide no penalty for the fraudulent receiving of deposits, and the statute under consideration operates upon the person who commits the crime. And it is not a material question to determine whether it will be necessary to investigate the financial condition of the bank to prove that the bank was insolvent when [229] the deposit was received. This *statute is in the nature of a police regulation, having for its object the protection of the public from the fraudulent acts of bank officers. The mere fact that in violating the law of the state the defendant performed an act pertaining to his duty as an officer of the bank does not in any manner interfere with the proper discharge of any duty he owes to any power, state or Federal. Surely, it was not intended by any act of Congress that officers of a national bank should be clothed with the power to cheat and defraud its patrons. National banks are organized and their business prosecuted for private gain, and we can conceive of no reason why the officers of such banks should be exempt from the penalties prescribed for fraudulent banking."

We think that this view of the subject is not based on a correct conception of the Federal legislation creating and regulating national banks. That legislation has in view the erection of a system extending throughout the country, and independent, so far as powers conferred are concerned, of state legislation which, if permitted to be applicable, might impose limitations and restrictions as various and as numerous as the states. Having due regard to the national character and purposes of that system, we cannot concur in the suggestions that national banks, in respect to the powers conferred upon them, are to be viewed as solely organized and operated for private gain. The principles enunciated in M'Cullough v. Maryland, 4 Wheat. 425, 4 L. ed. 606, and in Osborn v. Bank of United States, 9 Wheat. 738, 6 L. ed. 204, though expressed in respect to banks incorporated directly by acts of Congress, are yet applicable to the later and present system of national banks.

In the latter case it was said by Chief Justice Marshall:

"The bank is not considered as a private corporation whose principal object is individual trade and individual profit, but as a public corporation created for public and national purposes. That the mere business of banking is, in its own nature, a private business, and may be carried on by individuals or companies having no political connection with the government, is admitted; but the bank is not such an individual or company. It was not created for its own sake or for private purposes. It has never been supposed that Congress could create such a corporation. *The whole opinion of [230] the court in the case of M'Cullough v. Maryland is founded on, and sustained by, the idea that the bank is an instrument which is 'necessary and proper for carrying into effect the powers vested in the government of the United States.'"

A similar view of the nature of banks organized under the national bank laws has been frequently expressed by this court. Thus, in Farmers' & M. Nat. Bank v. Dearing, 91 U. S. 29, 23 L. ed. 196, it was said:

"National banks organized under the act are instruments designed to be used to aid the government in the administration of an important branch of the public service. They are means appropriate to that end."

Such being the nature of these national institutions, it must be obvious that their operations cannot be limited or controlled by state legislation, and the supreme court of Iowa was in error when it held that national banks are organized and their business prosecuted for private gain, and that there is no reason why the officers of such banks should be exempt from the penalties prescribed for fraudulent banking. Nor is it altogether true, as asserted by that court, that there is no act of Congress prohibiting the receipt of deposits by national banks or their officers, when a bank is insolvent. It is true that there is no express prohibition contained in the Federal statutes, but there are apt provisions, sanctioned by severe penalties, which are intended to protect the depositors and other creditors of national banks from fraudulent banking. It is not necessary to quote at length those provisions, but it will be sufficient to say that banks organized under the national bank act are authorized to make contracts; to prescribe, by its board of directors, by-laws regulating the manner in which their general business shall be conducted, and the privileges granted by law exercised and enjoyed; to exercise by its board of directors, or duly authorized officers, all such incidental powers as shall be necessary to carry on the business of banking, by discounting and negotiating promissory notes and drafts, bills of exchange; by receiving deposits; by buying and selling exchange; by loaning money on personal security. And they are [231] required to deposit *with the Treasurer of the United States, as security for their circulating notes, United States bonds in an amount not less than one fourth of its capital; to report to the Treasurer of the United States twice each year the average amount of its deposits, and to pay to said Treasurer each half year a tax upon such deposits; and to make to the Comptroller of the Currency not less than five reports during each year (and special reports as often as he may require), according to such form as he may require, verified by the oath or affirmation of the president or cashier, which reports shall exhibit in detail the resources and liabilities of the association. The Comptroller is directed to appoint suitable persons to make examination of the affairs of every banking association, who shall have power to make a thorough examination into all the affairs of the association, and in doing so to examine any of the officers or agents thereof, and to make a full and detailed report of the condition to the Comptroller. Whenever the Comptroller becomes satisfied of the insolvency of such bank he may, after due examination of its affairs, appoint a receiver, who shall take possession of the assets of the association, wind up its affairs, and make ratable distribution of its assets. And severe penalties are imposed upon any officer or agent of such association who violates any of the provisions of the national bank act.

It thus appears that Congress has provided a symmetrical and complete scheme for the banks to be organized under the provisions of the statute.

It is argued by the learned Attorney General on behalf of the state of Iowa that "the effect of the statute of Iowa is to require of the officers of all banks within the state a higher degree of diligence in the discharge of their duties. It gives to the general public greater confidence in the stability and solvency of national banks, and in the honesty and integrity of their managing officers. It enables them better to accomplish the purposes and designs of the general government, and is an aid, rather than impediment, to their utility and efficiency as agents and instrumentalities of the United States."

But we are unable to perceive that Congress intended to leave the field open for the states to attempt to promote the welfare [232] *and stability of national banks by direct legislation. If they had such power it would have to be exercised and limited by their own discretion, and confusion would necessarily result from control possessed and exercised by two independent authorities.

Nor can we concede that by such legislation of a state as was attempted in this instance, the affairs of a national bank, or the security of its creditors, would be advantageously affected. The provision of the state statute is express that it is the duty of the officers of the bank, when they know it is insolvent, to at once suspend its active operations; for it is obvious that to refuse to accept deposits would be equivalent to a cessation of business. Whether a bank is or is not actually insolvent may be, often, a question hard to answer. There may be good reason to believe that, though temporarily embarrassed, the bank's affairs may take a fortunate turn. Some of the assets that cannot at once be converted into money may be of a character to justify the expectation that, if actual and open insolvency be avoided, they may be ultimately collectible, and thus the ruin of the bank and its creditors be prevented. McDonald v. Chemical Nat. Bank, 174 U. S. 610, 43 L. ed. 1106, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 787. But, under the state statute, no such conservative action can be followed by the officers of the bank except at the risk of the penalties of fine and imprisonment. In such a case the provisions of the Federal statute would permit the Comptroller to withhold closing the bank, and to give an opportunity to escape final insolvency. It would seem that such an exercise of discretion on the part of the Comptroller would, in many cases, be better for all concerned than the unyielding course of action prescribed by the state law. However, it is not our province to vindicate the policy of the Federal statute, but to declare that it cannot be overridden by the policy of the state.
188 U. S.

Similar legislation to that of the state of Iowa has been considered and disapproved by the supreme courts of several of the other states.

Thus, in Com. ex rel. Torrey v. Ketner, 92 Pa. 372, 37 Am. Rep. 692, one Torrey was indicted and found guilty under a charge that, as the cashier of the First National Bank of Ashland, organized under *the laws [233] of the United States, he had embezzled the moneys of the said bank contrary to the form of the act of assembly of the state of Pennsylvania, prescribing a penalty of fine and imprisonment. A writ of habeas corpus was allowed by the supreme court of the state, and the accused was discharged. That court, having quoted the acts of assembly relied on, said:

"We are spared further comment upon these acts, for the reason that they have no application to national banks. Neither of them refers to national banks in terms, and we must presume that when the legislature used the words 'any bank' that it referred to banks created under and by virtue of the laws of Pennsylvania. The national banks are the creatures of another sovereignty. They were created and are now regulated by the acts of Congress. When our acts of 1860 and 1861 were passed there were no national banks, nor even a law to authorize their creation. When the act of 1878 was passed, Congress had already defined and punished the offense of embezzlement by the officers of such banks. There was therefore no reason why the state, even if it had the power, should legislate upon the subject. Such legislation could only produce uncertainty and confusion, as well as a conflict of jurisdiction. In addition, there would be the possible danger of subjecting an offender to double punishment, an enormity which no court would permit, if it had the power to prevent it. An act of assembly prescribing the manner in which the business of all banks shall be conducted, or limiting the number of the directors thereof, could not by implication be extended to national banks, for the reason that the affairs of such banks are exclusively under the control of Congress. Much less can we, by mere implication, extend penal statutes like those of 1861 and 1878 to such institutions. The offense for which the relation is held is not indictable, either at common law or under the statutes of Pennsylvania. We therefore order him to be discharged."
457

In Allen v. Carter, 119 Pa. 192, 13 Atl. 70, the question was whether a state law, which forbade "any cashier of any bank from engaging, directly or indirectly, in the purchase or sale of stock, or in any other profession, occupation, or calling other than his duty as cashier," and which declared [234] the same to be a misdemeanor, *was applicable to the cashier of a national bank, and it was held that it was not so applicable, the court saying, among other things:

"The national banking act and its supplements create a complete system for the government of those institutions. Conceding the power of Congress to create this system, I am unable to see how it can be regulated or interfered with by state legislation. The act of 1860, if applied to national banks, imposes a disqualification upon cashiers of such institutions where none has been imposed by act of Congress. If the state may impose one qualification upon the cashiers, why not another? If upon the cashier, why not upon the president or other officer? Nay, further, suppose the legislature should declare that no person should be a bank director unless he has arrived at fifty years of age, or should be the owner of one hundred shares of stock, could we apply such an act to national banks? If so, such institutions would have a precarious existence. They would be liable to be interfered with at every step, and it might not be long before the whole national banking system would have to be thrown aside as so much worthless lumber."

People v. Fonda, 62 Mich. 401, 29 N. W. 26, was a case wherein a clerk of a national bank was prosecuted in a state court and found guilty of larceny and embezzlement of the funds of the bank under the statute of the state. But it was held by the supreme court of the state that the offense was within the laws of the United States, and that, accordingly, the state court was without jurisdiction. It was said by the court—in view of § 711 of chapter 12 of the Revised Statutes of the United States (U. S. Comp. 458 Stat. 1901, p. 577), in the following terms: "The jurisdiction vested in the courts of the United States in the cases and proceedings hereinafter mentioned shall be exclusive of the courts of the several states: First, of all crimes and offenses cognizable under the authority of the United States"—that Congress, by law, created the national banking system, and provided for its internal workings, and prescribed a punishment for the offense charged against the defendant. It seems, clearly, the case is one falling within § 711, above quoted, and that by the Federal law *itself the jurisdiction of the [235] state is expressly excluded. Chancellor Kent, in his Commentaries (1 Com. 400), says: "In judicial matters the concurrent jurisdiction of the state tribunals depends altogether upon the pleasure of Congress, and may be revoked and extinguished whenever they think proper, in every case in which the subject-matter can constitutionally be made cognizable in the Federal courts; and that, without an express provision to the contrary, the state courts will retain a concurrent jurisdiction in all cases where they had jurisdiction originally over the subject-matter;" and accordingly the judgment of the trial court was reversed and the prisoner discharged.

In Com. v. Felton, 101 Mass. 204, the defendant was charged with being an accessory to an embezzlement by an officer of a national bank, and it was said by the court:

"The difficulty in the way of holding the defendant upon the present indictment is that the act of Congress has taken the crime of the principal out of our jurisdiction. Our courts cannot deal with him upon that charge."

A law of the state of Kansas provided that no bank should receive deposits when it was insolvent, and prescribed a punishment for a violation of that provision by any officer or agent of such bank; but it was held by the supreme court of that state that the provisions of the state law had no application to national banks, and that the penalties prescribed were not operative as against officers of national banks. State v. Menke, 56 Kan. 77, 42 Pac. 350.

The same view has prevailed in the lower Federal courts. In Sutton Mfg. Co. v. Hutchinson, 11 C. C. A. 320, 24 U. S. App. 145, 63 Fed. 501, it was said by the circuit court of appeals, through Mr. Justice Harlan:

"A corporation is not required by any duty it owes to creditors to suspend operations the moment it becomes financially embarrassed, or because it may be doubtful whether the objects of its creation can be attained by further effort upon its part. It is in the line of right and of duty when attempting, in good faith, by the exercise of its lawful powers and by the use of all *le- [236] gitimate means, to preserve its active existence, and thereby accomplish the objects for which it was created."

In Re Waite, 81 Fed. 359, it was held by the circuit court of the United States for the district of Iowa that a pension examiner of 188 U. S.

the United States was not liable to a criminal prosecution in the courts of a state for acts done by him in his official capacity. In the opinion it was said:

"The question which marks the limit of the state jurisdiction is whether the person sought to be called to account was acting under the authority of the United States when the acts complained of were done, in and about a subject-matter within Federal jurisdiction, . . . for the criminal statutes of the state are not applicable to acts done within the plane of Federal jurisdiction and under the authority of the United States. Whenever it is made to appear in a criminal case pending in the state court that the acts charged in the indictment were done by the defendant as an officer or agent of the United States in and about a matter within Federal control, . . . then it is made to appear that the state court is asked to assume a jurisdiction which it cannot rightfully exercise; and if that court entertains the case and proceeds to adjudicate on the question of the extent of the authority possessed by the officers of the United States, . . . testing the same by the provisions of state statutes, . . . it proceeds at the peril of having its jurisdiction questioned and denied."

So, in Re Thomas, 82 Fed. 304, it was held by the circuit court of the United States for the southern district of Ohio that the governor of the soldiers' home at Dayton, Ohio, in serving to the inmates, as food, oleomargarine furnished by the government, is not subject to the law of the state prescribing the manner in which oleomargarine shall be used in eating houses, because his act is that of the government of the United States within its constitutional powers, and wholly beyond the control or regulation of the legislature of the state.

This judgment was affirmed by this court in Ohio v. Thomas, 173 U. S. 276, 43 L. ed. 699, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 453.

A leading case in which this court had occasion to consider the limitation of legislation by a state affecting a subject within [237] the scope of action by Congress is that of Prigg v. Pennsylvania, 16 Pet. 539, 10 L. ed. 1060, from which we quote the following observations:

"If Congress have a constitutional power to regulate a particular subject, and they do actually regulate it in a given manner and in a certain form, it cannot be that the state legislatures have a right to interfere, and, as it were, by way of complement to the legislation of Congress, to prescribe additional regulations, and what they may deem auxiliary provisions for the same purpose. In such a case, the legislation of Congress, in what it does prescribe, manifestly indicates that it does not intend that there shall be any further legislation to act upon the subject-matter. Its silence as to what it does not do is as expressive of what its intention is as the direct provisions made by it."

On the immediate subject of control over national banks, it was said, in Farmers' & 188 U. S.

M. Nat. Bank v. Dearing, 91 U. S. 29, 23 L. ed. 196:

"The states can exercise no control over them [national banks], nor in anywise affect their operation, except in so far as Congress may see proper to permit. Anything beyond this is 'an abuse, because it is the usurpation of power which a single state cannot give.' . . . 'The states have no power, by taxation or otherwise, to . . . burden, or in any manner control, the operation of constitutional laws enacted by Congress to carry into execution the powers vested in the general government.'"

This subject has received recent and careful consideration in the case of Davis v. Elmira Sav. Bank, 161 U. S. 275, 40 L. ed. 700, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 502, twice argued in this court. The legislature of the state of New York had provided by law that savings banks, organized under the laws of that state, should have a preference as depositors in banks in case of the insolvency of such banks, and it was sought to apply this provision to the case of a deposit by a savings bank in a national bank which had subsequently become insolvent. But this court held that such a provision could not be extended by a state to national banks, because it was repugnant to that provision of the national banking act which requires the assets of an insolvent national bank *to [238] be ratably distributed among its creditors. In the opinion of the court, by Mr. Justice White, it was said:

"National banks are instrumentalities of the Federal government, created for a public purpose, and as such necessarily subject to the paramount authority of the United States. It follows that an attempt by a state to define their duties or control the conduct of their affairs is absolutely void, wherever such attempted exercise of authority expressly conflicts with the laws of the United States, and either frustrates the purpose of the national legislation or impairs the efficiency of these agencies of the Federal government to discharge the duties for the performance of which they were enacted. These principles are axiomatic, and are sustained by the repeated adjudications of this court."

Our conclusions, upon principle and authority, are that Congress, having power to create a system of national banks, is the judge as to the extent of the powers which should be conferred upon such banks, and has the sole power to regulate and control the exercise of their operations; that Congress has directly dealt with the subject of insolvency of such banks by giving control to the Secretary of the Treasury and the Comptroller of the Currency, who are authorized to suspend the operations of the banks and appoint receivers thereof when they become insolvent, or when they fail to make good any impairment of capital; that full and adequate provisions have been made for the protection of creditors of such institutions by requiring frequent reports to be made of their condition, and by the power of visitation by Federal officers; that it is not competent for state legislatures to interfere, whether with hostile or friendly intentions, with national banks or their officers in the exercise of the powers bestowed upon them by the general government.

Cross v. North Carolina, 132 U. S. 131, 33 L. ed. 287, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 47, was a case wherein this court pointed out the distinction between crimes defined and punishable at common law or by the general statutes of a state and crimes and offenses cognizable under the authority of the United States; and accordingly it was held that the crime of forging promissory notes, purporting to be made by individuals, *and made payable to or at a national bank, was a distinct and separate offense, indictable under the laws of the state.

Undoubtedly a state has the legitimate power to define and punish crimes by general laws applicable to all persons within its jurisdiction. So, likewise, it may declare, by special laws, certain acts to be criminal offenses when committed by officers or agents of its own banks and institutions. But it is without lawful power to make such special laws applicable to banks organized and operating under the laws of the United States.

It was by failing to observe the distinction between the two classes of cases that, we think, the courts below fell into error.

The judgment of the Supreme Court of Iowa is reversed, and the cause is remanded to that court to take further action not inconsistent with the opinion of this court.

GEORGE BLEISTEIN, John W. Bridgman, John A. Rudolph, Ansley Wilcox, Gerritt B. Lansing, and Edwin Fleming, Doing Business under the Name of The Courier Company and the Courier Lithographing Company, Plffs. in Err.,

v.

DONALDSON LITHOGRAPHING COMPANY.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 239-253.)

Copyright — printing and engraving — pictorial illustrations—circus posters.

1. Printing and engraving, though not for a mechanical end, are not excluded from the useful arts, which Congress is empowered by the Constitution to promote by copyright laws.
2. Pictorial illustrations are none the less within the protection of the copyright law (U. S. Rev. Stat. § 4952; U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 3406), because they are drawn from real life.
3. Chromolithographic advertisements of a circus, portraying a ballet, a number of persons performing on bicycles, and groups of men and women whitened to represent statues, are proper subjects of copyright, under U. S. Rev. Stat. § 4952 (U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 3406), as amended by the act of 1874, § 3 (18 Stat. at L. 78, 79, chap. 301, U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 3412), as "pictorial illustrations," even assuming that only such illustrations as are "connected with the fine arts" are within the protection of such laws.

[No. 117.]

Argued January 13, 14, 1903. Decided February 2, 1903.

IN ERROR to the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Sixth Circuit to review a judgment which affirmed a judgment of the Circuit Court for the District of Kentucky in favor of defendant in a suit to recover the penalties prescribed for infringements of copyrights. Reversed and remanded, with directions to set aside the verdict and grant a new trial.

See same case below, 44 C. C. A. 296, 104 Fed. 993.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Ansley Wilcox and Arthur Von Briesen argued the cause, and, with Messrs. Wilcox & Miner, filed a brief for plaintiffs in error:

The words "authors" and "writings," in the copyright law, are not confined to literary writers and their works, but include, among others, designers, engravers, and lithographers, as well as photographers.

Burrow-Giles Lithographic Co. v. Sarony, 111 U. S. 53, 28 L. ed. 349, 4 Sup. Ct. Rep. 279; Trade-Mark Cases, 100 U. S. 82, sub nom. United States v. Steffens, 25 L. ed. 550.

The courts have uniformly disclaimed the right to act as literary or artistic critics, in passing upon the degree of originality or of merit which is shown.

Brightley v. Littleton, 37 Fed. 103; Carlisle v. Colusa County, 57 Fed. 979; Drury v. Ewing, 1 Bond, 540, Fed. Cas. No. 4,095; Henderson v. Tompkins, 60 Fed. 758.

If a copyrighted article has merit and value enough to be the object of piracy, it should also be of sufficient importance to be entitled to protection.

Drone, Copyright, p. 212; Henderson v. Tompkins, 60 Fed. 758.

See also Church v. Linton, 25 Ont. Rep. 131.

There was, at least, a question of fact for the jury.

Hegeman v. Springer, 49 C. C. A. 86, 110 Fed. 374; Bolles v. Outing Co. 46 L. R. A. 712, 23 C. C. A. 594, 45 U. S. App. 449, 77 Fed. 966, 175 U. S. 262, 44 L. ed. 156, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 94.

To deprive pictures or publications of the protection of the copyright law, "it must appear either that there is something immoral, pernicious, or indecent in the things per se, or that they are incapable of any use except in connection with some illegal and immoral act."

Richardson v. Miller, 12 Off. Gaz. 3, Fed. Cas. No. 11, 791.

These pictures were not barred from copy-

NOTE.—As to what matter is subject to copyright—see notes to Amberg File & Index Co. v. Shea Smith & Co. 27 C. C. A. 248; and Belford, C. & Co. v. Scribner, 36 L. ed. U. S. 514.

right because they were "mere matter of advertising."

Yuengling v. Schile, 20 Blatchf. 452, 12 Fed. 97; Schumacher v. Schwencke, 25 Fed. 466; Lamb v. Grand Rapids School Furniture Co. 39 Fed. 474; Drone, Copyright, pp. 164, 165: See also to same effect: Grace v. Newman, L. R. 19 Eq. 623; Maple v. Junior Army & Navy Stores, L. R. 21 Ch. Div. 369; Church v. Linton, 25 Ont. Rep. 131.

Mr. Edmund W. Kittredge argued the cause, and, with Mr. Joseph Wilby, filed a brief for defendant in error:

The copyright law being penal, if the language is ambiguous the court will lean more strongly in favor of the defendant than it would if the statute were remedial.

Bolles v. Outing Co. 175 U. S. 262, 44 L. ed. 156, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 94.

The language which declares that in the construction of this act the words "engraving," "cut," and "print" shall be applied only to pictorial illustrations or works connected with the fine arts, has been held to be a limitation upon the right to copyright prints, cuts, or engravings.

Rosenbach v. Dreyfuss, 2 Fed. 217; Ehret v. Pierce, 18 Blatchf. 302, 10 Fed. 554; Higgins v. Kueffel, 140 U. S. 428, 35 L. ed. 470, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 731; J. L. Mott Iron Works v. Clow, 72 Fed. 168.

A picture representing a young woman holding a bouquet of flowers, to be printed on labels for cigar boxes, is not the subject of copyright.

Schumacher v. Wogram, 35 Fed. 210.

A catalogue of furniture containing pictorial illustrations of furniture and decorations, intended as an advertisement, and not as a work of art, is not entitled to protection under the copyright law.

Cobbett v. Woodward, L. R. 14 Eq. 407.

The copyright law does not protect what is immoral in its tendency.

Broder v. Zeno Mauvais Music Co. 88 Fed. 74; Dunlop v. United States, 165 U. S. 501, 41 L. ed. 804, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 375; Martineti v. Maguire, 1 Abb. (U. S.) 356, Fed. Cas. No. 9,173.

Mr. Justice Holmes delivered the opinion of the court:

This case comes here from the United States circuit court of appeals for the sixth circuit by writ of error. Act of March 3, 1891 (26 Stat. at L. 828, chap. 517, § 6, U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, pp. 549, 550). It is an action brought by the plaintiffs in error to recover the penalties prescribed for infringements of copyrights. Rev. Stat. §§ 4952, 4956, 4965 (U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, pp. 3406, 3407, 3414), amended by act of March 3, 1891 (26 Stat. at L. 1109, chap. 565), and act of March 2, 1895 (28 Stat. at L. 965, chap. 194). The alleged infringements consisted in the copying in reduced form of three chromolithographs prepared by employees of the plaintiffs for advertisements of a circus owned by one Wallace. Each of the three contained a portrait of Wallace in the corner, and lettering bearing some slight relation to the scheme of decoration, indicating the subject of the design and the fact that the reality was to be seen at the circus. One of the designs was of an ordinary ballet, one of a number of men and women, described as the Stirk family, performing on bicycles, and one of groups of men and women whitened to represent statues. The circuit court directed a verdict for the defendant on the ground that the chromolithographs were not within the protection of the copyright law, and this ruling was sustained by the circuit court of appeals. Courier Lithographing Co. v. Donaldson Lithographing Co. 44 C. C. A. 296, 104 Fed. 993.

There was evidence warranting the inference that the designs belonged to the plaintiffs, they having been produced by persons employed and paid by the plaintiffs in their establishment to make those very things. Gill v. United States, 160 U. S. 426, 435, 40 L. ed. 480, 483, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 322; **Colliery Engineer Co. v. United* [249] Correspondence Schools Co. 94 Fed. 152; Carte v. Evans, 27 Fed. 861. It fairly might be found, also, that the copyrights were taken out in the proper names. One of them was taken out in the name of the Courier Company and the other two in the name of the Courier Lithographing Company. The former was the name of an unincorporated joint-stock association formed under the laws of New York (Laws of 1894, chap. 235), and made up of the plaintiffs, the other a trade variant on that name. Scribner v. Clark, 50 Fed. 473, 474, 475, S. C., sub nom. Belford, C. & Co. v. Scribner, 144 U. S. 488, 36 L. ed. 514, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 734.

Finally, there was evidence that the pictures were copyrighted before publication. There may be a question whether the use by the defendant for Wallace was not lawful within the terms of the contract with Wallace, or a more general one as to what rights the plaintiff reserved. But we cannot pass upon these questions as matter of law; they will be for the jury when the case is tried again, and therefore we come at once to the ground of decision in the courts below. That ground was not found in any variance between pleading and proof, such as was put forward in argument, but in the nature and purpose of the designs.

We shall do no more than mention the suggestion that painting and engraving, unless for a mechanical end, are not among the useful arts, the progress of which Congress is empowered by the Constitution to promote. The Constitution does not limit the useful to that which satisfies immediate bodily needs. Burrow-Giles Lithographing Co. v. Sarony, 111 U. S. 53, 28 L. ed. 349, 4 Sup. Ct. Rep. 279. It is obvious also that the plaintiff's case is not affected by the fact, if it be one, that the pictures represent actual groups,—visible things. They seem from the testimony to have been composed from hints or description, not from sight of a performance. But even if they had been drawn from the life, that fact would not deprive them of protection. The opposite proposition would mean that a portrait by Velasquez or Whistler was common property because others might try their hand on the same face. Others are free to copy the original. They are not free to copy the copy. Blunt v. Patten, 2 Paine, 397, 400, Fed. Cas. No. 1,580. See *Kelly v. 250] *Morris*, L. R. 1 Eq. 697; Morris v. Wright, L. R. 5 Ch. 279. The copy is the personal reaction of an individual upon nature. Personality always contains something unique. It expresses its singularity even in handwriting, and a very modest grade of art has in it something irreducible, which is one man's alone. That something he may copyright unless there is a restriction in the words of the act.

If there is a restriction it is not to be found in the limited pretensions of these particular works. The least pretentious picture has more originality in it than directories and the like, which may be copyrighted. Drone, Copyright, 153. See Henderson v. Tompkins, 60 Fed. 758, 765. The amount of training required for humbler efforts than those before us is well indicated by Ruskin. "If any young person, after being taught what is, in polite circles, called 'drawing,' will try to copy the commonest piece of real work,—suppose a lithograph on the title page of a new opera air, or a woodcut in the cheapest illustrated newspaper of the day,—they will find themselves entirely beaten." Elements of Drawing, first ed. 3. There is no reason to doubt that these prints in their ensemble and in all their details, in their design and particular combinations of figures, lines, and colors, are the original work of the plaintiffs' designer. If it be necessary, there is express testimony to that effect. It would be pressing the defendant's right to the verge, if not beyond, to leave the question of originality to the jury upon the evidence in this case, as was done in Hegeman v. Springer, 49 C. C. A. 86, 110 Fed. 374.

We assume that the construction of Rev. Stat. § 4952 (U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 3406), allowing a copyright to the "author, designer, or proprietor . . . of any engraving, cut, print . . . [or] chromo" is affected by the act of 1874 (18 Stat. at L. 78, 79, chap. 301, § 3, U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 3412). That section provides that, "in the construction of this act, the words 'engraving,' 'cut,' and 'print' shall be applied only to pictorial illustrations or works connected with the fine arts." We see no reason for taking the words "connected with the fine arts" as qualifying anything except the word "works," but it would not change our decision if we should assume further that they also qualified "pictorial illustrations," as the defendant contends.

251] *These chromolithographs are "pictorial illustrations." The word "illustrations" does not mean that they must illustrate the text of a book, and that the etchings of Rembrandt or Müller's engraving of the Madonna di San Sisto could not be protected today if any man were able to produce them. Again, the act, however construed, does not mean that ordinary posters are not good enough to be considered within its scope. The antithesis to "illustrations or works connected with the fine arts" is not works of little merit or of humble degree, or illustrations addressed to the less educated classes; it is "prints or labels designed to be used for any other articles of manufacture." Certainly works are not the less connected with the fine arts because their pictorial quality attracts the crowd, and therefore gives them a real use,—if use means to increase trade and to help to make money. A picture is none the less a picture, and none the less a subject of copyright, that it is used for an advertisement. And if pictures may be used to advertise soap, or the theatre, or monthly magazines, as they are, they may be used to advertise a circus. Of course, the ballet is as legitimate a subject for illustration as any other. A rule cannot be laid down that would excommunicate the paintings of Degas.

Finally, the special adaptation of these pictures to the advertisement of the Wallace shows does not prevent a copyright. That may be a circumstance for the jury to consider in determining the extent of Mr. Wallace's rights, but it is not a bar. Moreover, on the evidence, such prints are used by less pretentious exhibitions when those for whom they were prepared have given them up.

It would be a dangerous undertaking for persons trained only to the law to constitute themselves final judges of the worth of pictorial illustrations, outside of the narrowest and most obvious limits. At the one extreme, some works of genius would be sure to miss appreciation. Their very novelty would make them repulsive until the public had learned the new language in which their author spoke. It may be more than doubted, for instance, whether the etchings of Goya or the paintings of Manet would have been sure of protection when seen for the first time. At the other end, copyright would be denied to pictures which appealed 252] to a public less educated than the judge. Yet if they command the interest of any public, they have a commercial value,—it would be bold to say that they have not an æsthetic and educational value,—and the taste of any public is not to be treated with contempt. It is an ultimate fact for the moment, whatever may be our hopes for a change. That these pictures had their worth and their success is sufficiently shown by the desire to reproduce them without regard to the plaintiffs' rights. See Henderson v. Tompkins, 60 Fed. 758, 765. We are of opinion that there was evidence that the plaintiffs have rights entitled to the protection of the law.

The judgment of the Circuit Court of Appeals is reversed; the judgment of the Cir- cuit Court is also reversed and the cause remanded to that court with directions to set aside the verdict and grant a new trial.

Mr. Justice Harlan, dissenting:

Judges Lurton, Day, and Severens, of the circuit court of appeals, concurred in affirming the judgment of the district court. Their views were thus expressed in an opinion delivered by Judge Lurton: "What we hold is this: That if a chromo, lithograph, or other print, engraving, or picture has no other use than that of a mere advertisement, and no value aside from this function, it would not be promotive of the useful arts, within the meaning of the constitutional provision, to protect the 'author' in the exclusive use thereof, and the copyright statute should not be construed as including such a publication, if any other construction is admissible. If a mere label simply designating or describing an article to which it is attached, and which has no value separated from the article, does not come within the constitutional clause upon the subject of copyright, it must follow that a pictorial illustration designed and useful only as an advertisement, and having no intrinsic value other than its function as an advertisement, must be equally without the [253] obvious meaning of the Constitution. *It must have some connection with the fine arts to give it intrinsic value, and that it shall have is the meaning which we attach to the act of June 18, 1874 (18 Stat. at L. 78, chap. 301, U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 3411), amending the provisions of the copyright law. We are unable to discover anything useful or meritorious in the design copyrighted by the plaintiffs in error other than as an advertisement of acts to be done or exhibited to the public in Wallace's show. No evidence, aside from the deductions which are to be drawn from the prints themselves, was offered to show that these designs had any original artistic qualities. The jury could not reasonably have found merit or value aside from the purely business object of advertising a show, and the instruction to find for the defendant was not error. Many other points have been urged as justifying the result reached in the court below. We find it unnecessary to express any opinion upon them, in view of the conclusion already announced. The judgment must be affirmed." Courier Lithographing Co. v. Donaldson Lithographing Co. 44 C. C. A. 296, 104 Fed. 993, 996.

I entirely concur in these views, and therefore dissent from the opinion and judgment of this court. The clause of the Constitution giving Congress power to promote the progress of science and useful arts, by securing for limited terms to authors and inventors the exclusive right to their respective works and discoveries, does not, as I think, embrace a mere advertisement of a circus.

Mr. Justice McKenna authorizes me to say that he also dissents.
188 U. S.

*UNITED STATES, Appt.,

[254]

v.
GEORGE DEWEY, Admiral U. S. Navy,
etc. (No. 309.)

GEORGE DEWEY, Admiral U. S. Navy,
Appt.,

v.
THE DON JUAN de AUSTRIA et al. (No. 310.)

EDWIN F. STOVELL, on Behalf of Himself and Officers and Crew of the U. S. Steamship Nanshan, Appt.,

v.
GEORGE DEWEY, Admiral U. S. Navy,
etc. (No. 311.)†

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 254-283.)

Prize—vessels appropriated to government use—outfit of destroyed vessel—naval stores captured on land—effect of restoration to enemy—barges and wrecking boats not prize—distribution of prize money—vessels entitled to participate.

1. An enemy's war vessels, run ashore in battle and sunk by their own commanders, though left in such condition as not to be floated by any of the means ordinarily possessed by a naval force, cannot be said to have been "sunk or otherwise destroyed," within the meaning of the bounty provisions of U. S. Rev. Stat. § 4635 (U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 3134), where they are afterwards raised, reconstructed, and commissioned in the United States Navy, but are vessels captured and appropriated to the use of the United States, within the meaning of §§ 4624, 4625 (U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 3130), and are therefore lawful prize of war for the benefit of the captors.
2. Appliances and outfit taken from an enemy's vessels of war sunk or otherwise destroyed in battle by naval vessels of the United States are not the subject of prize, but are included within the words "ship or vessel of war," as used in U. S. Rev. Stat. § 4635 (U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 3134), awarding a bounty for the destruction of an enemy's vessels.
3. Naval stores captured at a naval station by a naval force of the United States, as the result of a naval engagement, are no less subject to condemnation as prize of war because taken on land, since, if the rights of captors were confined to the proceeds of ship and cargoes by the act of July 17, 1862 (12 Stat. at L. 600, chap. 204), § 2, providing for distribution among the captors of the proceeds "of all ships and vessels, and the goods taken on board them, which shall be adjudged good prize," such restriction was so far removed by the act of June 30, 1864 (13 Stat. at L. 306, chap. 174), which, in addition to the repeal of such section, provided that captors should be entitled to "the net proceeds of all property condemned

† These cases are reported by the Official Reporter under the title of "The Manila Prize Cases."

NOTE.—As to what is lawful prize of war—see note to The Mary & Susan, 4 L. ed. U. S. 32. As to what vessels are entitled to share in the distribution of prize money—see note to United States v. Farragut, 22 L. ed. U. S. 879.

as prize," as to permit such statute to extend to other property fairly coming within the accepted rules of prize.

4. The government of the United States was absolved from all liability, under its prize statutes, to the captors of property of an enemy susceptible of condemnation as prize of war, by the restoration of such property to the enemy before condemnation.
5. Barges propelled by sweeps and by polling, and nonseagoing floating derricks or wrecking boats without means of propulsion, the property of private citizens, are not the subject of capture as prize of war.
6. Vessels used by the Navy of the United States as collers, manned principally by unenlisted men, and armed only for purposes of defense, are not, though within signal distance of a capture, entitled to participate in the prize money awarded, under U. S. Rev. Stat. § 4632 (U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 3133), to "all vessels of the Navy within signal distance of the vessel or vessels making the capture, under such circumstances and in such condition as to be able to render effective aid if required."

[Nos. 309, 310, 311.]

Argued October 28, 29, 1902. Decided February 23, 1903.

A PPEALS from the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia to review a decree of that court sitting as a district court of the United States in admiralty in a suit in prize in which an intervening libel was filed. Affirmed as to the decree on the intervening libel. Reversed as to the decree on the libel, and remanded for the entry of a decree in accordance with the opinion.

Statement by Mr. Chief Justice Fuller:

[255] *These are appeals taken from a decree of the supreme court of the District of Columbia, sitting as a district court of the United States in admiralty, in a suit in prize brought by Admiral Dewey in behalf of himself and the officers and crew of the naval forces on the Asiatic station, taking part in the battle of Manila bay.

May 1, 1898, Admiral Dewey, being then a Commodore in the United States Navy, with a fleet under his command, engaged a Spanish fleet consisting of the Reina Cristina, Castilla, Don Juan de Austria, Don Antonio de Ulloa, General Lezo, Marques del Duero, Argos, Velasco, Isla de Cuba, Isla de Luzon, Isla de Mindanao, Manila, and two torpedo boats, supported by shore batteries, submarine mines, and torpedoes. At the close of the battle all these vessels were confessedly destroyed except the Manila, which was captured, and the Don Juan de Austria, Isla de Cuba, and Isla de Luzon, in respect of which the facts were these: Under the severe fire of the American fleet they steamed to a position of greater safety, and, after the battle, backed ashore, and when in shallow water their sea valves were opened and they settled on the bottom. They, and other armed vessels, were afterwards set on fire by a detachment from the United States fleet, in obedience to a signal from the flagship when the firing ceased.

All captured vessels not destroyed were appraised and appropriated to the use of the United States, except one or more private vessels, which were restored to their owners, and not including the Don Juan de Austria, the Isla de Cuba, and the Isla de Luzon.

May 3, 1898, Commodore Dewey took possession of the Cavite arsenal, containing a large quantity of naval stores and supplies, and some boats, and he also took possession of certain land batteries. Some of the property taken at the arsenal, besides that taken from the sunken vessels, was included in the appraisement.

The protocol between the United States and Spain, signed August 12, 1898, provided as follows: "The United States will occupy and hold the city, bay, and harbor of Manila, pending the conclusion of a treaty of peace, which shall determine the control, disposition, and government of the Philippines. . . . *Upon the conclusion and [256] signing of this protocol, hostilities between the two countries shall be suspended." [30 Stat. at L. 1742, arts. 3, 6.]

About the first of September, 1898, an examination was made of the Don Juan de Austria, the Isla de Cuba, and the Isla de Luzon, and the commander-in-chief advertised for bids for raising, repairing, and fitting them out. In October, he contracted, on behalf of the United States, with a dock company to effect this purpose. The work of raising the vessels was begun on October 29 and finished on November 24. They were then overhauled sufficiently to enable them to proceed to Hong Kong, where they were reconstructed and refitted for use in the United States Navy, of which they became a part.

Full report was made to the Navy Department in July, 1899, of the condition of each of these vessels, upon being raised, and of the progress of reconstruction, including estimates of the value of the vessels when completed, exclusive of armament, and of the cost of raising, fitting out, and repairing them. And an appraisement was made in that department of the three vessels when completed, giving the value, and the cost of repairs, from which it also appears that they were first commissioned in the United States Navy in 1900.

Some of the other sunken vessels might probably have been raised to advantage, but no attempt was made to do so, though a small amount of property was taken from them for government use. They were all advertised for sale in September, 1898, but no bids were received.

Shortly after the battle, the commander-in-chief took possession for government use of some cascoes or cargo boats, and two floating derricks belonging to private parties.

The treaty of peace between the United States and Spain provided: "Stands of colors, uncaptured war vessels, small arms, guns of all calibers, with their carriages and accessories, powder, ammunition, live stock, and materials and supplies of all kinds, belonging to the land and naval forces of Spain in the Philippines and Guam, remain the property of Spain." [30 Stat. at L. 1757, art. 5.]

By virtue of this provision, so much of the public property captured at the Cavite arsenal, and elsewhere on land, remaining unused at the date of the exchange of ratifications, was subsequently restored to Spain.

[257] *Actions were instituted for bounty under § 4635 of the Revised Statutes (U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 3134), on account of all the vessels other than the Don Juan de Austria, the Isla de Cuba, the Isla de Luzon, and those enumerated in the appraisement, and bounty has been granted under that section for the destruction of those vessels. Dewey v. United States, 35 Ct. Cl. 172; S. C. 178 U. S. 510, 44 L. ed. 1170, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 981.

July 20, 1899, this libel was filed against the Don Juan de Austria, the Isla de Cuba, the Isla de Luzon, all the property taken from them and from the sunken vessels, all the vessels and other property taken afloat, and all the property captured ashore.

The United States filed an answer denying that the Don Juan de Austria, the Isla de Cuba, and the Isla de Luzon, the property captured on board of them, the property captured on land, and the cargo boats were subject to condemnation as prize. March 26, 1901, an intervening libel was filed by Edwin F. Stovell, on behalf of himself and the officers and crew of the Nanshan, to which an answer was filed by libellant. The case having been heard, a decree of condemnation and distribution was made November 5, 1901, which adjudged the Isla de Cuba, the Isla de Luzon, and the Don Juan de Austria, and the Manila and all other captured vessels named in the appraisement, except such as might have been returned to private owners, and all property captured upon or belonging to any of these vessels, or any vessels sunk or destroyed on May 1, 1898, to be lawful prize of war. All property captured ashore and all nonseagoing craft belonging to the arsenal, as well as all cascoes and the floating derricks, not belonging to the King of Spain, were held not to be prize, and as to such property the libel was dismissed. The Nanshan, and the Zafiro, a vessel in the same situation, were held not entitled to share in any of the prize property; and the hostile fleet was held to have been of inferior force to the vessels making the capture. An appeal was taken by the United States, a cross appeal by libellant, and an appeal by the intervener.

Errors were assigned:

By the United States, that the district court erred in holding (1) that the vessels of war raised and reconstructed for the [258] *Navy, with guns, munitions, equipment, stores, and other articles found upon them, were lawful prize of war for the benefit of the captors; (2) as also guns, munitions, equipment, stores, and other articles on board the Spanish vessels of war sunk or otherwise destroyed, and not restored.

188 U. S.

By libellant, that the district court erred in holding (1) that the property captured at the naval station at Cavite was not lawful prize; (2) that the cascoes were not lawful prize.

By the intervener, in holding that the Nanshan (and with her the Zafiro) was not entitled to share in the prize property.

Messrs. Charles C. Binney and Assistant Attorney General Hoyt argued the cause and filed a brief for the United States:

No citizen can have any right to have any vessel or property condemned as prize for his benefit, except by authority of an act of Congress. If a vessel or other property is taken from the enemy under such circumstances as bring the case within the true intent and meaning of the prize statutes, then the captors have a right to prize money; but if not, then such vessel or property belongs to the United States alone.

The Siren, 13 Wall. 389, sub nom. United States Ships of War v. United States, 20 L. ed. 505; The Emulous, 1 Gall. 563, Fed. Cas. No. 4,479; Mrs. Alexander's Cotton, 2 Wall. 404, sub nom. United States v. Alexander, 17 L. ed. 915.

Bounty is given as a reward for the injury inflicted upon the enemy's naval fighting force; for which injury a reward was considered to be due whether the hostile vessel of war was captured or destroyed.

The Selma, 1 Low. Dec. 30, Fed. Cas. No. 12,647; Porter v. United States, 106 U. S. 607, sub nom. United States v. Steam Vessels of War, 27 L. ed. 286, 1 Sup. Ct. Rep. 539.

To hold that the words "sunk or otherwise destroyed" necessarily mean annihilated or sunk beyond the possibility of recovery by any human means would be as unreasonable as to hold that "permanent" means "lasting forever." It has repeatedly been held that a covenant for the permanent establishment of an institution in a certain place does not bind the covenantor never to remove it. It is enough that he should, at the time of establishing the institution, have no intention of removing it.

Mead v. Ballard, 7 Wall. 290, 19 L. ed. 190; Newton v. Mahoning County, 100 U. S. 548, 25 L. ed. 710; Texas & P. R. Co. v. Marshall, 136 U. S. 393, 34 L. ed. 385, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 846; Sumner v. Darnell, 128 Ind. 38, 13 L. R. A. 173, 27 N. E. 162; Hardy v. Wiley, 87 Va. 125, 12 S. E. 233.

All statutes "relating to the same subject-matter shall be considered together."

United States v. Babbit, 1 Black, 55, 17 L. ed. 94.

Captures made by a naval force when conducting operations in conjunction with a land force are not prizes at all.

The Siren, 13 Wall. 389, sub nom. United States Ships of War v. United States, 20 L. ed. 505.

The words "sunk or otherwise destroyed" are equivalent to "rendered incapable of service as a vessel of war without extensive reconstruction," and also "rendered incapable of being floated by ordinary means such as a naval force is provided with."

Dewey v. United States, 178 U. S. 510, 44 L. ed. 1170, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 981, 35 Ct. Cl. 172; Sampson v. United States, 35 Ct. Cl. 578.

A rather striking analogy is furnished by the cases of constructive total loss of a vessel, such as justifies an abandonment to the underwriters. If a vessel has been injured by any of the perils insured against, to such an extent that the cost of repairs would be more than 50 per cent of her value, the owner may abandon her and claim a total loss.

Peters v. Phoenix Ins. Co. 3 Serg. & R. 25; 3 Kent, Com. 14th ed. 329.

If a vessel be no longer afloat, however, and cannot readily be made afloat, the owner may abandon her, even if the cost of floating and repairing her would not necessarily be 50 per cent of her value.

Peele v. Merchants' Ins. Co. 3 Mason, 27, Fed. Cas. No. 10,905; Bradlie v. Maryland Ins. Co. 12 Pet. 378, 9 L. ed. 1123.

Except where a statute or other writing makes a plain distinction between the hull of a ship and the various articles which may be attached thereto or contained therein for the purposes for which the ship is employed, these latter articles are always understood as included in the term "ship" or "vessel."

Genoa and its Dependencies, 2 Dodson Adm. 444; The Dundee, 1 Hagg. Adm. 109, 5 Barn. & C. 156; Hall v. Ocean Ins. Co. 21 Pick. 472; The Wiche Queen, 3 Sawy. 201, Fed. Cas. No. 17,916; The Edwin Post, 11 Fed. 602.

Cargo is distinguishable from outfit or supplies.

Wolcott v. Eagle Ins. Co. 4 Pick. 429.

Bounty was given "in lieu of" prize money.

Porter v. United States, 106 U. S. 607, sub nom. United States v. Steam Vessels of War, 27 L. ed. 286, 1 Sup. Ct. Rep. 539; The Selma, 1 Low. Dec. 30, Fed. Cas. No. 12,647.

In attempting to make the libel in this case cover property taken on land, the libellant has confounded prize with booty.

Bouvier, Law Dict.; Roberts, Admiralty & Prize, 464; Risley, War, 144; 2 Baker's Halleck, International Law, 74; Pothier, Droit de Domaine de Propriété, pt. 1, chap. 2; The Two Friends, 1 C. Rob. 271; Genoa and its Dependencies, 2 Dodson Adm. 444; Mrs. Alexander's Cotton, 2 Wall. 404, sub nom. United States v. Alexander, 17 L. ed. 915.

Property on land is not, without the aid of the statute, liable to capture and condemnation as prize of war.

Brown v. United States, 8 Cranch, 110, 3 L. ed. 504; United States v. 269 1-2 Bales of Cotton, 1 Woolw. 236, Fed. Cas. No. 16,583; The Cotton Plant, 10 Wall. 577, 19 L. ed. 983; 2 Halleck, International Law, 1893, p. 81.

The right of a government to release captured property, not merely before the filing of a libel, but at any time until the decree of condemnation is entered, is absolute and complete. No title vests in the captors until there has been a final adjudication in the prize court.

Home v. Camden, 2 H. Bl. 533; The Elsebe, 5 C. Rob. 173.

Cascos and flatboats cannot be within the operations of the prize statutes, which apply to seagoing vessels provided with the ordinary ship's papers.

Ex parte Ferguson, L. R. 6 Q. B. 280; United States v. An Open Boat, 5 Mason, 120, Fed. Cas. No. 15,967; Birkbeck v. Hoboken Horse Ferry Boats, 17 Johns. 54; Farmer's Delight v. Lawrence, 5 Wend. 564; Hicks v. Williams, 17 Barb. 523; Philadelphia & R. R. Co. v. Adams, 89 Pa. 31, 33 Am. Rep. 721; Fischer v. Camden & P. S. B. Ferry Co. 124 Pa. 154, 16 Atl. 634; Cope v. Vallette Dry Dock Co. 119 U. S. 625, 30 L. ed. 501, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 336; The Paquete Habana, 175 U. S. 677, 44 L. ed. 320, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 290.

Messrs. William B. King and Benjamin Micou argued the cause, and, with Messrs. Hilary A. Herbert and George A. King, filed a brief for Dewey et al.:

Capture is the first essential of prize.

Miller v. The Resolution, 2 Dall. 4, 1 L. ed. 264.

The vessels were not "sunk or otherwise destroyed."

United States v. The Albemarle, reported in Sutan v. United States, 19 Ct. Cl. 51.

Decisions relating to the abandonment of vessels to insurers by the insured are based upon the fundamental idea that the changing of the status of the ship and the passing of the title from the insured to the insurer, by abandonment, is a matter entirely within the control of the parties.

Columbian Ins. Co. v. Ashby, 4 Pet. 139, 7 L. ed. 809; Smith, Mercantile Law, 3d ed. by Holcomb & Gholson, pp. 475, note, 480.

The English law of prize, so far as it is adapted to the altered circumstances and conditions of the country and has not been modified by the proper national authorities, is the law which governs the prize courts of the United States.

The Siren, 13 Wall. 389, sub nom. United States Ships of War v. United States, 20 L. ed. 505; 30 Hogsheads of Sugar v. Boyle, 9 Cranch, 198, 3 L. ed. 703; 1,253 Bags of Rice, Blatchf. Prize Cas. 211, Fed. Cas. No. 10,535; United States v. 703 Casks of Rice, Fed. Cas. No. 16,253a; Brown v. United States, 8 Cranch, 128, 3 L. ed. 510.

Land captures are the subject of prize.

Brown v. United States, 8 Cranch, 128, 3 L. ed. 510; The Emulous, 1 Gall. 575, Fed. Cas. No. 4,479; 680 Pieces of Merchandise, 2 Sprague, 233, Fed. Cas. No. 12,915; 1,253 Bags of Rice, Blatch. Prize Cas. 211, Fed. Cas. No. 10,535; 282 Bales of Cotton, Blatch. Prize Cas. 304, Fed. Cas. No. 14,291; United States v. 269 1-2 Bales of Cotton, Woolw. 236, Fed. Cas. No. 16,583; Lindo v. Rodney, 2 Doug. 613n; Mitchell v. Rodney, 2 Brown P. C. 423; Camden v. Home, 4 T. R. 386; The French Guiana, 2 Dodson Adm. 151; The Rebeckah, 1 C. Rob. 227; Story, Additional Note on the Principles and Practices in Prize Courts.

The scope of the word "prize" is so long settled and well recognized that it can only be considered as having been used in a technical sense when employed in the framing of this statute.

Bishop, Written Laws, p. 127.

Cascos and wrecking boats should properly be included as vessels.

Century Dict.; Chaffe v. Ludeling, 27 La. Ann. 607; 2 Bouvier, Law Dict. p. 1193; United States v. Steever, 113 U. S. 747, 28 L. ed. 1133, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 765; Benedict, Admiralty, 215; The St. Louis, 48 Fed. 312; Cope v. Vallette Dry Dock Co. 119 U. S. 629, 30 L. ed. 502, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 336; Wood v. Two Barges, 46 Fed. 204; Endner v. Greco, 3 Fed. 413; The Starbuck, 61 Fed. 502; Saylor v. Taylor, 23 C. C. A. 343, 42 U. S. App. 206, 77 Fed. 476; The International, 83 Fed. 840.

Messrs. Conrad H. Syme and Charles W. Claggett argued the cause and filed a brief for Stovell et al.:

The Nanshan was a vessel of the Navy.

The Georgiana, 1 Dodson Adm. 401; The Ceylon, 1 Dodson Adm. 115.

The Nanshan was entitled to share in prize money.

The Guillaume Tell, Edw. Adm. 11; The Empress, 1 Dodson Adm. 373; The Vryheid, 2 C. Rob. 20; La Melanie, 2 Dodson Adm. 125.

The original crew was entitled to share in prize money.

United States v. Steever, 113 U. S. 753, 28 L. ed. 1136, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 765; The Rita, 89 Fed. 766.

Mr. Chief Justice Fuller delivered the opinion of the court:

Captures in war inure to the government and can become private property only by its grant. The right of the citizen to demand condemnation of vessels or property as prize for his benefit must be derived from acts of Congress, and their scope is not to be enlarged in his favor by construction. The Siren, 13 Wall. 389, sub nom. United States Ships of War v. United States, 20 L. ed. 505. Although, in matters of detail, where there is no controversy in respect of the existence of the grant, a more liberal construction may be applied in carrying the intention of Congress into effect.

The correctness of the decree so far as it related to Spanish seagoing vessels with their equipment and the property found *on[259] board of them, captured at the battle or soon afterward, and not restored to their owners, is conceded.

1. The first question to be determined is whether the Don Juan de Austria, the Isla de Cuba, and the Isla de Luzon were properly adjudicated as prize for the benefit of captors, in view of their condition immediately after the engagement, and their being subsequently raised, reconstructed, and commissioned in the Navy.

In the consideration of that question we assume that "capture" and "prize" are not convertible terms, and that for the subject of capture to be made prize for the benefit of the captors the taking must meet the conditions imposed by the statutes.

The statutory provisions bearing on the case are to be found in Title LIV. of the Revised Statutes, entitled Prize, embracing §§ 4613 to 4652, inclusive (U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, pp. 3126-3139), some of which are given below, together with certain of the "Instructions to Blockading Vessels and Cruisers," issued by General Order, June 20, 1898.†

†Sec. 4613 (U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 3126). The provisions of this title shall apply to all captures made as prize by authority of the United States, or adopted and ratified by the President of the United States.

Sec. 4615 (U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 3127). The commanding officer of any vessel making a capture shall secure the documents of the ship and cargo, including the log book, with all other documents, letters, and other papers found on board, and make an inventory of the same, and seal them up and send them, with the inventory, to the court in which proceedings are to be had, with a written statement that they are all the papers found, and are in the condition in which they were found; or explaining the absence of any documents or papers, or any change in their condition. He shall also send to such court, as witnesses, the master, one or more of the other officers, the supercargo, purser, or agent of the prize, and any person found on board whom he may suppose to be interested in, or to have knowledge respecting, the title, national character, or destination of the prize. He shall send the prize, with the documents, papers, and witnesses, under charge of a competent prize master and prize crew, into port for adjudication, explaining the absence of any usual witnesses; and in the absence of instructions from superior authority as to the port to which it shall be sent, he shall select such port as he shall deem most convenient in view of the interest of probable claimants, as well as of the captors. If the captured vessel, or any part of the captured property, is not in condition to be sent in for adjudication, a survey shall be had thereon and an appraisal made by persons as competent and impartial as can be obtained, and their reports shall be sent to the court in which proceedings are to be had; and such property, unless appropriated for the use of the government, shall be sold by the authority of the commanding officer present, and the proceeds deposited with the Assistant Treasurer of the United States most accessible to such court, and subject to its order in the cause.
188 U. S.

Sec. 4624 (U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 3130). Whenever any captured vessel, arms, munitions, or other material are taken for the use of the United States before it comes into the custody of the prize court, it shall be surveyed, appraised, and inventoried by persons as competent and impartial as can be obtained, and the survey, appraisal, and inventory shall be sent to the court in which proceedings are to be had; and if taken afterward, sufficient notice shall first be given to enable the court to have the property appraised for the protection of the rights of the claimants and captors. In all cases of prize property taken for or appropriated for the use of the government, the department for whose use it is taken or appropriated shall deposit the value thereof with the Assistant Treasurer of the United States nearest to the place of the session of the court, subject to the order of the court in the cause.

260] *Ordinarily, the property must be brought in for adjudication, as the question is one of title, which does not vest until condemnation, but it will be seen that, by § 4615 (U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 3127), if the captured vessel, or any part of the captured property, is not in condition to be sent in for adjudication, a survey and appraisement shall be had, the property sold, and the proceeds deposited subject to the order of the court; and by §§ 4624 and 4625, captured vessels and property may be appropriated to the use of the United States, and the money value stand in place of the prize. And proceedings may be had where property which might have been brought in has been entirely lost or destroyed. Adjudication is contemplated in all cases.

By § 4635 (U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 3134), a bounty is given for each person on board a vessel of the enemy which is "sunk or otherwise destroyed" in an engagement, of $100 if the hostile fleet is of inferior, and of $200 if of equal or superior, force; and $50 for every person on board at the time of such capture, where the vessels *taken are immediately destroyed in the public interest, but not in consequence of injuries received in action.

This bounty is to be divided in the same manner as prize money, and the prize money in the one case and the bounty in the other cover the entire results of success.

Sec. 4625 (U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 3130). If, by reason of the condition of the captured property, or if, because the whole has been appropriated to the use of the United States, no part of it has been or can be sent in for adjudication, or if the property has been entirely lost or destroyed, proceedings for adjudication may be commenced in any district the Secretary of the Navy may designate; and in any such case the proceeds of anything sold, or the value of anything taken or appropriated for the use of the United States, shall be deposited with the Assistant Treasurer in or nearest to that district, subject to the order of the court in the cause. If, when no property can be sent in for adjudication, the Secretary of the Navy shall not, within three months after any capture, designate a district for the institution of proceedings, the captors may institute proceedings for adjudication in any district. And if, in any case of capture, no proceedings for adjudication are commenced within a reasonable time, any parties claiming the captured property may, in any district court, as a court of prize, move for a monition to show cause why such proceedings shall not be commenced, or institute an original suit in such court for restitution, and the monition issued in either case shall be served on the attorney of the United States for the district, and on the Secretary of the Navy, as well as on such other persons as the court shall order to be notified.

Sec. 4630 (U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 3132). The net proceeds of all property condemned as prize shall, when the prize was of superior or equal force to the vessel or vessels making the capture, be decreed to the captors; and when of inferior force, one half shall be decreed to the United States and the other half to the captors, except that in case of privateers and letters of marque, the whole shall be decreed to the captors unless it shall be otherwise pro-

We agree with counsel for libellant that the words "sunk or otherwise destroyed" are equivalent to "destroyed by sinking or otherwise." There are two general classes, then, under the statute,—vessels destroyed, and vessels captured and condemned, or appropriated.

The facts before us are somewhat peculiar, and serve to illustrate the variant circumstances that may occur in naval engagements, and create modifications of the general classification. These vessels were run ashore and sunk by their own commanders, with the result that they were only temporarily disabled, and the commanding officer of our fleet, in the public interest, as the engagement closed, directed their destruction to be completed *by burn- [262] ing. In the report of the action, dated May 4, 1898, they were included among the vessels reported as burnt, but they were not included in the appraisement made by the board of appraisal and survey ordered in accordance with § 4624, and following, of the Revised Statutes (U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 3130), to survey, appraise, and take a careful inventory of "enemy's property captured and appropriated for the uses of the United States government." After hostilities were suspended an examination of the wrecks of the Don Juan de Austria, the Isla de Cuba, and the Isla de Luzon was made, and subsequently the vessels were raised, vided in the commissions issued to such vessels.

Sec. 4634 (U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 3134). Whenever a decree of condemnation is rendered, the court shall consider the claims of all vessels to participate in the proceeds, and for that purpose shall, at as early a stage of the cause as possible, order testimony to be taken tending to show what part should be awarded to the captors, and what vessels are entitled to share; and such testimony may be sworn to before any judge or commissioner of the courts of the United States, consul or commercial agent of the United States, or notary public, or any officer of the Navy highest in rank, reasonably accessible to the deponent. The court shall make a decree of distribution, determining what vessels are entitled to share in the prize, and whether the prize was of superior, equal, or inferior force to the vessel or vessels making the capture. The decree shall recite the amount of the gross proceeds of the prize, subject to the order of the court, and the amount deducted therefrom for costs and expenses, and the amount remaining for distribution; and whether the whole of such residue is to go to the captors, or one half to the captors and one half to the United States.

Sec. 4635 (U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 3134). A bounty shall be paid by the United States for each person on board any ship or vessel of war belonging to an enemy at the commencement of an engagement, which is sunk or otherwise destroyed in such engagement by any ship or vessel belonging to the United States, or which it may be necessary to destroy in consequence of injuries sustained in action, of one hundred dollars, if the enemy's vessel was of inferior force, and of two hundred dollars, if of equal or superior force, to be divided among the officers and crew in the same manner as prize money; and when the actual number of men on board any such vessel cannot under a contract entered into by the commander-in-chief for the government, and reconstructed. If the vessels had not been raised and saved, they would have remained abandoned as destroyed; but as they were saved and appropriated by the government, they cannot be said in fact to fall within that category. We attach no importance to the official reports referring to the vessels as destroyed, which was true in the [263] *sense in which the word was then used, for the question really is, whether, when salvage had been effected, the government can maintain that the captors did not take them, but that they were destroyed so that they could not be treated as prize.

The position of the government is that, as these vessels were sunk and destroyed to such an extent that libellant's naval force was powerless to save them by its own resources, their subsequent reconstruction and appropriation by the government had no effect on their legal status, which had been determined immediately after the battle.

It is insisted that, if not prize then, they could not be prize afterwards, and yet it is not denied that when the question of title is settled by decree, it takes effect by relation as of the date of the capture. And because this is so, the fact that hostilities had ceased before the vessels were raised becomes immaterial.

The contention is that, if a vessel lies on be satisfactorily ascertained, it shall be estimated according to the complement allowed to vessels of its class in the Navy of the United States; and there shall be paid as bounty to the captors of any vessel of war captured from an enemy, which they may be instructed to destroy, or which is immediately destroyed for the public interest, but not in consequence of injuries received in action, fifty dollars for every person who shall be on board at the time of such capture.

Instructions:

20. Prizes should be sent in for adjudication, unless otherwise directed, to the nearest home port in which a prize court may be sitting.

21. The prize should be delivered to the court as nearly as possible in the condition in which she was at the time of seizure; and to this end her papers should be sealed at the time of seizure and kept in the custody of the prize master. Attention is called to articles Nos. 16 and 17 for the government of the United States Navy. (Exhibit A.)

22. All witnesses whose testimony is necessary to the adjudication of the prize should be detained and sent in with her, and, if circumstances permit, it is preferable that the officer making the search should act as prize master.

23. As to the delivery of the prize to the judicial authority, consult §§ 4615, 4616, and 4617, Revised Statutes of 1878 [U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 3127]. (Exhibit B.) The papers, including the log book of the prize, are delivered to the prize commissioners; the witnesses, to the custody of the United States marshal; and the prize itself remains in the custody of the prize master until the court issues process directing one of its own officers to take charge.

24. The title to property seized as prize the bottom in shallow water, but in such a condition that she cannot be floated *by any [264] of the means ordinarily possessed by a naval force, such vessel must be regarded as "sunk" within the meaning of the statute, even though she has received no structural injury; or if a vessel, though not sunk, be so structurally injured as to destroy her power of floating, and she cannot be repaired by any means possessed by the naval forces in the place where she lies, such vessel must be regarded as structurally "destroyed" within the meaning of the statute.

And it is said that a close analogy is furnished by the cases of constructive total loss of a vessel, such as justifies an abandonment to the underwriters. Nevertheless, counsel argues that there are differences between those cases and cases under § 4635 (U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 3134). Thus, while it is admitted that in the former the owner need not abandon unless he see fit to do so, the right of election on the part of captors as to whether the vessel should be treated as destroyed or as a prize is denied in the latter; and another difference suggested is that the owner of a submerged or stranded vessel could contract with a third party to *raise it, while captors can [265] not. We think, however, that the alleged differences destroy the analogy altogether, or rather that its application, when correctly stated, leads to the opposite result.

changes only by the decision rendered by the prize court. But, if the vessel itself, or its cargo, is needed for immediate public use, it may be converted to such use, a careful inventory and appraisal being made by impartial persons and certified to the prize court.

28. If there are controlling reasons why vessels may not be sent in for adjudication,—as unseaworthiness, the existence of infectious disease, or the lack of a prize crew, they may be appraised and sold; and if this cannot be done, they may be destroyed. The imminent danger of recapture would justify destruction, if there was no doubt that the vessel was good prize. But, in all such cases, all the papers and other testimony should be sent to the prize court, in order that a decree may be duly entered.

Exhibit A.

Art. 16. No person in the Navy shall take out of a prize, or vessel seized as a prize, any money, plate, goods, or any part of her equipment, unless it be for the better preservation thereof, or unless such articles are absolutely needed for the use of any of the vessels or armed forces of the United States, before the same are adjudged lawful prize by a competent court; but the whole, without fraud, concealment, or embezzlement, shall be brought in, in order that judgment may be passed thereon; and every person who offends against this article shall be punished as a court martial may direct.

Art. 17. If any person in the Navy strips off the clothes of, or pillages, or in manner maltreats, any person taken on board a prize, he shall suffer such punishment as a court martial shall adjudge.

Exhibit B.

[§§ 4615, 4616, and 4617 Rev. Stat. (U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 3127).]

Abandonment rests on the election of the parties, and there was here neither a right of abandonment nor any acts from which abandonment on the one side and acceptance on the other could be fairly inferred.

The public interest required the United States and the captors to preserve the property, if that were possible; and it would be an anomalous conclusion to hold in invitum that the United States could pay bounty for these vessels as destroyed and at the same time retain and use them.

The vessels were not derelict, abandoned without hope of recovery, but, on the contrary, their preservation was recommended, and, in the circumstances, Commodore Dewey, having duly taken the steps prescribed by the statute in respect of vessels confessedly captured, was not obliged to determine at once at his peril into which class these particular vessels fell, and to literally comply with § 4615 (U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 3127), in regard to captured property "not in condition to be sent in for adjudication."

War is not waged for predatory purposes, but Congress chose to grant reward for success, and in doing so cannot be assumed to have intended that such reward should be subjected to the restrictions of close bargains. The intention was that either prize money or bounty should be paid. Of course, by capture without destruction the government might obtain distinct acquisitions, and the captors would be recompensed at the expense of the enemy.

Circumstances have frequently occurred in which the public interest has required the destruction of vessels capable in themselves of being brought in,—as, for example, at the battle of the Nile, when Nelson was obliged to burn prizes in order to avoid the delay in refitting them, and the loss of the service of other ships to convoy them to Gibraltar; but there his government could not assist him, or take the captured vessels off his hands.

Section 4635 (U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 3134) provided that bounty should be paid in all cases where an enemy vessel of war was sunk or otherwise destroyed, either in an engagement, or in consequence of injuries [266] received "in action, or after capture when the destruction was for the public interest; but the statute does not demand the construction that every vessel must be considered as destroyed, which, though susceptible of salvage and saved, could not have been, and was not saved, by the unaided resources of the capturing force.

It is true that when the government succeeded in raising and restoring the vessels, it saved them for itself, but it may reasonably be held that this was subject by relation to the right of the captors to an adjudication giving them, after the costs and expenses were deducted, a share in the residue of value.

If the effort at salvage had failed, or if the cost had equaled or exceeded the value, the captors would still be entitled to bounty, for it was not intended that the grant should be defeated by laying them under a rigid rule of election. And, on the other hand, these vessels were not "appropriated to the use of the United States" by the mere effort of the government to raise them.

The act of raising was not the use contemplated by the statute. Such use was dependent on the success of the effort at salvage. The loss, which might have been total, became, on success, partial,—that is, confined to the extent of the expenditure; and the taking possession to accomplish that result, became, by success, appropriation to use.

The case of the Albemarle is in point, although apparently no opinion ruled the question in terms.

The Albemarle was sunk by Lieutenant Cushing on the night of October 27, 1864; was raised in March, 1865; reached Norfolk, April 27, 1865, and was appropriated to the use of the United States. She was appraised by a duly-appointed board of naval officers and the value found was deposited by the Secretary of the Navy with the Assistant Treasurer of the United States at Washington. Proceedings to condemn the Albemarle as prize were instituted in the district court of the United States for the District of Columbia and went to a decree of condemnation. The case was not reported, but the proceedings will be found in Swan v. United States, 19 Ct. Cl. 51, in the course of subsequent litigation; as also in United States v. Steever, 113 U. S. 747, 28 L. ed. 1133, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 765. No appeal was taken, and the conclusion that a *vessel thus situated could be decreed to be [267] prize was accepted by all the departments. We perceive no adequate reason to depart from that precedent.

2. As to the property taken from the vessels raised and reconstructed, and that taken from the vessels destroyed, we think its legal status must be regarded as the same as that of the vessel to which it belonged.

By § 4613 (U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 3126) it is declared that the provisions of Title LIV. shall apply to "all captures made as prize by authority of the United States or adopted and ratified by the President of the United States."

The taking must be under such conditions as make the subject of the capture prize, and the sections preceding § 4635 (U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 3134) recognize that property other than vessels may be prize, using the words "ship and cargo," "vessel, arms, munitions, or other material," "captured property," "prize property." But § 4635 (U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 3134) refers to the destruction of "a ship or vessel of war," which could not be "sunk or otherwise destroyed" under that section, and be "prize" under the preceding sections, and, as we have already said, the grant of bounty, to be divided "in the same manner as prize money," appears obviously to have been "intended as a substitute for the prize itself," as ruled by Lowell, J., in The Selma, 1 Low. Dec. 30, Fed. Cas. No. 12,647, or as given in lieu of prize money, as observed by Mr. Justice Field, in Porter v. United States, 106 U. S. 607, sub nom. United States v. Steam Vessels of War, 27 L. ed. 286, 1 Sup. Ct. Rep. 539.

No question of cargo is involved. Cargo is the lading of a ship or vessel, and may be prize when the vessel is not, or the vessel may be when the cargo is not. The inquiry here relates to things belonging to the outfit of vessels of war, for whose capture prize money is paid, and for whose destruction bounty is paid. The injury to the enemy is the same in either case, but the reward cannot be the same, as it is arbitrary in the one case, and not in the other, and arrived at in accordance with the general rules prescribed as required by the circumstances. The statute did not contemplate a division of the grant and an award of prize money and bounty in respect of the same transaction, unless, indeed, the capture embraced distinct and separate properties.

[268] *What is included then by the term "a ship or vessel of war," under § 4635 (U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 3134)? Whatever the toleration extended in courts of admiralty to the use, in practice, of words apparently superfluous, the word "ship" embraces her boats, tackle, apparel, and appurtenances, because part of the ship as a going concern, and, for the same reason, "ship or vessel of war" includes her armament, search lights, stores,—everything, in short, attached to or on board the ship in aid of her operations.

The first congressional legislation regulating prize was the act of March 2, 1799 (1 Stat. at L. 715, chap. 24), providing:

"Sec. 5. And be it further enacted, That all captured national ships or vessels of war shall be the property of the United States,—all other ships or vessels, being of superior force to the vessel making the capture, in men or guns, shall be the sole property of the captors,—and all ships or vessels of inferior force shall be divided equally between the United States and the officers and men of the vessel making the capture.

"Sec. 6. And be it further enacted, That the produce of prizes taken by the ships of the United States, and bounty for taking the ships of the enemy, be proportioned and distributed in the manner following, to wit:

[Then followed twelve subdivisions in respect of the distribution of prize money.]

"13. The bounty given by the United States on any national ship of war, taken from the enemy and brought into port, shall be, for every cannon mounted, carrying a ball of twenty-four pounds, or upwards, two hundred dollars; for every cannon carrying a ball of eighteen pounds, one hundred and fifty dollars; for every cannon carrying a ball of twelve pounds, one hundred dollars; and for every cannon carrying a ball of nine pounds, seventy-five dollars; for every smaller cannon, fifty dollars; and for every officer and man taken on board, forty dollars,—which sums are to be divided agreeably to the foregoing articles."

These sections admit of no other meaning than that the tackle, sails, apparel, stores, guns, ammunition, and other appurtenances of captured national vessels of war should be the property of the United States, as well as the ships themselves, and so of ships or vessels going to the captors.

*And the acts of April 23, 1800 (2 Stat. [269] at L. 45, chap. 33), July 17, 1862 (12 Stat. at L. 600, chap. 204), June 30, 1864 (13 Stat. at L. 306, chap. 174), and the Revised Statutes, contain nothing inconsistent with that view.

Parsons, in his work on Marine Insurance, says that "insurance on the ship covers all that belongs to it, as hull, sails, rigging, tackle, apparel, or furniture;" and he quotes from Emérigon (chap. 10, § 2, p. 234): "The expression 'on the body' embraces, in its generality, as I have just said, all that regards the ship. Such are the hull of the vessel, its rigging and apparel, munitions of war, stores and victualing, advances to the crew, and all that has been expended in the fitting it out." 1 Marine Ins. 524.

And in his work on Shipping and Admiralty, vol. 1, p. 78, the same author says: "How much passes by the word 'ship,' or the phrase 'ship and her appurtenances,—or apparel,—or furniture,—or the like, cannot be positively determined by any definition. Stowell and Abbott agree that whatever is on board a ship for the objects of the voyage and adventure in which she is engaged, belonging to the owners, constitutes a part of the ship and her appurtenances, within the meaning of the English statute of 53 Geo. III. chap. 159."

That was an act "to limit the responsibility of shipowners," and provided that owners should not be liable "further than the value of their own vessel, and the freight due or to grow due," and in several clauses of the act the responsibility was referred to as limited "to the value of the ship with all her appurtenances and freight."

In The Dundee, 1 Hagg. Adm. 109, the question arose whether the value of certain fishing stores should be included. Lord Stowell held that it should, and that the word "appurtenances" distinguished between cargo, which was intended to be disposed of at the foreign port, and having a merely transitory connection with the ship, and those accompaniments that were indispensable instruments, without which the ship could not perform its functions. The owners declared in prohibition in the King's Bench, Gale v. Laurie, 5 Barn. & C. 156, and Abbott, Ch. J., afterwards Lord Tenterden, announced the same conclusion, and, among other things, said: "The fishing stores were not *carried on board the ship as mer- [270] chandise, but for the accomplishment of the objects of the voyage; and we think that whatever is on board a ship for the object of the voyage and adventure on which she is engaged, belonging to the owners, constitutes a part of the ship and her appurtenances within the meaning of this act [53 Geo. III. chap. 159], whether the object be warfare, the conveyance of passengers or goods, or the fishery. This construction furnishes a plain and intelligible general rule; whereas, if it should be held that nothing is to be considered as part of the ship that is not necessary for her navigation or motion on the water, a door would be opened to many nice questions, and much discussion and cavil."

In The Witch Queen, 3 Sawy. 201, Fed. Cas. No. 17,916, Judge Hoffman held that, where a vessel was supplied with a diving bell, air pump, and other apparatus for the accomplishment of the enterprise in which she was about to engage, the lien of the materialmen extended to all articles belonging to the owner, which, not being cargo, had been placed on board for the objects and purposes of the voyage. The decision proceeded on our 8th rule in admiralty, referring to "suits in rem against a ship, her tackle, sails, apparel, furniture, boats, or other appurtenances;" and The Dundee, decided twenty years before the adoption of the rule, was cited as showing the sense in which the term "appurtenances" had been used.

To be sure, the words tackle, sails, apparel, boats, appurtenances, are not used in Title LIV., but we think that such minuteness was unnecessary, and that the words "ship or vessel of war belonging to the enemy" are sufficiently comprehensive to embrace not only everything essential to the ship's navigation, but to the purposes of her existence.

Necessarily, there is nothing in the distinction attempted to be drawn between the ship and her "appliances and outfit;" nor can we concur in the view that the latter may be regarded as cargo in any aspect.

It is said that the destroyed hostile vessel of war should be held the subject of bounty, and property taken from her the subject of prize money, because bounty alone would be an inadequate reward.

[271] *This, even if true, would not justify us in attributing to the statute a scope not permitted by its terms.

Section 4635 (U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 3134) is couched in the same language as when enacted July 17, 1862, after the battle between the Monitor and the Merrimac had admonished us of the impending change in the construction of vessels of war, yet the bounty provision was re-enacted in 1864, and incorporated into the Revised Statutes, and while, in these days, the amount of bounty may seem inconsiderable in comparison with the value of the vessel destroyed, we must take the statute as we find it.

3. The battle of Manila was fought on the 1st day of May, and on the 3d the enemy's forces evacuated the Cavite arsenal, which was taken possession of by a landing party. This naval station contained a considerable amount of arms, munitions, and material, for the repairing, equipment, and fitting out of ships, and some nonseagoing boats were in use there. The property was appraised in due course; some of it was used in the Navy prior to the exchange of ratifications of the treaty of peace, and the remainder restored to Spain thereafter. The district court declined to adjudicate this property to be prize, because captured on land.

These were naval stores taken at a naval station, by a naval force, as the result of a naval engagement, and the question is whether the fact that they were taken from a navy yard instead of from a vessel rendered the statute inapplicable.

Generally speaking, forts, cities, lands taken from the enemy, are called conquests; movables taken on land, booty; on the high seas, prize. And the high seas include coast waters without the boundaries of low-water mark, though within bays or roadsteads,—waters on which a court of admiralty has jurisdiction. United States v. Ross, 1 Gall. 624, Fed. Cas. No. 16,196.

Mr. Justice Story and Mr. Wheaton thought that the jurisdiction in prize extended "as well to goods taken on land by a naval force, or in consequence of the operations of a naval force, as to property captured on the water." Wheaton, Captures, 278; Pratt's Story, Notes on Prize Courts, 28; 2 Wheat. Appx. 1, 4 L. ed. 281. Both these learned authors cite English authorities, and among them the leading case of Lindo v. Rodney, 2 Dougl. 613, note.

*In that case the property was captured [272] on the island of St. Eustatius, and a writ of prohibition to restrain the prize court was applied for. It was stated that the only question was "whether the goods being taken on land, though in consequence of a surrender to ships at sea, excludes the only prize jurisdiction known in this kingdom." The question was answered in the negative in an elaborate opinion and the rule discharged. Lord Mansfield, among other things, said: "In short, every reason which created a prize court as to things taken upon the high seas, holds equally when they are thus taken at land. The original cause of taking is here at sea. The force which terrified the place into a surrender was at sea. If they had resisted, the force to subdue would have been from the sea. Mr. Piggott candidly said, it would be spinning very nicely to contend, if the enemy left their ship, and got ashore with money, were followed upon land, and stripped of their money, that this would not be a sea capture. I agree with him, but I cannot distinguish that case from this. Both takings are literally upon land. In both, the prey is, as it were, killed at sea, and taken upon land. Here the capture of the goods on land is the immediate consequence of the surrender at discretion to a sea force. Would a sum paid by capitulation upon land have made it a sea or a land prize? Cui bono, should all this subtlety be spun, when the reason for a jurisdiction to judge a capture at sea and such a capture at land is exactly the same?"

This reasoning shows that even though the general proposition may have been stated somewhat broadly by Story and Wheaton, circumstances may bring particular cases within it, and that mere contact with land does not ipso facto exclude jurisdiction in prize.

In The Siren, 13 Wall. 389, 392. sub nom.

188 U. S.

United States Ships of War v. United States, 20 L. ed. 505, 506, Mr. Justice Swayne, speaking for the court, said: "While the American colonies were a part of the British Empire, the English maritime law, including the law of prize, was the maritime law of this country. From the close of the Revolution down to this time, it has continued to be our law, so far as it is adapted to the altered circumstances and condition of the country, and has not been modified by the proper national authorities."

[273] "It was there decided that a seagoing vessel captured by the Army and Navy jointly was not subject of condemnation as prize, and that only captures made by naval force alone were so subject. "Whenever a claim is set up," said the court, "its sanction by an act of Congress must be shown. If no such act can be produced, the alleged right does not exist."

Hence, captures are made as prize for the benefit of captors when they come within the scope of our prize statutes, and not otherwise.

In The Emulous, 1 Gall. 575, Fed. Cas. No. 4,479, Mr. Justice Story said: "The admiralty, therefore, not only takes cognizance of all captures made at sea, in creeks, havens, and rivers, but also of all captures made on land where the same have been made by a naval force, or by co-operation with a naval force. This exercise of jurisdiction is settled by the most solemn adjudications."

The decree in The Emulous was reversed in Brown v. United States, 8 Cranch, 110, 3 L. ed. 504, but that was on the ground of the unlawfulness of the taking, and so referred to by Mr. Justice Gray in The Paquete Habana, 175 U. S. 711, 44 L. ed. 332, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 290.

In United States v. 269½ Bales of Cotton, Woolw. 236, Fed. Cas. No. 16,583, an officer of the Army embarked a battalion of cavalry on vessels of the United States, and in the service of the government, but not part of the naval force, and, proceeding by river and by land, penetrated into a certain district of Mississippi then held by the enemy, and by force of arms overpowered a body of hostile troops and took from their possession 269½ bales of cotton, which were subsequently libelled. And Mr. Justice Miller, on circuit, held that the cotton was captured by the Army, and not by the Navy, and dismissed the libel. While Mr. Justice Miller there remarked that the result of Brown v. United States was "that property on land is not, without the aid of the statute, liable to capture and condemnation as prize of war," yet, after considering many English cases at some length, and referring to The Emulous and the case of 680 Pieces Merchandise, 2 Sprague, 233, Fed. Cas. No. 12,915, he said: "In every one of the cases where the court has sustained its jurisdiction in prize, it appears that the force making the capture, or co-operating in the act, was the naval arm, or, by its presence and from the sea; that the place captured was an island, town, or fortress, itself established to resist naval attack, and to support and succor naval expeditions, and accessible from the sea, so that the attacking squadron could directly bring to bear upon it the stress of its armament." And, referring to property captured on land by land forces, he added: "However desirable it may be that, in a war between nations, there should exist a tribunal similar to the prize court, to administer the law of nations with reference to property captured on land, we find no warrant for asserting that any such authority exists in the admiralty courts of the United States, unless the circumstances of the capture show some element of a force operating from, or on, the water, which would bring it within the recognized rules on that subject."

[274] active assistance it *contributed immediately in effecting the capture; that it operated

In the case of Mrs. Alexander's Cotton, 2 Wall. 404, sub nom. United States v. Alexander, 17 L. ed. 915, a joint expedition of gunboats under Rear Admiral Porter and a body of troops under Major General Banks proceeded up the Red River, and, during its advance, seventy-two bales of cotton, the private property of Mrs. Alexander, were taken from her plantation, where they were stored in a cotton gin house about a mile from the river, by a party from one of the gunboats. The cotton was hauled by teams to the river bank, sent to Cairo, libelled as prize of war in the district court for the southern district of Illinois, May 18, 1864; claimed by Mrs. Alexander; sold pendente lite, and the proceeds decreed to her. The United States appealed and asked the reversal of the decree and the condemnation of the cotton as maritime prize. This court held that the capture was justified by legislation and by public policy, but that the property was not maritime prize; that there was no authority to condemn any property as prize for the benefit of the captors except under the act of July 17, 1862 (12 Stat. at L. 600, chap. 204); and that as the second section of that act provided that "the proceeds of all ships and vessels, and the goods taken on board of them, which shall be adjudged good prize," should be the property of the captors, in whole or in part, property on land was excluded from the category of prize for the benefit of captors, and that this was decisive of the case *so far as claims of captors were concerned. [275]

The decree was reversed and the cause remanded with directions to dismiss the libel.

In that case the capture was the result of a joint expedition; the property was private property; unprotected and stored at a distance from the river; valuable for domestic use, and so valuable as to be of peculiar assistance to the enemy, but not in any sense war material.

In the present case the capture was made by naval force alone; the property was public property, consisting of arms, munitions, and naval material; in a naval station taken through the operations of the fleet from the sea.

For the reasons indicated by Mr. Justice Miller, in harmony with the observations of Lord Mansfield, the rulings in that case and in The Siren are not controlling in this, and, moreover, the terms of the applicable statute are not the same.

The sections constituting Title LIV. of the Revised Statutes were brought forward from the act of June 30, 1864 (13 Stat. at L. 306, chap. 174).

Section 2 of the act of July 17, 1862, referred to by Mr. Chief Justice Chase in the case of Mrs. Alexander's Cotton, reads as follows: "That the proceeds of all ships and vessels, and the goods taken on board of them, which shall be adjudged good prize, shall, when of equal or superior force to the vessel or vessels making the capture, be the sole property of the captors; and when of inferior force, shall be divided equally between the United States and the officers and men making the capture."

This section was identical with § 5 of the act of April 23, 1800, and was expressly repealed by § 35 of the act of June 30, 1864, while § 10 of the latter act, afterwards § 4630 of the Revised Statutes (U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 3132), provided: "That the net proceeds of all property condemned as prize shall, when the prize was of superior or equal force to the vessel or vessels making the capture, be decreed to the captors; and when of inferior force, one half shall be decreed to the United States and the other half to the captors;" and § 33: "That the provisions of this act shall be applied to all captures made as prize by authority of the [276] United States, or adopted and ratified *by the President of the United States;" which was re-enacted as § 4613 of the Revised Statutes (U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 3126).

The effect of this legislation was not to revive § 5 of the act of 1800, as contended, nor to give jurisdiction in admiralty in respect of property captured on land by land forces, but, if the language of the act of 1862 confined the rights of captors to the proceeds of ships and cargoes, it seems clear that the language of the act of 1864, that the captors should be entitled to "the net proceeds of all property condemned as prize," operated to so far remove the restriction as to permit the statute to extend to other property fairly coming within accepted rules of prize.

The district court thought the words inadequate to produce this result, and carefully examined other sections of the act of 1864, which referred to vessels and cargoes as the usual subjects of prize. But we should remember that that statute, and Title LIV., into which it was carried, embraced prize in general, and that vessels and their cargoes most frequently constituted prize property brought in for adjudication. So that in making provision in that regard, Congress was obliged to use such terms as even to give color to the argument that an enemy's vessels of war could not be condemned at all for the benefit of captors, and that bounty was their only reward, as was the case under the act of 1799 [1 Stat. at L. 709, chap. 24]. But it is conceded that this is not so, and we think that these sections ought not to be given the restrictive force attributed to them.

We are also unable to see that the significance of the change in phraseology is lessened when considered with the other legislation referred to.

The act of March 12, 1863 (12 Stat. at L. 820, chap. 120), provided for the collection of all abandoned or captured property in insurrectionary districts, and "that such property shall not include any kind or description which has been used, or which was intended to be used, for waging or carrying on war against the United States, such as arms, ordnance, ships, steamboats, or other water craft, and the furniture, forage, military supplies, or munitions of war." Section 7 read: "That none of the provisions of this act shall apply to any lawful maritime prize by *the naval forces of the United [277] States." The property excepted had been declared "lawful subject of prize and capture wherever found;" and it was made the duty of the President "to cause the same to be seized, confiscated, and condemned," by the confiscation act of August 6, 1861 (12 Stat. at L. 319, chap. 60). This act referred to property taken when used, or intended to be used, in waging war against the United States, while the act of 1863 referred to property not so used or intended to be.

By the 2d section of the act of March 3, 1863, "further to regulate proceedings in prize cases" (12 Stat. at L. 759, chap. 86), it was provided that "any captured vessel, any arms or munitions of war, or other material," might be taken "for the use of the government," and the value deposited in the Treasury of the United States, and for prize proceedings. This act was expressly repealed by § 35 of the act of June 30, 1864, § 10 of which act, as already seen, provided that the captors might share in the net proceeds of all property condemned as prize.

Section 7 of the act of July 2, 1864 (13 Stat. at L. 377, chap. 225), reads: "That no property seized or taken upon any of the inland waters of the United States by the naval forces thereof shall be regarded as maritime prize; but all property so seized or taken shall be promptly delivered to the proper officers of the courts, or as provided in this act and in the said act approved March twelve, eighteen hundred and sixty-three." These various acts growing out of the civil war cannot be regarded as having any important bearing on the act of June 30, 1864, and Title LIV., in so far as the particular modification of the act of 1862 is concerned.

And neither these acts, nor §§ 5308 to 5311 (U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 3614), in respect of insurrection, and § 9 of § 563 (U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 457), and § 6 of § 629, Revised Statutes (U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 504), affect the result we have reached.

In our opinion it would be spinning altogether too nicely to hold that because enemy property on land cannot be taken in prize by land operations, public property designed for hostile uses, and stored on the sea shore in an establishment for facilitating naval warfare, might not be made prize, under the statute, when captured by naval forces operating directly from the sea.

[278] *But while the property in question was, in general, susceptible of condemnation in prize, it was, nevertheless, taken subject to the exercise of the power of restitution. The right of the government is supreme, and when, in its judgment, the public interest demands it, prizes may be restored, and the courts cannot proceed to condemnation.

In The Elsebe, 5 C. Rob. 173, Lord Stowell, then Sir William Scott, decided that up to the period of final condemnation, the Crown can, by virtue of its prerogative, restore a prize to the enemy from whom it has been captured, and may take this step without consulting the captors.

The principle is fully discussed and sustained by unanswerable reasoning, and is not shaken by his subsequent observations in The St. Ivan, Edw. Adm. 376, that "captors bring in their prizes subject [in all cases] to such interposition on the part of the Crown; but it is of very rare occurrence, and speaking with all due reverence ought to be of rare occurrence, and only under very special circumstances; as, for instance, where the detention of the vessel may be detrimental to the general interests of the country."

Until condemnation, captors acquire no absolute right of property in a prize, though then the right attaches as of the time of the capture, and it is for the government to determine when the public interests require a different destination. In respect of whatever was restored under the treaty with Spain, the government must be regarded as absolved from liability.

It further follows from the views we entertain as justifying condemnation of a portion of this property, that the capturing naval force must be held to have been superior within the contemplation of the statute, according to previous decision.

4. The libel was amended some months after it was filed, so as to cover certain cascoes, or small native boats, and also two floating derricks or wrecking boats, the property of private citizens residing in the Philippine islands. These cascoes appear to have been large barges, propelled by sweeps and by poling, of from 30 to 60 tons capacity, of the value of from $1,500 to $1,800, Mexican, each, and used in discharging cargoes. The wrecking boats were flat boats, the largest being 40 feet long and 15 feet broad. They had no means of propulsion, were *not seagoing boats in any sense, and could only be used in comparatively smooth water. All these boats may have been the private property of Filipinos, but that is not clear.

[279] It may well be doubted if these craft came within the words "ship" or "vessel" as used in Title LIV. Whether, in the circumstances, they could justly be treated as technically enemy property, is a question not so presented as to require discussion. They were put to public use by the commanding officer, but what ultimately became of them does not appear from the record. If restitution was made, they have ceased to be within the jurisdiction. And in any view, we are of opinion that they came within the considerations set forth in The Paquete Habana, 175 U. S. 677, 44 L. ed. 320, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 290; and that the district court rightly held that they were not subject to condemnation.

We are of opinion that the district court committed no error in its decree in respect of the Don Juan de Austria, the Isla de Cuba, and the Isla de Luzon, and the property taken from them, as well as the vessels captured and their appurtenances, or in respect of the lighters and wrecking boats, but that a share in a portion of the naval stores and material captured in the Cavite arsenal, and the boats pertaining thereto, should have been awarded, and that the decree should not have included property taken from vessels sunk and destroyed.

And this brings us to consider:

5. The decree dismissing the intervention of Stovell.

This was an intervening libel filed by Edward F. Stovell as captain of the Nanshan, on behalf of its officers and crew, as well as himself, seeking to participate in the prize money that might be awarded on the main libel. Stovell had previously made an application in the court of claims to participate in the bounty awarded for vessels destroyed, under § 4635 of the Revised Statutes (U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 3134), which was dismissed by that court. 36 Ct. Cl. 392.

The record in the court of claims was made the record in the district court on the intervention of Stovell, and forms part of the record on this appeal. The facts are correctly summarized by Weldon, J., in the opinion of the court of claims, as follows:

"The facts found by the court show that [280] the claimant was captain or master of the original crew of the Nanshan, which was a British merchant vessel, purchased by Admiral Dewey at Hong Kong, under authority of the Secretary of the Navy, in April, 1898. The vessel was not commissioned, but was registered as an American steamer, and the original crew was shipped in the American merchant service. The crew were employed to handle the ship, and the officers and men were promised and received double the wages they had theretofore been paid in the British merchant service. They were not rated in the United States Navy, and the double wages were not the rates of pay fixed by the President under authority of Rev. Stat. § 1569. The arrangement as to the employment and payment of the crew was the result of an agreement made by Admiral Dewey with the original officers of the Nanshan. A monthly list of the names and wages of the crew, in Mexican money, was made by the original captain or master, the aggregate amount of which was received by him from the pay inspector of the fleet in a lump sum, reduced to the value of American gold, which money the captain distributed to his original crew.

"Admiral Dewey placed on board a naval officer, Lieut. Benj. W. Hodges, and four enlisted men, and two mounted 1-pounder guns. The master of the Nanshan, Capt. Edwin F. Stovell, remained on board, and under him were shipped the seamen, as aforesaid. The naval officer exercised control over the vessel and gave all orders concerning her. The merchant captain was merely his executive officer, being familiar with the crew. The Nanshan did not approach the Spanish fleet during the battle of Manila near enough to enable her to be of any service. The guns were mounted on her as a protection from boat attacks, but not for offensive operations. At the time and during the battle of Manila, Lieut. Benj. W. Hodges had been detailed as aforesaid with four men of the Navy for duty on said vessel, and was so engaged on said vessel as above stated at and during the time of the battle. The Nanshan was loaded with 3,009 tons of coal. The Raleigh was detailed as a special guard in case the reserve division was attacked separately by [281] the enemy. *The duty of the naval captain on said ship was to take general charge of the vessel, execute all orders from the flagship controlling the movements of the Nanshan, the handling of the guns, and the signaling, but not to interfere with the internal management and discipline of the ship, and such things as loading and discharging cargo.

"After the vessel was bought by Admiral Dewey, the Nanshan crossed the China sea with the fleet and was a part thereof. She kept her position in the fleet. After the fleet stopped at Subig bay the Admiral ordered her commander to come on board the flagship for his final orders, afterwards returning to the Nanshan. The fleet started in single column, the Olympia leading, followed by the Baltimore, the Raleigh, the Petrel, the Concord, the Boston, the McCullough, the Nanshan, and Zafiro, passing the forts in that order. The forts on the south side of the channel fired upon the fleet as they were entering Manila bay, and the Nanshan passed through that fire. The Nanshan was in reserve during the action, within signaling distance. She had on board two 1-pounders, taken from the Olympia, with 360 rounds of ammunition for those guns; also 11 rifles from the Raleigh, and 11 revolvers, with a suitable amount of ammunition, and two boats rigged ready to lower to pick up men if it was found necessary to do so. The Nanshan was a heavy ship, being loaded to the underwriters' mark with coal.

"At the time and during the battle of Manila the Nanshan was between 4 and 5 miles of the Spanish fleet engaged in that action. She was within signaling distance of the fleet that effected the destruction of the Spanish vessels, but was not in such condition as to afford effective aid, her guns not being able to produce any effect upon the Spanish vessels; she was ordered to lay off in the bay, clear of the fleet; she could not have been brought within effective range, because her guns were too light."

Section 4614 (U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 3126) provides: "The term 'vessels of the Navy,' as used in this title, shall include all armed vessels officered and manned by the United States, and under the control of the Department of the Navy."

Section 4632 (U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 3133): "All vessels of the Navy within signal distance *of the vessel or vessels making [282] the capture, under such circumstances and in such condition as to be able to render effective aid, if required, shall share in the prize; and in case of vessels not in the Navy, none shall be entitled to share except the vessel or vessels making the captures; in which term shall be included vessels present at and rendering actual assistance in the capture."

The court of claims held, on the facts, that the Nanshan was not at the time of the battle of Manila in such a condition as to enable her to render effective aid, if required; that she was performing the functions of a collier, to be protected instead of to act aggressively; that her crew had never been enlisted in the Navy, but had been employed simply to perform manual labor; that the two 1-pounders and the small arms she had on board were for purposes of defense rather than attack; that "she was not kept in the relation which she sustained to the engagement for strategic purposes, but for the purpose of protection to herself, and the incident protection of the rest of the fleet as the source of their coal supply;" and that she could not participate in prize money awarded under § 4632 (U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 3133).

By the 5th clause of § 4631 (U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 3133), which treats of the distribution of prize money, after certain deductions the remainder is to be distributed "among all others doing duty on board, including the fleet captain, and borne upon the books of the ship, in proportion to their respective rates of pay in the service;" and under § 1569 (U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 1078) the pay to petty officers, seamen, and others must be fixed by the President. The court of claims further decided that as interveners were shipped and not enlisted, and their pay had not been fixed by the President, but was a matter of agreement with the officer who shipped them, this furnished an additional reason for holding that they were not entitled to share in the prize money.

It is agreed that the decision as to the Nanshan determines the case of the Zafiro.

The district court adjudged "that the Nanshan and Zafiro, not participating in any of said captures, and not being armed vessels of the United States within signal distance of the vessel or vessels making the capture, under such circumstances and in *such conditions as to be able to render ef-[283] fective aid, if required, are not entitled to share in any of the prize property."

Notwithstanding the ingenious argument on behalf of the intervention, we are able to arrive at any different conclusion, and to hold that the Nanshan and Zafiro were part of the fighting force of the Navy in the battle, or present under such circumstances and in such condition as to be able to render effective aid in that engagement, as prescribed by the statute. They participated neither actually nor constructively in the captures.

The rights to share of the commissioned officers and enlisted men of the United States Navy on board these two vessels depend on other considerations.

The decree of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia on the intervening libel is affirmed. The decree on the libel is reversed and the cause remanded, with directions to enter a decree in accordance with this opinion.

UNITED STATES, Appt.,

v.

HENRY C. TAYLOR, Rear Admiral, United States Navy, etc.†

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 283-291.)

Prize—property appropriated to government use—vessel raised in unsuccessful attempt to save—outfit of destroyed vessel.

1. An enemy's war vessel, raised and floated after a naval engagement, in an attempt by the United States, with the advice and concurrence of the captors, to save her, but which by reason of the injuries received in action was lost in an endeavor to reach the nearest practicable point at which she could be reconstructed, was not appropriated to the use of the United States so as to be lawful prize of war for the benefit of the captors, under U. S. Rev. Stat. § 4625 (U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 3130), but such captors are entitled to bounty under § 4635 (U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 3134), for her destruction in the engagement.
2. The entire equipment of a vessel of war, including everything necessary to be used for the purposes of the vessel, is included in the words, "ship or vessel of war belonging to an enemy," as used in the provisions for bounty made by U. S. Rev. Stat. § 4635 (U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 3134), and is, therefore, not the subject of condemnation as prize of war.

[No. 273.]

Argued October 27, 28, 1902. Decided February 23, 1903.

APPEAL from the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia to review a decree of condemnation entered by that court sitting as a District Court of the United States in admiralty on a libel in prize. Reversed and remanded, with directions to dismiss the libel.

† This case is reported by the Official Reporter under the title of "The Infanta Maria Teresa."

NOTE.—As to what is lawful prize of war—see note to The Mary & Susan, 4 L. ed. U. S. 32. 188 U. S.

Statement by Mr. Chief Justice Fuller:

*This is an appeal from a decree of the [284] supreme court of the District of Columbia, sitting as a district court of the United States in admiralty, on a libel in prize filed by William T. Sampson, Rear Admiral, United States Navy, in behalf of himself and the officers and men of the naval force on the North Atlantic station who took part in the naval engagement off Santiago. During the pendency of the appeal in this court Admiral Sampson died, and, his death being suggested, Admiral Henry C. Taylor was substituted by direction of the court. 187 U. S. 436, ante, 248, 23 Sup. Ct. Rep. 216.

The engagement took place July 3, 1898, when the Spanish fleet, consisting of the Infanta Maria Teresa, Cristobal Colon, Viscaya, Almirante Oquendo, and the torpedo boats Furor and Pluton, which had been lying in the harbor of Santiago, made a sortie and attempted to force its way past the American fleet then blockading the port. None of the Spanish vessels were afloat at the close of the action. The least injured was the Cristobal Colon, which was sunk by her commander, and lay nearly on her beam ends. The vessel in the next best condition was the Infanta Maria Teresa, whose bottom had been pierced by a point of rock, while she was completely burned out above the protective deck. She lay nearly upright, being submerged to about her normal waterline aft, and a little less than this forward.

On July 6, 1898, a board of eight officers was designated by Admiral Sampson, the commander-in-chief, to make "a thorough examination of the condition of the wrecked Spanish vessels," and to consider and report on the possibility of saving any of them. July 13, 1898, the board reported that it was "possible and desirable to float the Infanta Maria Teresa," *and as to the [285] Cristobal Colon, "that if the weather continues favorable the probabilities are good for saving the vessel."

July 6, 1898, a contract was entered into between the Merritt-Chapman Derrick Wrecking Company and the United States, stating in its preamble that the United States was "desirous of raising and saving as many as possible of the Spanish vessels composing the fleet of Admiral Cervera," and providing that the contractors should, upon "arriving at the scene of the wreck of the Cristobal Colon, at once begin the work of raising that vessel," with so much of her armament, stores, etc., as it might be possible to recover, the vessel and appurtenances, if so required by the United States, to be transported to the Navy yard at Norfolk, Virginia. The contract further stated: "Inasmuch as it is believed that the Cristobal Colon is the least damaged of all the Spanish vessels above referred to, the party of the first part will endeavor to float her, and in case of success in that undertaking, or if it should, in the judgment of the senior United States naval officer present, be impossible to save that vessel, or if, in his judgment, during the work on the Cristobal Colon, it should be practicable to devote any time, attention, or labor to the saving of any of the other of the said vessels, then the party of the first part shall do all in its power towards the accomplishment of that end," etc. And further: "An officer of the Navy, to be designated by the commander-in-chief, and at all times subject to his orders, under the direction of the Secretary, shall be present at the scene of the work as the department's representative, to supervise and inspect the operations under this contract; and the party of the first part shall subsist such officer on board its vessel during the performance of such work and until the return to the Navy yard at Norfolk, if so required."

Soon after the report of the board convened by Admiral Sampson, the contractors began work on the Colon, and on July 29, 1898, a supplemental contract was made in regard to the work on that vessel. The operations were carried on for some time for the purpose of raising and floating both the Colon and the Teresa, but work on the Colon was stopped on or about August 31, [286] 1898, and the efforts were concentrated *on the Teresa, which was finally floated September 23, and reached Guantanamo, September 24. She there received certain temporary repairs, and on October 29, 1898, started for Norfolk, Virginia, convoyed by the U. S. S. Leonidas, and in tow of the United States repair ship Vulcan, and the wrecking tug Merritt, also using her own steam as far as the condition of her engines permitted. She was in charge of the wrecking company, but an officer of the Navy had charge of the government men and employees on board, at the request of the wreck master, to assist the company in taking the ship to Norfolk. On November 1 she encountered a severe storm, and, after some hours, being apparently in a sinking condition, she was cast off, and ultimately drifted on to Cat Island, where she struck on the rocks and became a hopeless wreck. The evidence showed that her inability to withstand the storm was because of injuries sustained in action. There was no contention as to negligence, and a naval court of inquiry made findings and a report to the effect that the ship was not prematurely abandoned, and that the abandonment was in no wise due to the fault or negligence of any officer of the Navy.

July 17, 1899, libellants filed a petition in the court of claims for bounty, under U. S. Rev. Stat. § 4635 (U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 3134), for the destruction of the Viscaya, Oquendo, Colon, Furor, and Pluton, which went to decree in their favor. 35 Ct. Cl. 578.

July 31, 1899, the libel in the present case was filed, setting forth that the Teresa, and all property taken from her, as well as that taken from the Colon and other sunken vessels, were prize of war, and had been appropriated to the use of the United States. The libel averred that the Teresa, "after being taken for and appropriated to the use of the United States, and while in the possession of the United States, under the control of the Secretary of the Navy, being in charge of contractors employed by him," was abandoned at sea, driven ashore, and finally abandoned, "and for that reason cannot be sent in for adjudication."

The district court entered a decree of condemnation, July 30, 1901, to the effect that the Infanta Maria Teresa and all the property taken from her and from the other vessels were lawful *prize of war, and direct-[287] ing, upon the ascertainment of their value, the amount should be deposited, subject to the further order of the court, and that libellants were entitled to receive a moiety thereof. This appeal was then taken.

Mr. Charles C. Binney and Assistant Attorney General Hoyt argued the cause and filed a brief for appellant.

For their contentions see their briefs as reported in United States v. Dewey, ante, 463.

Mr. James H. Hayden argued the cause, and, with Mr. Joseph K. McCammon, filed a brief for appellee:

The "Teresa" was captured jure belli.

1 Bouvier Law Dict. p. 284; 1 Standard Dict. p. 282; The Grotius, 8 Cranch, 456, 3 L. ed. 623, 9 Cranch, 368, 3 L. ed. 762; The Atlanta, 3 Wall. 425, sub nom. The Weehawken v. The Atlanta, 18 L. ed. 253.

The war between the United States and Spain continued until December 10, 1898, when the treaty of Paris was signed; and until then Cuba continued to be Spanish territory and hostile.

Dooley v. United States, 182 U. S. 222, 45 L. ed. 1074, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 762.

By lying stranded on the beach near shore the vessel did not become Spanish property or Cuban property.

Story, Prize Courts, p. 29.

Mr. William B. King argued the cause, and, with Mr. George A. King, filed a brief for certain of the captors:

"Prize" is generally used as a technical term to express a legal capture.

Miller v. The Resolution, 2 Dall. 4, 1 L. ed. 264.

One exact precedent is found in this court. United States v. The Albemarle, reported in Swan v. United States, 19 Ct. Cl. 51.

The cargo in prize is entirely separate from the vessel.

78 Bales of Cotton, 1 Low. Dec. 11, Fed. Cas. No. 12,679.

Mr. Chief Justice Fuller delivered the opinion of the court:

After the engagement, the Teresa, as she lay shattered on the shore, was not in condition to be sent in for adjudication, and no survey and appraisal were thereupon had, nor was any sale directed by the commanding officer, as provided in § 4615, Revised Statutes (U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 3127); nor was the Teresa taken for, and appropriated to the use of the United States and the value deposited, under § 4624 (U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 3130); nor were proceedings for adjudication commenced under § 4625 (U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 3130), until by this libel. But the attention of the government and of the commanding officer was directed from the first to the question of salvage. The commanding officer was of opinion that the Colon and the Teresa could both be raised and reconstructed, and the government was desirous that this should be done if possible. The proceedings to that end were conducted in perfect good faith, and there was no suggestion that by the attempt to save these ships the government was appropriating them or either of them to its use, within the intent and meaning of the statute. The government argues, and with great force, that the Teresa having been sunk and destroyed to such an extent that the naval force was powerless to save her by its own resources, her legal status as sunk or destroyed became fixed immediately after the engagement, and that nothing but bounty could be [288] *recovered. In Dewey's Case [188 U. S. 254, ante, 463, 23 Sup. Ct. Rep. 415], we ruled that this was applying too rigid a construction to the statute, and that, if an enemy's vessel of war, sunk in battle, was subsequently raised and reconstructed by the government, she might properly be adjudicated as prize, the result being to let in the captors for prize money after the expense and cost of reconstruction and refitting had been deducted.

But the facts in this case are wholly different. The Teresa was raised and floated, but she was lost before she reached the Norfolk Navy yard, which was the nearest practicable point at which she could be reconstructed.

We cannot concur in the view that the United States appropriated the Teresa to its own use within the meaning of the statute, by attempting, with the advice and concurrence of the captors, to save her, or by the mere act of raising, and as soon as she floated, for that was only a step in the effort at salvage, and until salvage was accomplished, she was not appropriated to use. And this is true of the Colon, though the effort to save her was given up before she floated.

Libellant's counsel agree with counsel for the government that the question of prize or no prize must be determined as of the close of the engagement on July 3, 1898, but they contend that the Teresa was not sunk or destroyed as she lay stranded on the beach, and in her then condition could have been condemned as prize; that the Secretary of the Navy, in arranging to save her, acted voluntarily, and "without the knowledge of the captors;" and that the latter, at least, yielded to his superior authority.

The statute makes no provision for adjudicating wrecks as prize. By § 4625 (U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 3130) proceedings may be had in respect of proceeds of property appraised and sold, in respect of the value of property appropriated to use, and in respect of property entirely lost or destroyed.

In this case there was no appraisal and sale; there was no appropriation to the use of the government in the meaning of the statute; the vessel had not been in condition to be sent in, and then been "entirely lost or destroyed."
188 U. S.

And it must be remembered that the Teresa could never *have been raised and saved [289] by the captors alone. Yet her salvability seems to have been generally conceded. The commanding officer took no measures to have the wreck appraised and sold, but concurred with the government in the effort at salvage. In doing so he represented all who would have been interested if the ship had been saved, and while the chance of obtaining considerable prize money was quite good, no risk was run of losing bounty by taking that chance.

The government acted with due prudence in employing persons whose business it was to do such work, to raise and deliver the vessel at the Norfolk Navy yard. If no attempt had been made, the vessel would finally have gone to pieces where she lay.

Salvors are not held responsible for a loss when attempting salvage in good faith, and with reasonable judgment and skill (The Laura, 14 Wall. 336, sub nom. Norcross v. The Laura, 20 L. ed. 814), and we know of no reason why the government should be held to a more rigorous accountability, even if it could, in any case, be regarded from the standpoint of a mere salvor of the property of another.

Where a hostile vessel of war has been so far destroyed that she cannot be brought in by the naval force which reduced her to that condition, but she is raised, reconstructed, and appropriated to use by the government, the statute may be so construed as to permit the application of the doctrine of relation; but this case does not come within that view, and the claim for prize money in respect of the wreck itself is not sanctioned by the act of Congress. But libellants did not waive their right to bounty by seeking to recover prize money, and to bounty they are still entitled.

As to the property taken from the Teresa and the other wrecks, its disposition must follow the rule laid down in United States v. Dewey.

In our opinion the words "ship or vessel of war belonging to an enemy," as employed in § 4635 (U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 3134), covered armament, outfit, and appurtenances, including provisions, money to pay the crew or for necessary expenditures, everything necessary to be used for the purposes of the vessel, and as a vessel of war.

The grant of prize money and the grant of bounty were distinct *grants, and the ap- [290] plicable general rule ought not to be deprived of its force by particular exceptions.

The decree is reversed, without costs in this court, and the cause remanded, with a direction to dismiss the libel.

Mr. Justice Brown, with whom was Mr. Justice Brewer, dissenting:

I am unable to distinguish this case in principle from that of United States v. Dewey, just decided, 188 U. S. 254, ante, 463, 23 Sup. Ct. Rep. 415. In that case, the vessels were sunk and partially destroyed, but were subsequently raised, hauled into the slip, sufficiently cleaned up and overhauled to put to sea for Hong Kong under their own steam. The repairs were completed at Hong Kong, and the vessels commissioned as a part of the Navy.

In the present case, the Infanta Maria Teresa was also sunk and partially destroyed, but was raised, taken to Guantanamo, temporarily repaired, a crew put on board, was started for a port in the United States under her own steam, and was subsequently lost in a gale of wind. All the operations connected with her raising and repair were conducted by contractors engaged by the Navy Department, and supervised by a board of that department.

I submit that the fact that the vessels in Manila bay were actually repaired and commissioned as vessels of the Navy, and the Infanta Maria Teresa was not, does not constitute a distinction in principle between the two cases; but the fact that in both cases the government elected to take possession of the vessels, and undertook to repair them for purposes of its own, is the turning point in the case. Had the vessels in Manila bay been abandoned after being raised, and before they were repaired temporarily, had the Infanta Maria Teresa been either abandoned or lost before reaching Guantanamo bay, or she had been there abandoned, I should have had no doubt that they could not either of them be considered as prizes of war. But the fact that, after being examined, the Maria Teresa was temporarily repaired at Guantanamo and sent to Norfolk, with a crew on board and under her own steam, indicates clearly to my mind that the government had elected to make the vessel its own property, and her subsequent loss was the loss of the government, and not of the captors. In fact, it is the election, and not the result of the election, which determines the ownership of the property.

MUTUAL LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY OF NEW YORK, Plff. in Err.,
v.
ALPHONSINE MCGREW.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 291-313.)

Error to state court—Federal question—when raised in time—right specially set up or claimed.

1. A Federal question first raised in a petition for rehearing in the highest state court is raised too late to confer jurisdiction upon the Supreme Court of the United States, where such petition was denied without opinion.
2. An averment in an answer in a suit by a divorced wife on a policy of insurance on her former's husband's life, that, by virtue of the Hawaiian laws and the decree of divorce thereunder, all her rights in such policy had passed to and become the property of her husband, is not the special assertion of a right or claim under the treaty with Hawaii, which is essential, under U. S. Rev. Stat. § 709 (U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 575), to confer jurisdiction on the Supreme Court of the United States to review a judgment of a state court adverse to such right or claim.

3. A decision of a state court cannot be reviewed in the Supreme Court of the United States on the ground that by it full faith and credit were denied to an Hawaiian judgment, in violation of U. S. Const. art. 4, § 1, as carried out by U. S. Rev. Stat. § 905 (U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 677), where the judgment of the trial court was rendered prior to the act of April 30, 1900 (31 Stat. at L. 142, chap. 339), providing a government for Hawaii, and such contention was not brought to the attention of the highest state court in any form.

[No. 109.]

Argued January 15, 16, 1903. Decided February 23, 1903.

IN ERROR to the Supreme Court of the State of California to review a judgment which affirmed a judgment of the Superior Court of the City and County of San Francisco in favor of plaintiff in a suit on a policy of life insurance. Dismissed.

See same case below, 132 Cal. 85, 64 Pac. 103.

Statement by Mr. Chief Justice Fuller:

This is a writ of error to revise the judgment of the supreme court of the state of California, affirming a judgment of the superior court of the city and county of San Francisco in favor of Alphonsine McGrew and against the Mutual Life Insurance Company of New York. 132 Cal. 85, 64 Pac. 103.

*The action was brought on a policy of in-[292]surance payable to Alphonsine C. McGrew, and in the amended answer to the complaint the recovery of a decree of divorce was averred, and it was alleged: "That under and by virtue of the Hawaiian law in force at the time said decree of divorce was granted and now in force, it is provided: 'When a divorce is decreed for the adultery or other offense amounting thereto, of the wife, the husband shall hold her personal estate forever, and he shall hold her real estate so long as they shall live; and if he shall survive her, and there shall be issue of the marriage born alive, he shall hold her real estate for the term of his own life, as a tenant by the curtesy; provided that the court may make such reasonable provision for the divorced wife out of any real estate that may have belonged to her, as it may deem proper.' That under and by virtue of the foregoing provision of law, and decree of divorce, all rights of the said Alphonsine C. McGrew in and to said policy of insurance did pass to the said Henri Golden McGrew and become his absolute property, free and clear of any claims of the said Alphonsine C. McGrew, plaintiff herein, whatsoever."

NOTE.—On writs of error from United States Supreme Court to state courts—see notes to Hamblin v. Western Land Co. 37 L. ed. U. S. 267; Kipley v. Illinois 42 L. ed. U. S. 998; and Re Buchanan, 39 L. ed. U. S. 884.

The amended answer also averred that after McGrew's death one Carter was duly appointed in Hawaii administrator of his estate; and as such administrator he commenced suit against the insurance company in a circuit court of Hawaii on the policy of insurance; recovered judgment October 15, 1895, for the full amount; that the supreme court of Hawaii affirmed the judgment, and subsequently denied an application for rehearing, and that the judgment was thereafter paid.

The trial court made findings of fact as follows:

"1. On the 14th day of September, 1892, this defendant made, executed, and delivered to Henri G. McGrew, a certain policy of insurance, being the same policy mentioned in the complaint herein, wherein and whereby the said defendant promised and agreed to pay unto the plaintiff, Alphonsine McGrew, the sum of five thousand dollars ($5,000.00), upon the death of the said Henri G. McGrew, during the continuance of said policy of insurance, provided said Alphonsine McGrew were living at the time of the death of said Henri G. McGrew, and [293] upon *acceptance of satisfactory proof of the death of said Henri G. McGrew, during the continuance of said policy.

"2. Henri G. McGrew died on the 22d day of October 1894, in Honolulu, Hawaiian islands, and said plaintiff survived him.

"3. Said Henri G. McGrew, upon said 14th day of September, 1892, and continuously and up to the time of his death, was a resident of, and domiciled in, the Hawaiian islands.

"4. On the 9th day of February, 1895, plaintiff presented to said defendant satisfactory proof of the death of said Henri G. McGrew, and demanded of said defendant the payment of the sum of five thousand ($5,000.00) dollars, under and in accordance with the terms of said policy of insurance, but defendant has never paid the same, or any part thereof.

"5. Subsequent to the said 14th day of September, 1892, and prior to the 8th day of February, 1894, the said Henri G. McGrew became of unsound mind, and thereafter, upon due proceedings had, Charles L. Carter, residing in the city of Honolulu, was duly appointed the guardian of the person and estate of said Henri G. McGrew, an incompetent person, and continued to hold such office of guardian at the time of the filing of the libel of divorce, and the proceedings thereunder hereinafter mentioned.

"6. On the 8th day of February, in the year 1894, Charles L. Carter, as guardian and on behalf of Henri G. McGrew, an incompetent person, filed in the circuit court of the first judicial circuit of the Republic of Hawaii, which said court has jurisdiction over said parties and over libels for divorce, a libel praying for a divorce from said plaintiff on the ground of her adultery; and thereafter, and on the 11th day of April, 1894, this plaintiff, being then a resident of, and domiciled in, said Hawaiian islands, appeared in said action and contested the same.

"7. On the 23d day of August, 1894, a decision was rendered, and on the 24th day of August, 1894, a decree was signed in said cause by the said circuit court, dissolving the bonds of matrimony theretofore existing between said Henri G. McGrew and this plaintiff, upon the ground of the adultery of this plaintiff.

"8. On the 5th day of April, 1894, this plaintiff left the Hawaiian *islands with the [29 intention of not returning to said islands, but of coming to the state of California and of making her home in, and permanently residing in, said state. And thereafter, and in due course of her voyage from the Hawaiian islands and in said month of April, this plaintiff arrived in the state of California, and with said intention above mentioned, thereupon took up her residence in, and made her home in, said state, and with said intention has ever since continuously remained in, and resided in, and made her home in, said state of California; and on the 23d and 24th days of August, 1894, was actually in, and residing in, said state, with the intention above mentioned of permanently residing and making her home in said state of California.

"9. Prior to said 5th day of April, 1894, this plaintiff had been excluded by said Charles L. Carter, as such guardian, from the home of said Henri G. McGrew, and was by him thereafter prevented from returning, and has ever since and until the death of said Henri G. McGrew been by him prevented from returning to the same, and was, on said 5th day of April, excluded from said home by said guardian.

"10. On said 5th day of April, 1894, this plaintiff had no home, and has never since had a home in the Hawaiian islands."

[Findings 11, 12, 13, 14, 16, and 17 referred to the filing of a bill of exceptions by Mrs. McGrew in the divorce suit, and the statute and rule of court of Hawaii in respect of the practice in relation thereto.]

"15. The following Hawaiian law was in force in the Hawaiian islands at the time said decree of divorce was granted, to wit: When a divorce is decreed for the adultery or other offense amounting thereto of the wife, the husband shall hold her personal estate forever."

And the court concluded, as matter of law, that the rights of Mrs. McGrew in and to the policy and the moneys due thereunder never passed to her husband, nor did the policy or money due thereunder ever become his property; and that the insurance company was indebted to Mrs. McGrew on said policy in the sum of $5,000 and interest. Judgment was rendered accordingly *October 11, [295] 1897, and the case was carried to the supreme court of the state, and the record filed therein December 13, 1897. The judgment was affirmed February 28, 1901, and a petition for rehearing denied. 132 Cal. 85, 64 Pac. 103. This writ of error was allowed by the chief justice of that court.

The supreme court of California held that the construction given by the courts of the Republic of Hawaii to the statute of that Republic that permitted an action for a divorce to be maintained by the guardian of an incompetent person should be accepted, although such was not the law of California, and that the judgment of divorce rendered in that Republic, in pursuance of the statute so construed, should, by comity, be given effect by the courts of California as a decree of divorce; that the statute of Hawaii declaring that, where a divorce is decreed for the adultery of the wife, the husband shall take her personal estate, could have no operation pending the suit for divorce, and not until after the entry of judgment; that Mrs. McGrew was bound by the decree of divorce in Hawaii, so far as the dissolution of the bond of matrimony was concerned, she having appeared to the action; that when a husband commences a suit for divorce, the wife may acquire a separate actual domicile by change of residence from one country to another pending the suit; that Mrs. McGrew became domiciled in California prior to the entry of the decree, and that the statute of Hawaii declaring the forfeiture of her personal property to the husband could not operate in California to affect her, or to give to the husband a policy of insurance, which, by its terms, was payable to her, and which, at the time of the decree, was governed by the law of her domicile in California. No allusion whatever was made by the supreme court to the treaty between Hawaii and the United States.

The decisions of the supreme court of Hawaii are reported, McGrew, a Person non compos, by his Guardian, Charles L. Carter, v. Alphonsine McGrew, 9 Hawaii, 475; McGrew, etc., v. McGrew, 10 Hawaii, 600; Carter v. Mutual L. Ins. Co. 10 Hawaii, 117, 559, 562.

[296] In the opinion on the last hearing, December 16, 1896, the *court observed: "The company, not having brought the widow into court by interpleader, is in the unfortunate position of being subjected to two suits,—one by the administrator here, the other by the widow in California. It must now rely on the assumption that the two courts will take the same view of the law." The court also considered the point that the statute in question, § 1331 of the Civil Code, was repealed by implication by the married women's act of 1888. But it held that the section was not inconsistent with that act, and that it might "be regarded as a special provision for a penalty or forfeiture in case of a divorce for the offense of adultery." And the court said that it was glad to know that the section had been repealed. Section 1331 was repealed May 12, 1896 (Hawaii Laws 1896, p. 70, act 24).

Article 8 of the treaty between the United States and the Kingdom of Hawaii was as follows:

"The contracting parties engage, in regard to the personal privileges, that the citizens of the United States of America shall enjoy in the dominions of his Majesty, the King of the Hawaiian islands, and the subjects of his said Majesty in the United States of America, that they shall have free and undoubted right to travel and to reside in the states of the two high contracting parties, subject to the same precautions of police which are practised towards the subjects or citizens of the most favored nations. They shall be entitled to occupy dwellings and warehouses, and to dispose of their personal property of every kind and description, . . . and their heirs or representatives, being subjects or citizens of the other contracting party, shall succeed to their personal goods, whether by testament or ab intestato; and may take possession thereof, either by themselves or by others acting for them, and dispose of the same at will, paying to the profit of the respective governments such dues only as the inhabitants of the country wherein the said goods are shall be subject to pay in like cases. And in case of the absence of the heir and representative such care shall be taken of the said goods as would be taken of the goods of a native of the same country in like case, until the lawful owner may take measures for receiving them. And if a *question should arise among several [297] claimants as to which of them said goods belonged, the same shall be decided finally by the laws and judges of the land wherein the said goods are. Where, on the decease of any person holding real estate within the territories of one party, such real estate would, by the laws of the land, descend on a citizen or subject of the other, were he not disqualified by alienage, such citizen or subject," etc. 9 Stat. at L. 977.

Messrs. Julien T. Davies and Frederic D. McKenney argued the cause, and, with Messrs. Edward Injman Short, William H. Chickering, and Warren Gregory, filed a brief for plaintiff in error:

The test of jurisdiction is, Was the mind of the state court directed to the fact that a right protected by treaty was relied upon?

French v. Hopkins, 124 U. S. 524, 31 L. ed. 536, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 589; Brown v. Massachusetts, 144 U. S. 579, 36 L. ed. 550, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 757; Butler v. Gage, 138 U. S. 61, 34 L. ed. 872, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 235; Sayward v. Denny, 158 U. S. 184, 39 L. ed. 942, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 777; F. G. Ooley State Co. v. Butler County, 166 U. S. 653, 41 L. ed. 1151, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 709.

The question is, Did the party bringing the case here intend to assert below a Federal right?

Michigan Sugar Co. v. Dix, 185 U. S. 113, 46 L. ed. 829, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 581.

This court has frequently taken jurisdiction where the judgment of a sister state is pleaded as res judicata in the state court, although no specification, in so many words, was made in the pleading that such judgment violates the faith and credit clause of the Constitution.

Bell v. Bell, 181 U. S. 175, 45 L. ed. 804, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 551.

The court has never required that the treaty or act of Congress under which the party claims who brings the final judgment of a state court into review before this court should have been pleaded specially, or spread on the record.

Hickie v. Starke, 1 Pet. 98, 7 L. ed. 69.

This court has never held that the Federal question must appear in the record by direct language.

Murray v. Charleston, 96 U. S. 442, 24 L. ed. 761.

When a Federal question is necessarily involved in the state court's decision, this court has jurisdiction although the Federal right was not specifically called to the attention of the state court.

Capital City Dairy Co. v. Ohio, 183 U. S. 238, 46 L. ed. 171, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 120; Green Bay & M. Canal Co. v. Patten Paper Co. 172 U. S. 58, 43 L. ed. 364, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 97; Roby v. Colehour, 146 U. S. 153, 36 L. ed. 922, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 47; Eureka Lake & Y. Canal Co. v. Yuba County Super. Ct. 116 U. S. 410, 29 L. ed. 671, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 429; Arrowsmith v. Harmoning, 118 U. S. 194, 30 L. ed. 243, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1023; Furman v. Nichol, 8 Wall. 44, 19 L. ed. 370; Hickie v. Starke, 1 Pet. 94, 7 L. ed. 67; Martin v. Hunter, 1 Wheat. 305, 4 L. ed. 97; Craig v. Missouri, 4 Pet. 410, 7 L. ed. 903; New Orleans v. De Armas, 9 Pet. 224, 9 L. ed. 109; Crowell v. Randell, 10 Pet. 368, 9 L. ed. 458.

If the courts of this country, and especially this court, can be supposed to take judicial notice of anything without pleading it specially, it is the Constitution of the United States. And if the plaintiff and defendant in their pleadings make a case which necessarily comes within some of the provisions of that instrument, this court surely can recognize the fact without requiring the pleader to say in words, "This paragraph of the Constitution is the one involved in this case."

Proprietors of Bridges v. Hoboken Land & Improv. Co. 1 Wall. 116, 17 L. ed. 571.

The decision of the alleged Federal question was necessary to the judgment rendered, and hence gives jurisdiction.

Brooks v. Missouri, 124 U. S. 394, 31 L. ed. 454, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 443; Armstrong v. Athens County Treasurer, 16 Pet. 281, 10 L. ed. 965.

It is sufficient if the trial court and state appellate court pass upon the Federal question, and such passing upon the question of itself suffices to present the Federal question, even if it had been otherwise ambiguously "raised on the record."

Tullock v. Mulvane, 184 U. S. 497, 46 L. ed. 657, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 372.

Raising the question on appeal is sufficient.

Sweringen v. St. Louis, 185 U. S. 45, 46 L. ed. 799, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 569.

A treaty and constitutional right "may be denied as well by evading a direct decision thereon as by positive action."

Chapman v. Goodnow, 123 U. S. 540, sub nom. Chapman v. Crane, 31 L. ed. 235, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 211; Des Moines Nav. & R. 188 U. S.

Co. v. Iowa Homestead Co. 123 U. S. 552, 31 L. ed. 202, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 217.

Raising the Federal question for the first time in the appellate state court, if it be there considered or necessarily involved in the decision, gives the right of review in this court.

Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. Elliott, 184 U. S. 530, 46 L. ed. 673, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 446; Eric R. Co. v. Purdy, 185 U. S. 148, 46 L. ed. 847, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 605; Marwell v. Newbold, 18 How. 511, 15 L. ed. 506; Mallett v. North Carolina, 181 U. S. 589, 45 L. ed. 1015, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 730; Rothschild v. Knight, 184 U. S. 339, 46 L. ed. 579, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 391; King v. Cross, 175 U. S. 396, 44 L. ed. 211, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 131; Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Sturm, 174 U. S. 710, 43 L. ed. 1144, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 797.

If the mind of the state court is directed to the fact that a right protected by the treaty is relied upon, it is sufficient.

Eastern Bldg. & L. Asso. v. Welling, 181 U. S. 47, 45 L. ed. 739, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 531.

If the Federal question was raised for the first time by a petition for rehearing, this court has jurisdiction, provided the state court in denying the petition for rehearing noticed the Federal question and passed upon it.

Mallett v. North Carolina, 181 U. S. 589, 45 L. ed. 1015, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 730.

Mr. J. Hubley Ashton argued the cause for defendant in error.

Messrs. Richard Bayne and H. G. Platt filed a brief for defendant in error:

There is no Federal question in this case, because plaintiff in error did not claim in or for itself any right under the treaty.

Owings v. Norwood, 5 Cranch. 344, 3 L. ed. 120; Verden v. Coleman, 1 Black, 472, 17 L. ed. 161; Henderson v. Tennessee, 10 How. 323, 13 L. ed. 439; Hale v. Gaines, 22 How. 160, 16 L. ed. 269; Giles v. Little, 134 U. S. 650, 33 L. ed. 1064, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 623; Tyler v. Registration Court Judges, 179 U. S. 407, 45 L. ed. 253, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 206.

The distinction between cases arising under the 1st and 2d clause of § 709, and those arising under the 3d clause of said section, must be kept in mind in considering the decisions upon this section.

Tyler v. Registration Court Judges, 179 U. S. 408, 45 L. ed. 253, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 206; Columbia Water Power Co. v. Columbia Electric Street R. Light & P. Co. 172 U. S. 488, 43 L. ed. 525, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 247; Yazoo & M. Valley R. Co. v. Adams, 180 U. S. 14, 45 L. ed. 404, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 240.

A Federal question under the 3d clause cannot be raised by inference or implication.

F. G. Oxley Stave Co. v. Butler County, 166 U. S. 655, 41 L. ed. 1151, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 709; Green Bay & M. Canal Co. v. Patten Paper Co. 172 U. S. 67, 43 L. ed. 368, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 97.

The proper time and the proper way for setting up this right is in the trial court.

Spies v. Illinois, 123 U. S. 181, 31 L. ed. 91, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 21; Baldwin v. Kansas, 129 U. S. 57, 32 L. ed. 642, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 193; Miller v. Texas, 153 U. S. 538, 38 L. ed. 813, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 874; Parmelee v. Lawrence, 11 Wall. 39, 20 L. ed. 49.

It cannot be first set up in the argument in the state supreme court.

Baldwin v. Kansas, 129 U. S. 57, 32 L. ed. 642, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 193; Zadig v. Baldwin, 166 U. S. 488, 41 L. ed. 1088, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 639; Sayward v. Denny, 158 U. S. 183, 39 L. ed. 942, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 777; Parmelee v. Lawrence, 11 Wall. 39, 20 L. ed. 49.

The briefs in the state supreme court are not a part of the record.

Sayward v. Denny, 158 U. S. 183, 39 L. ed. 942, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 777; Loeb v. Columbia Twp. 179 U. S. 485, 45 L. ed. 289, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 174.

The same rule applies to the petition for rehearing, unless the state court considers and decides the Federal question raised therein.

Capital Nat. Bank v. First Nat. Bank, 172 U. S. 431, 43 L. ed. 504, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 202; Mallett v. North Carolina, 181 U. S. 592, 45 L. ed. 1017, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 730.

By analogy we may refer to the decisions under § 5 of the judiciary act of March 3, 1891, providing for writs of error from the district or circuit courts in any case involving the construction or application of any law of the United States.

Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Ann Arbor R. Co. 178 U. S. 243, 44 L. ed. 1054, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 867; Ansbro v. United States, 159 U. S. 697, 40 L. ed. 310, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 187; Muse v. Arlington Hotel Co. 168 U. S. 435, 42 L. ed. 532, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 109.

This court has repeatedly held that it will take jurisdiction only when a Federal question was actually raised and decided, not when it simply might have been raised.

Maxwell v. Newbold, 18 How. 511, 15 L. ed. 506; Crowell v. Randell, 10 Pet. 368, 9 L. ed. 458; Brown v. Colorado, 106 U. S. 95, 27 L. ed. 132, 1 Sup. Ct. Rep. 175; Hagar v. California, 154 U. S. 639, and 24 L. ed. 1044, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1186; Chouteau v. Gibson, 111 U. S. 200, 28 L. ed. 400, 4 Sup. Ct. Rep. 340.

The mere pleading of a judgment of another state, without specially setting up the right claimed under article 4 of the Constitution, is not sufficient.

Jacobs v. Marks, 182 U. S. 583, 45 L. ed. 1241, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 865.

Mr. Chief Justice Fuller delivered the opinion of the court:

Appellate jurisdiction was conferred on this court by the 25th section of the judiciary act of 1789, over final judgments and decrees in any suit in the highest court of law or equity of a state in which a decision in the suit could be had, in three classes of cases: The first class was where the validity of a treaty or statute of, or an authority exercised under, the United States, was drawn in question, and the decision was against their validity; the second was where the validity of a statute of, or an authority exercised under, any state, on the ground of their being repugnant to the Constitution, treaties, or laws of the United States, was drawn in question, and the decision was in favor of their validity; and the third was "or where is drawn in question the construction of any clause of the Constitution, or of a treaty, or statute of, or commission held under, the United States, and the decision is against the title, right, privilege, or exemption specially set up or claimed by either party under such clause of the said Constitution, treaty, statute, or commission." 1 Stat. at L. 73, 85, chap. 20, § 25.

By the 2d section of the act of February 5, 1867 (14 Stat. at L. 385, 386, chap. 28), the original 25th section was re-enacted with certain changes, and, among others, the words just quoted were made to read: "Or where any title, right, privilege, *or immu-[308] nity is claimed under the Constitution, or any treaty or statute of, or commission held, or authority exercised under, the United States, and the decision is against the title, right, privilege, or immunity specially set up or claimed by either party under such Constitution, treaty, statute, commission, or authority." And this was reproduced in § 709 of the Revised Statutes (U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 575). The change from the drawing in question of the construction of a clause of the Constitution, or of a treaty, statute, or commission, to the claim of a right under the Constitution, treaty, statute, commission, or authority, emphasized the necessity that the right must be specially set up and denied.

In Baltimore & P. R. Co. v. Hopkins, 130 U. S. 210, 32 L. ed. 908, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 503, the distinction between the denial of validity and the denial of a title, right, privilege, or immunity specially set up or claimed, is pointed out, as well as the distinction, between the construction of a statute or the extent of an authority and the validity of a statute or of an authority.

Our jurisdiction of this writ of error is asserted under the third of the classes of cases enumerated in § 709 (U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 575), and it is thoroughly settled that in order to maintain it, the right, title, privilege or immunity relied on must not only be specially set up or claimed, but at the proper time and in the proper way.

The proper time is in the trial court whenever that is required by the state practice, in accordance with which the highest court of a state will not revise the judgment of the court below on questions not therein raised. Spies v. Illinois, 123 U. S. 131, sub nom. Ex parte Spies, 31 L. ed. 80, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 21; Jacobi v. Alabama, 187 U. S. 133, ante, 106, 23 Sup. Ct. Rep. 48; Layton v. Missouri, 187 U. S. 356, ante, 214, 23 Sup. Ct. Rep. 137; Erie R. Co. v. Purdy, 185 U. S. 148, 46 L. ed. 847, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 605.

The proper way is by pleading, motion, exception, or other action, part, or being made part, of the record, showing that the claim was presented to the court. Loeb v. Columbia Twp. 179 U. S. 472, 481, 45 L. ed. 280, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 174. It is not properly made when made for the first time in a petition for rehearing after judgment; or in the petition for writ of error; or in the briefs of counsel not made part of the record. Sayward v. Denny, 158 U. S. 180, 39 L. ed. 941, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 777; Zadig v. Baldwin, 166 U. S. 488, 41 L. ed. 1088, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 639. The assertion of the right must be made unmistakably, and not left to mere inference. F. G. Oxley Stave Co. v. Butler County, 166 U. S. 648, 41 L. ed. 1149, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 709.

If the highest court of a state entertains a petition for rehearing, which raises Federal questions, and decides them, that will be sufficient (Mallett v. North Carolina, 181 U. S. 589, 45 L. ed. 1015, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. [309] 730); or *if the court decides a Federal question which it assumes is distinctly presented to it in some way. Home for Incurables v. New York, 187 U. S. 155, ante, 117, 23 Sup. Ct. Rep. 84; Sweringen v. St. Louis, 185 U. S. 46, 46 L. ed. 799, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 569.

Jurisdiction may be maintained where a definite issue as to the possession of the right is distinctly deducible from the record and necessarily disposed of, but this cannot be made out by resort to judicial knowledge. Powell v. Brunswick County, 150 U. S. 433, 37 L. ed. 1134, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 166; Mountain View Min. & Mill. Co. v. McFadden, 180 U. S. 533, 45 L. ed. 656, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 488; Arkansas v. Kansas & T. Coal Co. 183 U. S. 185, 46 L. ed. 144, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 47.

Counsel by their specification of errors, under rule 21, assert the Federal questions to be that the decision of the supreme court of California was against a title, right, privilege, or immunity claimed by plaintiff in error under the treaty between the United States and Hawaii. And that the decision was in contravention of § 1 of article 4 of the Constitution.

1. We do not find that any claim under the treaty was made in the trial court, and the rule of practice of the supreme court of California is that it will not pass on questions raised for the first time in that court, and which might and should have been raised in the trial court. Stoddard v. Treadwell, 29 Cal. 281; King v. Meyer, 35 Cal. 646; Deady v. Townsend, 57 Cal. 298; Williams v. McDonald, 58 Cal. 527; Anderson v. Black, 70 Cal. 226, 231, 11 Pac. 700.

Neither the pleading of the decree of divorce nor of the statute of Hawaii providing for the forfeiture of Mrs. McGrew's rights in the policy of insurance, as construed by the supreme court of Hawaii, nor of both together, amounted to specially asserting any right under the treaty. Those averments did not assert that claim in the trial court in such manner as to bring it to the attention of that court, nor, indeed, to show that any right under the treaty was present in the mind of counsel.

188 U. S. U. S., Book 47.

To give them that effect would be in the teeth of our decision in F. G. Oxley Stave Co. v. Butler County, and numerous other decisions. That case involved a decree, in respect of which there was a general allegation that it was *rendered against dead per-[310] sons, as well as in the absence of necessary parties who had no notice of the suit; and we held that such general allegations did not meet the statutory requirement that the final judgment of a state court may be re-examined here if it denies some title, right, privilege, or immunity "specially set up or claimed" under the Constitution or authority of the United States. Mr. Justice Harlan said: "This statutory requirement is not met if such declaration is so general in its character that the purpose of the party to assert a Federal right is left to mere inference. It is the settled doctrine of this court that the jurisdiction of the circuit courts of the United States must appear affirmatively from the record, and that it is not sufficient that it may be inferred argumentatively from the facts stated. . . . Upon like grounds, the jurisdiction of this court to re-examine the final judgment of a state court cannot arise from mere inference, but only from averments so distinct and positive as to place it beyond question that the party bringing a case here from such court intended to assert a Federal right."

This also disposes of the suggestion that the offering in evidence of the judgment in the suit by the administrator, and of evidence of its payment, raised a Federal question under the treaty, for no such ground was taken in relation to that evidence, to say nothing of the fact that Mrs. McGrew was not a party to that suit.

In the bill of exceptions there is an enumeration of certain objections to the entry of judgment and certain errors of law alleged to have occurred during the trial, and to have been excepted to by defendant, which embraces the objection that the decision of the trial court was against law, because, among other things, the findings of fact did not determine the issues raised by the allegation in the answer quoted in the statement preceding this opinion, and that the court erred in sustaining the objection of plaintiff to the introduction of evidence of payment by the company to the administrator of the amount due on the policy. But there is no reference to the treaty, and all this no more set up the claim than the answer itself.

In fact, the question was not even raised in the supreme *court, though, if so, the[311] court was not then bound to regard it. Reference was made in the briefs in the supreme court to the treaty, but those references did not specially set up or claim any right as secured by the treaty, nor were the briefs made part of the record by any certificate or entry duly made, and our attention has not been called to any statute or rule of court in California making them such.

In the petition for rehearing it was said that the treaty made the decision in Carter v. Mutual L. Ins. Co. controlling, and if that could be considered as a compliance with § 709 (U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 575), which we do not think it could, it came too late, and the petition was denied without an opinion. In doing so that court adhered to the usual course of its judgments, and its action cannot be revised by us. If the supreme court of California had seen fit on that petition to entertain the contention of plaintiff in error as asserting a Federal right, and had then decided it adversely, the case would have occupied a different position.

Where a state court refuses to give effect to the judgment of a court of the United States, rendered upon a point in dispute, and with jurisdiction of the case and the parties, it denies the validity of an authority exercised under the United States; and where a state court refuses to give effect to the judgment of a court of another state it refuses to give full faith and credit to that judgment. The one case falls within the first class of cases named in § 709 (U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 575), and the other within the third class.

Where a judgment of another state is pleaded in defense, and issue is made upon it, it may well be ruled that that sets up a right under the 3d subdivision, because the effect of the judgment is the only question in the case; but here the plea of the decree of divorce and the statute did not necessarily suggest or amount to a claim under the treaty. They were properly admitted in evidence under the state law for what they might be worth as a defense, but that did not involve the assertion of an absolute right under the treaty.

The supreme court of Hawaii in its second opinion in the administrator's case said that the company, not having brought Mrs. McGrew in by interplea, must rely on the [312] courts of California *taking the same view that the courts of Hawaii did, but did not intimate that the courts of California were compelled by treaty to take that view.

Nor can this failure to claim under the treaty be supplied by judicial knowledge. We so held in Mountain View Min. & Mill. Co. v. McFadden, 180 U. S. 533, 45 L. ed. 656, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 488, where we ruled that judicial knowledge could not be resorted to to raise controversies not presented by the record; and Professor Thayer's Treatise on Evidence was cited, in which, referring to certain cases relating to the pleadings and matters of record, it was said "that the right of a court to act upon what is, in point of fact, known to it must be subordinate to those requirements of form and orderly communication which regulate the mode of bringing controversies into court, and of stating and conducting them." Arkansas v. Kansas & T. Coal Co. 183 U. S. 190, 46 L. ed. 147, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 49.

That rule must necessarily govern us in passing on the question of our appellate jurisdiction under § 709 (U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 575).

The supreme court of California held that the Hawaiian statute had no force in California "except by comity;" accorded full effect to the decree of divorce as dissolving the bond of matrimony, but decided that Mrs. McGrew was not affected by the statute because she was not domiciled in Hawaii, and was domiciled in California, when that decree was rendered, and when the statute could have operated if she had been domiciled in Hawaii, and that the statute "had no operation upon her or her personal property here; for the law which governs personal property is the law of the domicile." As to whether a Federal question was involved at all, see Roth v. Ehman, 107 U. S. 319, 27 L. ed. 499, 2 Sup. Ct. Rep. 312; Roth v. Roth, 104 Ill. 35, 44 Am. Rep. 81; Württemberg Treaty, 1844 (8 Stat. at L. 588), Comp. Treaties (1899) 656.

It is argued that by the judgment against the company in favor of McGrew's administrator, the Hawaiian courts had adjudicated that Mrs. McGrew's title passed to the administrator. But Mrs. McGrew was not a party to that action, and was not bound by it, so that it could be pleaded against her. The insurance company did not litigate the question of ownership on her behalf, and was in no way authorized to represent *her. [313] In any point of view we return to the contention that it was in virtue of the treaty that the California courts were obliged to accept the Hawaiian decisions, and the record fails to show that a right or title was set up thereunder.

2. The second question indicated by plaintiff in error is that the decision was in conflict with § 1 of article 4 of the Constitution, providing that full faith and credit in each state shall be given to the public acts, records, and public proceedings of every other state, as carried out by § 905 of the Revised Statutes (U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 677), because it is insisted that prior to the decision this constitutional provision applied to Hawaii, and should be regarded as an enlargement of and connected with the alleged claim of right under the treaty. But an alleged right under a treaty between two foreign nations is inconsistent with an alleged right arising under the Federal Constitution, and as a right under the Constitution it was not at any time or in any way brought to the attention of the state courts. The judgment of the trial court was rendered October 11, 1897. The resolutions of annexation were passed July 7, 1898. The act to provide a government for Hawaii was passed April 30, 1900 [31 Stat. at L. 142, chap. 339]. By this act it was provided that the laws of Hawaii, not inconsistent with the Constitution and laws of the United States, or the provisions of the act, should remain in force, subject to repeal or amendment, but the act forfeiting the wife's property was repealed May 12, 1896. Hawaii Laws 1896, p. 70.

The judgment of the supreme court of California was rendered February 28, 1901, and we cannot retain jurisdiction on the ground of the assertion of a Federal right which did not exist when the judgment was rendered in the trial court, and which was not brought to the attention of the highest court of the state in any way whatever.

Writ of error dismissed.

Mr. Justice Peckham took no part in the consideration and disposition of this case.

Mr. Justice White dissented.

[314]*JOHN D. HOOKER and A. E. Pomeroy, Plffs. in Err.,
v.

CITY OF LOS ANGELES.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 314-321.)

Error to state court—Federal question—claims under Spanish and Mexican grants—construction of state statute—Federal rights specially set up or claimed.

1. A decision of a state court adverse to the claim that, under Mexican and Spanish grants confirmed and patented under the act of Congress of March 3, 1851 (9 Stat. at L. 631, chap. 41), the owners of the land were entitled to riparian rights and subterranean waters, involves no Federal question reviewable in the Supreme Court of the United States, where the validity of such act was not drawn in question.
2. The construction by a state court of a law of the state as authorizing the court to try and determine in a condemnation proceeding an adverse claim of the plaintiff therein to an interest in the property sought to be condemned is conclusive on the Supreme Court of the United States on writ of error to that court.
3. A decision of a state court in condemnation proceedings is not reviewable in the Supreme Court of the United States on the theory that due process of law was denied thereby, or property taken without just compensation, where there is nothing in the record which adequately shows that the state court was led to suppose that any claim was made under the Constitution of the United States, or that any ruling involved a decision against a right set up under that instrument.

[No. 149.]

Argued January 23, 1903. Decided February 23, 1903.

IN ERROR to the Supreme Court of the State of California to review a judgment affirming a judgment of the Superior Court of the County of Los Angeles in favor of the City of Los Angeles in a condemnation proceeding. Dismissed.

See same case below, 124 Cal. 597, 57 Pac. 585.

Statement by Mr. Chief Justice Fuller:

This is a writ of error to the supreme court of the state of California to review

NOTE.—On writs of error from United States Supreme Court to state courts—see notes to Hamblin v. Western Land Co. 37 L. ed. U. S. 267; Kipley v. Illinois, 42 L. ed. U. S. 998; and Re Buchanan, 39 L. ed. U. S. 884.
188 U. S.

a judgment of that court affirming the judgment of the superior court of the county of Los Angeles, California, in favor of the city of Los Angeles, and against Hooker and Pomeroy. The city brought suit against Hooker and Pomeroy, to condemn all their "estate, right, title, and interest" in and to certain tracts of land, described in the complaint, for the purpose of enabling the city "to construct and maintain thereon the 'headworks' of its projected system for supplying water to its inhabitants for private and municipal purposes." All questions except the amount of compensation to be awarded were by stipulation tried by the court. The jury returned a verdict awarding $23,000 as the value "of an estate in fee simple in the lands described in the complaint, including all their elements of value, subject to the paramount right of the city of Los Angeles to take from the Los Angeles river, from time to time, all the water that may be needed at such time for the use of the inhabitants of said city, and for all municipal and public uses and purposes therein," and $2,000 as damages to the remaining *portion of the tract of which that[315] land formed a part. Judgment was rendered thereon for the amount so found, and costs. The case was carried to the supreme court, and the judgment affirmed. 124 Cal. 597, 57 Pac. 585.

Mr. J. S. Chapman argued the cause, and, with Messrs. John Garber, R. H. F. Varie, and J. G. North, filed a brief for plaintiffs in error:

The claim set up in the answer, of the rights of a riparian owner, and the ownership of the percolating waters in these lands, derived from the patent of the United States, as well as from the confirmed Mexican grants, presented a Federal question, and, the decision being against that right, this court has jurisdiction.

Packer v. Bird, 137 U. S. 661, 34 L. ed. 819, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 210; French-Glenn Live Stock Co. v. Springer, 185 U. S. 47, 46 L. ed. 800, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 563; Shively v. Bowlby, 152 U. S. 1, 38 L. ed. 331, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 548; Washougal & L. Transp. Co. v. Dalles, P. & A. Nav. Co. 27 Wash. 490, 68 Pac. 74.

Whether the proceedings in this case did result in taking the property of the plaintiffs in error without just compensation is a Federal question. This court has established the proposition that taking private property for a public use without just compensation does deprive the party of his property without due process of law.

Kaukauna Water Power Co. v. Green Bay & M. Canal Co. 142 U. S. 254, 35 L. ed. 1004, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 173; Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Chicago, 166 U. S. 226, 41 L. ed. 979, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 581.

It is quite sufficient if it appear that the Federal question arose and was necessarily decided.

Kaukauna Water Power Co. v. Green Bay & M. Canal Co. 142 U. S. 254, 35 L. ed. 1004, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 173; Harris v. Den-

nie, 3 Pet. 292, 7 L. ed. 683; Dewey v. Des Moines, 173 U. S. 193, 43 L. ed. 665, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 379.

No one can make a specific claim to the protection of the Constitution of the United States, or any act of Congress, or any treaty made by or under the authority of the United States, in the pleadings, under the law of California.

Green v. Palmer, 15 Cal. 411, 76 Am. Dec. 492; Druex v. Domec, 18 Cal. 88; Smith v. Richmond, 19 Cal. 483; Bowen v. Aubrey, 22 Cal. 566; Guy v. Washburn, 23 Cal. 112; Willson v. Cleaveland, 30 Cal. 200; Bruck v. Tucker, 42 Cal. 351.

The prohibition of the 14th Amendment of the Constitution of the United States against depriving one of his property without due process of law is not limited to the action of the state through its legislature.

Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Chicago, 166 U. S. 226, 41 L. ed. 979, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 581.

Messrs. John F. Dillon and J. R. Scott argued the cause, and, with Messrs. Henry T. Lee, Harry Hubbard, and John M. Dillon, filed a brief for defendant in error:

Inasmuch as the question whether the condemnation statute of California is in conflict with the Federal Constitution was not raised in either the trial court or the state supreme court, and was not passed upon by either of those courts, there is no jurisdiction in this court to review the judgment of the supreme court of California.

Chicago & N. W. R. Co. v. Chicago, 164 U. S. 454, 41 L. ed. 511, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 129; Eastern Bldg. & L. Asso. v. Welling, 181 U. S. 47, 45 L. ed. 739, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 531; F. G. Oxley Stave Co. v. Butler County, 166 U. S. 648, 41 L. ed. 1149, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 709; Hamilton Mfg. Co. v. Massachusetts, 6 Wall. 632, 18 L. ed. 904; Scudder v. Coler, 175 U. S. 32, 44 L. ed. 62, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 26; Capital City Dairy Co. v. Ohio, 183 U. S. 238, 46 L. ed. 171, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 120; Erie R. Co. v. Purdy, 185 U. S. 148, 46 L. ed. 847, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 605; Michigan Sugar Co. v. Dix, 185 U. S. 112, 46 L. ed. 829, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 581; Dewey v. Des Moines, 173 U. S. 193, 43 L. ed. 665, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 379; Parmelee v. Lawrence, 11 Wall. 36, 20 L. ed. 48; Chapin v. Fye, 179 U. S. 127, 45 L. ed. 119, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 71; Lawler v. Walker, 14 How. 149, 14 L. ed. 364; Miller v. Texas, 153 U. S. 535, 38 L. ed. 812, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 874; Caldwell v. Texas, 137 U. S. 692, 34 L. ed. 816, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 224; Duncan v. Missouri, 152 U. S. 377, 38 L. ed. 485, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 570; Spies v. Illinois, 123 U. S. 131, 31 L. ed. 80, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 21; Chemical Nat. Bank v. City Bank, 160 U. S. 646, 40 L. ed. 568, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 417; Morrison v. Watson, 154 U. S. 111, 38 L. ed. 927, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 995; O'Neil v. Vermont, 144 U. S. 358, 36 L. ed. 465, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 693; Miller v. Cornwall R. Co. 168 U. S. 131, 42 L. ed. 409, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 34; Levy v. San Francisco City & County Super. Ct. 167 U. S. 175, 42 L. ed. 126, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 769; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Louis- ville, 166 U. S. 709, 41 L. ed. 1173, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 725; Powell v. Brunswick County, 150 U. S. 433, 37 L. ed. 1134, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 166; Sayward v. Denny, 158 U. S. 180, 39 L. ed. 941, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 777; Connecticut ex rel. New York & N. E. R. Co. v. Woodruff, 153 U. S. 689, 38 L. ed. 869, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 976.

The claim of a Federal question was not even raised in the petition for rehearing in the state supreme court, although had it there been made, it would have been too late.

Foster, Fed. Pr. 3d ed. 1187, Notes 44, 47; Turner v. Richardson, 180 U. S. 87, 45 L. ed. 438, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 295; Caldwell v. Texas, 137 U. S. 692, 34 L. ed. 816, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 224; Miller v. Texas, 153 U. S. 535, 38 L. ed. 812, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 874; Duncan v. Missouri, 152 U. S. 377, 38 L. ed. 485, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 570.

A Federal question cannot be raised for the first time in the assignment of errors in the United States Supreme Court.

Leeper v. Texas, 139 U. S. 462, 35 L. ed. 225, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 577; Chapin v. Fye, 179 U. S. 127, 45 L. ed. 119, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 71; Ansbro v. United States, 159 U. S. 695, 40 L. ed. 310, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 187; Olaassen v. United States, 142 U. S. 140, 35 L. ed. 966, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 169.

The petition for a writ of error forms no part of the record.

Clark v. Pennsylvania, 128 U. S. 395, 32 L. ed. 487, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 2, 113; Leeper v. Texas, 139 U. S. 462, 35 L. ed. 225, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 577.

The findings of fact and the verdict of the jury as to the amount of compensation for property taken, and as to the amount of damages to property not taken, are conclusive, provided no erroneous rule was laid down by the court or adopted by the jury in arriving at such amounts; and no Federal question is raised thereby, or is presented to or decided by the state courts.

Long Island Water Supply Co. v. Brooklyn, 166 U. S. 685, 41 L. ed. 1165, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 718; Jenkins v. Neff, 186 U. S. 230, 46 L. ed. 1140, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 905.

If plaintiffs in error, having the opportunity, did not comply with the state practice in making objections and taking exceptions in such manner as to authorize the state supreme court to reverse the judgment, the United States Supreme Court will not take jurisdiction to consider alleged errors in the trial court which could not have been passed upon by the state supreme court under the practice prevailing there.

Spies v. Illinois, 123 U. S. 131, 31 L. ed. 80, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 21; Miller v. Texas, 153 U. S. 535, 38 L. ed. 812, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 874; Duncan v. Missouri, 152 U. S. 377, 38 L. ed. 485, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 570; Chemical Nat. Bank v. City Bank, 160 U. S. 646, 40 L. ed. 568, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 417; Morrison v. Watson, 154 U. S. 111, 38 L. ed. 927, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 995; O'Neil v. Vermont, 144 U. S. 323, 36 L. ed. 450, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 693; Northern P. R. Co. v. Ellis, 144 U. S. 458, 36 L. ed. 504, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 724;

Brown v. Massachusetts, 144 U. S. 573, 36 L. ed. 546, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 757; Erie R. Co. v. Purdy, 185 U. S. 148, 46 L. ed. 847, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 605; Baldwin v. Kansas, 129 U. S. 52, 32 L. ed. 640, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 193; Chappell v. Bradshaw, 128 U. S. 132, 32 L. ed. 369, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 40; Backus v. Ft. Street Union Depot Co. 169 U. S. 557, 42 L. ed. 853, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 445.

An appeal to the jurisdiction of this court must not be a mere afterthought.

Seudder v. Coler, 175 U. S. 32, 44 L. ed. 62, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 26; Bolln v. Nebraska, 176 U. S. 83, 44 L. ed. 382, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 287.

It has always been held necessary that the record, taken in conjunction with the opinion of the state supreme court or the certificate of that court or of its chief justice, should show clearly and distinctly that a Federal question was raised in the state court, and was, either expressly or impliedly, decided by that tribunal.

Eastern Bldg. & L. Asso. v. Welling, 181 U. S. 47, 45 L. ed. 739, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 531; Lawler v. Walker, 14 How. 149, 14 L. ed. 364; Hamilton Mfg. Co. v. Massachusetts, 6 Wall. 632, 18 L. ed. 904; Chicago & N. W. R. Co. v. Chicago, 164 U. S. 454, 41 L. ed. 511, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 129; Proprietors of Bridges v. Hoboken Land & Improv. Co. 1 Wall. 143, 17 L. ed. 576; California Powder Works v. Davis, 151 U. S. 389, 38 L. ed. 206, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 350; Erie R. Co. v. Purdy, 185 U. S. 148, 46 L. ed. 847, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 605; Michigan Sugar Co. v. Dix, 185 U. S. 112, 46 L. ed. 829, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 581; Miller v. Cornwall R. Co. 168 U. S. 131, 42 L. ed. 409, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 34; Capital City Dairy Co. v. Ohio, 183 U. S. 238, 46 L. ed. 171, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 120.

The right claimed by the plaintiffs in error, derived through Spanish and Mexican grants confirmed and patented by the United States, is not a Federal question.

Chrystal Springs Land & Water Co. v. Los Angeles, 177 U. S. 169, 44 L. ed. 720, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 573; Kennedy v. Hunt, 7 How. 590, 12 L. ed. 831; Eldridge v. Trezevant, 160 U. S. 452, 40 L. ed. 490, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 345; Hardin v. Jordan, 140 U. S. 371, 35 L. ed. 428, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 808, 838; Williams v. Eggleston, 170 U. S. 304, 42 L. ed. 1047, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 617; St. Anthony Falls Water Power Co. v. St. Paul Water Comrs. 168 U. S. 349, 42 L. ed. 497, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 157; Illinois C. R. Co. v. Illinois, 146 U. S. 387, 36 L. ed. 1018, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 110; Shively v. Bowlby, 152 U. S. 1, 38 L. ed. 331, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 548; Packer v. Bird, 137 U. S. 661, 34 L. ed. 819, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 210; St. Louis v. Myers, 113 U. S. 566, 28 L. ed. 1131, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 640; St. Louis v. Rutz, 138 U. S. 226, 34 L. ed. 941, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 337; Barney v. Keokuk, 94 U. S. 324, 24 L. ed. 224.

Messrs. W. B. Mathews, John F. Dillon, Harry Hubbard, and John M. Dillon filed a separate brief for defendant in error on the question of jurisdiction:

The validity of a statute is not drawn in question every time rights claimed under 188 U. S.

such statute are controverted, nor is the validity of an authority, every time such authority is disputed.

Cook County v. Calumet & C. Canal & Dock Co. 138 U. S. 653, 34 L. ed. 1116, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 435; Blackburn v. Portland Gold Min. Co. 175 U. S. 571, 44 L. ed. 276, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 222; De Lamar's Nevada Gold Min. Co. v. Nesbitt, 177 U. S. 523, 44 L. ed. 872, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 715.

The controversy in the state court did not involve the construction of the treaty, but the validity of claims of title under Spanish and Mexican grants made prior to the treaty, and the decision of such controversy was not against the validity of the treaty.

New Orleans v. De Armas, 9 Pet. 224, 9 L. ed. 109; United States v. Arredondo, 6 Pct. 738, 8 L. ed. 564; Crystal Springs Land & Water Co. v. Los Angeles, 82 Fed. 114, Affirmed in 177 U. S. 169, 44 L. ed. 720, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 573; California Powder Works v. Davis, 151 U. S. 389, 38 L. ed. 206, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 350.

To bring any case within the reach of U. S. Rev. Stat. § 709, "it must appear upon the face of the record of the state court, either by express terms or by clear and necessary intendment, that the question did actually arise in the state court,—not that it might have arisen or have been applicable to the case,—and that the question was actually decided—not that it might have been decided by the state court—against the title, right or privilege, or exemption set up by the party."

Ocean Ins. Co. v. Polleys, 13 Pet. 157, 10 L. ed. 105; Proprietors of Bridges v. Hoboken Land & Improv. Co. 1 Wall. 116, 17 L. ed. 571.

There is nothing in the record to show that the state courts were led to suppose that any claim under the Constitution of the United States was made by plaintiffs in error, or that any ruling involved a decision against a right set up by them under that instrument.

Kaukauna Water Power Co. v. Green Bay & M. Canal Co. 142 U. S. 254, 35 L. ed. 1004, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 173; Harris v. Dennie, 3 Pet. 292, 7 L. ed. 683; Dewey v. Des Moines, 173 U. S. 193, 43 L. ed. 665, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 379; Sayward v. Denny, 158 U. S. 180, 39 L. ed. 941, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 777.

A definite issue as to the validity of the statute or the possession of the right must be distinctly deducible from the record, before the state court can be held to have disposed of such a Federal question by its decision.

Powell v. Brunswick County, 150 U. S. 433, 37 L. ed. 1134, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 166.

The state court disposed of no Federal question in admitting in evidence statutes of the state showing the succession of the present city of Los Angeles to the former pueblo, over the objection of counsel for plaintiffs in error that they were "incompetent, irrelevant, immaterial, and unconstitutional." The last-named objection is presumed to refer to the Constitution of the state.

Miller v. Cornwall R. Co. 168 U. S. 131, 42 L. ed. 409, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 34.

Mr. Chief Justice Fuller delivered the opinion of the court:

We cannot find in the pleadings or other proceedings in the trial court, or in the supreme court, that any statute of California was asserted to be in conflict with the Constitution, or any law or treaty of the United States, or that any right was claimed by plaintiffs in error under the Constitution, or any treaty or statute of the United States.

The city alleged in its complaint that the Los Angeles river was a non-navigable stream, rising a few miles to the north and northwest of the city, and fed by streams rising to the surface in or near the bed of the river; that that bed was composed of sandy soil, into which the water sank and formed subterranean streams flowing beneath the bed and then rising to the surface; that the river flowed through the land sought to be condemned before reaching the city; that the city was the owner of the exclusive right to the use of all the water of the river in trust for the public purposes of supplying the inhabitants of the city with water for domestic use, supplying water for the irrigation of land embraced within the pueblo lands of the city, and other municipal uses; that plaintiffs in error were owners of the fee simple of the lands described, subject to the rights of the city to the water of the river; and the prayer was for the condemnation in fee simple of all the estate, right, title, and interest of plaintiffs in error in the land.

[316] *The answer of plaintiffs in error denied that the river was fed by springs rising to the surface in or adjoining the bed of the river; admitted that the bed was composed of sandy soil, but denied that the waters of the river formed well-defined subterranean streams flowing in channels beneath the bed, or that such subterranean waters rose before reaching the city, or became a part of the surface water of the river; and denied that the city was the owner of any right to the use of all the water of the river, in trust, or otherwise; denied that the city had any right in the water or to the use thereof, other than as a riparian owner of lands through which the river flowed, and rights acquired by appropriation; and denied that the city owned the right to the water of the river to the exclusion of plaintiffs in error. On the contrary, the answer alleged that the lands of plaintiffs in error were riparian lands situated far above the north boundary of the city, and that, as riparian owners, plaintiffs in error were entitled to the use of the waters of the river for all lawful purposes, and, to a reasonable extent, for irrigating those lands, and for domestic and other uses. And, it set up grants of part of the land to the predecessors of plaintiffs in error in 1843 by the governor of both Californias, and of the remainder of the land by grant in 1784; that confirmation was petitioned for before the board of land commissioners appointed under the act of Congress of March 3, 1851 (9 Stat. at L. 631, chap. 41), the grants confirmed, and the decrees of the board affirmed by the district court of the United States for the southern district of California, and patents duly issued; and averred that plaintiffs in error claimed title "under and through the aforesaid Mexican and Spanish grants, and the proceedings for the confirmation thereof, and the said patents issued by the United States founded thereon;" and that as owners of the land plaintiffs in error were also owners of the waters percolating in the soil thereof, and riparian owners, having the rights of riparian proprietors in the waters of the river.

The trial court decided that the city was, and had been since its organization, owner in fee simple of the paramount use of the waters of the Los Angeles river, so far as might be needed from time to time, for the public purposes of supplying the *inhabi-[317]tants of the city with water for public and domestic purposes, as described in the complaint; that plaintiffs in error were the owners of the particular land, and had, subject to the rights of the city, the rights of riparian proprietors thereof, and the right to use the water of the river for all purposes for which riparian owners are entitled to use such waters.

The contentions seem to be that the state courts decided against the claim of plaintiffs in error to the rights of a riparian owner, and to the ownership of alleged percolating waters, as derived from patents of the United States as well as from Mexican grants, or under the treaty of Guadeloupe Hidalgo; that the statutes of California in authorizing the trial of title in condemnation proceedings, and the determination of compensation before the determination of title, amounted to providing for the taking of private property for public use without just compensation; that certain statutes declaring the city to be vested with a paramount right to the surface and subterranean waters deprived plaintiffs in error of their property without due process of law; and that the statute of the state in providing that compensation and damages should be deemed to have accrued at the date of the summons, as construed by the state courts, resulted in taking the property of plaintiffs in error without just compensation.

Obviously, the question as to the title or right of plaintiffs in error in the land, and whatever appertained thereto, was one of state law and of general public law, on which the decision of the state court was final. San Francisco v. Scott, 111 U. S. 768, 28 L. ed. 593, 4 Sup. Ct. Rep. 688; California Powder Works v. Davis, 151 U. S. 389, 38 L. ed. 206, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 350. And the question of the existence of percolating water was merely a question of fact.

The patents were in the nature of a quitclaim, and under the act of March 3, 1851 [§ 15], were "conclusive between the United States and the said claimants only, and shall not affect the interests of third persons." The validity of that act was not drawn in question in the state court, and as the right or title asserted by plaintiffs in error was derived under Mexican and Spanish grants, the decision of the state court on the claims asserted by plaintiffs in error to [318] the waters of the river was not *against any title or right claimed under the Constitution, or any treaty, or statute of, or commission held, or authority exercised, under the Constitution. If the title of plaintiffs in error were protected by the treaty, still the suit did not arise thereunder, because the controversy in the state court did not involve the construction of the treaty, but the validity of the title of Mexican and Spanish grants prior to the treaty. New Orleans v. De Armas, 9 Pet. 224, 9 L. ed. 109; Iowa v. Rood, 187 U. S. 87, ante, 86, 23 Sup. Ct. Rep. 49; Phillips v. Mound City Land & Water Asso. 124 U. S. 605, 31 L. ed. 588, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 651.

In Crystal Springs Land & Water Co. v. Los Angeles, 82 Fed. 114, the circuit court ruled that where both parties claimed under Mexican grants, confirmed and patented by the United States in accordance with the provisions of the treaty of Guadeloupe Hidalgo, and the controversy was only as to what were the rights thus granted and confirmed, the suit was not one arising under a treaty so as to confer jurisdiction on a Federal court, and that where the only ground of Federal jurisdiction was the allegation in a bill that defendant's claim of title was based in part on certain acts of the legislature of the state, which attempted to transfer to it, as alleged, the title held by complainant's grantors at the time of their passage, the court would not retain jurisdiction when an answer was filed by defendant denying the allegations, and disclaiming any title or claim of title not held by it before the passage of the acts. The bill was dismissed, and we affirmed the judgment. 177 U. S. 169, 44 L. ed. 720, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 573.

The trial court determined for itself, among other questions, the nature and extent of the city's interest in the waters of the river, but while it instructed the jury in relation thereto it did not file its written findings until after the return of the verdict. And it is argued that the respective rights of the parties were not in fact adjudicated until after the amount of compensation had been found, and that in this way plaintiffs in error were deprived of their property without due process of law. The 14th Amendment does not control the power of a state to determine the form of procedure by which legal rights may be ascertained, if the method adopted gives reasonable notice and affords a fair opportunity to be heard. [319] *Iowa C. R. Co. v. *Iowa*, 160 U. S. 389, 40 L. ed. 467, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 344; Long Island Water Supply Co. v. Brooklyn, 166 U. S. 685, 41 L. ed. 1165, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 718.

The construction of a law of a state, that it was competent for the court to try and determine, in a condemnation proceeding, an adverse claim of the plaintiff therein to an interest in property sought to be condemned, is conclusive on this court, and we cannot understand how the entry of the verdict of a jury as to the amount of compensation prior to the filing of written findings on the other issues could have the effect of depriving plaintiffs in error of their property without due process of law. The chief justice of California well said that it was of no importance in what order the other issues in the case were decided, except in so far as the determination of one point was necessary as a basis for the determination of another, and that if the instructions to the jury actually given were correct, the fact that these findings had not been previously filed was of no consequence.

And so as to certain statutes of the state of California, which declared that the city of Los Angeles is vested with the paramount right to the surface and subterranean water of the Los Angeles river. Those statutes were admitted in evidence merely to show that the city was the successor of the ancient pueblo. The court held that the right of the city of Los Angeles to take from the Los Angeles river all of the waters of the river to the extent of its reasonable domestic and municipal needs was based on the Spanish and Mexican law, and not on the charters of the city of Los Angeles. The validity of the statutes, on account of repugnancy to the Federal Constitution, was not drawn in question in the trial court nor in the supreme court of the state, and both courts held that they neither granted to the city nor took away from plaintiffs in error any rights or property.

Section 1249 of the Code of Civil Procedure of California provided that for the purpose of assessing compensation and damages the right thereto should be taken to have accrued at the time of the summons, "and its actual value at that date shall be the measure of compensation for all property to be actually taken, and the basis of damages to property not actually taken, but injuriously affected."

*The validity of the statute under the state [320] Constitution had been repeatedly sustained by the state courts, and those courts held that the value referred to in the statute was the actual value at that date.

Plaintiffs in error asked the court to charge the jury that the date of estimating the value of the property was the date of the summons, and the supreme court held that in these circumstances they could not be permitted to attack the condemnation statute as unconstitutional so far as related to the appraising the value of the land as provided.

Moreover, this court cannot reverse the decisions of state courts in regard to questions of general justice and equitable considerations in the taking of property. Fallbrook Irrig. Dist. v. Bradley, 164 U. S. 112, 41 L. ed. 369, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 56.

The truth is there is nothing in this record adequately showing that the state courts were led to suppose that any claim under the Constitution of the United States was made by plaintiffs in error, or that any ruling involved a decision against a right set up by them under that instrument.

In Sayward v. Denny, 158 U. S. 180, 39 L. ed. 941, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 777, after stating the contention of plaintiff in error that the effect of the judgment of the state court was "to deprive him of his property without due process of law, or to deny him the equal protection of the laws, and amounted to a decision adverse to the right, privilege, or immunity of plaintiff in error under the Constitution, of being protected from such deprivation or denial," we said: "But it nowhere affirmatively appears from the record that such a right was set up or claimed in the trial court when the demurrer to the complaint was overruled, or evidence admitted or excluded, or instructions given or refused, or in the supreme court in disposing of the rulings below. . . . We are not called on to revise these views of the principles of general law considered applicable to the case in hand. It is enough that there is nothing in the record to indicate that the state courts were led to suppose that plaintiff in error claimed protection under the Constitution of the United States from the several rulings, or to suspect that each ruling as made involved a decision against a right specially set up under that instrument. And *we may add that the decisions of state tribunals in respect of matters of general law cannot be reviewed on the theory that the law of the land is violated unless their conclusions are absolutely free from error."

This case comes within the rule there laid down, and the writ of error must be dismissed.

Mr. Justice McKenna took no part in the decision of this case.

CHARLES F. CHAMPION, Appt.,
v.

JOHN C. AMES, United States Marshal.†

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 321-375.)

Interstate commerce—regulation by Congress—prohibition of traffic in lottery tickets.

The carriage of lottery tickets from one state to another by an express company engaged in carrying freight and packages from state to state is interstate commerce, which Congress, under its power to regulate, may prohibit by making it an offense against the United States to cause such tickets so to be carried.

[No. 2.]

Argued February 27, 28, 1901. Ordered for

†This case is reported by the Official Reporter under the title "Lottery Case."

NOTE.—On the power of Congress to regulate commerce—see notes to State ex rel. Corwin v. Indiana & O. Oil, Gas, & Mln. Co. (Ind.) 6 L. R. A. 579; Bullard v. Northern P. R. Co. (Mont.) 11 L. R. A. 246; Re Wilson (D. C.) 12 L. R. A. 624; Gibbons v. Ogden, 6 L. ed. U. S. 23; Brown v. Maryland, 6 L. ed. U. S. 678; Gloucester Ferry Co. v. Pennsylvania, 29 L. ed. U. S. 158; Ratterman v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 32 L. ed. U. S. 229; Harmon v. Chicago, 37 L. ed. U. S. 216; Cleveland, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Backus, 38 L. ed. U. S. 1041

reargument April 29, 1901. Reargued October 16, 17, 1901. Ordered for reargument before full bench November 10, 1902. Reargued December 15, 16, 1902. Decided February 23, 1903.

APPEAL from the Circuit Court of the United States for the Northern District of Illinois to review an order dismissing a writ of habeas corpus to inquire into a detention under a warrant charging a conspiracy to cause lottery tickets to be carried from one state to another. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Moritz Rosenthal argued the cause, and, with Mr. Joseph B. David, filed a brief for appellant:

The test of the validity of a statute is its real, and not its apparent, object; and its real object must be ascertained by determining whether the legitimate end sought is within the scope of the legislative power.

Yick Wo v. Hopkins, 118 U. S. 356, 30 L. ed. 220, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1064; Morgan's L. & T. R. & S. Co. v. Louisiana Bd. of Health, 118 U. S. 455, 30 L. ed. 237, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1114; United States v. Fox, 95 U. S. 670, 24 L. ed. 538; Minnesota v. Barber, 136 U. S. 313, 34 L. ed. 455, 3 Inters. Com. Rep. 185, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 862; Henderson v. New York, 92 U. S. 259, sub nom. Henderson v. Wickham, 23 L. ed. 543; New York v. Miln, 11 Pet. 103, 9 L. ed. 648; The Passenger Cases, 7 How. 283, 12 L. ed. 702; Re Rapier, 143 U. S. 110, 36 L. ed. 93, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 374.

Commerce, as used in the Constitution, is restricted to commercial intercourse.

Gibbons v. Ogden, 9 Wheat. 1, 6 L. ed. 23; Trade-Mark Cases, 100 U. S. 95, sub nom. United States v. Steffens, 25 L. ed. 550.

There are tangible objects that are not articles of commerce.

Austin v. State, 101 Tenn. 563, 50 L. R. A. 478, 48 S. W. 305.

A railroad ticket is not an article of commerce. A railroad ticket is not merchandise; it is only a receipt or voucher for the payment of the passenger's fare, and is but evidence of the contract of carriage between the railroad company and the passenger.

Ray, Negligence of Imposed Duties, Pass. Carr. 198, 199, 494, 495; 2 Beach, Railways, § 869; Com. v. Wilson, 14 Phila. 384.

An insurance policy is not an article of commerce.

Paul v. Virginia, 8 Wall. 168, 19 L. ed. 357; Hooper v. California, 155 U. S. 648, 39 L. ed. 297, 5 Inters. Com. Rep. 610, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 207; New York L. Ins. Co. v. Cravens, 178 U. S. 389, 44 L. ed. 1116, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 962.

The business of an interstate mercantile agency is not commerce.

State v. Morgan, 2 S. D. 32, 48 N. W. 314.

The loaning of money by foreign corporations engaged in that business is not a matter of interstate commerce.

Nelms v. Edinburg American Land Mortg. Co. 92 Ala. 157, 9 So. 141.

The protection of the Constitution does not extend to lotteries, games of chance, or speculation. These may be interstate gambling, but are not commerce.

Prentice & Egan, Commerce Clause of Fed. Const. p. 55.

Mr. William D. Guthrie also argued the cause and filed a brief for appellant:

The suppression of lotteries or of any other harmful business is essentially an exercise of the police power, exclusively within the domain of, and expressly reserved to, the several states.

Re Rahrer, 140 U. S. 545, sub nom. Wilkinson v. Rahrer, 35 L. ed. 572, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 865; United States v. E. C. Knight Co. 156 U. S. 1, 39 L. ed. 325, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 249.

There is no such thing as a Federal police power, except in respect of those specific subjects delegated to Congress.

McCulloch v. Maryland, 4 Wheat. 316, 4 L. ed. 579; License Cases, 5 How. 504, 12 L. ed. 256; Trade-Mark Cases, 100 U. S. 82, sub nom. United States v. Steffens, 25 L. ed. 550.

Congress cannot conclusively determine what is or what is not an article of commerce. That inquiry is essentially judicial.

License Cases, 5 How. 504, 12 L. ed. 256.

Congress does not possess the power to prevent the transportation in other ways, as merchandise, of matter which it excludes from the mails.

Ex parte Jackson, 96 U. S. 727, 24 L. ed. 877; Re Rapier, 143 U. S. 110, 36 L. ed. 93, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 374.

A conviction under a statute of Virginia for selling lottery tickets for the national lottery authorized by the act of Congress of May 4, 1812, has been sustained.

Cohen v. Virginia, 6 Wheat. 264, 5 L. ed. 257.

If the lottery tickets had been deemed articles of commerce, obviously the Virginia act would have been invalid as a regulation of commerce.

Welton v. Missouri. 91 U. S. 275, 23 L. ed. 347; Webber v. Virginia, 103 U. S. 344, 26 L. ed. 565.

Insurance policies are essentially wagers, and constitute aleatory contracts substantially the same as the contract of lottery. Both forms of contract depend upon chance and uncertain events, and in principle cannot be distinguished in their nature.

1 Pothier, Obligations, Evans's Transl. pp. 9-10; Louisiana Civil Code, act 1776; Spain Civil Code 1889, Tit. 12, U. S. Govt. Transl. 1899, pp. 230-232; 1 May, Ins. 4th ed. p. 5; Clark, Contr. pp. 405-406; Lawson Contr. §§ 284-287; Hollingsworth, Contr. pp. 229-232; Anson, Contr. 2d Am. ed. pp. 232, 233; Angell, Fire & Life Ins. pp. 12, 14; 1 Joyce, Ins. §§ 2, 7; Emerigon, Ins. Mercedith's Transl. p. 13; Richards, Ins. § 20.

The issuing of insurance policies in New York and sending them to Virginia, to be there delivered to the insured on payment of premium, is not interstate commerce.

Paul v. Virginia, 8 Wall. 168, 19 L. ed. 357; Hooper v. California, 155 U. S. 648, 39 L. ed. 297, 5 Inters. Com. Rep. 610, 15 Sup.

Ct. Rep. 207; New York L. Ins. Co. v. Cravens, 178 U. S. 389, 44 L. ed. 1116, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 962.

If the power to regulate interstate commerce applied to all the incidents to which said commerce might give rise, and to all contracts which might be made in the course of its transaction, that power would embrace the entire sphere of mercantile activity in any way connected with trade between the states, and would exclude state control over many contracts purely domestic in their nature.

Hooper v. California, 155 U. S. 648, 39 L. ed. 297, 5 Inters. Com. Rep. 610, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 207.

"Commerce" is not the equivalent or synonym of "intercourse," but is synonymous with "commercial intercourse."

Gibbons v. Ogden, 9 Wheat. 1, 6 L. ed. 23. The Constitution "neither changes with time, nor does it in theory bend to the force of circumstances."

Ex parte Milligan, 4 Wall. 2, 18 L. ed. 281; Re Debs, 158 U. S. 564, 39 L. ed. 1092, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 900.

We are not at liberty to give the provisions of the Constitution new meanings because of considerations of expediency. If we could, then "there is no power which may not, by this mode of construction, be conferred on the general government and denied to the states."

Passenger Cases, 7 How. 283, 12 L. ed. 702; Ex parte Wells, 18 How. 307, 15 L. ed. 421.

The power of Congress over commerce with foreign nations and the Indian tribes is conclusive and absolute.

United States v. 43 Gallons of Whiskey, 93 U. S. 188, sub nom. United States v. Lariviere, 23 L. ed. 846.

While commercial reprisals may be necessary as national expedients, such considerations can never be permitted to govern the action of Congress in regulating commerce among the several states.

2 Tucker, Const. 528-533; Groves v. Slaughter, 15 Pet. 449, 10 L. ed. 800; Passenger Cases, 7 How. 283, 12 L. ed. 702.

Indeed, the clause guarantying the privileges and immunities of citizens would probably be held to nullify any such attempt of Congress.

Passenger Cases, 7 How. 492, 12 L. ed. 789; Crandall v. Nevada, 6 Wall. 35, 18 L. ed. 745; Slaughter-House Cases, 16 Wall. 36, 21 L. ed. 394.

The insurance cases present a striking example of the difference in the nature of the power to regulate interstate commerce and foreign commerce.

Paul v. Virginia, 8 Wall. 168, 19 L. ed. 357; Hooper v. California, 155 U. S. 648, 39 L. ed. 297, 5 Inters. Com. Rep. 610, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 207; New York L. Ins. Co. v. Cravens, 178 U. S. 389, 44 L. ed. 1116, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 962.

The whole power to regulate every form of relations and intercourse with foreign countries resides in the sovereign national power created by the Constitution of the United States.

Head Money Cases, 112 U. S. 580, sub nom. Edye v. Robertson, 28 L. ed. 798, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 247; The Federalist, 9 Hamilton's Works, Lodge's ed. pp. 250, 258, 262.

In the case of internal or interstate commerce, the only power Congress exercises is that expressly delegated; and that power is hedged in and circumscribed by the local police and municipal powers expressly reserved to the states. It may, therefore, be conceded that Congress, under the plenary power to regulate our relations with foreign countries, may well exclude persons, commodities, or printed matter of any nature whatsoever, whether or not relating to or connected with commerce. But no one would seriously suggest that any class of American citizens could be excluded or deported under the same power which enables Congress to exclude or deport aliens.

United States v. Wong Kim Ark, 169 U. S. 649, 42 L. ed. 890, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 456.

Assistant Attorney General Beck argued the cause and filed a brief for appellee:

The purpose of the framers of the Federal Constitution clearly was to empower Congress "to legislate in all cases to which the separate states are incompetent, or in which the harmony of the United States may be interrupted by the exercise of individual legislation."

2 Madison Papers, 859.

It seems to be the clear meaning of the Constitution that the words "to regulate commerce" include the regulation of migration of persons, irrespective of their relations to things in commerce.

Tucker, Const. p. 525.

The transit of individuals from state to state is interstate commerce.

Gibbons v. Ogden, 9 Wheat. 1, 6 L. ed. 23; Passenger Cases, 7 How. 282, 12 L. ed. 702; Mobile County v. Kimball, 102 U. S. 691, 26 L. ed. 238; Gloucester Ferry Co. v. Pennsylvania, 114 U. S. 196, 29 L. ed. 158, 1 Inters. Com. Rep. 382, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 826; Pickard v. Pullman Southern Car Co. 117 U. S. 34, 29 L. ed. 785, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 635; Covington & C. Bridge Co. v. Kentucky, 154 U. S. 204, 38 L. ed. 962, 4 Inters. Com. Rep. 649, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1087.

Indeed, neither the transit of individuals nor the transportation of goods is essential to commerce. The mere transmission of intelligence is also commerce.

Pensacola Teleg. Co. v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 96 U. S. 1, 24 L. ed. 708; Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Pendleton, 122 U. S. 347, 30 L. ed. 1187, 1 Inters. Com. Rep. 306, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1126; Ratterman v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 127 U. S. 411, 32 L. ed. 229, 2 Inters. Com. Rep. 59, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1127; Leloup v. Port of Mobile, 127 U. S. 640, 32 L. ed. 311, 2 Inters. Com. Rep. 134, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1380.

The mere transit of persons arriving at our ports of entry is, without reference to traffic, the subject of congressional regulation, because it is commerce.

New York v. Compagnie Generale Trans-

atlantique, 107 U. S. 59, 27 L. ed. 383, 2 Sup. Ct. Rep. 87; Head Money Cases, 112 U. S. 580, sub nom. Edye v. Robertson, 28 L. ed. 798, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 247; Henderson v. New York, 92 U. S. 259, sub nom. Henderson v. Wickham, 23 L. ed. 543; Nishimura Ekin v. United States, 142 U. S. 651, 35 L. ed. 1146, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 336.

The same must be true of the transit of persons from state to state, assuming that foreign commerce is the same as interstate commerce, with the exception of the locus in quo.

Gibbons v. Ogden, 9 Wheat. 228, 6 L. ed. 77.

The power to regulate commerce among the several states is granted to Congress in terms as absolute as is the power to regulate commerce with foreign nations.

Brown v. Houston, 114 U. S. 630, 29 L. ed. 260, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1091; Bowman v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 125 U. S. 482, 31 L. ed. 706, 1 Inters. Com. Rep. 823, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 689, 1062; Crutcher v. Kentucky, 141 U. S. 47, 35 L. ed. 649, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 851; Pittsburg & S. Coal Co. v. Bates, 156 U. S. 587, 39 L. ed. 544, 5 Inters. Com. Rep. 30, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 415.

The carriage of things for hire from state to state by any means of transportation is commerce.

Gibbons v. Ogden, 9 Wheat. 1, 6 L. ed. 23.

The judicial department of the government should not review the declaration of the legislative branch as to the commercial character of a lottery ticket.

Leisy v. Hardin, 135 U. S. 100, 34 L. ed. 128, 3 Inters. Com. Rep. 36, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 681; Re Rahrer, 140 U. S. 545, sub nom. Wilkerson v. Rahrer, 35 L. ed. 572, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 865.

The only test as to whether a given article is an article of commerce is whether it is, or has been, customarily the subject of purchase and sale; and this must be determined by considering whether such an article is recognized as a subject of purchase and sale by the commercial world.

Schollenberger v. Pennsylvania, 171 U. S. 1, 43 L. ed. 49, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 757.

It is a great mistake to suppose that a lottery ticket conveyed no right of action or property interest. Whatever is the present effect of restrictive legislation upon such commercial commodities, they formerly conveyed unquestioned property rights which could be enforced in courts of law.

Clark v. Washington, 12 Wheat. 40, 6 L. ed. 544.

The commercial power of the Union can extend to written instruments, where they affect or are instruments of the purchase and sale of property interests.

Almy v. California, 24 How. 169, 16 L. ed. 644; Woodruff v. Parham, 8 Wall. 123, 19 L. ed. 382; Fairbank v. United States, 181 U. S. 283, 45 L. ed. 862, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 648.

In reading the court's opinion upon the insurance cases, the question actually presented to the court must be kept in mind.

Woodruff v. Parham, 8 Wall. 123, 19 L. ed. 382.

A careful examination of all of these cases will disclose the fact that each of them was predicated upon the fact that the method of transacting the business made the transactions intrastate, and not interstate.

Hooper v. California, 155 U. S. 648, 39 L. ed. 297, 5 Inters. Com. Rep. 610, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 207; Paul v. Virginia, 8 Wall. 168, 19 L. ed. 357; Allgeyer v. Louisiana, 165 U. S. 578, 41 L. ed. 832, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 427.

The power to prohibit, as a regulation of trade, is absolute except where expressly limited by other sections of the Constitution.

Gibbons v. Ogden, 9 Wheat. 1, 6 L. ed. 23; Marshall Field & Co. v. Clark, 143 U. S. 649, 36 L. ed. 294, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 495; Addyston Pipe & Steel Co. v. United States, 175 U. S. 211, 44 L. ed. 136, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 96; Re Rahrer, 140 U. S. 545, sub nom. Wilkerson v. Rahrer, 35 L. ed. 572, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 865.

Congress under its power to regulate commerce with the Indian tribes may exclude any selected article from such commerce as deleterious.

United States v. Holliday, 3 Wall. 407, 18 L. ed. 182; United States v. 43 Gallons of Whiskey, 108 U. S. 491, 27 L. ed. 803, 2 Sup. Ct. Rep. 906; United States v. Le Bris, 121 U. S. 278, 30 L. ed. 946, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 894; Sarlls v. United States, 152 U. S. 570, 38 L. ed. 556, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 720; United States v. Mayrand, 154 U. S. 552, and 18 L. ed. 699, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1212.

States have undertaken in the interests of the public health to exclude importations of a certain kind from other states, and their legislation has been held by this court to be unconstitutional.

Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. v. Husen, 95 U. S. 465, 24 L. ed. 527; Minnesota v. Barber, 136 U. S. 313, 34 L. ed. 455, 3 Inters. Com. Rep. 185, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 862; Brimmer v. Rebman, 138 U. S. 78, 34 L. ed. 862, 3 Inters. Com. Rep. 485, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 213; Voight v. Wright, 141 U. S. 62, 35 L. ed. 638, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 855.

These laws were not held to be void because they in effect levied taxes upon imports; for it is well settled that the word "imports" in the Constitution refers only to articles brought in from foreign countries.

License Cases, 5 How. 504, 12 L. ed. 256; Woodruff v. Parham, 8 Wall. 123, 19 L. ed. 382; Brown v. Houston, 114 U. S. 622, 29 L. ed. 257, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1091; Coe v. Errol, 116 U. S. 517, 29 L. ed. 715, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 475; Pittsburg & S. Coal Co. v. Louisiana, 156 U. S. 590, 39 L. ed. 544, 5 Inters. Com. Rep. 18, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 459.

The Sherman anti-trust law is in itself a prohibition, pro tanto, of commerce, but its constitutionality has been affirmed.

United States v. Joint Traffic Asso. 171 U. S. 505, 43 L. ed. 259, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 25.

The power to regulate interstate commerce being an express power, with no express restrictions on the prohibition of interstate traffic in a given article, the purposes for which Congress may prohibit are not reviewable by the courts.
188 U. S.

M'Culloch v. Maryland, 4 Wheat. 316, 4 L. ed. 579.

Congress, having an express and unlimited power to regulate interstate commerce, may do so without having its reasons questioned.

Doyle v. Continental Ins. Co. 94 U. S. 535, 24 L. ed. 148.

Mr. Justice Harlan delivered the opinion of the court:

The general question arising upon this appeal involves the constitutionality of the 1st section of the act of Congress of March 2d, 1895, chap. 191, entitled "An Act for the Suppression of Lottery Traffic through National and Interstate Commerce and the Postal Service, Subject to the Jurisdiction and Laws of the United States." 28 Stat. at L. 963, U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 3178.

The appeal was from an order of the circuit court of the United States for the northern district of Illinois dismissing a writ of habeas corpus sued out by the appellant Champion, who in his application complained that he was restrained of his liberty by the Marshal of the United States in violation of the Constitution and laws of the United States.

*It appears that the accused was under indictment in the district court of the United States for the northern district of Texas for a conspiracy under § 5440 of the Revised Statutes (U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 3676), providing that "if two or more persons conspire either to commit any offense against the United States, or to defraud the United States in any manner or for any purpose, and one or more of such parties do any act to effect the object of the conspiracy, all the parties to such conspiracy shall be liable to a penalty of not less than one thousand dollars and not more than ten thousand dollars, and to imprisonment not more than two years."

He was arrested at Chicago under a warrant based upon a complaint in writing, under oath, charging him with conspiring with others, at Dallas, in the northern district of Texas, to commit the offense denounced in the above act of 1895; and the object of the arrest was to compel his appearance in the Federal court in Texas to answer the indictment against him.

The 1st section of the act of 1895, upon which the indictment was based, is as follows: "§ 1. That any person who shall cause to be brought within the United States from abroad, for the purpose of disposing of the same, or deposited in or carried by the mails of the United States, or carried from one state to another in the United States, any paper, certificate, or instrument purporting to be or represent a ticket, chance, share, or interest in or dependent upon the event of a lottery, so-called gift concert, or similar enterprise, offering prizes dependent upon lot or chance, or shall cause any advertisement of such lottery, so-called gift concert, or similar enterprise, offering prizes dependent upon lot or chance, to be brought into the United States, or deposited in or carried by the mails of the United States, or transferred from one state to another in the same, shall be punishable in [for] the first offense by imprisonment for not more than two years. or by a fine of not more than $1,000, or both, and in the second and after offenses by such imprisonment only." 28 Stat. at L. 963, U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 3178.

[323] The indictment charged, in its first count, that on or about the 1st day of February A. D. 1899, in Dallas county, Texas, "C. F. Champion, alias W. W. Ogden, W. F. Champion, and *Charles B. Park did then and there unlawfully, knowingly, and feloniously conspire together to commit an offense against the United States, to wit, for the purpose of disposing of the same, to cause to be carried from one state to another in the United States, to wit, from Dallas, in the state of Texas, to Fresno, in the state of California, certain papers, certificates, and instruments purporting to be and representing tickets, as they then and there well knew, chances, shares, and interests in and dependent upon the event of a lottery, offering prizes dependent upon lot and chance, that is to say, caused to be carried, as aforesaid, for the purpose of disposing of the same, papers, certificates, or instruments purporting to be tickets to represent the chances, shares, and interests in the prizes which by lot and chance might be awarded to persons, to these grand jurors unknown, who might purchase said papers, certificates, and instruments representing and purporting to be tickets, as aforesaid, with the numbers thereon shown and indicated and printed, which by lot and chance should, on a certain day, draw a prize or prizes at the purported lottery or chance company, to wit, at the purported monthly drawing of the so-called Pan-American Lottery Company, which purported to draw monthly at Asuncion, Paraguay, which said Pan-American Lottery Company purported to be an enterprise offering prizes dependent upon lot and chance, the specific method of such drawing being unknown to the grand jurors, but which said papers, certificates, and instruments purporting to be and representing tickets upon their face purporting to be entitled to participation in the drawing for a certain capital prize amounting to the sum of $32,000, and which said drawings for said capital prize, or the part or parts thereof allotted or to be allotted in conformity with the scheme of lot and chance, were to take place monthly, the manner and form of which is to the grand jurors unknown, but that said drawing and lot and chance by which said prize or prizes were to be drawn was purported to be under the supervision and direction of Enrigue Montes de Leon, manager, and Bernardo Lopez, intervener, and which said papers, certificates, and instruments purporting to be tickets of the said Pan-American Lottery Company [324] were so divided as *to be called whole, half, quarter, and eighth tickets, the whole tickets to be sold for the sum of $2, the half tickets for the sum of $1, the quarter tickets for the sum of 50 cents and the eighth tickets for the sum of 25 cents."

The indictment further charged that "in pursuance to said conspiracy, and to effect the object thereof, to wit, for the purpose of causing to be carried from one state to another in the United States, to wit, from the state of Texas to the state of California aforesaid, for the purpose of disposing of the same, papers, certificates, and instruments purporting to be and representing tickets, chances, and shares and interests in and dependent upon lot and chance, as aforesaid, as they then and there well knew, said W. F. Champion and Charles B. Park did then and there, to wit, on or about the day last aforesaid, in the year 1899, in the county aforesaid, in the Dallas division of the northern district of Texas aforesaid, unlawfully, knowingly, and feloniously, for the purpose of being carried from one state to another in the United States, to wit, from Dallas, in the state of Texas, to Fresno, in the state of California, for the purpose of disposing of the same, deposit and cause to be deposited and shipped and carried with and by the Wells-Fargo Express Company, a corporation engaged in carrying freight and packages from station to station along and over lines of railway, and from Dallas, Texas, to Fresno, California, for hire, one certain box or package containing, among other things, two whole tickets or papers or certificates of said purported Pan-American Lottery Company, one of which said whole tickets is hereto annexed by the grand jury to this indictment and made a part hereof."

It thus appears that the carrying in this case was by an incorporated express company, engaged in transporting freight and packages from one state to another.

The commissioner who issued the warrant of arrest, having found that there was probable cause to believe that Champion was guilty of the offense charged, ordered that he give bond for his appearance for trial in the district court of the United States for the northern district of Texas, or in default thereof to be committed to jail. Having declined to give the required bond the accused was taken into custody. Rev. Stat. § 1014 (U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 716). *Thereupon he sued out the present writ of [325] habeas corpus upon the theory that the act of 1895, under which it was proposed to try him, was void, under the Constitution of the United States.

The appellant insists that the carrying of lottery tickets from one state to another state by an express company engaged in carrying freight and packages from state to state, although such tickets may be contained in a box or package, does not constitute, and cannot by any act of Congress be legally made to constitute, commerce among the states within the meaning of the clause of the Constitution of the United States providing that Congress shall have power "to regulate commerce with *foreign nations. [345] and among the several states, and with the Indian tribes;" consequently, that Congress cannot make it an offense to cause such tickets to be carried from one state to another.

The government insists that express companies, when engaged, for hire, in the business of transportation from one state to another, are instrumentalities of commerce among the states; that the carrying of lottery tickets from one state to another is commerce which Congress may regulate; and that as a means of executing the power to regulate interstate commerce Congress may make it an offense against the United States to cause lottery tickets to be carried from one state to another.

The questions presented by these opposing contentions are of great moment, and are entitled to receive, as they have received, the most careful consideration.

What is the import of the word "commerce" as used in the Constitution? It is not defined by that instrument. Undoubtedly, the carrying from one state to another by independent carriers of things or commodities that are ordinary subjects of traffic, and which have in themselves a recognized value in money, constitutes interstate commerce. But does not commerce among the several states include something more? Does not the carrying from one state to another, by independent carriers, of lottery tickets that entitle the holder to the payment of a certain amount of money therein specified also constitute commerce among the states?

It is contended by the parties that these questions are answered in the former decisions of this court, the government insisting that the principles heretofore announced support its position, while the contrary is confidently asserted by the appellant. This makes it necessary to ascertain the import of such decisions. Upon that inquiry we now enter, premising that some propositions were advanced in argument that need not be considered. In the examination of former judgments it will be best to look at them somewhat in the order in which they were rendered. When prior adjudications have been thus collated the particular grounds upon which the judgment in the present case must necessarily rest can be readily determined. We may *here remark that some of the cases referred to may not bear directly upon the questions necessary to be decided, but attention will be directed to them as throwing light upon the general inquiry as to the meaning and scope of the commerce clause of the Constitution.

The leading case under the commerce clause of the Constitution is Gibbons v. Ogden, 9 Wheat. 1, 189, 194, 6 L. ed. 23, 68, 69. Referring to that clause, Chief Justice Marshall said: "The subject to be regulated is commerce; and our Constitution being, as was aptly said at the bar, one of enumeration, and not of definition, to ascertain the extent of the power, it becomes necessary to settle the meaning of the word. The counsel for the appellee would limit it to traffic, to buying and selling, or the interchange of commodities, and do not admit that it comprehends navigation. This would restrict a general term, applicable to many objects, to one of its significations. Commerce, undoubtedly, is traffic, but it is something more; it is intercourse. It describes the commercial intercourse between nations and parts of nations, in all its branches, and is regulated by prescribing rules for carrying on that intercourse. . . . It has been truly said that commerce, as the word is used in the Constitution, is a unit, every part of which is indicated by the term. If this be the admitted meaning of the word, in its application to foreign nations, it must carry the same meaning throughout the sentence, and remain a unit, unless there be some plain, intelligible cause which alters it. The subject to which the power is next applied is to commerce 'among the several states.' The word 'among' means intermingled with. A thing which is among others is intermingled with them. Commerce among the states cannot stop at the external boundary line of each state, but may be introduced into the interior. It is not intended to say that these words comprehend that commerce which is completely internal, which is carried on between man and man in a state, or between different parts of the same state, and which does not extend to or affect other states. Such a power would be inconvenient, and is certainly unnecessary. Comprehensive as the word 'among' is, it may very properly be restricted to that commerce which concerns more states than one. . . . *The genius and character of the [347] whole government seem to be that its action is to be applied to all the external concerns of the nation, and to those internal concerns which affect the states generally; but not to those which are completely within a particular state, which do not affect other states, and with which it is not necessary to interfere, for the purpose of executing some of the general powers of the government. . . ."

Again: "We are now arrived at the inquiry,—What is this power? It is the power to regulate; that is, to prescribe the rule by which commerce is to be governed. This power, like all others vested in Congress, is complete in itself, may be exercised to its utmost extent, and acknowledges no limitations, other than are prescribed in the Constitution. These are expressed in plain terms, and do not affect the questions which arise in this case, or which have been discussed at the bar. If, as has always been understood, the sovereignty of Congress, though limited to specific objects, is plenary as to those objects, the power over commerce with foreign nations, and among the several states, is vested in Congress as absolutely as it would be in a single government, having in its constitution the same restrictions on the exercise of the power as are found in the Constitution of the United States."

Mr. Justice Johnson, in the same case, expressed his entire approbation of the judgment rendered by the court, but delivered a separate opinion indicating the precise grounds upon which his conclusion rested. Referring to the grant of power over commerce, he said: "My opinion is founded on the application of the words of the grant to the subject of it. The 'power to regulate commerce' here meant to be granted was that power to regulate commerce which previously existed in the states. But what was that power? The states were, unquestionably, supreme; and each possessed that power over commerce which is acknowledged to reside in every sovereign state. . . . The law of nations, regarding man as a social animal, pronounces all commerce legitimate in a state of peace, until prohibited by positive law. The power of a sovereign state over commerce, therefore, amounts to nothing more than a power to limit and restrain it at pleasure. And since the power [348] to prescribe 'the limits to its freedom necessarily implies the power to determine what shall remain unrestrained, it follows that the power must be exclusive; it can reside but in one potentate; and hence the grant of this power carries with it the whole subject, leaving nothing for the state to act upon."

The principles announced in Gibbons v. Ogden were reaffirmed in Brown v. Maryland, 12 Wheat. 419, 446, 6 L. ed. 678, 688. After expressing doubt whether any of the evils proceeding from the feebleness of the Federal government contributed more to the establishing of the present constitutional system than the deep and general conviction that commerce ought to be regulated by Congress, Chief Justice Marshall, speaking for the court, said: "It is not, therefore, matter of surprise that the grant should be as extensive as the mischief, and should comprehend all foreign commerce, and all commerce among the states." Considering the question as to the just extent of the power to regulate commerce with foreign nations and among the several states, the court reaffirmed the doctrine that the power was "complete in itself, and to acknowledge no limitations other than are prescribed by the Constitution. . . . Commerce is intercourse; one of its most ordinary ingredients is traffic."

In the Passenger Cases, 7 How. 283, 12 L. ed. 702, the court adjudged certain statutes of New York and Massachusetts, imposing taxes upon alien passengers arriving in the ports of those states, to be in violation of the Constitution and laws of the United States. In the separate opinions delivered by the justices there will not be found any expression of doubt as to the doctrines announced in Gibbons v. Ogden. Mr. Justice McLean said: "Commerce is defined to be 'an exchange of commodities.' But this definition does not convey the full meaning of the term. It includes 'navigation and intercourse. That the transportation of passengers is a part of commerce is not now an open question." Mr. Justice Grier said: "Commerce, as defined by this court, means something more than traffic,— it is intercourse; and the power committed to Congress to regulate commerce is exercised by prescribing rules for carrying on that intercourse." The same views were expressed by Mr. Justice Wayne, in his separate opinion. He regarded the question then before the *court as covered by the de-[349]cision in Gibbons v. Ogden, and in respect to that case he said: "It [the case] will always be a high and honorable proof of the eminence of the American bar of that day, and of the talents and distinguished ability of the judges who were then in the places which we now occupy." Mr. Justice Catron and Mr. Justice McKinley announced substantially the same views.

In Almy v. California, 24 How. 169, 16 L. ed. 644, a statute of California imposing a stamp duty upon bills of lading for gold or silver transported from that state to any port or place out of the state was held to be a tax on exports, in violation of the provision of the Constitution declaring that "no tax or duty shall be laid on articles exported from any state." But in Woodruff v. Parham, 8 Wall. 123, 138, 19 L. ed. 382, 386, this court, referring to the Almy Case, said it was well decided upon a ground not mentioned in the opinion of the court, namely, that, although the tax there in question was only on bills of lading, "such a tax was a regulation of commerce, a tax imposed upon the transportation of goods from one state to another, over the high seas, in conflict with that freedom of transit of goods and persons between one state and another, which is within the rule laid down in Crandall v. Nevada [6 Wall. 35, 18 L. ed. 744], and with the authority of Congress to regulate commerce among the states."

In Henderson v. New York, 92 U. S. 259, 270, sub nom. Henderson v. Wickham, 23 L. ed. 543, 548, which involved the constitutional validity of a statute of New York relating to vessels bringing passengers to that port, this court, speaking by Mr. Justice Miller, said: "As already indicated, the provisions of the Constitution of the United States, on which the principal reliance is placed to make void the statute of New York, is that which gives to Congress the power 'to regulate commerce with foreign nations.' As was said in United States v. Holliday, 3 Wall. 417, 18 L. ed. 185, 'commerce with foreign nations means commerce between citizens of the United States and citizens or subjects of foreign governments.' It means trade, and it means intercourse. It means commercial intercourse between nations, and parts of nations, in all its branches. It includes navigation, as the principal means by which foreign intercourse is effected. To regulate this trade and intercourse is *to prescribe the rules by [350] which it shall be conducted. 'The mind,' says the great Chief Justice, 'can scarcely conceive a system for regulating commerce between nations which shall exclude all laws concerning navigation, which shall be silent on the admission of the vessels of one nation into the ports of another;' and he might have added, with equal force, which prescribed no terms for the admission of their cargo or their passengers. Gibbons v. Ogden, 9 Wheat. 190, 6 L. ed. 68."

The question of the scope of the commerce clause was again considered in Pensacola Tel. Co. v. Western U. Tel. Co. 96 U. S. 1, 9, 12, 24 L. ed. 708, 710, 712, involving the validity of a statute of Florida, which assumed to confer upon a local telegraph company the exclusive right to establish and maintain lines of electric telegraph in certain counties of Florida. This court held the act to be unconstitutional. Chief Justice Waite, delivering its judgment, said: "Since the case of Gibbons v. Ogden, 9 Wheat. 1, 6 L. ed. 23, it has never been doubted that commercial intercourse is an element of commerce which comes within the regulating power of Congress. Post-offices and post roads are established to facilitate the transmission of intelligence. Both commerce and the postal service are placed within the power of Congress, because, being national in their operation, they should be under the protecting care of the national government. The powers thus granted are not confined to the instrumentalities of commerce, or the postal service known or in use when the Constitution was adopted, but they keep pace with the progress of the country, and adapt themselves to the new developments of time and circumstances. They extend from the horse with its rider to the stage coach, from the sailing vessel to the steamboat, from the coach and the steamboat to the railroad, and from the railroad to the telegraph, as these new agencies are successively brought into use to meet the demands of increasing population and wealth. They were intended for the government of the business to which they relate, at all times and under all circumstances. As they were intrusted to the general government for the good of the nation it is not only the right, but the duty, of Congress to see to it that intercourse among the states and the transmission of [351] intelligence are not *obstructed or unnecessarily enumbered by state legislation. The electric telegraph marks an epoch in the progress of time. In a little more than a quarter of a century it has changed the habits of business, and become one of the necessities of commerce. It is indispensable as a means of intercommunication, but especially is it so in commercial transactions." In his dissenting opinion in that case Mr. Justice Field speaks of the importance of the telegraph "as a means of intercourse," and of its constant use in commercial transactions.

In Mobile County v. Kimball, 102 U. S. 691, 26 L. ed. 238, Mr. Justice Field, delivering the judgment of the court, said: "Commerce with foreign countries and among the states, strictly considered, consists in intercourse and traffic, including in these terms navigation and the transportation and transit of persons and property, as well as the purchase, sale, and exchange of commodities." This principle was expressly reaffirmed in Gloucester Ferry Co. v. 188 U. S.

Pennsylvania, 114 U. S. 196, 203, 29 L. ed. 158, 161, 1 Inters. Com. Rep. 382, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 826.

Applying the doctrine announced in Pensacola Tel. Co. v. Western U. Tel. Co., it was held in Western U. Tel. Co. v. Texas, 105 U. S. 460, 26 L. ed. 1067, that the law of a state imposing a tax on private telegraph messages sent out of the state was unconstitutional, as being, in effect, a regulation of interstate commerce.

In Brown v. Houston, 114 U. S. 630, 29 L. ed. 240, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1095, it was declared by the court, speaking by Mr. Justice Bradley, that "the power to regulate commerce among the several states is granted to Congress in terms as absolute as is the power to regulate commerce with foreign nations." The same thought was expressed in Bowman v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 125 U. S. 482, 31 L. ed. 706, 1 Inters. Com. Rep. 823, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 689, 1062; Crutcher v. Kentucky, 141 U. S. 47, 58, 35 L. ed. 649, 652, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 851, and Pittsburg & S. Coal Co. v. Bates, 156 U. S. 587, 39 L. ed. 543, 5 Inters. Com. Rep. 30, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 415.

In Pickard v. Pullman Southern Car Co. 117 U. S. 34, 29 L. ed. 785, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 635, it was said to be settled by the adjudged cases that to tax "the transit of passengers from foreign countries or between the states is to regulate commerce."

In Western U. Tel. Co. v. Pendleton, 122 U. S. 347, 356, 30 L. ed. 1187, 1188, 1 Inters. Com. Rep. 306, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1126, the court recognized the commerce with foreign countries and among the states which Congress could regulate as including not only the exchange and transportation of commodities, or *visible, tangible things, but [352] the carriage of persons, and the transmission by telegraph of ideas, wishes, orders, and intelligence. See also Ratterman v. Western U. Tel. Co. 127 U. S. 411, 32 L. ed. 229, 2 Inters. Com. Rep. 59, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1127, and Leloup v. Port of Mobile, 127 U. S. 640, 32 L. ed. 311, 2 Inters. Com. Rep. 134, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1380.

In Covington & C. Bridge Co. v. Kentucky, 154 U. S. 204, 218, 38 L. ed. 962, 968, 4 Inters. Com. Rep. 649, 656, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1087, 1092, the question was as to the validity, under the commerce clause of the Constitution, of an act of the Kentucky legislature relating to tolls to be charged or received for passing over the bridge of the Covington & Cincinnati Bridge Company, a corporation of both Kentucky and Ohio, erected between Covington and Cincinnati. A state enactment prescribing a rate of toll on the bridge was held to be unconstitutional, as an unauthorized regulation of interstate commerce. The court, reaffirming the principles announced in Gloucester Ferry Co. v. Pennsylvania, 114 U. S. 196, 29 L. ed. 158, 1 Inters. Com. Rep. 382, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 826, and in Wabash, St. L. & P. R. Co. v. Illinois, 118 U. S. 557, 30 L. ed. 244, 1 Inters. Com. Rep. 31, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 4, said, among other things: "Commerce was defined in Gibbons v. Ogden, 9 Wheat. 1, 189, 6 L. ed. 23, 68, to be 'intercourse,' and the thousands of people who daily pass and re-pass over this bridge may be as truly said to be engaged in commerce as if they were shipping cargoes of merchandise from New York to Liverpool. While the bridge company is not itself a common carrier, it affords a highway for such carriage, and a toll upon such bridge is as much a tax upon commerce as a toll upon a turnpike is a tax upon the traffic of such turnpike, or the charges upon a ferry a tax upon the commerce across a river."

At the present term of the court we said that "transportation for others, as an independent business, is commerce, irrespective of the purpose to sell or retain the goods which the owner may entertain with regard to them after they shall have been delivered." Hanley v. Kansas City Southern R. Co. 187 U. S. 617, ante, 333, 23 Sup. Ct. Rep. 214.

This reference to prior adjudications could be extended if it were necessary to do so. The cases cited, however, sufficiently indicate the grounds upon which this court has proceeded when determining the meaning and scope of the commerce clause. They show that commerce among the states embraces navigation, intercourse, communication, traffic, the transit of persons, *and the transmission of messages by telegraph. They also show that the power to regulate commerce among the several states is vested in Congress as absolutely as it would be in a single government, having in its constitution the same restrictions on the exercise of the power as are found in the Constitution of the United States; that such power is plenary, complete in itself, and may be exerted by Congress to its utmost extent, subject only to such limitations as the Constitution imposes upon the exercise of the powers granted by it; and that in determining the character of the regulations to be adopted Congress has a large discretion which is not to be controlled by the courts, simply because, in their opinion, such regulations may not be the best or most effective that could be employed.

We come, then, to inquire whether there is any solid foundation upon which to rest the contention that Congress may not regulate the carrying of lottery tickets from one state to another, at least by corporations or companies whose business it is, for hire, to carry tangible property from one state to another.

It was said in argument that lottery tickets are not of any real or substantial value in themselves, and therefore are not subjects of commerce. If that were conceded to be the only legal test as to what are to be deemed subjects of the commerce that may be regulated by Congress, we cannot accept as accurate the broad statement that such tickets are of no value. Upon their face they showed that the lottery company offered a large capital prize, to be paid to the holder of the ticket winning the prize at the drawing advertised to be held at Asuncion, Paraguay. Money was placed on deposit in different banks in the United States to be applied by the agents representing the lottery company to the prompt payment of prizes. These tickets were the subject of traffic; they could have been sold; and the holder was assured that the company would pay to him the amount of the prize drawn. That the holder might not have been able to enforce his claim in the courts of any country making the drawing of lotteries illegal, and forbidding the circulation of lottery tickets, did not change the fact that *the tickets issued by the foreign[354] company represented so much money payable to the person holding them and who might draw the prizes affixed to them. Even if a holder did not draw a prize, the tickets, before the drawing, had a money value in the market among those who chose to sell or buy lottery tickets. In short, a lottery ticket is a subject of traffic, and is so designated in the act of 1895. 28 Stat. at L. 963, U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 3178. That fact is not without significance in view of what this court has said. That act, counsel for the accused well remarks, was intended to supplement the provisions of prior acts, excluding lottery tickets from the mails, and prohibiting the importation of lottery matter from abroad, and to prohibit the act of causing lottery tickets to be carried, and lottery tickets and lottery advertisements to be transferred from one state to another by any means or method. 15 Stat. at L. 196, chap. 246; 17 Stat. at L. 302, chap. 335; 19 Stat. at L. 90, chap. 186; Rev. Stat. § 3894, U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 2659; 26 Stat. at L. 465, chap. 908; 28 Stat. at L. 963, chap. 191, U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 3178.

We are of opinion that lottery tickets are subjects of traffic, and therefore are subjects of commerce, and the regulation of the carriage of such tickets from state to state, at least by independent carriers, is a regulation of commerce among the several states.

But it is said that the statute in question does not regulate the carrying of lottery tickets from state to state, but by punishing those who cause them to be so carried Congress in effect prohibits such carrying; that in respect of the carrying from one state to another of articles or things that are, in fact, or according to usage in business, the subjects of commerce, the authority given Congress was not to prohibit, but only to regulate. This view was earnestly pressed at the bar by learned counsel, and must be examined.

It is to be remarked that the Constitution does not define what is to be deemed a legitimate regulation of interstate commerce. In Gibbons v. Ogden it was said that the power to regulate such commerce is the power to prescribe the rule by which it is to be governed. But this general observation leaves it to be determined, when the question comes before the court, whether Congress, in prescribing a particular rule, has exceeded its power under the Constitution. While our government *must be ac-[355] knowledged by all to be one of enumerated powers (M'Cullough v. Maryland, 4 Wheat.

316, 405, 407, 4 L. ed. 579, 601), the Constitution does not attempt to set forth all the means by which such powers may be carried into execution. It leaves to Congress a large discretion as to the means that may be employed in executing a given power. The sound construction of the Constitution, this court has said, "must allow to the national legislature that discretion, with respect to the means by which the powers it confers are to be carried into execution, which will enable that body to perform the high duties assigned to it, in the manner most beneficial to the people. Let the end be legitimate, let it be within the scope of the Constitution, and all means which are appropriate, which are plainly adapted to that end, which are not prohibited, but consist with the letter and spirit of the Constitution, are constitutional." 4 Wheat. 421, 4 L. ed. 605.

We have said that the carrying from state to state of lottery tickets constitutes interstate commerce, and that the regulation of such commerce is within the power of Congress under the Constitution. Are we prepared to say that a provision which is, in effect, a prohibition of the carriage of such articles from state to state is not a fit or appropriate mode for the regulation of that particular kind of commerce? If lottery traffic, carried on through interstate commerce, is a matter of which Congress may take cognizance and over which its power may be exerted, can it be possible that it must tolerate the traffic, and simply regulate the manner in which it may be carried on? Or may not Congress, for the protection of the people of all the states, and under the power to regulate interstate commerce, devise such means, within the scope of the Constitution, and not prohibited by it, as will drive that traffic out of commerce among the states?

In determining whether regulation may not under some circumstances properly take the form or have the effect of prohibition, the nature of the interstate traffic which it was sought by the act of May 2d, 1895, to suppress cannot be overlooked. When enacting that statute Congress no doubt shared the views upon the subject of lotteries heretofore expressed by this court. *In Phalen v. Virginia, 8 How. 163, 168, 12 L. ed. 1030, after observing that the suppression of nuisances injurious to public health or morality is among the most important duties of government, this court said: "Experience has shown that the common forms of gambling are comparatively innocuous when placed in contrast with the widespread pestilence of lotteries. The former are confined to a few persons and places, but the latter infests the whole community; it enters every dwelling; it reaches every class; it preys upon the hard earnings of the poor; it plunders the ignorant and simple." In other cases we have adjudged that authority given by legislative enactment to carry on a lottery, although based upon a consideration in money, was not protected by the contract clause of the Constitution; this, for 188 U. S. U. S., Book 47.

the reason that no state may bargain away its power to protect the public morals, nor excuse its failure to perform a public duty by saying that it had agreed, by legislative enactment, not to do so. Stone v. Mississippi, 101 U. S. 814, 25 L. ed. 1079; Douglas v. Kentucky, 168 U. S. 488, 42 L. ed. 553, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 199.

If a state, when considering legislation for the suppression of lotteries within its own limits, may properly take into view the evils that inhere in the raising of money, in that mode, why may not Congress, invested with the power to regulate commerce among the several states, provide that such commerce shall not be polluted by the carrying of lottery tickets from one state to another? In this connection it must not be forgotten that the power of Congress to regulate commerce among the states is plenary, is complete in itself, and is subject to no limitations except such as may be found in the Constitution. What provision in that instrument can be regarded as limiting the exercise of the power granted? What clause can be cited which, in any degree, countenances the suggestion that one may, of right, carry or cause to be carried from one state to another that which will harm the public morals? We cannot think of any clause of that instrument that could possibly be invoked by those who assert their right to send lottery tickets from state to state except the one providing that no person shall be deprived of his liberty without due process of law. We have said that the liberty protected by the Constitution *embraces the right to be free in the enjoy-[357]ment of one's faculties; "to be free to use them in all lawful ways; to live and work where he will; to earn his livelihood by any lawful calling; to pursue any livelihood or avocation, and for that purpose to enter into all contracts which may be proper." Allgeyer v. Louisiana, 165 U. S. 578, 589, 41 L. ed. 832, 835, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 427, 431. But surely it will not be said to be a part of anyone's liberty, as recognized by the supreme law of the land, that he shall be allowed to introduce into commerce among the states an element that will be confessedly injurious to the public morals.

If it be said that the act of 1895 is inconsistent with the 10th Amendment, reserving to the states respectively, or to the people, the powers not delegated to the United States, the answer is that the power to regulate commerce among the states has been expressly delegated to Congress.

Besides, Congress, by that act, does not assume to interfere with traffic or commerce in lottery tickets carried on exclusively within the limits of any state, but has in view only commerce of that kind among the several states. It has not assumed to interfere with the completely internal affairs of any state, and has only legislated in respect of a matter which concerns the people of the United States. As a state may, for the purpose of guarding the morals of its own people, forbid all sales of lottery tickets within its limits, so Congress, for the purpose of guarding the people of the United States against the "widespread pestilence of lotteries" and to protect the commerce which concerns all the states, may prohibit the carrying of lottery tickets from one state to another. In legislating upon the subject of the traffic in lottery tickets, as carried on through interstate commerce, Congress only supplemented the action of those states—perhaps all of them—which, for the protection of the public morals, prohibit the drawing of lotteries, as well as the sale or circulation of lottery tickets, within their respective limits. It said, in effect, that it would not permit the declared policy of the states, which sought to protect their people against the mischiefs of the lottery business, to be overthrown or disregarded by the agency of interstate commerce. We should hesitate long before [358] adjudging that an evil of such "appalling character, carried on through interstate commerce, cannot be met and crushed by the only power competent to that end. We say competent to that end, because Congress alone has the power to occupy, by legislation, the whole field of interstate commerce. What was said by this court upon a former occasion may well be here repeated: "The framers of the Constitution never intended that the legislative power of the nation should find itself incapable of disposing of a subject-matter specifically committed to its charge." Re Rahrer, 140 U. S. 545, 563, sub nom. Wilkerson v. Rahrer, 35 L. ed. 572, 577, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 865, 869. If the carrying of lottery tickets from one state to another be interstate commerce, and if Congress is of opinion that an effective regulation for the suppression of lotteries, carried on through such commerce, is to make it a criminal offense to cause lottery tickets to be carried from one state to another, we know of no authority in the courts to hold that the means thus devised are not appropriate and necessary to protect the country at large against a species of interstate commerce which, although in general use and somewhat favored in both national and state legislation in the early history of the country, has grown into disrepute, and has become offensive to the entire people of the nation. It is a kind of traffic which no one can be entitled to pursue as of right.

That regulation may sometimes appropriately assume the form of prohibition is also illustrated by the case of diseased cattle, transported from one state to another. Such cattle may have, notwithstanding their condition, a value in money for some purposes, and yet it cannot be doubted that Congress, under its power to regulate commerce, may either provide for their being inspected before transportation begins, or, in its discretion, may prohibit their being transported from one state to another. Indeed, by the act of May 29th, 1884, chap. 60 [23 Stat. at L. 32, § 6, U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 3184], Congress has provided: "That no railroad company within the United States, or the owners or masters of any steam or sailing, or other vessel or boat, shall receive for transportation or transport, from one state or territory to another, or from any state into the District of Columbia, or from the District into any state, any live stock affected with any contagious, infectious, or communicable disease, and especially the disease known as *pleuro-pneu-[359] monia; nor shall any person, company, or corporation deliver for such transportation to any railroad company or master or owner of any boat or vessel, any live stock, knowing them to be affected with any contagious, infectious, or communicable disease; nor shall any person, company, or corporation drive on foot or transport in private conveyance from one state or territory to another, or from any state into the District of Columbia, or from the District into any state, any live stock, knowing them to be affected with any contagious, infectious, or communicable disease, and especially the disease known as pleuro-pneumonia." Reid v. Colorado, 187 U. S. 137, ante, 103, 23 Sup. Ct. Rep. 92.

The act of July 2d, 1890 (26 Stat. at L. 209, chap. 647, U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 3200), known as the Sherman anti-trust act, and which is based upon the power of Congress to regulate commerce among the states, is an illustration of the proposition that regulation may take the form of prohibition. The object of that act was to protect trade and commerce against unlawful restraints and monopolies. To accomplish that object Congress declared certain contracts to be illegal. That act, in effect, prohibited the doing of certain things, and its prohibitory clauses have been sustained in several cases as valid under the power of Congress to regulate interstate commerce. United States v. Trans-Mission Freight Asso. 166 U. S. 290, 41 L. ed. 1007, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 540; United States v. Joint Traffic Asso. 171 U. S. 505, 43 L. ed. 259, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 25; Addyston Pipe & Steel Co. v. United States, 175 U. S. 211, 44 L. ed. 136, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 96. In the case last named the court, referring to the power of Congress to regulate commerce among the states, said: "In Gibbons v. Ogden, 9 Wheat. 1, 6 L. ed. 23, the power was declared to be complete in itself, and to acknowledge no limitations other than are prescribed by the Constitution. Under this grant of power to Congress that body, in our judgment, may enact such legislation as shall declare void and prohibit the performance of any contract between individuals or corporations where the natural and direct effect of such a contract will be, when carried out, to directly, and not as a mere incident to other and innocent purposes, regulate to any substantial extent interstate commerce. (And when we speak of interstate we also include in our meaning foreign commerce.) We do not assent to the correctness *of the proposition that the consti-[360] tutional guaranty of liberty to the individual to enter into private contracts limits the power of Congress and prevents it from legislating upon the subject of contracts of the class mentioned. The power to regulate interstate commerce is, as stated by Chief Justice Marshall, full and complete in Congress, and there is no limitation in the grant of the power which excludes private contracts of the nature in question from the jurisdiction of that body. Nor is any such limitation contained in that other clause of the Constitution, which provides that no person shall be deprived of life, liberty, or property without due process of law." Again: "The provision in the Constitution does not, as we believe, exclude Congress from legislating with regard to contracts of the above nature while in the exercise of its constitutional right to regulate commerce among the states. On the contrary, we think the provision regarding the liberty of the citizen is, to some extent, limited by the commerce clause of the Constitution, and that the power of Congress to regulate interstate commerce comprises the right to enact a law prohibiting the citizen from entering into those private contracts which directly and substantially, and not merely indirectly, remotely, incidentally, and collaterally, regulate to a greater or less degree commerce among the states."

That regulation may sometimes take the form or have the effect of prohibition is also illustrated in the case of Re Rahrer, 140 U. S. 545, sub nom. Wilkerson v. Rahrer, 35 L. ed. 572, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 865. In Mugler v. Kansas, 123 U. S. 623, 31 L. ed. 205, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 273, it was adjudged that state legislation prohibiting the manufacture of spirituous, malt, vinous, fermented, or other intoxicating liquors within the limits of the state, to be there sold or bartered for general use as a beverage, does not necessarily infringe any right, privilege, or immunity secured by the Constitution of the United States or by the amendments thereto. Subsequently in Bowman v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 125 U. S. 465, 31 L. ed. 700, 1 Inters. Com. Rep. 823, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 689, 1062, this court held that ardent spirits, distilled liquors, ale, and beer were subjects of exchange, barter, and traffic, and were so recognized by the usages of the commercial world, as well as by the laws of Congress and the decisions of the courts. In Leisy v. Hardin, 135 U. S. 100, 110, 125, 34 L. ed. 128, 132, 138, 3 Inters. Com. Rep. 36, 41, [361] 47, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 681, 684, 690, the court again held that spirituous liquors were recognized articles of commerce, and declared a statute of Iowa prohibiting the sale within its limits of any intoxicating liquors, except for pharmaceutical, medicinal, chemical, or sacramental purposes, under a state license, to be repugnant to the commerce clause of the Constitution, if applied to the sale, within the state, by the importer, in the original, unbroken packages, of such liquors manufactured in and brought from another state. And in determining whether a state could prohibit the sale within its limits, in original, unbroken packages, of ardent spirits, distilled liquors, ale, and beer, imported from another state, this court said that they were recognized by the laws of Congress as well as by the commercial world 188 U. S.

as "subjects of exchange, barter, and traffic," and that "whatever our individual views may be as to the deleterious or dangerous qualities of particular articles, we cannot hold that any articles which Congress recognized as subjects of commerce are not such."

Then followed the passage by Congress of the act of August 8th, 1890 (26 Stat. at L. 313, chap. 728, U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 3177), providing "that all fermented, distilled, or other intoxicating liquors or liquids transported into any state or territory, or remaining therein for use, consumption, sale, or storage therein, shall, upon arrival in such state or territory, be subject to the operation and effect of the laws of such state or territory enacted in the exercise of its police powers, to the same extent and in the same manner as though such liquors or liquors had been produced in such state or territory, and shall not be exempt therefrom by reason of being introduced therein in original packages or otherwise." That act was sustained in the Rahrer Case as a valid exercise of the power of Congress to regulate commerce among the states.

In Rhodes v. Iowa, 170 U. S. 412, 426, 42 L. ed. 1088, 1096, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 664, 669, that statute—all of its provisions being regarded—was held as not causing the power of the state to attach to an interstate commerce shipment of intoxicating liquors "whilst the merchandise was in transit under such shipment, and until its arrival at the point of destination and delivery there to the consignee."

Thus, under its power to regulate interstate commerce, as involved*in the transportation, in original packages, of ardent spirits [362] from one state to another, Congress, by the necessary effect of the act of 1890 made it impossible to transport such packages to places within a prohibitory state and there dispose of their contents by sale; although it had been previously held that ardent spirits were recognized articles of commerce and, until Congress otherwise provided, could be imported into a state, and sold in the original packages, despite the will of the state. If at the time of the passage of the act of 1890 all the states had enacted liquor laws prohibiting the sale of intoxicating liquors within their respective limits, then the act would have had the necessary effect to exclude ardent spirits altogether from commerce among the states; for no one would ship, for purposes of sale, packages containing such spirits to points within any state that forbade their sale at any time or place, even in unbroken packages, and, in addition, provided for the seizure and forfeiture of such packages. So that we have in the Rahrer Case a recognition of the principle that the power of Congress to regulate interstate commerce may sometimes be exerted with the effect of excluding particular articles from such commerce.

It is said, however, that in order to suppress lotteries carried on through interstate commerce, Congress may exclude lottery tickets from such commerce. That principle leads necessarily to the conclusion that Congress may arbitrarily exclude from commerce among the states any article, commodity, or thing, of whatever kind or nature, or however useful or valuable, which it may choose, no matter with what motive, to declare shall not be carried from one state to another. It will be time enough to consider the constitutionality of such legislation when we must do so. The present case does not require the court to declare the full extent of the power that Congress may exercise in the regulation of commerce among the states. We may, however, repeat, in this connection, what the court has heretofore said, that the power of Congress to regulate commerce among the states, although plenary, cannot be deemed arbitrary, since it is subject to such limitations or restrictions as [363]are *prescribed by the Constitution. This power, therefore, may not be exercised so as to infringe rights secured or protected by that instrument. It would not be difficult to imagine legislation that would be justly liable to such an objection as that stated, and be hostile to the objects for the accomplishment of which Congress was invested with the general power to regulate commerce among the several states. But, as often said, the possible abuse of a power is not an argument against its existence. There is probably no governmental power that may not be exerted to the injury of the public. If what is done by Congress is manifestly in excess of the powers granted to it, then upon the courts will rest the duty of adjudging that its action is neither legal nor binding upon the people. But if what Congress does is within the limits of its power, and is simply unwise or injurious, the remedy is that suggested by Chief Justice Marshall in Gibbons v. Ogden, when he said: "The wisdom and the discretion of Congress, their identity with the people, and the influence which their constituents possess at elections, are, in this, as in many other instances, as that, for example, of declaring war, the sole restraints on which they have relied, to secure them from its abuse. They are the restraints on which the people must often rely solely, in all representative governments."

The whole subject is too important, and the questions suggested by its consideration are too difficult of solution, to justify any attempt to lay down a rule for determining in advance the validity of every statute that may be enacted under the commerce clause. We decide nothing more in the present case than that lottery tickets are subjects of traffic among those who choose to sell or buy them; that the carriage of such tickets by independent carriers from one state to another is therefore interstate commerce; that under its power to regulate commerce among the several states Congress—subject to the limitations imposed by the Constitution upon the exercise of the powers granted—has plenary authority over such commerce, and may prohibit the carriage of such tickets from state to state; and that legislation to that end, and of that character, is not inconsistent *with any limitation [364] or restriction imposed upon the exercise of the powers granted to Congress.

The judgment is affirmed.

Mr. Chief Justice Fuller, with whom concur Mr. Justice Brewer, Mr. Justice Shiras, and Mr. Justice Peckham, dissenting:

Although the 1st section of the act of March 2, 1895 (28 Stat. at L. 963, chap. 191, U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 3178), is artificially drawn, I accept the contention of the government that it makes it an offense (1) to bring lottery matter from abroad into the United States; (2) to cause such matter to be deposited in or carried by the mails of the United States; (3) to cause such matter to be carried from one state to another in the United States; and further, to cause any advertisement of a lottery or similar enterprise to be brought into the United States, or be deposited or carried by the mails, or transferred from one state to another.

The case before us does not involve in fact the circulation of advertisements and the question of the abridgment of the freedom of the press; nor does it involve the importation of lottery matter, or its transmission by the mails. It is conceded that the lottery tickets in question, though purporting to be issued by a lottery company of Paraguay, were printed in the United States, and were not imported into the United States from any foreign country.

The naked question is whether the prohibition by Congress of the carriage of lottery tickets from one state to another by means other than the mails is within the powers vested in that body by the Constitution of the United States. That the purpose of Congress in this enactment was the suppression of lotteries cannot reasonably be denied. That purpose is avowed in the title of the act, and is its natural and reasonable effect, and by that its validity must be tested. Henderson v. New York, 92 U. S. 268, sub nom. Henderson v. Wickham, 23 L. ed. 548; Minnesota v. Barber, 136 U. S. 320, 34 L. ed. 458, 3 Inters. Com. Rep. 185, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 862.

The power of the state to impose restraints and burdens on persons and property in conservation and promotion of the public *health, good order, and prosperity is [365] a power originally and always belonging to the states, not surrendered by them to the general government, nor directly restrained by the Constitution of the United States, and essentially exclusive, and the suppression of lotteries as a harmful business falls within this power, commonly called of police. Douglas v. Kentucky, 168 U. S. 488, 42 L. ed. 553, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 199.

It is urged, however, that because Congress is empowered to regulate commerce between the several states, it, therefore, may suppress lotteries by prohibiting the carriage of lottery matter. Congress may, indeed, make all laws necessary and proper for carrying the powers granted to it into execution, and doubtless an act prohibiting the carriage of lottery matter would be necessary and proper to the execution of a power to suppress lotteries; but that power belongs to the states, and not to Congress. To hold that Congress has general police power would be to hold that it may accomplish objects not intrusted to the general government, and to defeat the operation of the 10th Amendment, declaring that "the powers not delegated to the United States by the Constitution, nor prohibited by it to the states, are reserved to the states respectively, or to the people."

The ground on which prior acts forbidding the transmission of lottery matter by the mails was sustained, was that the power vested in Congress to establish postoffices and post roads embraced the regulation of the entire postal system of the country, and that under that power Congress might designate what might be carried in the mails and what excluded. Re Rapier, 143 U. S. 110, 36 L. ed. 93, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 374; Ex parte Jackson, 96 U. S. 727, 24 L. ed. 877.

In the latter case, Mr. Justice Field, delivering the unanimous opinion of the court, said: "But we do not think that Congress possesses the power to prevent the transportation in other ways, as merchandise, of matter which it excludes from the mails. To give efficiency to its regulations and prevent rival postal systems, it may, perhaps, prohibit the carriage by others for hire, over postal routes, of articles which legitimately constitute mail matter, in the sense in which those terms were used when the Constitution was adopted, consisting of [366] letters, and of newspapers and pamphlets, when not sent as merchandise; but further than this its power of prohibition cannot extend." And this was repeated in the Case of Rapier.

Certainly the act before us cannot stand the test of the rule laid down by Mr. Justice Miller in the Trade-Mark Cases, 100 U. S. 96, sub nom. United States v. Steffens, 25 L. ed. 552, when he said: "When, therefore, Congress undertakes to enact a law, which can only be valid as a regulation of commerce, it is reasonable to expect to find on the face of the law, or from its essential nature, that it is a regulation of commerce with foreign nations, or among the several states, or with the Indian tribes. If not so limited, it is in excess of the power of Congress."

But apart from the question of bona fides, this act cannot be brought within the power to regulate commerce among the several states, unless lottery tickets are articles of commerce, and, therefore, when carried across state lines, of interstate commerce; or unless the power to regulate interstate commerce includes the absolute and exclusive power to prohibit the transportation of anything or anybody from one state to another.

Mr. Justice Catron remarked in the Licence Cases [5 How. 504, 600, 12 L. ed. 256, 299] that "that which does not belong to commerce is within the jurisdiction of the 188 U. S.

police power of the state; and that which does belong to commerce is within the jurisdiction of the United States;" and the observation has since been repeatedly quoted by this court with approval.

In United States v. E. C. Knight Co. 156 U. S. 13, 39 L. ed. 329, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 254, we said: "It is vital that the independence of the commercial power and of the police power, and the delimitation between them, however sometimes perplexing should always be recognized and observed, for while the one furnishes the strongest bond of union, the other is essential to the preservation of the autonomy of the states as required by our dual form of government; and acknowledged evils, however grave and urgent they may appear to be, had better be borne than the risk be run, in the effort to suppress them, of more serious consequences by resort to expedients of even doubtful constitutionality. It will be perceived how far reaching the proposition is that the power of dealing with a monopoly directly may be exercised by the *general government [367] whenever interstate or international commerce may be ultimately affected. The regulation of commerce applies to the subjects of commerce, and not to matters of internal police." This case was adhered to in Addyston Pipe & Steel Co. v. United States, 175 U. S. 211, 44 L. ed. 136, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 96, where it was decided that Congress could prohibit the performance of contracts, whose natural effect, when carried out, would be to directly regulate interstate and foreign commerce.

It cannot be successfully contended that either Congress or the states can, by their own legislation, enlarge their powers, and the question of the extent and limit of the powers of either is a judicial question under the fundamental law.

If a particular article is not the subject of commerce, the determination of Congress that it is, cannot be so conclusive as to exclude judicial inquiry.

When Chief Justice Marshall said that commerce embraced intercourse, he added, commercial intercourse, and this was necessarily so since, as Chief Justice Taney pointed out, if intercourse were a word of larger meaning than the word "commerce," it could not be substituted for the word of more limited meaning contained in the Constitution.

Is the carriage of lottery tickets from one state to another commercial intercourse?

The lottery ticket purports to create contractual relations, and to furnish the means of enforcing a contract right.

This is true of insurance policies, and both are contingent in their nature. Yet this court has held that the issuing of fire, marine, and life insurance policies, in one state, and sending them to another, to be there delivered to the insured on payment of premium, is not interstate commerce. Paul v. Virginia, 8 Wall. 168, 19 L. ed. 357; Hooper v. California, 155 U. S. 648, 39 L. ed. 297, 5 Inters. Com. Rep. 610, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 207; New York L. Ins. Co. v. Cravens, 178 U. S. 389, 44 L. ed. 1116, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 962.

In Paul v. Virginia, Mr. Justice Field, in delivering the unanimous opinion of the court, said: "Issuing a policy of insurance is not a transaction of commerce. The policies are simple contracts of indemnity against loss by fire, entered into between the corporations and the assured, for a consideration paid by the latter. These contracts [368] are not articles of commerce *in any proper meaning of the word. They are not subjects of trade and barter offered in the market as something having an existence and value independent of the parties to them. They are not commodities to be shipped or forwarded from one state to another, and then put up for sale. They are like other personal contracts between parties which are completed by their signature and the transfer of the consideration. Such contracts are not interstate transactions, though the parties may be domiciled in different states. The policies do not take effect—are not executed contracts—until delivered by the agent in Virginia. They are, then, local transactions, and are governed by the local law. They do not constitute a part of the commerce between the states any more than a contract for the purchase and sale of goods in Virginia by a citizen of New York whilst in Virginia would constitute a portion of such commerce."

This language was quoted with approval in Hooper v. California, 155 U. S. 648, 39 L. ed. 297, 5 Inters. Com. Rep. 610, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 207, and it was further said: "If the power to regulate interstate commerce applied to all the incidents to which said commerce might give rise, and to all contracts which might be made in the course of its transaction, that power would embrace the entire sphere of mercantile activity in any way connected with trade between the states; and would exclude state control over many contracts purely domestic in their nature. The business of insurance is not commerce. A contract of insurance is not an instrumentality of commerce. The making of such a contract is a mere incident of commercial intercourse, and in this respect there is no difference whatever between insurance against fire and insurance against 'the perils of the sea.'" Or, as remarked in New York L. Ins. Co. v. Cravens, "against the uncertainty of man's mortality."

The fact that the agent of the foreign insurance company negotiated the contract of insurance in the state where the contract was to be finally completed and the policy delivered, did not affect the result. As Mr. Justice Bradley said in the leading case of Robbins v. Shelby County Taxing Dist. 120 U. S. 489, 30 L. ed. 694, 1 Inters. Com. Rep. 45, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 592: "The negotiation of [369] sales of goods which are in another *state, for the purpose of introducing them into the state in which the negotiation is made, is interstate commerce." And see Collins v. New Hampshire, 171 U. S. 30, 43 L. ed. 60, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 768, and other cases.

Tested by the same reasoning, negotiable instruments are not instruments of commerce; bills of lading are, because they stand for the articles included therein; hence it has been held that a state cannot tax interstate bills of lading because that would be a regulation of interstate commerce, and that Congress cannot tax foreign bills of lading, because that would be to tax the articles exported, and in conflict with article 1, § 9, cl. 5, of the Constitution of the United States, that "no tax or duty shall be laid on any articles exported from any state." Fairbank v. United States, 181 U. S. 283, 45 L. ed. 862, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 648.

In Nathan v. Louisiana, 8 How. 73, 12 L. ed. 993, it was held that a broker dealing in foreign bills of exchange was not engaged in commerce, but in supplying an instrumentality of commerce, and that a state tax on all money or exchange brokers was not void as to him as a regulation of commerce.

And in Williams v. Fears, 179 U. S. 270, 45 L. ed. 186, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 128, that the levy of a tax by the state of Georgia on the occupation of a person engaged in hiring laborers to be employed beyond the limits of the state was not a regulation of interstate commerce, and that the tax fell within the distinction between interstate commerce or an instrumentality thereof, and the mere incidents that might attend the carrying on of such commerce.

In Cohen v. Virginia, 6 Wheat. 264, 440, 5 L. ed. 257, 299, Congress had empowered the corporation of the city of Washington to "authorize the drawing of lotteries for any improvement of the city, which the ordinary funds or revenue thereof will not accomplish." The corporation had duly provided for such lottery, and this case was a conviction under a statute of Virginia for selling tickets issued by that lottery. That statute forbade the sale within the state of any ticket in a lottery not authorized by the laws of Virginia.

The court held, by Chief Justice Marshall, that the lottery was merely the emanation of a corporate power, and "that the *mind of [370] Congress was not directed to any provision for the sale of the tickets beyond the limits of the corporation."

The constitutionality of the act of Congress, as forcing the sale of tickets in Virginia, was therefore not passed on, but if lottery tickets had been deemed articles of commerce, the Virginia statute would have been invalid as a regulation of commerce, and the conviction could hardly have been affirmed, as it was.

In Nutting v. Massachusetts, 183 U. S. 553, 556, 46 L. ed. 324, 325, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 238, 239, Mr. Justice Gray said: "A state has the undoubted power to prohibit foreign insurance companies from making contracts of insurance, marine or other, within its limits, except upon such conditions as the state may prescribe, not interfering with interstate commerce. A contract of marine insurance is not an instrumentality of commerce, but a mere incident of commercial intercourse. The state, having the power to impose conditions on the transaction of business by foreign insurance companies within its limits, has the equal right to prohibit the transaction of such business by agents of such companies, or by insurance brokers, who are to some extent the representatives of both parties."

If a state should create a corporation to engage in the business of lotteries, could it enter another state, which prohibited lotteries, on the ground that lottery tickets were the subjects of commerce?

On the other hand, could Congress compel a state to admit lottery matter within it, contrary to its own laws?

In Alexander v. State, 86 Ga. 246, 10 L. R. A. 859, 12 S. E. 408, it was held that a state statute prohibiting the business of buying and selling what are commonly known as "futures," was not protected by the commerce clause of the Constitution, as the business was gambling, and that clause protected interstate commerce, but did not protect interstate gambling. The same view was expressed in State v. Stripling, 113 Ala. 120, 36 L. R. A. 81, 21 So. 409, in respect of an act forbidding the sale of pools on horse races conducted without the state.

In Ballock v. State, 73 Md. 1, 8 L. R. A. 671, 20 Atl. 184, it was held that when the bonds of a foreign government are coupled with conditions and stipulations that change [371] their character from an *obligation for the payment of a certain sum of money to a species of lottery tickets condemned by the police regulations of the state, the prohibition of their sale did not violate treaty stipulation or constitutional provision. Such bonds with such conditions and stipulations ceased to be vendible under the law.

So lottery tickets forbidden to be issued or dealt in by the laws of Texas, the terminus a quo, and by the laws of California or Utah, the terminus ad quem, were not vendible; and for this reason, also, not articles of commerce.

If a lottery ticket is not an article of commerce, how can it become so when placed in an envelope or box or other covering, and transported by an express company? To say that the mere carrying of an article which is not an article of commerce in and of itself nevertheless becomes such the moment it is to be transported from one state to another, is to transform a non-commercial article into a commercial one simply because it is transported. I cannot conceive that any such result can properly follow.

It would be to say that everything is an article of commerce the moment it is taken to be transported from place to place, and of interstate commerce if from state to state.

An invitation to dine, or to take a drive, or a note of introduction, all become articles of commerce under the ruling in this case, by being deposited with an express company for transportation. This in effect breaks down all the differences between that which is, and that which is not, an article of commerce, and the necessary consequence is to take from the states all jurisdiction over the subject so far as interstate communication is concerned. It is a long step in the direction of wiping out all traces of state lines, and the creation of a centralized government.

Does the grant to Congress of the power to regulate interstate commerce impart the absolute power to prohibit it?

It was said in Gibbons v. Ogden that the right of intercourse between state and state was derived from "those laws whose authority is acknowledged by civilized man throughout the world;" but under the Articles of Confederation the states might have interdicted interstate trade, yet *when they [372] surrendered the power to deal with commerce as between themselves to the general government it, was undoubtedly in order to form a more perfect union by freeing such commerce from state discrimination, and not to transfer the power of restriction.

"But if that power of regulation is absolutely unrestricted as respects interstate commerce, then the very unity the Constitution was framed to secure can be set at naught by a legislative body created by that instrument." 183 U. S. 171, 46 L. ed. 136, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 70.

It will not do to say—a suggestion which has heretofore been made in this case—that state laws have been found to be ineffective for the suppression of lotteries, and therefore Congress should interfere. The scope of the commerce clause of the Constitution cannot be enlarged because of present views of public interest.

In countries whose fundamental law is flexible it may be that the homely maxim, "to ease the shoe where it pinches," may be applied, but under the Constitution of the United States it cannot be availed of to justify action by Congress or by the courts.

The Constitution gives no countenance to the theory that Congress is vested with the full powers of the British Parliament, and that, although subject to constitutional limitations, it is the sole judge of their extent and application; and the decisions of this court from the beginning have been to the contrary.

"To what purpose are powers limited, and to what purpose is that limitation committed to writing, if these limits may, at any time, be passed by those intended to be restrained?" asked Marshall, in Marbury v. Madison [1 Cranch, 176, 2 L. ed. 73].

"Should Congress," said the same great magistrate in M'Culloch v. Maryland, "under the pretext of executing its powers, pass laws for the accomplishment of objects not intrusted to the government, it would become the painful duty of this tribunal, should a case requiring such a decision come before it, to say that such an act was not the law of the land."

*And so Chief Justice Taney, referring to [373] the extent and limits of the powers of Congress: "As the Constitution itself does not draw the line, the question is necessarily one for judicial decision, and depending altogether upon the words of the Constitution." [License Cases, 5 How. 574, 12 L. ed. 288.]

It is argued that the power to regulate commerce among the several states is the same as the power to regulate commerce with foreign nations, and with the Indian tribes. But is its scope the same?

As in effect before observed, the power to regulate commerce with foreign nations and the power to regulate interstate commerce, are to be taken diverso intuitu, for the latter was intended to secure equality and freedom in commercial intercourse as between the states, not to permit the creation of impediments to such intercourse; while the former clothed Congress with that power over international commerce, pertaining to a sovereign nation in its intercourse with foreign nations, and subject, generally speaking, to no implied or reserved power in the states. The laws which would be necessary and proper in the one case would not be necessary or proper in the other.

Congress is forbidden to lay any tax or duty on articles exported from any state, and while that has been applied to exports to a foreign country, it seems to me that it was plainly intended to apply to interstate exportation as well; Congress is forbidden to give preference by any regulation of commerce or revenue to the ports of one state over those of another; and duties, imposts, and excises must be uniform throughout the United States.

"The citizens of each state shall be entitled to all privileges and immunities of citizens in the several states." This clause of the 2d section of article 4 was taken from the 4th article of Confederation which provided that "the free inhabitant of each of these states . . . shall be entitled to all privileges and immunities of free citizens in the several states; and the people of each state shall have free ingress and regress to and from any other state, and shall enjoy therein all the privileges of trade and commerce," while other parts of the "same article were also brought forward in article 4 of the Constitution.

[374]

Mr. Justice Miller, in the Slaughter-House Cases, 16 Wall. 36, 75, 21 L. ed. 394, 408, says that there can be but little question that the purpose of the 4th article of the Confederation, and of this particular clause of the Constitution, "is the same, and that the privileges and immunities intended are the same in each."

Thus it is seen that the right of passage of persons and property from one state to another cannot be prohibited by Congress. But that does not challenge the legislative power of a sovereign nation to exclude foreign persons or commodities, or place an embargo, perhaps not permanent, upon foreign ships or manufactures.

The power to prohibit the transportation of diseased animals and infected goods over railroads or on steamboats is an entirely different thing, for they would be in themselves injurious to the transaction of interstate commerce, and, moreover, are essentially commercial in their nature. And the exclusion of diseased persons rests on different ground, for nobody would pretend that persons could be kept off the trains because they were going from one state to another to engage in the lottery business. However enticing that business may be, we do not understand these pieces of paper themselves can communicate bad principles by contact.

The same view must be taken as to commerce with Indian tribes. There is no reservation of police powers or any other to a foreign nation or to an Indian tribe, and the scope of the power is not the same as that over interstate commerce.

In United States v. 43 Gallons of Whiskey, 93 U. S. 188, 194, sub nom. United States v. Lariviere, 23 L. ed. 846, 847, Mr. Justice Davis said: "Congress now has the exclusive and absolute power to regulate commerce with the Indian tribes,—a power as broad and free from restrictions as that to regulate commerce with foreign nations. The only efficient way of dealing with the Indian tribes was to place them under the protection of the general government. Their peculiar habits and character required this; and the history of the country shows the necessity of keeping them 'separate, subordinate, and dependent.' Accordingly, treaties have been made and laws passed 'separating Indian territory from that of [375] the states, and providing that intercourse and trade with the Indians should be carried on solely under the authority of the United States.'"

I regard this decision as inconsistent with the views of the framers of the Constitution, and of Marshall, its great expounder. Our form of government may remain notwithstanding legislation or decision, but, as long ago observed, it is with governments, as with religions: the form may survive the substance of the faith.

In my opinion the act in question in the particular under consideration is invalid, and the judgments below ought to be reversed, and my brothers Brewer, Shiras, and Peckham concur in this dissent.

JOHN FRANCIS, Anthony Hoff, and John Edgar, alias Peter Edgar, Petitioners,
v.

UNITED STATES.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 375 -385.)

Interstate commerce—traffic in lottery tickets—policy slips.

Policy slips written by a customer to indicate his choice of numbers, and delivered by him to an agent of the policy game, to be forwarded by him to headquarters in another state, are not within the provisions of the act of Congress of March 2, 1895, chap. 191 (28 Stat. at L. 963, U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 3178), making it an offense against the United States to cause to be carried from one state to another any paper, certificate, or instrument purporting to be or to represent a ticket, chance, share, or interest in a lottery.

Argued October 16, 17, 1901. Ordered for reargument before full bench November 10, 1902. Reargued December 15, 16, 1902. Decided February 23, 1903.

ON WRIT of Certiorari to the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Sixth Circuit to review a judgment which affirmed a judgment of the District Court for the Southern District of Ohio entered upon a conviction for the offense of causing lottery tickets or papers representing an interest in a lottery to be carried from one state to another. Reversed and remanded to the District Court, with directions to set aside the verdict and grant a new trial.

See same case below, 46 C. C. A. 25, 106 Fed. 896.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Miller Outcalt, argued the cause, and, with Mr. Thomas F. Shay, filed a brief for petitioners:

Commerce undoubtedly is traffic, but it is something more; it is intercourse. It describes the commercial intercourse between nations and parts of nations, in all its branches, and is regulated by prescribing rules for carrying on that intercourse.

Gibbons v. Ogden, 9 Wheat. 1, 6 L. ed. 23; United States v. E. C. Knight Co. 156 U. S. 1, 39 L. ed. 325, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 249.

In whatever language a statute may be framed, its purpose must be determined by its natural and reasonable effect; and the presumption that it was enacted in good faith, for the purpose expressed in the title, cannot control the determination of the question whether it is or is not repugnant to the Constitution of the United States.

Minnesota v. Barber, 136 U. S. 313, 34 L. ed. 455, 5 Inters. Com. Rep. 185, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 862; New York v. Miln, 11 Pet. 103, 9 L. ed. 648; Passenger Cases, 7 How. 283, 12 L. ed. 702; Henderson v. New York, 92 U. S. 259, 23 L. ed. 543; United States v. Fox, 95 U. S. 670, 24 L. ed. 538; Yick Wo v. Hopkins, 118 U. S. 356, 30 L. ed. 220, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1064; Morgan's L. & T. R. & S. S. Co. v. Louisiana Bd. of Health, 118 U. S. 455, 30 L. ed. 237, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1114.

The protection of the Constitution does not extend to lotteries, games of chance, or speculation. These may be interstate gambling, but are not commerce.

Prentice & Egan, Commerce Clause of Fed. Const. p. 55.

A state may prohibit buying or selling what are commonly known as futures.

Fortenbury v. State, 47 Ark. 188, 1 S. W. 58; Alexander v. State, 86 Ga. 246, 10 L. R. A. 859, 12 S. E. 408.

A state may prohibit the sale of lottery tickets or of bonds containing conditions which make their value dependent upon chance.

Ballock v. State, 73 Md. 1, 8 L. R. A. 671, 20 Atl. 184; Roselle v. Farmers' Bank, 141 Mo. 36, 39 S. W. 274.

A state may prohibit the sale of pools on horse races conducted without the state, although not forbidden as to races conducted within the state.

188 U. S.

State v. Stripling, 113 Ala. 130, 38 L. R. A. 81, 21 So. 409.

And may forbid the sending of money without the state for gambling purposes.

Lacey v. Palmer, 93 Va. 159, 31 L. R. A. 822, 24 S. E. 930; State v. Harbourn, 70 Conn. 484, 40 L. R. A. 607, 40 Atl. 179.

The power conferred upon Congress by the commerce clause of the Constitution is exclusive so far as it relates to matters within its purview which are national in their character and admit or require uniformity of regulation affecting all the states. That clause was adopted in order to secure such uniformity against discriminating state legislation.

Mobile County v. Kimball, 102 U. S. 691, 26 L. ed. 238.

A lottery grant is not in any sense a contract within the meaning of the Constitution, but simply a gratuity, a license, which the state, under its police power and for the protection of the public morals, can at any time revoke.

Douglas v. Kentucky, 168 U. S. 488, 42 L. ed. 553, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 199.

Mr. George F. Edmunds also argued the cause and filed a brief for petitioners:

If the clear principles declared and implied in Minnesota v. Barber, 136 U. S. 313, 34 L. ed. 455, 3 Inters. Com. Rep. 185, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 862, are to be followed, it is demonstrated that the act cannot stand as a lawful exercise of the power "to regulate commerce among the several states."

The contention that the language of the commerce clause must have the same meaning and application as to commerce among the states as that with foreign nations is entirely untenable.

Even if the sovereign and exclusive power in Congress and the President in dealing with foreign relations were left out of view, it is submitted that the word "regulate" may have one meaning as applied to one class of subjects, and a different or limited one as applied to another class of subjects. The same word is in all such cases construed according to the general intent.

Maryland v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. 22 Wall. 105, 22 L. ed. 713.

Mr. John G. Carlisle also argued the cause for petitioners.

Assistant Attorney General Beck argued the cause and filed a brief for respondent.

For his contentions see his brief as reported in Champion v. Ames, ante, 492.

Mr. Justice Holmes delivered the opinion of the court:

This is an indictment under Rev. Stat. § 5440 (U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 3676), for conspiring "to commit an offense against the United States. The offense which the defendants are alleged to have conspired to commit and to have committed is that of causing to be carried from one state to another, viz., from Kentucky to Ohio, five papers, certificates, and instruments, purporting to be and to represent chances, shares, and interests in the prizes thereafter to be awarded by lot in the drawings of a lottery, commonly known as the game of policy. Act of March 2, 1895, chap. 191 (28 Stat. at L. 963, U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 3178). It appears that the lottery in question had its headquarters in Ohio and agencies in different states. A purchaser, or person wishing to take a chance, went to one of these agencies, in this case in Kentucky, selected three or more numbers, wrote them on a slip, and handed the slip to the agent, in this case to the defendant Hoff, paying the price of the chance at the same time, and keeping a duplicate, which was the purchaser's voucher for his selection. The slip in this case was taken by the defendant Edgar to be carried to the principal office, where afterwards, in the regular course, there would be a drawing by the defendant Francis. If the purchaser's number should win, the prize would be sent to the agency and paid over. The carriage from one state to another, relied upon as the object of the conspiracy, and as the overt act in pursuance of the conspiracy, was the carriage by Edgar of slips delivered to Hoff, as above described. The case was sent to the jury by the district court, the defendants were found guilty, and the judgment against them was affirmed by the circuit court of appeals. Reilly v. United States, 46 C. C. A. 25, 106 Fed. 896. The case then was brought here on certiorari.

509

An exception was taken at every step of the trial in the hope that some shot might hit the mark. We entirely agree with the circuit court of appeals in its unfavorable comments on the practice. But, little attention as most of the objections made deserve, they at least succeeded in raising the broad questions whether the act of 1895 is constitutional, and whether the offense proved is within it. The former is disposed of by the case of Champion v. Ames, 188 U. S. 321, ante, 492, 23 Sup. Ct. Rep. 321. The latter remains, and thus far seems to us not to have received quite sufficient notice.

[377] *The game was played by mixing seventy-eight consecutive numbers and drawing out twelve after all the purchases for the game had been reported. If the three on any slip corresponded in number and order with three drawn out, the purchaser won. The purpose of bringing in the slips to headquarters was that all purchases should be known there before the drawing, and thus swindling by agents of the lottery made impossible. It is said by the circuit court of appeals that the successful slips were returned with the prizes. If this is correct we do not perceive that it materially affects the case. The arrangement, whatever it was, was for the convenience and safety of those who managed this lottery, and was in no way essential to the interests of the person making the purchase or bet. The daily report of the result of the drawings to Hoff, with whom he dealt, and the forwarding of the prize, if drawn, filled all his needs. It would seem from the evidence, as the government contended,—certainly the contrary does not appear and was not argued,—that Hoff and Edgar, the carrier, were agents of the lottery company. Thus the slips were at home, as between the purchaser and the lottery, when put into Hoff's hands. They had reached their final destination in point of law, and their later movements were internal circulation within the sphere of the lottery company's possession. Therefore the question is suggested whether the carriage of a paper of any sort by its owner or the owner's servant, properly so called, with no view of a later change of possession, can be commerce, even when the carriage is in aid of some business or traffic. The case is different from one where, the carriage being done by an independent carrier, it is commerce merely by reason of the business of carriage.

The question just put need not be answered in this case. For on another ground we are of opinion that there was no evidence of an offense within the meaning of the act of 1895. The assumption has been that the slips carried from Kentucky to Ohio were papers purporting to be or represent a ticket or interest in a lottery. But in our opinion these papers did not purport to be or do either. A ticket, of course, is a thing which is the holder's means of making good his rights. The essence of *it is that it is in the hands of the other party to the contract with the lottery as a document of title. It seems to us quite plain that the alternative instrument mentioned by the statute, viz., a paper representing an interest in a lottery, equally is a document of title to the purchaser and holder,—the thing by holding which he makes good his right to a chance in the game. But the slips transported, as we have pointed out, were not the purchasers' documents. It is true that they corresponded in contents, and so in one sense represented or depicted the purchasers' interests. But "represent" in the statute means, as we already have said in other words, represent to the purchaser. It means stand as the representative of title to the indicated thing, and that these slips did not do. The function of the slips might have been performed by descriptions in a book, or by memory, if the whole lottery business had been done by one man. They as little represented the purchaser's chances as the stubs in a check book represent the sums coming to the payees of the checks.

We assume, for purposes of decision, that the papers kept by the purchasers were tickets, or did represent an interest in a lottery. But those papers did not leave Kentucky. There was no conspiracy that they should. We need not consider whether, if it had been necessary to take them to Ohio in order to secure the purchaser's rights, the lottery keepers could be said to conspire to cause them to be carried there, when the carriage would be in an interest adverse to theirs, and they would be better off and presumably glad if the papers never were presented. See Com. v. Peaslee, 177 Mass. 267, 271, 59 N. E. 55; Graves v. Johnson, 179 Mass. 53, 58, 60 N. E. 383.

The judgment of the Circuit Court of Appeals is reversed; the judgment of the Dis-
188 U. S.

strict Court is also reversed, and the cause remanded to that court, with directions to set aside the verdict and grant a new trial.

Mr. Justice Harlan dissenting:

This is a criminal prosecution based upon the 1st section of the act of Congress of March 2d, 1895, chap. 191, entitled "An Act [379]*for the Suppression of Lottery Traffic through National and Interstate Commerce and the Postal Service, Subject to the Jurisdiction and Laws of the United States."

That section reads: "§ 1. That any person who shall cause to be brought within the United States from abroad, for the purpose of disposing of the same or deposited in or carried by the mails of the United States, or carried from one state to another in the United States, any paper, certificate, or instrument purporting to be or represent a ticket, chance, share, or interest in or dependent upon the event of a lottery, so-called gift concert, or similar enterprise offering prizes dependent upon lot or chance, or shall cause any advertisement of such lottery, so-called gift concert, or similar enterprises offering prizes dependent upon lot or chance, to be brought into the United States, or deposited in or carried by the mails of the United States, or transferred from one state to another in the same, shall be punishable in the first offense by imprisonment for not more than two years or by a fine of not more than $1,000, or both, and in the second and after offenses by such imprisonment only." 28 Stat. at L. 963, U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 3178.

The indictment charges a conspiracy to commit the offense denounced by that section.

Judge Severens, delivering the judgment of the circuit court of appeals, thus stated, and I think accurately, the result of certain evidence on the part of the government: "Upon the trial the government offered evidence tending to prove that the respondents adopted a scheme of lottery business called by them 'policy,' which they subsequently carried into operation, of the character following: The principal office for the transaction of the business was located in a building in Cincinnati, Ohio. The place where the drawings of numbers from a wheel were made was located in another building or room adjoining the principal office and connected with it by a private way. In various places in that city and elsewhere, in Ohio and other states, one, at least, being in Newport, Kentucky, they had offices or stations at which the patrons purchased tickets or chances in the drawings to be thereafter made in Cincinnati, at the place mentioned. Successive numbers from one to seventy-eight, inclusive, were each day*put into the wheel, and at each drawing twelve numbers were taken out. A list of these twelve numbers was taken into the principal office and there recorded. Several hours in the day before these drawings respectively took place the patrons purchased chances at the sub-offices or stations from an agent of the respondents, or from one of the latter, in [380] 188 U. S.

charge at that place. In this instance the purchase was made of the respondent Hoff at the Newport office. The purchaser (Harrison, in this instance) chose three of the numbers from one to seventy-eight, inclusive, and wrote them upon a slip of paper, of which, according to the method of doing business, he kept a duplicate. He handed his list of numbers, with figures to denote the sum paid, upon a slip of paper, and the money to pay for his chance, to the person in charge, to be transmitted to the principal office in Cincinnati by the 'carrier,' who would call to take them up. When these slips and the moneys were all brought into the principal office, the drawing above mentioned took place. If the three numbers on the slip were of the twelve drawn from the wheel, the purchaser would win the prize, $200, when the game (of which there were several forms) was played on the basis above stated. If not, he lost. A report of the drawings was sent back to the station from which the slip came, and if any purchaser had made a 'hit' his slip would be returned with the prize, to be there delivered to him. Of the respondents, Reilly was in charge of the principal office, Francis of the drawings, Hoff of the station in Newport, as already stated, and Edgar was the carrier. The slip of paper taken by the carrier represented the interest of the purchaser of the chance, and, although containing figures only, it had a definite meaning and was understood by all the parties concerned. It was the transportation of some of such lists, one being that of Harrison, from Newport, Kentucky, to Cincinnati, Ohio, with knowledge of their character that constituted the overt act done in pursuance of the conspiracy." That the counsel for the accused held the same view of the evidence is shown in an extract from their brief printed in the margin.†

†"In the Francis Case, now before the court, it was shown that the principal office of the 'policy' concern was located in Cincinnati, Ohio, that the drawings took place in an adjoining building or room, and that sub-offices or agencies were maintained in various places in that city and in other cities in Ohio and other states, at which patrons or players would select numbers in the drawings to be made in Cincinnati. One desiring to play such a game would choose three of the numbers from 1 to 78 inclusive, and write them upon a slip of paper, of which he kept a duplicate. He would hand his list of numbers, with figures to denote the sum paid, together with the money to pay for his chance, to the person in charge of the sub-office or agency, to be transmitted to the principal office in Cincinnati. When these slips and the moneys were brought to the principal office, the drawing took place. Successive numbers, from 1 to 78 inclusive, were put into a wheel and at each drawing twelve numbers were taken out. If the three numbers on the slip were of the twelve drawn from the wheel, the purchaser would win a prize. If not, he lost. A report of the drawings was sent back to the agency from which the slip came, and, if any purchaser had won a prize, or, as it is termed, made a 'hit,' his slip was returned with the prize, to be there delivered to him. In the instance shown

- [381] *I. The act of March 2d, 1895, chap. 191, was under examination by this court in France v. United States, 164 U. S. 676, 41 L. ed. 595, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 219. That was an indictment for a conspiracy to violate its 1st section. The judgment of conviction in that case was reversed upon the ground that the evidence showed that the papers and instruments which the defendants caused to be carried from Kentucky to Ohio did not relate to a lottery to be thereafter drawn, but to one that had previously been drawn. The court said: "There is no contradiction in the testimony, and the government admits and assumes that the drawing in regard to which these papers contained any information had already taken place in Kentucky, and it was the result of that drawing only that was on its way in the hands of messengers to the agents of the lottery in Cincinnati. The statute does not cover the transaction, and, however reprehensible the acts of the plaintiffs in error may be thought to be, we cannot sustain a conviction on that ground. Although the objection is a narrow one, yet the statute being highly penal, rendering its violator liable to fine *and imprisonment, we are compelled to construe it strictly. Full effect is given to the statute by holding that the language applies only to that kind of a paper which depends upon a lottery the drawing of which has not yet taken place, and which paper purports to be a certificate, etc., as described in the act. If it be urged that the act of these plaintiffs in error is within the reason of the statute, the answer must be that it is so far outside of its language that to include it within the statute would be to legislate, and not to construe legislation."
- [382] No such point can be made in this case, because the indictment presents a case within the provisions of the statute as interpreted in France v. United States; for it refers to papers and instruments relating to a lottery thereafter to be drawn. Besides, there was evidence tending to show that the papers and instruments which the defendants were charged to have caused to be carried from Kentucky to Ohio had reference to a future drawing, and not to one that had already occurred. And the trial judge, after stating the facts, said to the jury: "Did these papers, or so-called lottery tickets, which it is alleged defendants conspired to carry from Kentucky to Ohio, purport to represent interests of players in a drawing afterwards to take place? It is not necessary, gentlemen, that they should purport or show upon their face that they were tickets in a lottery giving an interest to the holder in a drawing afterwards to take place, but their purport may be shown outside of the papers. Now, as to the evidence offered by the government upon that point, you will recall the evidence of France, who was introduced as an expert, to tell what they were, and the evidence of Harrison, that he wrote out his ticket and delivered one half of it to the agent, paid his money and held the duplicate,—one of the duplicates, his evidence of the interest he had in the drawing that was to come off that day,—and the evidence to which I have before referred as to the fact that the duplicate left with Hoff was afterwards found in possession of Edgar at the end of the bridge, shortly after the play was made. If, from these facts, you are satisfied that it represented an interest in the drawings afterwards to take place, then, within the meaning of the law, it purported to represent the interest of the *player in the drawing, although it [383] did not so state upon its face."
- II. In Champion v. Ames, 188 U. S. 321, ante, 492, 23 Sup. Ct. Rep. 321, it has been held that lottery tickets were subjects of traffic among those who choose to sell or buy them; that the carriage of such tickets by independent carriers from one state to another was therefore interstate commerce; that under its power to regulate commerce among the several states, Congress—subject to the limitations imposed by the Constitution upon the powers granted by it—has plenary authority over such commerce, and may prohibit the carriage of such tickets from state to state; and that legislation to that end and of that character is not inconsistent with any limitation or restriction imposed by the Constitution upon the exercise of the powers granted to Congress.
- Here, there was no carrying of lottery tickets from Kentucky to Ohio by an independent carrier engaged in the transportation, for hire, of freight and packages from one state to another. But the carrying was by an individual acting in pursuance of a conspiracy between himself and others that had for its object the carrying from Kentucky to Ohio of certain papers or instruments representing a chance, share, or interest in or dependent upon the event of a lottery, thereafter to be drawn, which offered prizes dependent upon lot or chance. Those who were parties to the conspiracy were, in effect, partners in committing the crime denounced by the above act of Congress; and the act of one of the parties in execution of the objects of such conspiracy was the act of all the conspirators.
- The judgment therefore should be affirmed, unless it be that the carrying of lottery tickets from one state to another by an individual, acting in co-operation with his co-conspirators, is not interstate "commerce." But is it true that the "commerce among the several states," which Congress has the power to regulate, cannot be carried on by an individual, or by a combination of individuals? We think not. In Paul v. Virginia, 8 Wall. 168, 183, 19 L. ed. 357, 361, the court, referring to the grant to Congress of power to regulate commerce among the

by the testimony, the selection was made by the witness Harrison at the Newport office. The defendant Rellley was claimed to be in charge of the principal office in Cincinnati, Francis in charge of the drawings, and Hoff in charge of the station in Newport. Edgar carried the slips from Newport to Cincinnati, and this carriage of the slips constituted the alleged overt act done in pursuance of a conspiracy in violation of the act of Congress."

several states, said: "The language of the grant makes no reference to the instrumentalities *by which commerce may be carried on; it is general and includes alike commerce by individuals, partnerships, associations, and corporations." In Welton v. Missouri, 91 U. S. 275, 280, 23 L. ed. 347, 349, it was said that the power to regulate commerce embraces "all the instruments by which such commerce may be conducted." That the commerce clause of the Constitution embraces alike commerce by individuals, partnerships, associations, and corporations was recognized in Pensacola Teleg. Co. v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 96 U. S. 1, 21, 24 L. ed. 708, 715. And in Gloucester Ferry Co. v. Pennsylvania, 114 U. S. 196, 205, 29 L. ed. 158, 162, 1 Inters. Com. Rep. 382, 386, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 826, 828, the court said that commerce among the states "includes commerce by whomsoever conducted, whether by individuals or by corporations."

In Champion v. Ames the carrying of lottery tickets happened to be by an incorporated express company. But if it had been by an express company organized as a partnership or joint-stock company the result of the decision could not have been different. In this case, if the carrying had been by an ordinary express wagon, owned by a private person, but employed by the accused and other conspirators to carry the lottery papers in question from Kentucky to Ohio, surely the carrying in that mode would be commerce within the meaning of the Constitution. It cannot be any less commerce because the carrying was by an individual who, in conspiracy or co-operation with others, caused the carrying to be done in violation of the act of Congress. The learned counsel for the accused, referring to the legislation enacted prior to 1895, which had for its object to exclude lottery matter from the mails, and to prohibit the importation of lottery matter from abroad, says: "In 1895 the act now in question was passed, supplementing the provisions of the prior acts so as to prohibit the act of causing lottery tickets to be carried and lottery advertisements to be transferred from one state to another by any means or methods."

It seems to me that the evidence made a case within the act of Congress, and that no error of law was committed by the trial court. The papers carried from Kentucky to Ohio were of the class described in the act, "any paper, certificate, or instrument [385] *purporting to be or represent a ticket, chance, share, or interest in or dependent upon the event of a lottery, so-called gift concert, or similar enterprise, offering prizes dependent upon lot or chance." The paper or instrument carried from Kentucky to Ohio, of which the purchaser had a duplicate, certainly represented to all the parties concerned, a chance, or interest dependent upon an event of a lottery or "similar enterprise," offering prizes dependent upon a lot or chance. To hold otherwise is to stick in the bark. It informed the policy gambler, if a prize was drawn, that the person who held the duplicate was entitled to the prize, and it was therefore a paper the carrying of which from one state to another made the conspirators causing it to be so carried guilty of an offense under the act of Congress. The reasoning by which the case is held not to be embraced by the act of Congress is too astute and technical to commend itself to my judgment. It excludes from the operation of the act a case which, as I think, is clearly within its provisions.

LOUISVILLE & JEFFERSONVILLE FERRY COMPANY, Plff. in Err.,
v.

COMMONWEALTH OF KENTUCKY.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 385-399.)

Taxation—of corporate franchise—including value of franchise derived from other state—due process of law.

A Kentucky corporation operating a ferry across the Ohio river is deprived of its property without due process of law by the action of that state in including, for purposes of taxation, in the valuation of the franchise derived by the corporation from Kentucky, the value of an Indiana franchise for a ferry from the Indiana to the Kentucky shore, which such corporation had acquired.

[No. 17.]

Argued January 17, 1902. Ordered for re-argument before full bench March 10, 1902. Reargued December 8, 9, 1902. Decided February 23, 1903.

IN ERROR to the Court of Appeals of the State of Kentucky to review a judgment which affirmed a judgment of the Circuit Court of Franklin County in favor of the Commonwealth in an action to recover a tax on the value of the franchise of a corporation. Reversed.

See same case below, 22 Ky. L. Rep. 446, 57 S. W. 624.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Alexander Pope Humphrey argued the cause and filed a brief for plaintiff in error:

Kentucky has never attempted to provide for the granting of a ferry franchise across the Ohio river, except from Kentucky to a landing in the state upon the other side of the river, and never for a ferry franchise from such state to Kentucky.

Newport v. Taylor, 16 B. Mon. 700; Rceves v. Little, 7 Bush, 470; Conway v. Taylor, 1 Black, 603, 17 L. ed. 191.

A ferry franchise is property.

2 Washb. Real. Prop. pp. 291, 292; Stevens v. Stevens, 3 Dana, 371; Lippencott v. Allander, 27 Iowa, 460, 1 Am. Rep. 299; 1 Scribner, Dower, 189; 2 Scribner, Dower (74) 599; Conway v. Taylor, 1 Black, 632, NOTE.—On taxation of corporate franchises—see note to Louisville Tobacco Warehouse Co. v. Com. (Ky.) 57 L. R. A. 33.

17 L. ed. 202; 3 Kent, Com. 459; Mabury v. Louisville & J. Ferry Co. 9 C. C. A. 174, 18 U. S. App. 542, 60 Fed. 649; Bowman v. Wathen, 2 McLean, 376, Fed. Cas. No. 1,740; Bowman v. Wathen, 1 How. 189, 11 L. ed. 97.

One state cannot tax real property situated in another state.

Cooley, Taxn. 2d ed. p. 55; 25 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 130.

The board of valuation and assessment was bound to value the Indiana franchise, and deduct it from the value of the capital stock.

Henderson Bridge Co. v. Kentucky, 166 U. S. 151, 41 L. ed. 953, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 532; Adams Exp. Co. v. Kentucky, 166 U. S. 172, 41 L. ed. 961, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 527.

The tax is void as a regulation of interstate commerce.

Gloucester Ferry Co. v. Pennsylvania, 114 U. S. 196, 29 L. ed. 158, 1 Inters. Com. Rep. 382, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 826; Philadelphia & S. Mail S. S. Co. v. Pennsylvania, 122 U. S. 326, 30 L. ed. 1200, 1 Inters. Com. Rep. 308, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1118; Covington & C. Bridge Co. v. Kentucky, 154 U. S. 204, 38 L. ed. 962, 4 Inters. Com. Rep. 649, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1087; Adams Exp. Co. v. Ohio, 166 U. S. 185, 41 L. ed. 965, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 604.

The privilege here attempted to be taxed is one derived from the United States, and hence is not taxable by the state.

Gibbons v. Ogden, 9 Wheat. 1, 6 L. ed. 23; Gloucester Ferry Co. v. Pennsylvania, 114 U. S. 196, 29 L. ed. 158, 1 Inters. Com. Rep. 382, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 826; Covington & C. Bridge Co. v. Kentucky, 154 U. S. 204, 38 L. ed. 962, 4 Inters. Com. Rep. 649, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1087; Philadelphia & S. Mail S. S. Co. v. Pennsylvania, 122 U. S. 326, 30 L. ed. 1200, 1 Inters. Com. Rep. 308, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1118; Hall v. De Cuir, 95 U. S. 485, 24 L. ed. 547; Moran v. New Orleans, 112 U. S. 69, 28 L. ed. 653, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 38; Harman v. Chicago, 147 U. S. 396, 37 L. ed. 216, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 306; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Kentucky, 161 U. S. 701, 40 L. ed. 859, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 714.

Mr. D. W. Sanders argued the cause and filed a brief for defendant in error:

The power to acquire the ownership of the ferry privileges in Indiana is a valuable franchise granted this corporation, and it is this franchise which the state undertakes to tax, and not the franchise to be a corporation. This the state may do.

Henderson Bridge Co. v. Kentucky, 166 U. S. 153, 41 L. ed. 954, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 532; New York & L. E. R. Co. v. Pennsylvania, 158 U. S. 437, 39 L. ed. 1045, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 896; Adams Exp. Co. v. Ohio, 166 U. S. 221, 41 L. ed. 977, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 604.

The levy of this tax upon the franchises of the corporation does not conflict with the 14th Amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

Hagar v. Reclamation Dist. No. 108, 111 U. S. 710, 28 L. ed. 572, 4 Sup. Ct. Rep. 663; Horn Silver Min. Co. v. New York, 143 U. S. 514

S. 312, 36 L. ed. 167, 4 Inters. Com. Rep. 57, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 403.

Mr. Justice Harlan delivered the opinion of the court:

This action was brought against the Louisville & Jeffersonville Ferry Company, a corporation of Kentucky, to recover certain taxes alleged to be due that commonwealth in virtue of the valuation and assessment by the state board of valuation and assessment of the corporate franchise of the defendant company for the year 1894.

Some of the provisions of the Revised Statutes of Kentucky under which that board proceeded are given in the margin.†

†"§4077. Every railway company, . . . and every other like company, corporation, or association, also every other corporation, company, or association having or exercising any special or exclusive privilege or franchise not allowed by law to natural persons, or performing any public service, shall, in addition to the other taxes imposed on it by law, annually pay a tax on its franchise to the state, and a local tax thereon to the county, incorporated city, town, and taxing district, where its franchise may be exercised. The auditor, treasurer and secretary of state are hereby constituted a board of valuation and assessment for fixing the value of said franchise, except as to turnpike companies, which are provided for in § 4095 of this article. the place or places where such local taxes are to be paid by other corporations on their franchise, and how apportioned, where more than one jurisdiction is entitled to a share of such tax, shall be determined by the board of valuation and assessment, and for the discharge of such other duties as may be imposed on them by this act. The auditor shall be chairman of said board, and shall convene the same from time to time, as the business of the board may require.

"§4078. In order to determine the value of the franchises mentioned in the next preceding section, the corporations, companies, and associations mentioned in the next preceding section, except banks and trust companies whose statements shall be filed as hereinafter required by § 4092 of this article, shall annually, between the 15th day of September and the 1st day of October, make and deliver to the auditor of public accounts of this state a statement, verified by its president, cashier, secretary, treasurer, manager, or other chief officer or agent, in such form as the auditor may prescribe, showing following facts, viz.: The name and principal place of business of the corporation, company, or association; the kind of business engaged in; the amount of capital stock, preferred and common; the number of shares of each; the amount of stock paid up; the par and real value thereof; the highest price at which such stock was sold at a bona fide sale within twelve months next before the 15th day of September of the year in which the statement is required to be made; the amount of surplus fund and undivided profits, and the value of all other assets; the total amount of indebtedness as principal; the amount of gross or net earnings or income, including interest on investments and incomes from all other sources for twelve months next preceding the 15th day of September of the year in which the statement is required; the amount and kind of tangible property in this state, and where situated, assessed, or liable to assessment in this state, and the fair cash value thereof, estimated at [387] *The company filed an answer, which upon demurrer was adjudged to be insufficient. The defendant declining to answer further, judgment was rendered for the commonwealth. That judgment was affirmed by the court of appeals of Kentucky, and the case is here upon writ of error sued out by the ferry company. The ground of our jurisdiction is [388] *that the company claims that, by the judgment of the highest court of Kentucky, affirming the judgment of the court of original jurisdiction, it has been denied rights belonging to it under the Constitution of the United States.

The facts admitted by the demurrer to the answer and therefore, for the purposes of the present hearing, to be taken as true, are substantially as follows:

By an act of the general assembly of Kentucky, approved March the 16th, 1869, the Louisville & Jeffersonville Ferry Company was created a corporation, with power to carry on the business of ferrying freight, passengers, and vehicles over the Ohio river, and to purchase ferryboats, wharves, and ferry franchises for any ferry or ferries between Louisville, Kentucky, and Jeffersonville, Indiana; and upon the purchase of such franchises to have the right to carry on and conduct a ferry or ferries between those cities. It was also authorized to accept boats, franchises, wharves, and other property in payment of stock subscribed and at such prices as might be agreed on.

In the year of 1802, William Henry Harrison, then governor and commander-in-chief of the Indiana territory, granted to Marsden G. Clark a license for a ferry at Jeffersonville, Indiana, for the transportation of passengers, carriages, horses, and cattle across the Ohio river at that place.

In the same year Governor Harrison granted to one Joseph Bowman a license to keep a ferry from the landing near the spring in the town of Jeffersonville across the Ohio river to the public road at the mouth of Bear Grass creek in Kentucky.

In 1820 George White, by an act of the Indiana legislature, was authorized to keep a ferry in the town of Jeffersonville, and to ferry off and from any portion of the public ground or commons in that town lying upon or bordering upon the Ohio river across that river to the opposite shore or mouth of Bear Grass creek,—that creek being then as well as now within the corporate limits of Louisville and near the point at which the defendant company now lands its ferryboats in Kentucky.

These three ferry franchises, about the year 1837, vested in A. Wathen, Charles Strader, John Shallcross, and James *Thompson, and in 1865 came to be owned [389] by John Shallcross, Moses Brown, Hiram Mayberry, James Wathen, A. Wathen, Charles Woolfolk & Co., J. B. Smith, W. C. Hite, E. S. Hoffman, P. Varble, and Daniel Park. During all the intervening years ferries had been maintained.

In 1865 the persons then owning the ferry organized as a partnership for the purpose of operating it, and in that capacity continued to operate it until the Louisville & Jeffersonville Ferry Company was incorporated, as above stated. Under its act of incorporation the company procured to be conveyed to itself the above-mentioned ferry franchises with the boats then owned by the partnership, and issued therefor its fully paid capital stock for $200,000. The boats and personal property so acquired were not of great value,—the principal value being in the franchises acquired as above set forth.

In 1887 the defendant company made a contract with the sinking fund commissioners of the city of Louisville, a corporation having charge of certain fiscal affairs of that city, under which the defendant leased the ferry privileges in Louisville, agreeing to pay therefor $800 a year and a wharfage fee annually of $400. That contract by its terms expired January the 1st, 1902.

The defendant company states in its answer "that the only ferry franchises owned by it are those above mentioned, which were granted by the authorities of the state of Indiana."

All tangible property of the defendant company in Kentucky was assessed in the fall of 1893 for the state tax for the year 1894, and that tax was paid. The property the price it would bring at a fair voluntary sale; and such other facts as the auditor may require

"§4079. Where the line or lines of any such corporation, company, or association extend beyond the limits of the state or county, the statement shall, in addition to the other facts hereinbefore required, show the length of the entire lines operated, owned, leased, or controlled in this state, and in each county, incorporated city, town, or taxing district, and the entire line operated, controlled, leased, or owned elsewhere. If the corporation, company, or association be organized under the laws of any other state or government, or organized and incorporated in this state, but operating and conducting its business in other states as well as in this state, the statement shall show the following facts, in addition to the facts hereinbefore required: The gross and net income or earnings received in this state and out of this state, on business done in this state, and the entire gross receipts of the corporation, company, or association in this state and elsewhere during the twelve months next before the 15th day of September of the year in which the assessment is required to be made. In cases where any of the facts above required are impossible to be answered correctly, or will not afford any valuable information in determining the value of the franchises to be taxed, the said board may excuse the officer from answering such questions: Provided, That said board, from said statement, and from such other evidence as it may have, if such corporation, company, or association be organized under the laws of this state, shall fix the value of the capital stock of the corporation, company, or association, as provided in the next succeeding section, and from the amount thus fixed shall deduct the assessed value of all tangible property assessed in this state, or in the counties where situated. The remainder thus found shall be the value of its corporate franchise subject to taxation as aforesaid."

so assessed consisted of all the company's boats and other personal property, it having no real estate in Kentucky. For the same year all real estate owned by the defendant in Indiana was assessed by the authorities of that state, and the tax thereon paid.

The company had no intangible property except the franchise heretofore described.

"The board of valuation and assessment ascertained what had been the net earnings of the defendant up to September 15th, 1893, for the year preceding that date. It then capitalized said net earnings at 6 per cent,—that is, to have been such an amount [390] *as at 6 per cent would produce the sum of $121,050. From this the board deducted $54,164, being the assessed value of the defendant's property in Kentucky and Indiana, leaving the sum of $66,886 as the value of defendant's franchise."

The boats owned by the defendant company when this action was brought, and also those owned by it in 1893, "were regularly enrolled, under the laws of the United States, at the port of Louisville, and were assessed, as above stated, by the sheriff of Jefferson county, in the fall of that year, and the tax paid upon them in the year 1894."

The defendant brought "before the board of valuation and assessment, before that board had made its assessment final, the fact that its whole capital stock had been issued in consideration of the transfer of the said ferry franchises granted by the state of Indiana and attendant property, and showed that all its property had been assessed as above explained, and protested against any assessment being made upon its franchises as being beyond the jurisdiction of the said board and outside of the territorial jurisdiction of the state of Kentucky, and not taxable in Kentucky; and it protested against the said board making any valuation whatever of its capital stock because all of its property had been once assessed, and any valuation made upon its capital stock would include alone these franchises and profits resulting to the defendant from engaging in interstate commerce; and the defendant further requested the said board, if it should insist upon making a valuation upon its capital stock, to deduct therefrom the value of these franchises. The said board refused to enter into the question of the valuation of the said franchise granted by the state of Indiana, as aforesaid, and owned and operated by this defendant, and refused to regard the fact that the profits which were earned by this defendant came from interstate commerce."

Substantially the whole revenue of the defendant company is derived from interstate commerce, and its net returns, upon which the above capitalization was made, represent its gains from interstate commerce; that is, from the carriage of persons and property between the states of Indiana and Kentucky. Such was the case presented by the answer.

The ferry company insists that the judgment of the court of appeals of Kentucky, affirming the judgment of the court of original jurisdiction (which sustained the action of the state board of valuation and assessment), had the effect to deny rights belonging to it under the Constitution of the United States.

It is appropriate here to state the grounds upon which the court of appeals of Kentucky proceeded. That court said: "The judgments from which the appeals are prosecuted are for the franchise tax for the years of 1894, 1895, 1896, 1897, and 1898. The appellant is a corporation organized under a special act of the legislature passed in 1869. It purchased a ferry franchise, which had been originally granted by the territorial authorities of Indiana, which authorized the original grantee to conduct a ferry business across the Ohio river from Indiana to Kentucky. By regular devolution of title, through descents and conveyances, appellant owns the rights thus granted. The franchise thus acquired authorizes the appellant to transport persons and property from Jeffersonville, Indiana, to Louisville, Kentucky. There was vested in the sinking fund commissioners of the city of Louisville title to the ferry rights along the Ohio river within the boundaries of that city, and by an agreement with them the appellant became the owner of it. The appellant owned certain ferry boats which are enrolled at the port of Louisville. It owned certain real estate in the state of Indiana. It has paid its taxes upon its real property in Indiana and upon its personal property in this state. It has paid its taxes only upon its tangible property. It appears to have no income except the revenue derived from carrying persons and property from one side of the river to the other. The *board of valuation and assessment fixed the [392] value of the franchise for the corporation as if it conducted all of its business in the territorial limits of the state of Kentucky, not deducting anything from that value on account of the fact that it exercised the privilege of conveying passengers from Jeffersonville to Louisville by reason of its acquisition of privileges which were originally granted under the laws of that state. . . . The appellant is a Kentucky corporation. The board of valuation and assessment did not attempt to assess or tax its revenues coming from the exercise of its franchise in the transportation of persons and property over the Ohio river; but under certain sections of the Kentucky statutes it assessed the value of appellant's franchise, which is its intangible property. The board did not assess or attempt to assess the property, either tangible or intangible, which it owned in the state of Indiana."

Again: "By virtue of its corporate authority the appellant acquired ferryboats, the ferry rights, within the city of Louisville, which included the right to transport persons and property from Kentucky to Indiana over the Ohio river, and the necessary use of its wharf to carry on that business. It also by contract (which its charter seems to have authorized it to do) acquired wharf privileges on the Indiana side, and also the right which had been previously granted by Indiana to transport persons and property from Indiana to Kentucky over the Ohio river. It also owns a park in Indiana. The property thus acquired constituted all of its property, tangible and intangible, in Kentucky and Indiana. Having thus acquired the foregoing property, and having profitably used it, its corporate franchise presumably became of the value fixed by the board of valuation and assessment. If the franchise of the appellant became valuable by the acquisition of tangible or intangible property, or both, the effect is exactly the same, whether it is acquired in Indiana or in Kentucky, or both. It is not the tangible or intangible property in Indiana which the appellant acquired by purchase which is sought to be taxed, but the value of its franchise which has been created in and now exists in Kentucky. . . . *There is no doubt but what the business which the appellant carries on may be properly designated as interstate commerce, and that it is a subject of national character, Congress having the authority and the power under the Constitution to regulate it. The state of Kentucky is not attempting to impose a tax upon receiving and handling persons and property, but is simply attempting to collect a franchise tax on the corporation created by law. As authorized by the laws and Constitution, the state is entitled to impose a tax upon its tangible property. . . . The appellant is domiciled in Kentucky, and the property sought to be taxed has its situs in Kentucky, and, as we have said, there is no attempt to tax the appellant's business income, or revenue, but its income is alone considered in fixing the value of its franchise."

It thus appears from the admitted facts, and from the opinion of the court below, that the state board, in its valuation and assessment of the franchise derived by that company from Kentucky, included the value of the franchise obtained from Indiana for a ferry from its shore to the Kentucky shore. In short, as stated by the court of appeals, the value of the franchise of the ferry company was fixed "as if it conducted all of its business in the territorial limits of the state of Kentucky," making no deduction for the value of the franchise obtained from Indiana.

The boundary of Kentucky extends only to low-water mark on the western and northwestern banks of the Ohio river. Henderson Bridge Co. v. Henderson, 173 U. S. 592, 609-613, 43 L. ed. 823, 829-831, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 553, and authorities there cited. In that case it was said that, although the jurisdiction of that commonwealth for all the purposes for which any state possesses jurisdiction within its territorial limits was coextensive with its established boundaries, that jurisdiction was attended by the fundamental condition that it must not be exerted so as to trench upon the authority of the national government, or to impair any rights secured or protected by the national Constitution.

So that the authority of the ferry company, derived from *Kentucky, to transport[394] persons, freight, and property across the Ohio river from Kentucky did not invest it with authority to establish and maintain a ferry from the Indiana shore to the Kentucky shore. That is admitted by the counsel for Kentucky. Indeed, in Newport v. Taylor, 16 B. Mon. 699, 786, the court of appeals of Kentucky said that "Kentucky has never claimed the exclusive right of ferryage across the Ohio river except from this shore, and while she has interdicted the establishment of ferries from this side, within a certain distance of an established ferry on this side, she has constantly recognized the right of the authorities on the other side to establish ferries from that side, without regard to the interdict." The same thought was expressed in Reeves v. Little, 7 Bush, 470. The case of Newport v. Taylor was brought to this court, and the judgment of the court of appeals of Kentucky was affirmed. Conway v. Taylor, 1 Black, 603, 631, 17 L. ed. 191, 202. Referring to the ferry franchise granted by Kentucky, this court there said: "The franchise is confined to the transit from the shore of the state. The same rights which she claims for herself she concedes to others. She has thrown no obstacle in the way of the transit from the states lying upon the other side of the Ohio and Mississippi. She has left that to be wholly regulated by their ferry laws. We have heard of no hostile legislation, and of no complaints, by any of those states. It was shown in the argument at bar that similar laws exist in most, if not all, the states bordering upon those streams. They exist in other states of the Union bounded by navigable waters."

It must therefore be assumed that the franchise granted by Indiana to maintain the ferry from the Indiana shore is wholly distinct from the franchise obtained from Kentucky to maintain the ferry from the Kentucky shore, although the enjoyment of both are essential to a complete ferry right for the transportation of persons and property across the river both ways. And each franchise is property entitled to the protection of the law. Kent says that the privilege of establishing a ferry and taking tolls for the use of the same is a franchise, and that "an estate in such a franchise, and an estate in land, rest upon the same *principle,[395] being equally grants of a right or privilege for an adequate consideration." 3 Kent, Com. 458, 459. In his Treatise on the American Law of Real Property, Washburn says that the right granted by the legislature, as representing the sovereign power, to carry passengers across streams, or bodies of water, or the arms of the sea, from one point to another, for compensation, is to be deemed a franchise, and belongs to the class of estates called incorporeal hereditaments. 2 Washb. 6th ed. §§ 1212, 1215. See also 1 Cooley's Bl. Com. bk. 2, pp. 21, 36. In Conway v. Taylor, 1 Black, 632, 17

L. ed. 202, this court approved of Kent's view, and said: "A ferry franchise is as much property as a rent or any other incorporeal hereditament, or chattels, or realty. It is clothed with the same sanctity and entitled to the same protection as other property." In Kentucky the right of the widow to have dower assigned to her in a ferry has been recognized. Stevens v. Stevens, 3 Dana, 371.

As, then, the privilege of maintaining the ferry in question from the Indiana shore to the Kentucky shore is a franchise derived from Indiana, and as that franchise is a valuable right of property, is it within the power of Kentucky to tax it directly or indirectly? It is said that the Indiana franchise has not been taxed, but only the franchise derived from Kentucky; that the tax is none the less a tax on the Kentucky franchise, because of the value of that franchise being increased by the acquisition by the Kentucky corporation of the franchise granted by Indiana. This view sacrifices substance to form. If the board of valuation and assessment, for purposes of taxation, had separately valued and assessed at a given sum the franchise derived by the ferry company from Kentucky, and had separately valued and assessed at another given sum the franchise obtained from Indiana, the result would have been the same as if it had assessed, as it did assess, the Kentucky franchise as a unit upon the basis of its value as enlarged or increased by the acquisition of the Indiana franchise.

The learned counsel for Kentucky says that it is the value of the company's franchise contained "in its charter" which is the subject of taxation. But the franchise obtained from Indiana is not in the company's charter granted by Kentucky. [396] *It is contained only in the act of the legislature of Indiana. The Indiana franchise was not carried into the charter of the Kentucky corporation by reason of that corporation having the authority to purchase it. Its existence and validity depend entirely upon the laws of Indiana.

Counsel further say that Kentucky does not impose a tax upon the company's privilege, as such, granted by the state of Indiana. If it had done so the tax so imposed would not have been defended as valid. Yet by her statute, under which the board of valuation and assessment proceeded, Kentucky has accomplished that result by including for purposes of taxation, in the valuation of the franchise granted by it, the value of the franchise granted by Indiana, and then taxing the franchise of the Kentucky corporation upon the basis of the aggregate value of both franchises. Although now owned by one corporation, these are separate franchises.

There is, in our judgment, no escape from the conclusion that Kentucky thus asserts its authority to tax a property right, an incorporeal hereditament, which has its situs in Indiana. While the mode, form, and extent of taxation are, speaking generally, limited only by the wisdom of the legislature, that power is limited by a principle inhering in the very nature of constitutional government, namely, that the taxation imposed must have relation to a subject within the jurisdiction of the taxing government. Hence, this court, speaking by Chief Justice Marshall, in M'Culloch v. Maryland, 4 Wheat. 316, 429, 4 L. ed. 579, 607, said that, while all subjects over which the sovereign power of a state extends are objects of taxation, "those over which it does not extend are, upon the soundest principles, exempt from taxation." That proposition, he said, could almost be pronounced self-evident. It was therefore held in Hays v. Pacific Mail S. S. Co. 17 How. 596, 599, 15 L. ed. 254, 255, that certain steamers engaged in interstate commerce were not subject to taxation in a state where they might be temporarily when prosecuting their business, but were taxable at their home port, which was their situs, and where they belonged, the court saying: "We are satisfied that the state of California had no jurisdiction over these vessels for the purpose of taxation; they were not, properly, *abiding within its [397] limits, so as to become incorporated with the other personal property of the state; they were there but temporarily, engaged in lawful trade and commerce, with their situs at the home port, where the vessels belonged, and where the owners were liable to be taxed for the capital invested, and where the taxes had been paid;" in St. Louis v. Wiggins Ferry Co. 11 Wall. 423, 429, 431, 20 L. ed. 192, 194, 195, that certain ferry boats belonging to an Illinois corporation and plying between East St. Louis, Illinois, and St. Louis, Missouri, were not taxable in the latter state, but at their home port in the former state, the court saying that a tax was void when there was no jurisdiction as to the property taxed; in Morgan v. Parham, 16 Wall. 471, 476, 21 L. ed. 303, 304, that a vessel engaged in interstate commerce, and being from time to time in Mobile while prosecuting its business, was not taxable in Alabama, but was taxable in New York, where it was owned and registered, the court saying that, in its opinion, "the state of Alabama had no jurisdiction over this vessel for the purpose of taxation, for the reason that it had not become incorporated into the personal property of the state, but was there temporarily only, and that it was engaged in lawful commerce between the states, with its situs at the home port of New York, where it belonged, and where its owner was liable to be taxed for its value;" and in Gloucester Ferry Co. v. Pennsylvania, 114 U. S. 196, 206, 29 L. ed. 158, 163, 1 Inters. Com. Rep. 386, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 829, that "the property of [foreign] corporations engaged in foreign or interstate commerce, as well as the property of corporations engaged in other business, is subject to state taxation, provided always it be within the jurisdiction of the state." In Cooley on Taxation, the author, while conceding that the legislative power extends over everything, whether it be person, property, possession, franchise, privilege, occupation, or right, says that "persons and property not within the territorial limits of a state cannot be taxed by it;" and that "a state can no more subject to its power a single person or a single article of property whose residence or legal situs is in another state, than it can subject all the citizens or all the property of such other state to its power." 2d ed. pp. 5, 55, 159.

[398] We recognize the difficulty which sometimes exists in particular cases in determining the situs of personal property for purposes of taxation, and the above cases have been referred to because they have gone into judgment and recognize the general rule that the power of the state to tax is limited to subjects within its jurisdiction or over which it can exercise dominion. No difficulty can exist in applying the general rule in this case; for, beyond all question, the ferry franchise derived from Indiana is an incorporeal hereditament derived from and having its legal situs in that state. It is not within the jurisdiction of Kentucky. The taxation of that franchise or incorporeal hereditament by Kentucky is, in our opinion, a deprivation by that state of the property of the ferry company without due process of law in violation of the 14th Amendment of the Constitution of the United States; as much so as if the state taxed the real estate owned by that company in Indiana.

This view is not met by the suggestion that Kentucky can make it a condition of the exercise of corporate powers under its authority that the tax upon the franchise granted by it shall be measured by the value of all its property, wherever situated, of whatever nature, or from whatever source derived. It is a sufficient answer to this suggestion to say that no such condition was prescribed in the charter of the ferry company when it was granted and accepted. Nor does the taxing statute in question make it a condition of the ferry company's continuing to exercise its corporate powers that it shall pay a tax for its property having a situs in another state. There is no suggestion in the company's charter that the state would ever, in any form, tax its property having a situs in another state. We express no opinion as to the validity of such a condition if it had been inserted in the company's charter, or if it were now, in terms, prescribed by any statute. We decide nothing more than it is not competent for Kentucky, under the charter granted by it, and under the Constitution of the United States, to tax the franchise which its corporation, the ferry company, lawfully acquired from Indiana, and which franchise or incorporeal hereditament has its situs, for purposes of taxation, in Indiana.

As what has been said is sufficient to dispose of the case, we need not consider the question arising upon the record and urged [399] *by counsel, whether the taxation by Kentucky of the ferry company's Indiana franchise to transport persons and property from Indiana to Kentucky is not, by its necessary effect, a burden on interstate commerce forbidden by the Constitution of the United States.

188 U. S.

The judgment of the court of appeals of Kentucky is reversed, and the cause remanded for such further proceedings as may not be inconsistent with this opinion.

Reversed.

The Chief Justice and Mr. Justice Shiras dissent.

LOUISVILLE & JEFFERSONVILLE FERRY COMPANY, Plff. in Err.,
v.

COMMONWEALTH OF KENTUCKY.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 399.)

Taxation—of corporate franchise—including value of franchise derived from other state—due process of law.

These cases are governed by the decision in Louisville & Jeffersonville Ferry Co. v. Kentucky, ante, 513.

[Nos. 18, 19, 20, 21, 22.]

Decided February 23, 1903.

IN ERROR to the Court of Appeals of the State of Kentucky to review judgments sustaining a tax on corporate franchises.

Reversed.

See same case below, 22 Ky. L. Rep. 446, 57 S. W. 624.

Mr. Justice Harlan delivered the opinion of the court:

It having been stipulated between the parties that the above cases should abide the decision in No. 17, just decided, 188 U. S. 385, ante, 513, 23 Sup. Ct. Rep. 463, the judgment in each case is reversed, and each case is remanded to the state court for such further proceedings as may not be inconsistent with the opinion in No. 17.

Reversed.

*WILLIAM SAMUEL BIGBY, Plff. in Err., [400]
v.

UNITED STATES.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 400-410.)

Jurisdiction of Federal courts—suit against the United States—implied contract—case sounding in tort.

The United States does not, by undertaking to carry a passenger in an elevator in one of its public buildings, impliedly contract that its employees in charge of it will exercise due care, so as to confer jurisdiction on a Federal court, under the Tucker act of March 3, 1887, chap. 359 (24 Stat. at L. 505, U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 752), of an action to recover damages for personal injuries sustained by reason of the negligence of such employees, on the theory that such action is upon a "contract, express or implied, with the government of the United States," within the meaning of that act; but the case is one "sounding in tort," which by that act is excluded from judicial cognizance.

[No. 111.]

Argued December 4, 5, 1902. Decided February 23, 1903.

IN ERROR to the Circuit Court of the United States for the Eastern District of New York to review a judgment sustaining a demurrer to a petition in a suit to recover damages from the United States for personal injuries sustained by reason of the negligence of those in charge of an elevator in a public building. Affirmed.

See same case below, 103 Fed. 597.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Roger Foster argued the cause and filed a brief for plaintiff in error:

It is well settled that when a carrier, common or special, or any other bailee, injures by his negligence or that of his servants a person or a chattel which has been entrusted to his care, the injured party may waive the tort and sue in contract for damages.

Pollard v. New Jersey R. & Transp. Co. 101 U. S. 223, 25 L. ed. 840; Philadelphia & R. R. Co. v. Derby, 14 How. 468, 14 L. ed. 502; New Jersey S. B. Co. v. Brockett, 121 U. S. 637, 30 L. ed. 1049, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1039; Boylan v. Hot Springs R. Co. 132 U. S. 146, 33 L. ed. 290, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 50; Kansas P. R. Co. v. Kunkel, 17 Kan. 145; Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Peoples, 31 Ohio St. 537; The Queen of the Pacific, 61 Fed. 213; Central Vt. R. Co. v. Soper, 8 C. C. A. 341, 21 U. S. App. 24, 59 Fed. 879; Cooper v. Berry, 21 Ga. 526, 68 Am. Dec. 468; Hunt v. Norris, 4 Mart. La. 517; Orange Bank v. Brown, 3 Wend. 158; Jeremy, Carr. p. 117; 1 Chitty, Pl. 75, 6; 2 Chitty, Pl. 117, 271, 2; Pom. Rem. §§ 568, 570, 571; Addison, Torts, Wood's ed. § 16, p. 17; Legge v. Tucker, 1 Hurlst & N. 500; Baylis v. Lintott, L. R. 8 C. P. 345; Fleming v. Manchester, S. & L. R. Co. L. R. 4 Q. B. Div. 81.

The doctrine applies to all carriers of goods or persons, and to all other bailees, whether or not there has been any undertaking upon their part, and although they do not receive compensation.

Foulkes v. Metropolitan Dist. R. Co. L. R. 4 C. P. Div. 267; Metcalf, Contr. 2d ed. 5, 6; Warbrook v. Griffin, 2 Brownl. 254, F. Moore, 876; Coggs v. Bernard, 2 Ld. Raym. 909; Beauchamp v. Powley, 1 Moody & R. 38; Doorman v. Jenkins, 2 Ad. & El. 256; Dalston v. Janson, 5 Mod. 90, 1 Ld. Raym. 58; Symons v. Darknoll, Palmer, 523; Boson v. Sandford, 1 Shower, 29, and 101, 2 Shower, 478, 3 Mod. 321, 2 Salk. 440; Hunt v. Norris, 4 Mart. La. 517; Brown v. Boorman, 11 C. & F. 1.

Calling the permission to use the elevator a license does not prevent the transaction from becoming a contract as soon as the licensee has acted upon the license.

Mumford v. Whitney, 15 Wend. 380, 30 Am. Dec. 60.

The operator of a passenger elevator is a carrier, and is governed by the same principles of law that apply to other carriers.

Marker v. Mitchell, 54 Fed. 637.

This is not an action "sounding in tort."

Boylan v. Hot Springs R. Co. 132 U. S. 146, 33 L. ed. 290, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 50.

Where the money or property of an innocent person has gone into the coffers of the nation by means of any fraud to which its agent was a party, such money or property cannot be held by the United States against the claim of the wronged and injured party.

United States v. State Nat. Bank, 96 U. S. 30, 24 L. ed. 647; Swift & C. & B. Co. v. United States, 111 U. S. 22, 28 L. ed. 341, 4 Sup. Ct. Rep. 244.

The United States is liable for salvage services rendered to its ships.

Bryan v. United States, 6 Ct. Cl. 128; McGowan v. United States, 20 Ct. Cl. 147.

The United States has often been held liable for the negligence of its officers.

United States v. Bostwick, 94 U. S. 53, 24 L. ed. 65; Collins v. United States, 34 Ct. Cl. 294.

The liability of the government to make reparation in cases of this character has been recognized in Belgium.

Passicrisie A. D. 1852, pp. 1-370. See also Gerveis de Clifton's Case, Y. B. 22 Edw. III., folio 5, pl. 12.

The state of New York was held liable in damages for the negligence of its employees in leaving unguarded an opening in the railing of a bridge, in consequence of which a person crossing the bridge was injured.

Gibney v. State, 137 N. Y. 1, 19 L. R. A. 365, 33 N. E. 142.

Assistant Attorney General Pradt argued the cause and filed a brief for defendant in error:

The true implied contract arises out of certain facts which, when proved, evidence a contract as effectually as though it had been made in express terms. But as to contracts described as implied in law, it cannot be truly said that there is any contract, since there is no evidence of any intention of contract; but, on the contrary, the facts, when established, show that no intention to contract existed.

Woods v. Ayres, 39 Mich. 350, 33 Am. Rep. 396; Hertzog v. Hertzog, 29 Pa. 465; Metcalf, Contr. p. 9; Pom. Rem. p. 637; Milford v. Com. 144 Mass. 65, 10 N. E. 516.

Taking the phrase "implied contract," found in the jurisdictional statute, in connection with the accompanying provision excluding claims "sounding in tort," it is difficult to see how the term can be held to refer to any other than a genuine contract arising with certainty out of proved facts.

Any other construction will render the jurisdiction of the court of claims "as broad as the manifold grievances complained of against the officers and agents of the United States."

McArthur v. United States, 29 Ct. Cl. 194.

This case is an attempt, under the assumption of an implied contract, to make the government responsible for the unauthorized acts of its officer, those acts being in themselves torts.

Gibbons v. United States, 8 Wall. 274, 19 L. ed. 454.

The government itself is not responsible for the misfeasances, wrongs, negligences, or omissions of duty of the subordinate officers or agents employed in the public service.

Robertson v. Sichel, 127 U. S. 515, 32 L. ed. 206, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1286; German Bank v. United States, 148 U. S. 579, 37 L. ed. 568, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 702.

The United States cannot be sued in its own courts without its consent, and has never permitted itself to be sued in any court for torts committed in its name by its officers. Nor can the settled distinction in this respect between contract and tort be evaded by framing the claim as upon an implied contract.

Hill v. United States, 149 U. S. 598, 37 L. ed. 864, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1011; Langford v. United States, 101 U. S. 345, 25 L. ed. 1012; Schillinger v. United States, 155 U. S. 163, 39 L. ed. 108, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 85; Lanman v. United States, 27 Ct. Cl. 265; McArthur v. United States, 29 Ct. Cl. 194.

The defendant in this case was not in the relation of a common carrier by reason of running its elevator, but simply rested under a duty imposed by law to carry passengers in safety.

McCrell v. Buffalo Office Bldg. Co. 153 N. Y. 263, 47 N. E. 305; Allen v. Sackrider, 37 N. Y. 342; 2 Parsons, Contr. 5th ed. 166, note; Nolton v. Western R. Corp. 15 N. Y. 444, 69 Am. Dec. 623; Marker v. Mitchell, 54 Fed. 638.

In every case in which one undertakes to carry passengers, there is imposed upon him by law a duty to convey such passengers safely, and this without respect to the manner in which the undertaking is assumed, whether by contract for hire, or gratuitously, or by reason of a mere license extended to the passenger; but such legal liability does not in itself constitute or imply a contract.

Carroll v. Staten Island R. Co. 58 N. Y. 133, 17 Am. Rep. 221; Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. v. Swift, 12 Wall. 270, 20 L. ed. 428; Marshall v. York, N. & B. R. Co. 11 C. B. 663; Austin v. Great Western R. Co. L. R. 2 Q. B. 445.

Claimant's proper recourse is to Congress.

Gibbons v. United States, 8 Wall. 274, 19 L. ed. 454; German Bank v. United States, 148 U. S. 579, 37 L. ed. 568, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 702.

Mr. Justice Harlan delivered the opinion of the court:

Bigby, the plaintiff in error, claimed in his petition to have been damaged to the extent of $10,000 on account of certain personal injuries received by him while entering an elevator placed by the United States in its courthouse and postoffice building in the city of Brooklyn, and asked judgment for that sum against the government.

The petition was demurred to upon three 188 U. S.

grounds, namely, that the court had no jurisdiction of the person of the defendant, or of the subject of the action, and did not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action against the United States.

The demurrer was sustained by the circuit court on each of the grounds specified, and, so far as it was sustained upon the ground that the petition did not state a cause of action, it was sustained because the action was not authorized by the act of Congress known as the Tucker act, approved March 3d, 1887, chap. 359, and entitled "An Act to Provide for the Bringing of Suits against the Government of the United States." 24 Stat. at L. 505 (U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 752). The action was accordingly dismissed.

The specific allegations of the petition are—

That the United States is a corporation created by the Constitution, *with its principal office in Washington, and, within the meaning of the New York Code of Civil Procedure, is a foreign corporation; [401]

That on or about November 27th, 1899, the petitioner, while on his way to the office of the marshal of the United States for the eastern district of New York, and at the request of the United States and of its officers, employees, and duly authorized agents, each acting within the scope of his authority, entered into a passenger elevator in the United States courthouse and postoffice building in Brooklyn, which building and elevator was owned and controlled by the United States, and was designed and intended by it for the use of persons on their way to the office of its said marshal;

That the United States "then and there entered into an implied contract" with the petitioner, "wherein and whereby, for a sufficient valuable consideration, it agreed to carry your petitioner safely, to operate said elevator with due care, and to employ for the purposes of the operation of said elevator a competent and experienced person;"

That in "violation of said contract, the United States failed to carry the petitioner safely, or to operate the elevator with due care, or to employ for the operation and to put in charge of such elevator a competent and experienced person, and violated its contract with the petitioner in other ways; and,

That in consequence of said failures, respectively, the petitioner, "while entering the said elevator without negligence on his part was caused to fall and his foot, ankle, and leg were crushed between said elevator and the top of the entrance into the elevator shaft or a projection in the shaft of said elevator or in some other manner, and the back of your petitioner and other parts of the body of your petitioner were also consequently injured, and your petitioner consequently suffered a laceration of the ligaments of his ankle, and he consequently was caused much bodily and mental pain."

The transcript contains a certificate from the circuit court to the effect that in said cause the jurisdiction of that court was in

[402] issue, and that the question was "whether a person who is not, and has not been, an employee of the United States, can *sue the United States, in the circuit court of the United States, in the district where he resides, to recover damages to the amount of $10,000, which damages were caused by personal injury received by said person through the negligence of an employee of the United States, while said person injured as aforesaid was being carried on an elevator in a public building owned and used by the United States as a postoffice and for other governmental uses and purposes, when said person entered said elevator for the purpose of visiting the office of the United States marshal of such district on official business."

This being an action against the United States, the authority of the circuit court to take cognizance of it depends upon the construction of the above act of March 3d, 1887. 24 Stat. at L. 505 (U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 752).

By that act it is provided that the court of claims shall have jurisdiction to hear and determine "all claims founded upon the Constitution of the United States or any law of Congress, except for pensions, or upon any regulation of an executive department, or upon any contract, expressed or implied, with the government of the United States, or for damages, liquidated or unliquidated, in cases not sounding in tort, in respect of which claims the party would be entitled to redress against the United States either in a court of law, equity, or admiralty if the United States were suable: Provided, however, That nothing in this section shall be construed as giving to either of the courts herein mentioned jurisdiction to hear and determine claims growing out of the late Civil War, and commonly known as 'war claims,' or to hear and determine other claims, which have heretofore been rejected, or reported on adversely by any [103] court, department, or commission authorized to hear and determine the same." The act further provided that "the district courts of the United States shall have concurrent jurisdiction with the court of claims as to all matters named in the preceding section where the amount of the claim does not exceed one thousand dollars, and the circuit courts of the United States shall have such concurrent jurisdiction in all cases where the amount of such claim exceeds one thousand dollars and does not exceed ten thousand dollars."

It is clear that the act excludes from judicial cognizance any claim against the United States for damages in a case "sounding in tort." But the contention of the plaintiff is, in substance, that, although the facts constituting the negligence of which he complains made a case of tort, he may waive the tort; that his present claim is founded upon an implied contract with the government, whereby it agreed to carry him safely in its elevator, would operate the elevator with due care, and employ for the purposes of such carriage a competent and experienced person; and, consequently, that his suit is embraced by the words "upon any contract, express or implied, with the government of the United States." The contention of the United States is that no such implied contract with the government arose from the plaintiff's entering or attempting to enter and use the elevator in question, and that the claim is distinctly for damages in a case "sounding in tort," of which the act of Congress did not authorize the circuit court to take cognizance.

Can the plaintiff's cause of action be regarded as founded upon implied contract with the government, within the meaning of the act of 1887?

The precise question thus presented has not been determined by this court. But former decisions may be consulted in order to ascertain whether this suit is embraced by the words, in that act, "upon any contract, express or implied, with the government of the United States." Do those words include an action against the United States to recover damages for personal injuries caused by the negligent management of an elevator erected and maintained by it in one of its courthouse and postoffice buildings?

*In Gibbons v. United States, 8 Wall. 269, [404] 274, 19 L. ed. 453, 454,—which was an action in the court of claims to recover an amount alleged to have been wrongfully exacted by a quartermaster of the United States in the execution of a contract for the delivery of oats,—this court said: "But it is not to be disguised that this case is an attempt, under the assumption of an implied contract, to make the government responsible for the unauthorized acts of its officer; those acts being in themselves torts. No government has ever held itself liable to individuals for the misfeasance, laches, or unauthorized exercise of power by its officers and agents. In the language of Judge Story, 'it does not undertake to guarantee to any person the fidelity of any of the officers or agents whom it employs, since that would involve it in all its operations in endless embarrassments, and difficulties, and losses, which would be subversive of the public interests.' . . . The language of the statutes which confer jurisdiction upon the court of claims excludes by the strongest implication demands against the government founded on torts. The general principle which we have already stated as applicable to all governments forbids, on a policy imposed by necessity, that they should hold themselves liable for unauthorized wrongs inflicted by their officers on the citizen, though occurring while engaged in the discharge of official duties. . . . These reflections admonish us to be cautious that we do not permit the decisions of this court to become authority for the righting, in the court of claims, of all wrongs done to individuals by the officers of the general government, though they may have been committed while serving that government, and in the belief that it was for its interest. In such cases, where it is proper for the nation to furnish a remedy, Congress has wisely reserved the matter for its own determination. It certainly has not conferred it on the court of claims."

[405] The same general question arose in Langford v. United States, 101 U. S. 341, 342, 344, 25 L. ed. 1010-1012, which was an action in the court of claims to recover for the use and occupation of lands and buildings, of which certain Indian agents acting for the United States had taken possession without the consent of the American Board of Foreign Missions, which had erected the buildings, and under *which board the plaintiff claimed title. The United States asserted ownership of the property and disputed the title of the claimant. This court held that the action could not be maintained, and said that the reason for limiting suits to cases of express and implied contracts, as distinguished from cases formed on tort, "is very obvious on a moment's reflection. While Congress might be willing to subject the government to the judicial enforcement of valid contracts, which could only be valid as against the United States when made by some officer of the government acting under lawful authority, with power vested in him to make such contracts, or to do acts which implied them, the very essence of a tort is that it is an unlawful act, done in violation of the legal rights of someone. For such acts, however high the position of the officer or agent of the government who did or commanded them, Congress did not intend to subject the government to the results of a suit in that court. This policy is founded in wisdom, and is clearly expressed in the act defining the jurisdiction of the court; and it would ill become us to fritter away the distinction between actions ex delicto and actions ex contractu, which is well understood in our system of jurisprudence, and thereby subject the government to payment of damages for all the wrongs committed by its officers or agents, under a mistaken zeal, or actuated by less worthy motives."

The subject was again considered in Hill v. United States, 149 U. S. 593, 598, 599, 37 L. ed. 862, 864, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1011, 1013, which was an action to recover damages for the use and occupation of certain property in the possession of the United States, but of which the plaintiff asserted ownership. This court said: "The United States cannot be sued in their own courts without their consent, and have never permitted themselves to be sued in any court for torts committed in their name by their officers. Nor can the settled distinction, in this respect, between contract and tort, be evaded by framing the claim as upon an implied contract. Gibbons v. United States, 8 Wall. 269, 274, 19 L. ed. 453, 454; Langford v. United States, 101 U. S. 341, 346, 25 L. ed. 1010, 1012; United States v. Jones, 131 U. S. 1, 16, 18, 33 L. ed. 90, 91, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 669. An action in the nature of assumpsit for the use and occupation of real estate will never lie where there has been [406] no relation of contract *between the parties, and where the possession has been acquired and maintained under a different or adverse title, or where it is tortious and makes the 188 U. S.

defendant a trespasser. Lloyd v. Hough, 1 How. 153, 159, 11 L. ed. 83, 85; Carpenter v. United States, 17 Wall. 489, 493, 21 L. ed. 680, 681. In Langford v. United States it was accordingly adjudged that, when an officer of the United States took and held possession of land of a private citizen, under a claim that it belonged to the government, the United States could not be charged upon an implied obligation to pay for its use and occupation."

In Robertson v. Sichel, 127 U. S. 507, 515, 32 L. ed. 203, 206, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1286, 1290, the court said: "The government itself is not responsible for the misfeasances, or wrongs, or negligences, or omissions of duty of the subordinate officers or agents employed in the public service; for it does not undertake to guarantee to any person the fidelity of any of the officers or agents whom it employs; since that would involve it, in all its operations, in endless embarrassments, and difficulties, and losses, which would be subversive of the public interests." So, in German Bank v. United States, 148 U. S. 573, 579, 37 L. ed. 564, 568, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 702, 705: "It is a well-settled rule of law that the government is not liable for the nonfeasances or misfeasances or negligence of its officers, and that the only remedy to the injured party in such cases is by appeal to Congress."

In Schillinger v. United States, 155 U. S. 163, 168, 39 L. ed. 108, 110, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 85, 86, the question was whether a suit could be maintained against the United States to recover damages for the use of a patent for an improvement in a concrete pavement. It appeared that the patent had been used by a contractor who undertook to construct a pavement for the United States. The pavement was constructed, and at the time the action was brought was in use by the government. It was contended that the United States, having appropriated to public use property that belonged to the plaintiff, came under an implied obligation to compensate him,—such implied obligation arising from the constitutional provision that private property should not be taken for public use except upon payment of just compensation. This view was rejected, and the court said: "Can it be that Congress intended that every wrongful arrest and detention of an individual, or *seiz-[407] ure of his property by an officer of the government, should expose it to an action for damages in the court of claims? If any such breadth of jurisdiction was contemplated, language which had already been given a restrictive meaning would have been carefully avoided. . . . Here the claimants never authorized the use of the patent right by the government; never consented to, but always protested against it, threatening to interfere by injunction or other proceedings to restrain such use. There was no act of Congress in terms directing, or even by implication suggesting, the use of the patent. No officer of the government directed its use, and the contract which was executed by Cook did not name or describe it. There was no recognition by the government or any of its officers of the fact that in the construction of the pavement there was any use of the patent, or that any appropriation was being made of claimant's property. The government proceeded as though it were acting only in the management of its own property and the exercise of its own rights, and without any trespass upon the rights of the claimants. There was no point in the whole transaction, from its commencement to its close, where the minds of the parties met, or where there was anything in the semblance of an agreement."

It thus appears that the court has steadily adhered to the general rule that, without its consent given in some act of Congress, the government is not liable to be sued for the torts, misconduct, misfeasances, or laches of its officers or employees. There is no reason to suppose that Congress has intended to change or modify that rule. On the contrary, such liability to suit is expressly excluded by the act of 1887.

Cases of this kind are to be distinguished from those in which private property was taken or used by the officers of the government with the consent of the owner or under circumstances showing that the title or right of the owner was recognized or admitted. As, in United States v. Russell, 13 Wall. 623, 626, 20 L. ed. 474, which was an action to recover for the use of certain steamers used in the business of the government pursuant to an understanding with the owner that he should be compensated; or, in United States v. Great Falls Mfg. Co. [408] 112*U. S. 645, 28 L. ed. 846, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 306, in which it appeared that certain private property was appropriated by officers of the government for public use, pursuant to an act of Congress, the title of the owner being recognized or not disputed; or, in United States v. Palmer, 128 U. S. 262, 269, 32 L. ed. 442, 444, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 104, which was an action to recover for the use of a patent which the government was invited by the patentee to use. In all such cases the law implies a meeting of the minds of the parties, and an agreement to pay for that which was used for the government, no dispute existing as to the title to the property used. The important fact in each of those cases was that the officers who appropriated and used the property of others were authorized to do so, and hence the implied contract that the government would pay for such use.

But, as we have seen, the plaintiff contends that when he entered, or attempted to enter, the elevator, the government must be deemed to have contracted that its employee in charge of it would use due care so as not to needlessly injure him. In other words, —for it comes to that,—by the mere construction and maintenance of such elevator the government, contrary to its established policy, impliedly agreed to be responsible for the torts of an employee having charge of the elevator, if, by his negligence, injury came to one using it. We find no authority for this position in any act of Congress, and nothing short of an act of Congress can make the United States responsible for a personal injury done to the citizen by one of its employees who, while discharging his duties, fails to exercise such care and diligence as a proper regard to the rights of others required. "Causing harm by negligence is a tort." One of the definitions of a tort is "an act or omission causing harm which the person so acting or omitting did not intend to cause, but might and should with due diligence have foreseen and prevented." Pollock, Torts, 1, 19. The elevator in question was erected in order to facilitate the transaction of the public business, and also, it may be assumed, for the convenience and comfort of those who might choose to use it when going to a room in the courthouse and postoffice building occupied by public officers, and not pursuant to any agreement, express or implied, between the United States and the general public, or *un- [409] der any agreement between the United States and the individual person who might seek to use it. No one was compelled or required to use it, and no officer in charge of the building had any authority to say that a person using it could sue the government if he was injured by reason of the want of due care on the part of the employee operating it. No officer had authority to make an express contract to that effect, and no contract of that kind could be implied merely from the government's ownership of the elevator and from the negligence of its employee. The facts alleged show a case in which the plaintiff was injured by reason of the negligence of the manager of the elevator. It is therefore a case of pure tort on the part of such manager for which he could be sued. It is a case "sounding in tort," because it had its origin in and is founded on the wrongful and negligent act of the elevator manager. There is in it no element of contract as between the plaintiff and the government; for, as we have said, no one was authorized to put upon the government a liability for damages arising from the wrongful, tortious act of its employee. The plaintiff therefore cannot by the device of waiving the tort committed by the elevator operator make a case against the government of implied contract. A party may in some cases waive a tort; that is, he may forbear to sue in tort, and sue in contract, where the matter out of which his claim arises has in it the elements both of contract and tort. But it has been well said that "a right of action in contract cannot be created by waiving a tort, and the duty to pay damages for a tort does not imply a promise to pay them upon which assumpsit can be maintained." Cooper v. Cooper, 147 Mass. 370, 373, 17 N. E. 892, 894. If the plaintiff could sue the elevator employee upon an implied contract that due care should be observed by him in managing the elevator, it does not follow that he could sue the government upon implied contract. For under existing legislation no relation of contract could arise between the government and those who chose to use its elevator. It is easy to perceive how disastrous to the operations of the government would be a rule under which it could be sued for torts committed by its agents and employees in the management of its property. It is for Congress to determine in all such cases [410]* what justice requires upon the part of the government. If any exceptions ought to be made to the general rule it is for Congress to make them.

We have not overlooked the allegation in the petition that the plaintiff entered the elevator "at the request of the United States, and of its officers, employees, and duly authorized agents, each acting within the scope of his authority." This, we assume, means at most only that the plaintiff entered, or attempted to enter, the elevator with the assent of those who had control of it and of the building in which it was erected. But if more than this was meant to be alleged; if the plaintiff intended to allege an express or affirmative request by officers or agents of the United States,—the case would not, in our view, be changed; for the court knows that, without the authority of an act of Congress, no officer or agent of the United States could, in writing or verbally, make the government liable to suit by reason of the want of due care on the part of those having charge of an elevator in a public building.

We are of opinion that this case is one sounding in tort, within the meaning of the act of 1887, and therefore not maintainable in any court.

The judgment of the Circuit Court dismissing the action for want of jurisdiction is affirmed.

DAVID MARK CUMMINGS and Grace Dunlap Kennedy, Appts.,

v.

CITY OF CHICAGO.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 410-431.)

Jurisdiction of circuit court—suit arising under Federal Constitution and laws—direct appeal to Supreme Court—navigable waters—state authority over—when not superseded by Congress.

1. A suit which involves the question of the right to construct a dock in a navigable river under certain acts of Congress and a permit from the Secretary of War, which are alleged to be in execution of the power of Congress, under the Constitution, over the navigable waters of the United States, is one

NOTE.—As to Federal question as conferring jurisdiction on United States courts—see notes to Montana Ore-Purchasing Co. v. Boston & M. Consol. Copper & S. Mln. Co. 35 C. C. A. 7; Bailey v. Mosher, 11 C. C. A. 308; and Re Buchanan, 39 L. ed. U. S. 884.

On direct review by the United States Supreme Court of circuit or district court judgments—see note to Gwin v. United States, 46 L. ed. U. S. 741.

On the power of states over navigable rivers—see notes to Swanson v. Mississippi & R. River Boom Co. (Minn.) 7 L. R. A. 673; Eisenbach v. Hatfield (Wash.) 12 L. R. A. 632; and Mills v. United States (C. C. S. D. Ga.) 12 L. R. A. 673.

188 U. S.

arising under the Constitution and laws of the United States, of which, under the act of March 3, 1887, chap. 373 (24 Stat. at L. 552), as corrected by the act of August 13, 1888, chap. 866 (25 Stat. at L. 433, U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 508), a circuit court of the United States has jurisdiction without diversity of citizenship.

2. A suit which involves the consideration of questions relating to the power of Congress, under the Constitution, over the navigable waters of the United States, is one which involves the construction or application of the Federal Constitution, within the meaning of the act of March 3, 1891 (26 Stat. at L. 830, chap. 517, U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 549), authorizing direct appeals from a circuit court to the Supreme Court of the United States.
3. The authority of a state to prohibit the erection, without its permission, of a structure in a navigable river wholly within its limits, was not superseded by the provision of the river and harbor act of March 3, 1899, chap. 425, § 10 (30 Stat. at L. 1121, 1151, U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 3541), that it shall not be lawful to erect any structure in a navigable river except on plans recommended by the chief of engineers and authorized by the Secretary of War.

[No. 136.]

Submitted December 19, 1902. Decided February 23, 1903.

APPEAL from the Circuit Court of the United States for the Northern District of Illinois to review a judgment sustaining a demurrer to, and dismissing for want of equity, a bill to enjoin the city of Chicago from interfering with the construction of a dock in the Calumet river. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Warren B. Wilson and S. A. Lynde submitted the cause for appellants: As riparian owners the appellants had the right to build their dock, subject only to the public easement for the purpose of navigation.

Yates v. Milwaukee, 10 Wall. 497, 19 L. ed. 984; Chicago v. Laftin, 49 Ill. 172; Chicago v. McGinn, 51 Ill. 266, 2 Am. Rep. 295; Chicago v. Van Ingen, 152 Ill. 624, 38 N. E. 894.

Neither the state of Illinois nor the city of Chicago, its agent, has any power to interfere with or prevent the erection of any dock or structure which Congress has authorized to be built in this river.

Gibbons v. Ogden, 9 Wheat. 1, 6 L. ed. 23; Pennsylvania v. Wheeling & B. Bridge Co. 13 How. 518, 14 L. ed. 249, 18 How. 421, 15 L. ed. 435; Gilman v. Philadelphia, 3 Wall. 713, 18 L. ed. 96; Pound v. Turck, 95 U. S. 459, 24 L. ed. 525; Wisconsin v. Duluth, 96 U. S. 379, 24 L. ed. 668; Newport & C. Bridge Co. v. United States, 105 U. S. 470, 26 L. ed. 1143; Cardwell v. American River Bridge Co. 113 U. S. 205, 28 L. ed. 959, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 423; Willamette Iron Bridge Co. v. Hatch, 125 U. S. 1, 31 L. ed. 629, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 811.

Congress has the power to determine what shall or shall not be deemed in law an obstruction to navigation.

Pennsylvania v. Wheeling & B. Bridge Co. 18 How. 421, 15 L. ed. 435; The Clinton Bridge sub nom. Gray v. Chicago, I. & N. R. Co. 10 Wall. 454, 19 L. ed. 969; South Carolina v. Georgia, 93 U. S. 4, 23 L. ed. 782; North Bloomfield Gravel Min. Co. v. United States, 32 C. C. A. 84, 59 U. S. App. 377, 88 Fed. 675.

A state has no power to interfere with the erection of any structure in navigable waters authorized by Congress.

Decker v. Baltimore & N. Y. R. Co. 1 Inters. Com. Rep. 434, 30 Fed. 723; Stockton v. Baltimore & N. Y. R. Co. 1 Inters. Com. Rep. 411, 32 Fed. 9; Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Baltimore & N. Y. R. Co. 37 Fed. 129. See also Mobile County v. Kimball, 102 U. S. 691, 26 L. ed. 238; Escanaba & L. M. Transp. Co. v. Chicago, 107 U. S. 678, 27 L. ed. 442, 2 Sup. Ct. Rep. 185; Sands v. Manistee River Imp. Co. 123 U. S. 288, 31 L. ed. 149, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 113.

Authority from the Secretary of War to construct the dock was given by and under the act of March 3, 1899, and is paramount and excludes any state or municipal control of this same matter.

South Carolina v. Georgia, 93 U. S. 4, 23 L. ed. 782; Wisconsin v. Duluth, 96 U. S. 379, 24 L. ed. 668; United States v. Milwaukee & St. P. R. Co. 5 Biss. 410, 420, Fed. Cas. Nos. 15,778, 15,779; Willamette Iron Bridge Co. v. Hatch, 125 U. S. 1, 31 L. ed. 629, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 811; United States v. Bellingham Bay Boom Co. 176 U. S. 211, 44 L. ed. 437, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 343; United States v. Ormsbee, 74 Fed. 207; United States v. Moline, 82 Fed. 592.

The delegation of power to the Secretary of War, by the act of 1899, to issue this permit, is valid.

Luther v. Borden, 7 How. 1, 12 L. ed. 581; Miller v. New York, 109 U. S. 385, 27 L. ed. 971, 3 Sup. Ct. Rep. 228; Gibbons v. Ogden, 9 Wheat. 1, 6 L. ed. 23; Marshall Field & Co. v. Clark, 143 U. S. 649, 36 L. ed. 294, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 495; Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. Ohio, 165 U. S. 365, 41 L. ed. 747, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 357.

A case arises under the Constitution of the United States when the right of either party depends upon the validity of an act of Congress.

Patton v. Brady, 184 U. S. 611, 46 L. ed. 715, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 493; Cohen v. Virginia, 6 Wheat. 264, 5 L. ed. 257.

The appeal was properly taken to this court.

Huguley Mfg. Co. v. Galetton Cotton Mills, 184 U. S. 290, 46 L. ed. 546, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 452; Wiley v. Sinkler, 179 U. S. 58, 45 L. ed. 84, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 17.

The obstruction of the exercise of a license issued by the United States is in violation of the commerce clause.

Gibbons v. Ogden, 9 Wheat. 1, 6 L. ed. 23.

Where the identical thing which is attempted to be forbidden is expressly authorized by act of Congress, and a conflict arises between the two, the local regulation must give way.

Henderson v. Wickham, 92 U. S. 259, 23 L. ed. 543.

No state law can hinder or obstruct the free use of a license granted under an act of Congress.

Pennsylvania v. Wheeling & B. Bridge Co. 13 How. 518, 14 L. ed. 249.

This ordinance of the city of Chicago, upon which appellee relies, and under which it is acting in preventing the building of these docks, is unreasonable and void and in violation of the commerce clause of the United States Constitution, for the same reasons that the police regulations and ordinances were held void in the cases of—

Chy Lung v. Freeman, 92 U. S. 275, 23 L. ed. 550; Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. v. Husen, 95 U. S. 465, 24 L. ed. 527; Henderson v. Wickham, 92 U. S. 259, 23 L. ed. 543; Welton v. Missouri, 91 U. S. 275, 23 L. ed. 347.

Mr. Charles M. Walker submitted the cause for appellee. Mr. Henry Schofield was with him on the brief:

If the statement of the claim or demand in a bill does not, in and of itself, show that the claim or demand arises under the Constitution or laws of the United States, the fact that the defendant filed a demurrer cannot aid the statement to that end.

Tennessee v. Union & Planters' Bank. 152 U. S. 454, 38 L. ed. 511, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 654; Houston & T. C. R. Co. v. Texas, 177 U. S. 66, 44 L. ed. 673, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 545; New Orleans v. Benjamin, 153 U. S. 411, 38 L. ed. 764, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 905.

The circuit court had no jurisdiction under U. S. Rev. Stat. § 629, subd. 16 (U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 506), because no civil right secured by the Constitution or laws of the United States is involved.

Holt v. Indiana Mfg. Co. 176 U. S. 68, 44 L. ed. 374, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 272.

A municipal ordinance is not a state act, unless passed under legislative authority.

Hamilton Gaslight & Coke Co. v. Hamilton, 146 U. S. 258, 36 L. ed. 963, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 90.

When a state parts with its title to the bed of navigable water, and thereby gives an implied license to build wharves in the bed in aid of commerce, it nevertheless retains its power to control and prohibit, in the interest of the public, the building of wharves and other structures in such bed, and does not, and cannot thereby, in any way impair or diminish the power of Congress, under the commerce clause, to regulate and prohibit, in the interest of interstate and foreign commerce, the use of such bed, or the police power of the state.

Prosser v. Northern P. R. Co. 152 U. S. 59, 38 L. ed. 352, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 528; Shively v. Bowlby, 152 U. S. 1, 38 L. ed. 331, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 548; Walker v. Marks, 17 Wall. 648, 21 L. ed. 744; Weber v. State Harbor Comrs. 18 Wall. 57, 21 L. ed. 798; Com. v. Alger, 7 Cush. 53; People v. New York & S. I. Ferry Co. 68 N. Y. 71; State v. Sargent & Co. 45 Conn. 358; Hawkins Point Light-House Case, 39 Fed. 77; Gould, Waters, 3d ed. §§ 138, 179, p. 349.

In the case of navigable streams, the cases in Illinois all recognize that the license of a riparian owner on a navigable stream in Illinois, by virtue of his ownership of the bed in front of his land, may be regulated and prohibited by the legislature in the interest of the public easements of navigation, etc.

Middleton v. Pritchard, 4 Ill. 510. 38 Am. Dec. 112; People v. St. Louis, 10 Ill. 351, 48 Am. Dec. 339; Illinois & M. Canal v. Haven, 10 Ill. 548; Illinois River Packet Co. v. Peoria Bridge Asso. 38 Ill. 467; Ensminger v. Peoria, 47 Ill. 384, 95 Am. Dec. 495; Chicago v. Laflin, 49 Ill. 172; Chicago v. McGinn, 51 Ill. 266, 2 Am. Rep. 295; Rockwell v. Baldwin, 53 Ill. 19; Hubbard v. Bell, 54 Ill. 110, 5 Am. Rep. 98; Bracon v. Bressler, 64 Ill. 488; Washington Ice Co. v. Shortall, 101 Ill. 46, 40 Am. Rep. 196; Piper v. Connelly, 108 Ill. 646.

The river and harbor act is preventive legislation, and is not legislation designed to grant authority.

Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. Ohio, 165 U. S. 365, 41 L. ed. 747, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 357; Lane v. Smith, 71 Conn. 65, 41 Atl. 18; 20 Ops Atty. Gen. 102.

The states have power over local matters, such as bridges, quarantine, pilots, wharves, etc., in the absence of any legislation on the same subject by Congress, although the exercise of such power by the states may, and often does, incidentally affect, impede, and embarrass interstate commerce.

Gibbons v. Ogden, 9 Wheat. 1, 6 L. ed. 23; Cooley v. Philadelphia Port Wardens, 12 How. 299, 13 L. ed. 996.

In the application of the principles of the supremacy of an act of Congress in a case where the state law is but the exercise of a reserved power, the repugnance or conflict should be direct and positive, so that the two acts could not be reconciled or consistently stand together, and the act of Congress should have been passed in the exercise of a clear power under the Constitution.

Sinnot v. Davenport, 22 How. 227, 16 L. ed. 307. See also Ex parte Siebold, 100 U. S. 371, 25 L. ed. 717.

The construction which counsel seek to put upon the power vested in the Secretary of War by the act of Congress of 1899 makes the constitutionality of that act as applied to the facts in this case very doubtful.

Yick Wo v. Hopkins, 118 U. S. 356, 30 L. ed. 220, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1064.

Mr. Justice Harlan delivered the opinion of the court:

The appellants, citizens of Illinois, brought this suit against the city of Chicago for the purpose of obtaining a decree restraining the defendant, its officers and agents, from interfering with the construction of a dock in front of certain lands owned by the plaintiffs and situated on Calumet river, within the limits of that city.

The city demurred to the bill upon the ground that it did not state facts entitling the plaintiffs to the relief asked. The demurrer was sustained, and the bill was dismissed for want of equity.

The controlling question in the case is whether the plaintiffs have the right, in virtue of certain legislation of Congress and of certain action of the Secretary of War, to which reference will be presently made, to proceed with the proposed work in disregard of an ordinance of the city of Chicago requiring the permission of its department of public works as a condition precedent to the construction of any dock within the limits of *the city. The plaintiffs had not obtained any permit from that department. [412]

The legislation of Congress and the action of the Secretary of War upon which the plaintiffs rely are very fully set forth in the bill, and are as follows:

In the river and harbor appropriation act of August 2d, 1882, chap. 375, will be found this provision: "Improving harbor at Calumet, Illinois: Continuing improvement, thirty-five thousand dollars: Provided, That with a view to the improvement of the Calumet river, in the state of Illinois, from its mouth to the Fork at Calumet lake, the Secretary of War shall appoint a board of engineers who shall examine said river and report upon the practicability and the best method of perfecting and maintaining a channel for through navigation to said Fork at Lake Calumet, adapted to the passage of the largest vessels navigating the Northern and Northwestern Lakes, limiting and locating the lines of channel to be improved by the United States, and of docks that may be constructed by private individuals, corporations, or other parties, and clearly defining the same under the direction of the chief of engineers, United States Army; and the Secretary of War shall report to Congress the result of said examination, and the estimated cost of the proposed improvement: also what legislation, if any, is necessary to prevent encroachments being made or maintained within the limits of the channel designated as above provided for." 22 Stat. at L. 194.

Thereafter, the bill alleges, the Secretary of War appointed a board of engineers, who surveyed the river and defined the lines of its channel and of docks to be constructed, under the direction of said chief of engineers; and the Secretary of War thereafter reported to Congress the estimated cost of the proposed improvement.

In the river and harbor appropriation act of July 5th, 1884, chap. 229, this provision was inserted: "Improving Calumet River, Illinois: Continuing improvement, fifty thousand dollars: Provided, however, That no part of said sum shall be expended until the right of way shall have been conveyed to the United States, free from expense, and the United States shall be fully *released from all liability for damages [413] to adjacent property owners, to the satisfaction of the Secretary of War." 23 Stat. at L. 133, 143.

Under these enactments, the bill alleged, the United States caused a plat to be made establishing the channel of the river and its lines, and fixing the dock lines thereof. That plat was approved by the chief of engineers of the Army and was duly recorded in the recorder's office of Cook county.

The above legislation was followed by this provision in the river and harbor act of August 5th, 1886, chap. 929: "Improving Calumet River, Illinois: Continuing improvement, thirty thousand dollars; of which eleven thousand two hundred and fifty dollars are to be used between the Forks and one-half mile east of Hammond, Indiana; . . . Provided, however, That no part of said sum, nor any sum heretofore appropriated, except the said eleven thousand two hundred and fifty dollars, for the river above the Forks, shall be expended until the entire right of way, as set forth in Senate Executive Document Number Nine, second session Forty-seventh Congress, shall have been conveyed to the United States free of expense, and the United States shall be fully released from all liability for damages to adjacent property owners, to the satisfaction of the Secretary of War; . . ." 24 Stat. at L. 310, 325.

Without going into all the details set forth in the bill, it may be assumed that the deeds of conveyance which the above acts of 1884 and 1886 required to be made to the United States were in fact made and accepted.

The bill alleges that the United States by its duly authorized officials thereafter entered upon the improvement of Calumet river in accordance with the surveys and plans adopted by the chief of engineers of the United States Army, and "thereby established said dock or channel line on the west line of said river in the manner and form shown by said plat approved by the said chief of engineers, and filed for record as aforesaid."

By the 7th section of the river and harbor act of Congress approved September 19th, 1890, chap. 907, it was provided: "That it shall not be lawful to build any wharf, pier, dolphin, boom, dam, weir, breakwater, bulkhead, jetty, or structure of any kind outside established harbor lines, or in any navigable waters of the United States where no harbor lines are or may be established, without the permission of the Secretary of War, in any port, roadstead, haven, harbor, navigable river, or other waters of the United States, in such manner as shall obstruct or impair navigation, commerce, or anchorage of said waters, and it shall not be lawful hereafter to commence the construction of any bridge, bridge-draw, bridge piers and abutments, causeway, or other works over or in any port, road, roadstead, haven, harbor, navigable river, or navigable waters of the United States, under any act of the legislative assembly of any state, until the location and plan of such bridge or other works have been submitted to and approved by the Secretary of War, or to excavate or fill, or in any manner to alter or modify the course, location, condition, or capacity of the channel of said navigable water of the United States, unless approved and authorized by the Secretary of War: Provided, That this section shall not apply to any bridge, bridge-draw, bridge piers, and abutments the construction of which has been heretofore duly authorized by law, or be so construed as to authorize the construction of any bridge, drawbridge, bridge piers and abutments, or other works, under an act of the legislature of any state, over or in any stream, port, roadstead, haven, or harbor, or other navigable water not wholly within the limits of such state." 26 Stat. at L. 426, 454.

Then, by the 10th section of the river and harbor act of March 3d, 1899, chap. 425, it was provided: "That the creation of any obstruction not affirmatively authorized by Congress, to the navigable capacity of any of the waters of the United States, is hereby prohibited; and it shall not be lawful to build, or commence the building of, any wharf, pier, dolphin, boom, weir, breakwater, bulkhead, jetty, or other structures in any port, roadstead, haven, harbor, canal, navigable river, or other water of the United States, outside established harbor lines, or where no harbor lines have been established, except on plans recommended by the chief of engineers and authorized by the Secretary of War; and it shall not be lawful to excavate or fill, or in any manner to alter or modify the course, location, condition, *or capacity of, any port, roadstead, [415] haven, harbor, canal, lake, harbor of refuge, or inclosure within the limits of any breakwater, or of the channel of any navigable water of the United States, unless the work has been recommended by the chief of engineers and authorized by the Secretary of War prior to beginning the same." 30 Stat. at L. 1121, 1151 ( U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 3541).

Subsequently, the plaintiffs and the Calumet Grain & Elevator Company—the latter also owning land on the Calumet river in front of which the proposed new dock would be built—caused plans of the dock to be prepared and submitted to the Secretary of War and the chief of engineers of the Army, and application was made to the former for permission to rebuild the dock along the front of their lands on Calumet river as shown by those plans.

Those plans were approved by the United States engineer stationed at Chicago, and were subsequently recommended by the chief of engineers of the Army. The Secretary thereupon issued and delivered to the plaintiffs and the Grain & Elevator Company the following instrument:

Whereas, by § 10 of an act of Congress, approved March 3d, 1899, entitled "An Act Making Appropriations for the Construction, Repair, and Preservation of Certain Public Works on Rivers and Harbors, and for Other Purposes," it is provided that it shall not be lawful to build, or commence the building of, any wharf, pier, dolphin, boom, weir, breakwater, bulkhead, jetty, or other structures in any port, roadstead, haven, harbor, canal, navigable river, or other water of the United States, outside established harbor lines, or where no harbor lines have been established, except on plans recommended by the chief of engineers and authorized by the Secretary of War; and if shall not be lawful to excavate or fill, or in any manner to alter or modify the course, location, condition, or capacity of, any port, roadstead, haven, harbor, canal, lake, harbor of refuge, or inclosure within the limits of any breakwater, or of the channel of any navigable water of the United States, unless the work has been recommended by the chief of engineers and authorized by the Secretary of War prior to beginning the same; and whereas, D. M. Cummings, as executor of the estate of C. R. *Cummings, and the Calumet Grain & Elevator Company have applied to the Secretary of War for permission to rebuild the dock in front of that part of block 108, in sections 5 and 6, T. 37, R. 15, E., fronting on Calumet river, south of 95th street, Chicago, Illinois, along the lines shown on the attached plans, which have been recommended by the chief of engineers; now, therefore, this is to certify that the Secretary of War hereby gives unto said D. M. Cummings, as executor of the estate of C. R. Cummings, and the Calumet Grain & Elevator Company permission to rebuild the dock, at said place, along the lines shown on said plans, subject to the following condition: That the work herein permitted to be done shall be subject to the supervision and approval of the engineer officer of the United States Army in charge of the locality.

Witness my hand this 12th day of May, 1900.

Elihu Root,
Secretary of War.

The bill then alleged—

That after the granting of permission by the Secretary of War the plaintiffs became entitled, in virtue of that permission and the provision of the act of March 3d, 1899, to build the proposed dock in front of their premises, subject only to the condition that the work should be under the supervision and be approved by the engineer officer of the Army in charge of the locality;

That after the action of the Secretary of War they entered into a contract for the building of the dock, and were engaged in the prosecution of the work when, about the 15th of October, 1900, the city of Chicago, by its officers and agents, put a stop to the work by force and threats, asserting that it could not be prosecuted unless a permit therefor be issued by its department of public works;

That this action of the city was taken pursuant to certain ordinances theretofore passed by the city council, and which made it the duty of the city's harbor master to require all parties engaged in repairing, renewing, altering, or constructing any dock within the city to produce such permit, and in default thereof to cause the arrest of any parties engaged in the work and the removal of the dock;

[417] *That the engineer officer in the department of public works of the city, having agreed that the city had no power to interfere with the plaintiffs or prevent the building of said dock by them, agreed that the work should not be interfered with by the city or its agents;

188 U. S.

That the plaintiffs thereupon resumed the construction of the dock, but they were again stopped by the city through its police, and plaintiffs' contractors, agents, and servants were forced to discontinue the work, being threatened with arrest and violence if they should attempt to continue it further;

That the city by its officers and agents has notified the plaintiffs that they will not be permitted to continue the work or to build the dock in front of their premises, notwithstanding the permission or authority given to them by the Secretary of War, and that, by its police, it would forcibly prevent the building thereof, arrest those engaged in doing the work, and remove any dock built; and,

That the city wholly refuses to recognize the permission and authority given the plaintiffs by the Secretary of War to build said dock, and their right "under the Constitution and laws of the United States, and more particularly under the said act of Congress of March 3d, 1899, to build it by virtue of the said authority and permission granted by the Secretary of War and the approval and recommendation of the plans therefor by the chief of engineers of the United States Army;"

That, in view of the action taken by the city and its police, they fear that attempts to continue their work will necessarily be futile and lead to breaches of the peace and conflicts between the men engaged in the work and the police of the city of Chicago; and that the right to build said dock in front of their premises in accordance with the permission and authority given them by the Secretary of War and on the lines recommended by the chief of engineers and within the dock line established by said survey and by the deed to the United States is a property right, which the plaintiffs have as the owners of the premises and of the land upon which the dock is to be built, and that the action of the city in thus preventing the building of the dock is a taking of the property of the plaintiffs "without due *process of law, and a taking thereof for[418] public use without just compensation, in violation of the 5th Amendment of the Constitution of the United States."

The relief asked was a decree enjoining the city, its agents and officers, from interfering with the building of the dock, and that upon the final hearing of the cause it be adjudged and decreed that under the acts of Congress the plaintiffs have the right, by virtue of the permission granted by the Secretary of War, to build the dock on the lines shown by the plans recommended by the chief of engineers, and that the city of Chicago has no right, power, or authority to interfere therewith.

1. We hold that the circuit court had jurisdiction in this case. That the parties, plaintiffs and defendant, are citizens of the same state is not sufficient to defeat the jurisdiction; for by the act of March 3d, 1887, chap. 373, as corrected by the act of *August[426] 13th, 1888, chap. 866, the circuit courts have jurisdiction, without reference to the citizenship of the parties, of suits at common law or in equity arising under the Constitution or laws of the United States. 24 Stat. at L. 552, 25 Stat. at L. 433 (U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 508). The present suit does arise under the Constitution and laws of the United States, because the plaintiffs base their right to construe the dock in question upon the Constitution of the United States, as well as upon certain acts of Congress and the permit (so called) of the Secretary of War,—which legislative enactments and action of the Secretary of War were, it is alleged, in execution of the power of Congress, under the Constitution, over the navigable waters of the United States. Clearly, such a suit is one arising under the Constitution and laws of the United States. That it is a suit of that character appears from the bill itself. The allegations which set forth a Federal right were necessary in order to set forth the plaintiffs' cause of action.

2. The appeal was properly taken directly to this court, since by the act of March 3d, 1891, chap. 517, this court has jurisdiction to review the judgment of the circuit court in any case involving the construction or application of the Constitution of the United States. 26 Stat. at L. 830 (U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 554). The present case belongs to that class; for it involves the consideration of questions relating to the power of Congress, under the Constitution, over the navigable waters of the United States.

3. We come now to the merits of the suit as disclosed by the bill. The general proposition upon which the plaintiffs base their right to relief is that the United States, by the acts of Congress referred to, and by what has been done under those acts, has taken "possession" of Calumet river, and, so far as the erection in that river of structures such as bridges, docks, piers, and the like is concerned, no jurisdiction or authority whatever remains with the local authorities. In a sense, but only in a limited sense, the United States has taken possession of Calumet river, by improving it, by causing it to be surveyed, and by establishing lines beyond which no dock or other structure shall be erected in the river without the approval or consent of the Secretary [427] of War, to whom has been *committed the determination of such questions. But Congress has not passed any act under which parties, having simply the consent of the Secretary, may erect structures in Calumet river without reference to the wishes of the state of Illinois on the subject. We say the state of Illinois, because it must be assumed, under the allegations of the bill, that the ordinances of the city of Chicago making the approval of its department of public works a condition precedent to the right of anyone to erect structures in navigable waters within its limits are consistent with the Constitution and laws of that state, and were passed under authority conferred on the city by the state.

Calumet river, it must be remembered, is entirely within the limits of Illinois, and the authority of the state over it is plenary, 530 subject only to such action as Congress may take in execution of its power under the Constitution to regulate commerce among the several states. That authority has been exercised by the state ever since it was admitted into the Union upon an equal footing with the original states.

In Escanaba & L. M. Transp. Co. v. Chicago, 107 U. S. 678, 683, 27 L. ed. 442, 445, 2 Sup. Ct. Rep. 185, 188, the question was as to the validity of regulations made by the city of Chicago in reference to the closing, between certain hours of each day, of bridges across the Chicago river. Those regulations were alleged to be inconsistent with the power of Congress over interstate commerce. This court said: "The Chicago river and its branches must, therefore, be deemed navigable waters of the United States, over which Congress under its commercial power may exercise control to the extent necessary to protect, preserve, and improve their free navigation. But the states have full power to regulate within their limits matters of internal police, including in that general designation whatever will promote the peace, comfort, convenience, and prosperity of their people. This power embraces the construction of roads, canals, and bridges, and the establishment of ferries, and it can generally be exercised more wisely by the states than by a distant authority. They are the first to see the importance of such means of internal communication, and are more deeply concerned than others in their wise management. Illinois is more immediately affected by the bridges over the Chicago *river [428] and its branches than any other state, and is more directly concerned for the prosperity of the city of Chicago, for the convenience and comfort of its inhabitants, and the growth of its commerce. And nowhere could the power to control the bridges in that city, their construction, form, and strength, and the size of their draws, and the manner and times of using them, be better vested than with the state, or the authorities of the city upon whom it has devolved that duty. When its power is exercised so as to unnecessarily obstruct the navigation of the river or its branches, Congress may interfere and remove the obstruction. If the power of the state and that of the Federal government come in conflict, the latter must control and the former yield. This necessarily follows from the position given by the Constitution to legislation in pursuance of it, as the supreme law of the land. But until Congress acts on the subject, the power of the state over bridges across its navigable streams is plenary. This doctrine has been recognized from the earliest period, and approved in repeated cases, the most notable of which are Willson v. Black Bird Creek Marsh Co. 2 Pet. 245, 7 L. ed. 412, decided in 1829, and Gilman v. Philadelphia, 3 Wall. 713, 18 L. ed. 96, decided in 1865."

To the same effect is the recent decision in Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. Ohio, 165 U. S. 365, 366, 368, 41 L. ed. 747, 748, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 357. See also Cardwell v.

American River Bridge Co. 113 U. S. 205, 28 L. ed. 959, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 423, and Huse v. Glover, 119 U. S. 543, 30 L. ed. 487, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 313.

Did Congress, in the execution of its power under the Constitution to regulate interstate commerce, intend by the legislation in question to supersede, for every purpose, the authority of Illinois over the erection of structures in navigable waters wholly within its limits? Did it intend to declare that the wishes of Illinois in respect of structures to be erected in such waters need not be regarded, and that the assent of the Secretary of War, proceeding under the above acts of Congress, was alone sufficient to authorize such structures?

These questions were substantially answered by this court in Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. Ohio, 165 U. S. 366, 368, 41 L. ed. 748, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 357, 358, decided in 1897. That case required a construction of the 5th and 7th sections of the river and [429] harbor act of September 19th, 1890, *upon which sections the plaintiffs in this case partly rely. In that case this court said: "The contention is that the statute in question manifests the purpose of Congress to deprive the several states of all authority to control and regulate any and every structure over all navigable streams, although they be wholly situated within their territory. That full power resides in the states as to the erection of bridges and other works in navigable streams wholly within their jurisdiction, in the absence of the exercise by Congress of authority to the contrary, is conclusively determined. . . . The mere delegation to the Secretary of the right to determine whether a structure authorized by law has been so built as to impede commerce, and to direct, when reasonably necessary, its modification so as to remove such impediment, does not confer upon that officer power to give original authority to build bridges, nor does it presuppose that Congress conceived that it was lodging in the Secretary power to that end. . . . The mere delegation of power to direct a change in lawful structures so as to cause them not to interfere with commerce cannot be construed as conferring on the officer named the right to determine when and where a bridge may be built." Referring to the 7th section of the act of 1890, the court said: "The language of the 7th section makes clearer the error of the interpretation relied on. The provision that it shall not be lawful to thereafter erect any bridge 'in any navigable river or navigable waters of the United States, under any act of the legislative assembly of any state, until the location and plan of such bridge . . . have been submitted to and approved by the Secretary of War,' contemplated that the function of the Secretary should extend only to the form of future structures, since the act would not have provided for the future erection of bridges under state authority if its very purpose was to deny for the future all power in the states on the subject.

188 U. S.

. . . The construction claimed for the statute is that its purpose was to deprive the states of all power as to every stream, even those wholly within their borders, whilst the very words of the statute, saying that its terms should not be construed as conferring on the states power to give authority to build bridges on streams not wholly within their limits, *by a negative [430] pregnant with an affirmative, demonstrate that the object of the act was not to deprive the several states of the authority to consent to the erection of bridges over navigable waters wholly within their territory."

The decision in Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. Ohio was rendered before the passage of the river and harbor act of 1899. But the 10th section of that act, upon which the permit of the Secretary of War was based, is not so worded as to compel the conclusion that Congress intended, by that section, to ignore altogether the wishes of Illinois in respect of structures in navigable waters that are wholly within its limits. We may assume that Congress was not unaware of the decision of the above case in 1897 and of the interpretation placed upon existing legislative enactments. If it had intended by the act of 1899 to assert the power to take under national control, for every purpose, and to the fullest possible extent, the erection of structures in the navigable waters of the United States that were wholly within the limits of the respective states, and to supersede entirely the authority which the states, in the absence of any action by Congress, have in such matters, such a radical departure from the previous policy of the government would have been manifested by clear and explicit language. In the absence of such language it should not be assumed that any such departure was intended.

We do not overlook the long-settled principle that the power of Congress to regulate commerce among the states "is complete in itself, may be exercised to its utmost extent, and acknowledges no limitations other than are prescribed in the Constitution." Gibbons v. Ogden, 9 Wheat. 1, 196, 6 L. ed. 23, 70; Brown v. Maryland, 12 Wheat. 419, 446, 6 L. ed. 678, 688; Brown v. Houston, 114 U. S. 630, 29 L. ed. 260, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1091. But we will not at this time make any declaration of opinion as to the full scope of this power, or as to the extent to which Congress may go in the matter of the erection, or authorizing the erection, of docks and like structures in navigable waters that are entirely within the territorial limits of the several states. Whether Congress may, against or without the expressed will of a state, give affirmative authority to private parties to erect structures in such waters, it is not necessary in *this case to [431] decide. It is only necessary to say that the act of 1899 does not manifest the purpose of Congress to go to that extent under the power to regulate foreign and interstate commerce and thereby to supersede the original authority of the states. The effect of that act, reasonably interpreted, is to make the erection of a structure in a navigable river, within the limits of a state, depend upon the concurrent or joint assent of both the national government and the state government. The Secretary of War, acting under the authority conferred by Congress, may assent to the erection by private parties of such a structure. Without such assent the structure cannot be erected by them. But under existing legislation they must, before proceeding under such an authority, obtain also the assent of the state acting by its constituted agencies.

For the reasons stated, the judgment of the Circuit Court is affirmed.

CALUMET GRAIN & ELEVATOR COMPANY, Appt.,
v.

CITY OF CHICAGO.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 431.)

Jurisdiction of circuit court—suit arising under Federal Constitution and laws—direct appeal to Supreme Court—navigable waters—state authority over—when not superseded by Congress.

This case is governed by the decision in Cummings v. Chicago, ante, 525.

[No. 135.]

Submitted December 19, 1902. Decided February 23, 1903.

A PPEAL from the Circuit Court of the United States for the Northern District of Illinois to review a judgment sustaining a demurrer to, and dismissing for want of equity, a bill to enjoin the city of Chicago from interfering with the construction of a dock in the Calumet river. Affirmed.

Messrs. Warren B. Wilson and S. A. Lynde submitted the cause for appellants.

Mr. Charles M. Walker submitted the cause for appellee. Mr. Henry Schofield was with him on the brief.

For contentions of counsel see their briefs as reported in Cummings v. Chicago, ante, 525.

Mr. Justice Harlan delivered the opinion of the court:

This case relates to the construction of a dock in Calumet river, on or in front of land belonging to the appellant. The facts upon which that company principally bases its claims for relief are those upon which the plaintiffs relied in Cummings v. Chicago, just decided. 188 U. S. 410, ante, 525, 23 Sup. Ct. Rep. 472. Upon the authority of the decision in that case, the judgment in this case is affirmed.

*UNITED STATES, Appt.,

[432]

v.

JAMES A. RICKERT, as County Treasurer in and for Roberts County, South Dakota.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 432-445.)

Indian allottees—state taxation of—equitable relief against.

1. A state may not tax lands allotted to Indians in severalty, under the act of February 8, 1887 (24 Stat. at L. 389, chap. 119), the 5th section of which requires the United States to hold such lands in trust for the allottees for twenty-five years, when, unless the time shall be extended by the President, they shall be conveyed free from any charge or encumbrance, and declares that any conveyance thereof, or any contract touching the same, before the expiration of such period, shall be absolutely null and void.
2. Permanent improvements on lands allotted to Indians in severalty, under the act of February 8, 1887 (24 Stat. at L. 389, chap. 119), the 5th section of which requires the United States to hold such lands in trust for the allottees for twenty-five years, and then, unless the time shall be extended by the President, convey the fee free from any charge or encumbrance, cannot be taxed by a state as personal property.
3. Cattle, horses, and other property of like character furnished by the United States to Indian allottees, under the act of February 8, 1887 (24 Stat. at L. 389, chap. 119), in order to enable them to maintain themselves while the land should, under § 5 of that act, be held in trust by the United States for their sole use and benefit, are not subject to state taxation.
4. The United States has such an interest in preventing the taxation by a state of permanent improvements on, and personal property used in the cultivation of, lands allotted to Indians in severalty, under the act of February 8, 1887 (24 Stat. at L. 389, chap. 119), the 5th section of which requires the United States to hold such lands in trust for the allottees for twenty-five years, and then convey the fee free of all encumbrance, as entitles it to maintain a suit in equity to restrain the collection of such tax.
5. The United States has no such prompt and efficacious remedy at law as will deprive it of the right to equitable relief against the unlawful taxation by a state of permanent improvements upon, and personal property used in the cultivation of, lands allotted to Indians in severalty, under the act of February 8, 1887 (24 Stat. at L. 389, chap. 119), the 5th section of which requires the United States to hold such lands in trust for the allottees for twenty-five years, and then convey the fee free of all encumbrance.

NOTE.—On injunction to restrain the collection of illegal taxes—see notes to Odlin v. Woodruff (Fla.) 22 L. R. A. 699; Dows v. Chicago, 20 L. ed. U. S. 65; and Ogden City v. Armstrong, 42 L. ed. U. S. 445.

On the jurisdiction of equity where remedy at law exists—see notes to Meldrum v. Meldrum (Colo.) 11 L. R. A. 65; Delaware, L. & W. R. Co. v. Central Stock Yards & Transit Co. (N. J. Eq.) 6 L. R. A. 855; and Tyler v. Savage, 36 L. ed. U. S. 83.

[No. 216.]

Argued January 28, 29, 1903. Decided February 23, 1903.

ON A CERTIFICATE from the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Eighth Circuit presenting questions as to the right of a state to tax Indian allottees, and the right of the Federal government to equitable relief against such taxation. The fourth question answered in the affirmative, and the first, second, third, and fifth questions in the negative.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Assistant Attorney General Van Devanter argued the cause, and, with Mr. Joseph R. Webster, filed a brief for appellant:

The political status of tribal Indians is that of pupillage under wardship of the general government.

United States v. Kagama, 118 U. S. 375, 383, 30 L. ed. 228, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1109.

The duty and jurisdiction to exercise such control and wardship being so vested in the general government, the manner of its exercise is purely a political question for determination by the political departments, and not within judicial cognizance.

Thomas v. Gay, 169 U. S. 264, 271, 42 L. ed. 740, 743, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 340; Stephens v. Cherokee Nation, 174 U. S. 445, 483-485, 43 L. ed. 1041, 1055, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 722; Cherokee Nation v. Hitchcock, 187 U. S. 294, ante, p. 183, 23 Sup. Ct. Rep. 115; Lone Wolf v. Hitchcock, 187 U. S. 553, ante, 299, 23 Sup. Ct. Rep. 216.

The legal title of the United States is not divested by the instrument which has come to be known as a first or trust patent. That instrument amounts simply to a covenant to stand seised to the use of the allottee, with a promise to convey at the expiration of the fixed trust period, or of such extended period as the President, in his discretion, may prescribe.

Lizzie Bergen, 30 Land Dec. 258.

As long as the United States recognizes the national character of the Indians, they are under the protection of treaties and the laws of Congress, and their property is withdrawn from the operation of state laws.

The Kansas Indians, 5 Wall. 737, sub nom. Blue Jacket v. Johnson County, 18 L. ed. 667; The New York Indians, 5 Wall. 761, 769, sub nom. Fellows v. Denniston, 18 L. ed. 708, 712.

The states have no power, by taxation or otherwise, in any manner to burden or control the governmental agencies of the United States acting in one of its appropriate and exclusive spheres of action.

19 Ops. Atty. Gen. 161, 511.

The act making the Indian citizens does not of itself take them from the condition of pupillage, or remove them from the control of the government, but is only a step looking to that end; it rests with the United States to declare when its guardianship is terminated and the work it has undertaken is accomplished.

188 U. S. U. S., Book 47.

Eells v. Ross, 12 C. C. A. 205, 29 U. S. App. 59, 64 Fed. 417; Beck v. Flournoy Live-Stock & Real-Estate Co. 12 C. C. A. 497, 27 U. S. App. 618, 65 Fed. 30; United States v. Flournoy Live-Stock & Real-Estate Co. 69 Fed. 886; Farrell v. United States, 49 C. C. A. 183, 110 Fed. 942; State v. Columbia George, 39 Or. 127, 65 Pac. 604; Auditor General v. Williams, 94 Mich. 180, 53 N. W. 1097; Cherokee Nation v. Hitchcock, 187 U. S. 294, ante, 183, 23 Sup. Ct. Rep. 115.

The language used in treaties with the Indians should never be construed to their prejudice.

Worcester v. Georgia, 6 Pet. 515, 582, 8 L. ed. 483, 508; Choctaw Nation v. United States, 119 U. S. 1, 28, 30 L. ed. 306, 315, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 75; The Kansas Indians, 5 Wall. 737, sub nom. Blue Jacket v. Johnson County, 18 L. ed. 667; In the Case of the Miami, 5 Wall. 760, sub nom. Wan-Zop-E-Ah v. Miami County, 18 L. ed. 674; Minnesota v. Hitchcock, 185 U. S. 373, 396, 46 L. ed. 954, 966, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 650.

Necessity exists for extended Federal jurisdiction and control over Indian lands.

State ex rel. Tompton v. Denoyer, 6 N. D. 586, 693, 72 N. W. 1014.

Until the government consents to the taxation of its property and agencies, the state cannot make them subject to taxation.

Van Brocklin v. Anderson, 117 U. S. 151, 29 L. ed. 845, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 670.

If the United States or the Indians own the land, they are not taxable, and an injunction against their being taxed will be allowed.

Union P. R. Co. v. McShane, 22 Wall. 444, 462, 464, 22 L. ed. 747, 751, 752; Wisconsin C. R. Co. v. Price County, 133 U. S. 496, 511, 33 L. ed. 687, 694.

If taxation is void because levied, in violation of laws of the United States, upon property employed in the sphere of the governmental powers of the United States, the enforcement of such tax may be enjoined, though the property does not belong to the government.

Whitbeck v. Mercantile Nat. Bank, 127 U. S. 193, 32 L. ed. 118, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1121.

Jurisdiction in equity attaches unless the legal remedy, both in respect to the final relief and the mode of obtaining it, is as efficient as the remedy which equity would confer under the same circumstances.

Kilbourn v. Sunderland, 130 U. S. 505, 514, 32 L. ed. 1005, 1008, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 594.

Messrs. A. B. Kittredge and W. D. Lane argued the cause and filed a brief for appellee:

By the acts of Congress under which these patents were granted, it is plain that Congress intended the Indians to receive the full protection of the local laws, and to become citizens of the states which they inhabit.

State ex rel. Tompton v. Denoyer, 6 N. D. 586, 72 N. W. 1014; Keokuk v. Ulam, 4 Okla. 5, 38 Pac. 1080.

All property is subject to taxation unless exempted by the express provision of some constitution, statute, or treaty, and all such exemptions are strictly construed. Immunity from taxation by the state will not be recognized unless granted in terms too plain to be mistaken.

Chicago, B. & K. C. R. Co. v. Guffey, 120 U. S. 569, 30 L. ed. 732, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 693; Cooley, Taxn. pp. 204, 205; 25 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 157; Waller v. Hughes (Ariz.) 11 Pac. 122.

The improvements upon these lands are analogous to those upon public lands entered as homesteads. Such improvements are clearly taxable; they are not the property of the United States.

Crocker v. Donovan, 1 Okla. 165, 30 Pac. 374; State ex rel. Sioux County v. Tucker, 38 Neb. 56, 56 N. W. 718.

And not only such improvements but those on other public lands as well.

People v. Shearer, 30 Cal. 656; Territory ex rel. Sampson v. Clark, 2 Okla. 82, 35 Pac. 882; Forbes v. Gracey, 94 U. S. 762, 24 L. ed. 313.

The mere fact that the legal title to lands is in the United States does not exempt them from taxation.

Northern P. R. Co. v. Walker, 47 Fed. 681; Cooley, Taxn. 2d ed. pp. 87, 366, and cases there cited.

The interest of a lessee of government lands is taxable.

Ex parte Gaines, 56 Ark. 227, 19 S. W. 602.

Improvements are not an interest in real estate under the statute of frauds.

Pierson v. David, 1 Iowa, 23.

Improvements on public lands are property, and a sufficient consideration to sustain a promise to pay for the same.

Brooks v. Hiatt, 13 Neb. 503, 14 N. W. 480.

The United States has not such an interest in this controversy, or in its subject, as entitles it to maintain this suit.

Kansas P. R. Co. v. Prescott, 16 Wall. 608, 21 L. ed. 374; Missouri River, Ft. S. & G. R. Co. v. Morris, 13 Kan. 302; Kansas P. R. Co. v. Culp, 9 Kan. 38.

If the United States is the owner of the personal property in question, it has an adequate remedy at law. If the "improvements" assessed as a personal tax are a part of the realty of which the appellant is the legal owner, then the suit will not lie, because property of the United States cannot be taxed by the state, and a court of equity will not enjoin the attempted enforcement of an illegal tax.

Hanneuinkle v. Georgetown, 15 Wall. 547, 21 L. ed. 231; McHenry v. Brett, 9 N. D. 68, 81 N. W. 65.

It is a well-established principle of equity jurisprudence that mere illegality of a tax is not sufficient ground for equitable interference.

Cooley, Taxn. §§ 760, 772, 774; High, Inj. § 505.

Until the taxes have been paid, no wrong has been suffered. When they have been paid, they can be recovered back in an action at law, which furnishes an adequate remedy.

Brewer v. Springfield, 97 Mass. 152; Loud v. Charleston, 99 Mass. 208; Susquehanna Bank v. Broome County, 25 N. Y. 314.

The unlawful collection of a tax by distress of seizure and sale of chattels is no more than an ordinary trespass; for which there is an ample remedy at law.

Odlin v. Woodruff, 31 Fla. 160, 22 L. R. A. 699, 12 So. 227; Ritter v. Patch, 12 Cal. 298.

The principle that illegality of tax alone is not sufficient to justify equitable interference, but that there must be other grounds bringing the case clearly under equitable jurisdiction, is not less firmly established by decisions of the United States Supreme Court.

Dows v. Chicago, 11 Wall. 108, 20 L. ed. 65; Hanneuinkle v. Georgetown, 15 Wall. 547, 21 L. ed. 231; State Railroad Tax Cases, 92 U. S. 575, sub nom. Taylor v. Secor, 23 L. ed. 663.

Mr. Justice Harlan delivered the opinion of the court:

This suit was instituted under the direction of the Attorney General of the United States, for the purpose of restraining the collection of taxes alleged to be due the county of Roberts, South Dakota, in respect of certain permanent improvements on, and personal property used in the cultivation of, lands in that county occupied by members of the Sisseton band of Sioux Indians in the state of South Dakota.

*The case is here upon questions certified [433] by the judges of the United States circuit court of appeals for the eighth circuit.

According to the certificate the bill alleged that Charles R. Crawford, Adam Little Thunder, Solomon Two Stars, and Victor Renville are Indians and members of the Sisseton band of Sioux Indians in the state of South Dakota, wards of the United States and under its guardianship and supervision, and residents of that portion of the Sisseton agency situated in the county of Roberts; that the said Indians are holding, and for several years last past have held, allotted lands in that county, and within the former Sisseton Indian Reservation, which lands were allotted to those Indians under the provisions of the agreement of December the 12th, 1889, as ratified by the act of March 3d, 1891 (26 Stat. at L. 1035, 1036, chap. 543), and more particularly under § 5 of the general allotment act of Congress approved February the 8th, 1887 (24 Stat. at L. 389, chap. 119), and that the lands so allotted by the United States are held in trust by the United States under the provisions of the last-named act.

The bill then alleged that during the year 1900 the duly authorized officers of Roberts county listed certain improvements on the allotted lands of Crawford, and returned the assessment thereon at the sum of $630, such improvements consisting of a large frame house and barn attached thereto (a fixture and permanent improvement upon the allotted lands), and other improvements of a permanent character attached to these lands; that the amount of taxes extended on the tax roll of such improvements for state and county taxes for the year 1900 was the sum of $21.42; that for that year the officers of Roberts county listed, assessed, and returned upon the tax rolls of the county certain personal property against Crawford, consisting of horses, one cow, and two wagons, at the aggregate valuation of $129, upon which was assessed and levied a tax of $4.90; and that said personal property was issued to the allottee by the United States pursuant to the acts of Congress and the treaties between the United States and the band of Indians to which Crawford belongs, was branded "I. D.," and was then and there in the possession of the allottee, being kept and used by him upon his allotment.

[434] *Similar allegations were made in reference to the other Indians named in the bill, covering the years 1899 and 1900.

It was also alleged that the defendant was county treasurer and collector of taxes for the county, and threatened to sell, and was about to sell, the property just described as that of the Indians named in the bill and assessed for the years above stated, and would sell the same unless restrained, whereby the United States would be subjected to and compelled to defend a multitude of actions, suits, and proceedings which would greatly embarrass it; that the assessments of said property and the amount of taxes so assessed and returned upon the tax roll of the county are upon the books of the county and of record in the office of the county auditor and treasurer, and constitute a cloud upon the title of the lands of the United States above referred to.

It was further alleged that the United States was without any plain, adequate, and speedy remedy at law, and could only have relief in a court of equity, and that irreparable injury would be inflicted upon it in case the enforcement, assessment, and collection of such taxes were not enjoined.

The defendant demurred to the bill upon the following grounds: That it did not disclose any equity nor entitle the United States to the relief prayed; that the United States had no interest in the subject-matter of the suit; that the property assessed by Roberts county was personal property, and the injunction would not lie to restrain the collection of the tax; and that the United States had an adequate remedy at law.

The demurrer to the bill was sustained, and the government failing to amend, the bill was dismissed upon the merits. Subsequently, the case was carried to the circuit court of appeals.

Thereupon, that court made a certificate of certain questions in respect to which it desired the instructions of this court. These questions will be referred to in the course of this opinion.

[435] *I. Were the lands held by the allottees, Charles R. Crawford and the other Indians named in the bill, subject to assessment and 188 U. S.

taxation by the taxing authorities of Roberts county, South Dakota?

This is the first of the questions certified by the judges of the circuit court of appeals. It is not, in our opinion, difficult of solution.

By the act of Congress of February 8th, 1887, chap. 119, referred to in the certificate and known as the general allotment act, provision was made for the allotment of lands in severalty to Indians on the various reservations, and for extending the protection of the laws of the United States and the territories over the Indians. To that end the President was authorized, whenever, in his opinion, a reservation or any part thereof was advantageous for agricultural and grazing purposes, to cause it, or any part thereof, to be surveyed or resurveyed if necessary, and to allot the lands in the reservation in severalty to any Indian located thereon, in certain quantities specified in the statute,—the allotments to be made by special agents appointed for that purpose, and by the agents in charge of the special reservations on which the allotments were made. 24 Stat. at L. 388, 389, 390, § 1.

What interest, if any, did the Indian allottee acquire in the land allotted to him? That question is answered by the 5th section of the allotment act, which provides: "That upon the approval of the allotments provided for in this act by the Secretary of the Interior, he shall cause patents to issue therefor in the name of the allottees, which patents shall be of the legal effect, and declare, that the United States does and will hold the land thus allotted, for the period of twenty-five years, in trust for the sole use and benefit of the Indian to whom such allotment shall have been made, or, in case of his decease, of his heirs according to the laws of the state or territory where *such land is located, and that at the expiration of said period the United States will convey the same by patent to said Indian, or his heirs as aforesaid, in fee, discharged of said trust and free of all charge or encumbrance whatsoever: Provided, That the President of the United States may in any case, in his discretion, extend the period. And if any conveyance shall be made of the lands set apart and allotted, as herein provided, or any contract made touching the same, before the expiration of the time above mentioned, such conveyance or contract shall be absolutely null and void: Provided, That the law of descent and partition in force in the state or territory where such lands are situate shall apply thereto after patents therefor have been executed and delivered, except as herein otherwise provided; . . ." 24 Stat. at L. 389, chap. 119, § 5.

The word "patents," where it is first used in this section, was not happily chosen to express the thought which, it is clear, all parts of the section being considered, Congress intended to express. The "patents" here referred to (although that word has various meanings) were, as the statute plainly imports, nothing more than instruments or memoranda in writing, designed to show that for a period of twenty-five years the United States would hold the land allotted, in trust for the sole use and benefit of the allottee, or, in case of his death, of his heirs, and subsequently, at the expiration of that period,—unless the time was extended by the President,—convey the fee, discharged of the trust and free of all charge or encumbrance. In other words, the United States retained the legal title, giving the Indian allottee a paper or writing, improperly called a patent, showing that at a particular time in the future, unless it was extended by the President, he would be entitled to a regular patent conveying the fee. This interpretation of the statute is in harmony with the explicit declaration that any conveyance of the land, or any contract touching the same, while the United States held the title in trust, should be absolutely null and void. So that the United States retained its hold on the land allotted for the period of twenty-five years after the allotment, and as much longer as the President, in his discretion, should determine.

[437] The bill, as appears from the certificate of the judges, shows *that the lands in question were allotted “under provisions of the agreement of December 12th, 1889, as ratified by the act of March 3d, 1891, and more particularly under § 5 of the general allotment act approved February 8th, 1887.” Upon inspection of that agreement, we find nothing that indicates any different relation of the United States to the allotted lands from that created or recognized by the act of 1887. On the contrary, the agreement contemplates that patents shall issue for the lands allotted under it “upon the same terms and conditions and limitations as is provided in § 5 of the act of Congress approved February 8th, 1887.” 26 Stat. at L. 1035, 1038, art. 4.

If, as is undoubtedly the case, these lands were held by the United States in execution of its plans relating to the Indians,—without any right in the Indians to make contracts in reference to them, or to do more than to occupy and cultivate them,—until a regular patent conveying the fee was issued to the several allottees, it would follow that there was no power in the state of South Dakota, for state or municipal purposes, to assess and tax the lands in question until at least the fee was conveyed to the Indians. These Indians are yet wards of the nation, in a condition of pupillage or dependency, and have not been discharged from that condition. They occupy these lands with the consent and authority of the United States; and the holding of them by the United States under the act of 1887, and the agreement of 1889, ratified by the act of 1891, is part of the national policy by which the Indians are to be maintained as well as prepared for assuming the habits of civilized life, and ultimately the privileges of citizenship. To tax these lands is to tax an instrumentality employed by the United States for the benefit and control of this dependent race, and to accomplish beneficent objects with reference to a race of which this court has said that “from their very weakness and helplessness, so largely due to the course of dealing of the Federal government with them and the treaties in which it has been promised, there arises the duty of protection, and with it the power. This has always been recognized by the Executive and by Congress, and by this court, whenever the *question has arisen.” United States v. Kagama, 118 U. S. 375, 384, 30 L. ed. 228, 231, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1109, 1114. So that if they may be taxed, then the obligations which the government has assumed in reference to these Indians may be entirely defeated; for by the act of 1887 the government has agreed at a named time to convey the land to the allottee in fee, discharged of the trust, “and free of all charge or encumbrance whatsoever.” To say that these lands may be assessed and taxed by the county of Roberts under the authority of the state is to say they may be sold for the taxes, and thus become so burdened that the United States could not discharge its obligations to the Indians without itself paying the taxes imposed from year to year, and thereby keeping the lands free from encumbrances.

In Van Brocklin v. Tennessee, 117 U. S. 151, 155, sub nom. Van Brocklin v. Anderson, 29 L. ed. 845, 846, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 670, 672, the court held that property of the United States was exempt by the Constitution of the United States from taxation under the authority of any state. Giving the outlines of the grounds of the judgment delivered by Chief Justice Marshall in M'Culloch v. Maryland, 4 Wheat. 316, 4 L. ed. 579, the court said: “That Constitution and the laws made in pursuance thereof are supreme; they control the Constitutions and laws of the respective states, and cannot be controlled by them. The people of a state give to their government a right of taxing themselves and their property at its discretion. But the means employed by the government of the Union are not given by the people of a particular state, but by the people of all the states; and being given by all, for the benefit of all, should be subjected to that government only which belongs to all. All subjects over which the sovereign power of a state extends are objects of taxation; but those over which it does not extend are, upon the soundest principles, exempt from taxation. The sovereignty of a state extends to everything which exists by its own authority, or is introduced by its permission; but does not extend to those means which are employed by Congress to carry into execution powers conferred on that body by the people of the United States. The attempt to use the taxing power of a state on the means employed by the government of the Union, in pursuance of the Constitution, is itself an abuse, because it is *the usurpation of a power which the people of a single state cannot give. The power to tax involves the power to destroy; the power to destroy may defeat and render useless the power to create; and there is a plain repugnance in conferring on one government a power to control the constitutional measures of another, which other, with respect to those very measures, is declared to be supreme over that which exerts the control. The states have no power, by taxation or otherwise, to retard, impede, burden, or in any manner control, the operations of the constitutional laws enacted by Congress to carry into execution the powers vested in the general government."

These principles were recognized and applied in Wisconsin C. R. Co. v. Price County, 133 U. S. 496, 504, 33 L. ed. 687, 690, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 341, 344, in which the court said: "The Constitution vests in Congress the power to 'dispose of and make all needful rules and regulations respecting the territory or other property belonging to the United States.' And this implies an exclusion of all other authority over the property, which could interfere with this right or obstruct its exercise."

It was therefore well said by the Attorney General of the United States, in an opinion delivered in 1888, "that the allotment lands provided for in the act of 1887 are exempt from state or territorial taxation upon the ground above stated, . . . namely, that the lands covered by the act are held by the United States for the period of twenty-five years in trust for the Indians, such trust being an agency for the exercise of a Federal power, and therefore outside the province of state or territorial authority." 19 Ops. Atty. Gen. 161, 169.

In support of these general views, reference may be made to the following cases: Weston v. Charleston, 2 Pet. 467, 7 L. ed. 487; M'Culloch v. Maryland, 4 Wheat. 316, 4 L. ed. 579; Osborn v. Bank of United States, 9 Wheat. 738, 6 L. ed. 204; United States v. Rogers, 4 How. 567, 11 L. ed. 1105; New York Indians, 5 Wall. 761, sub nom. Fellows v. Denniston, 18 L. ed. 708; Choctaw Nation v. United States, 119 U. S. 1, 27, 30 L. ed. 306, 314, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 75; Stephens v. Cherokee Nation, 174 U. S. 445, 483, 43 L. ed. 1041, 1054, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 722; Cherokee Nation v. Southern Kansas R. Co. 135 U. S. 641, 653, 34 L. ed. 295, 301, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 965; Cherokee Nation v. Hitchcock, 187 U. S. 294, ante, 183, 23 Sup. Ct. Rep. 115; Lone Wolf, v. Hitchcock, 187 U. S. 553, ante, 299, 23 Sup. Ct. Rep. 216.

Another suggestion by the defendant de-[440] serves to be noticed. *It is that there is a "compact" between the United States and the state of South Dakota which, if regarded, determines this case for the state. Let us see what there is of substance in this view.

By the act of February 22d, 1889, chap. 180, providing, among other things, for the division of the territory of Dakota into two states, it was declared that the conventions called to frame Constitutions for them should provide, "by ordinances irrevocable without the consent of the United States 188 U. S.

and the people of said states," as follows:

"Second. That the people inhabiting said proposed states do agree and declare that they forever disclaim all right and title to the unappropriated public lands lying within the boundaries thereof, and to all lands lying within said limits owned or held by any Indian or Indian tribes; and that until the title thereto shall have been extinguished by the United States the same shall be and remain subject to the disposition of the United States, and said Indian lands shall remain under the absolute jurisdiction and control of the Congress of the United States; . . . that no taxes shall be imposed by the states on lands or property therein belonging to, or which may hereafter be purchased by, the United States, or reserved for its use. But nothing herein, or in the ordinances herein provided for, shall preclude the said states from taxing as other lands are taxed any lands owned or held by any Indian who has severed his tribal relations, and has obtained from the United States or from any person a title thereto by patent or other grant, save and except such lands as have been or may be granted to any Indian or Indians under any act of Congress containing a provision exempting the lands thus granted from taxation; but said ordinances shall provide that all such lands shall be exempt from taxation by said states so long and to such extent as such act of Congress may prescribe." 25 Stat. at L. 677.

That provision was embodied in the Constitution of South Dakota,—for the purpose, no doubt, of meeting the views of Congress expressed in the enabling act of 1889,—and was declared by that instrument to be irrevocable without the consent of the United States and the people of the state expressed by *their legislative assembly; and [441] this action of the United States and of the state constitutes the "compact" referred to, and upon which the appellee relies in support of the taxation in question.

We pass by, as unnecessary to be considered, whether the above provision in the act of Congress of 1889 had any legal efficacy in itself, after the admission of South Dakota into the Union upon an equal footing with the other states; for the same provision, in the state Constitution, deliberately adopted by the state, is, without reference to the act of Congress, the law for its legislature and people, until abrogated by the state. Looking at that provision, we find nothing in it sustaining the contention that the county of Roberts has any authority to tax these lands. On the contrary, it is declared in the state Constitution that lands within the limits of the state, owned or held by any Indian or Indian tribe, shall, until the title has been extinguished by the United States, remain under the absolute jurisdiction and control of the Congress of the United States. And when the state comes to declare, in its Constitution, what taxes it shall not be precluded from imposing, the provision is that it shall not be precluded from taxing, as other lands, "any lands owned or held by any Indian who has severed his tribal relation, and has obtained from the United States, or from any person, a title thereto by patent or other grant." [S. D. Const. art. 22, subd. 2.] The patent or grant here referred to is the final patent or grant which invests the patentee or grantee with the title in fee, that is, with absolute ownership. No such patent or grant has been issued to these Indians. So that the appellee cannot sustain the taxation in question under the clause of the state Constitution to which he refers, and the right to tax these lands must rest upon the general authority of the legislature to impose taxes. But, as already said, no authority exists for the state to tax lands which are held in trust by the United States for the purpose of carrying out its policy in reference to these Indians.

II. *Were the permanent improvements, such as houses and other structures upon the lands held by allotment by Charles R. Crawford and the other Indians named in [442] the bill, subject to *assessment and taxation by the taxing officers of Roberts county as personal property in 1899 and 1900?* This is the second of the questions certified by the judges of the circuit court of appeals.

Looking at the object to be accomplished by allotting Indian lands in severalty, it is evident that Congress expected that the lands so allotted would be improved and cultivated by the allottee. But that object would be defeated if the improvements could be assessed and sold for taxes. The improvements to which the question refers were of a permanent kind. While the title to the land remained in the United States, the permanent improvements could no more be sold for local taxes than could the land to which they belonged. Every reason that can be urged to show that the land was not subject to local taxation applies to the assessment and taxation of the permanent improvements.

It is true that the statutes of South Dakota, for the purposes of taxation, classify "all improvements made by persons upon lands held by them under the laws of the United States" as personal property. But that classification cannot apply to permanent improvements upon lands allotted to and occupied by Indians, the title to which remains with the United States, the occupants still being wards of the nation, and as such under its complete authority and protection. The fact remains that the improvements here in question are essentially a part of the lands, and their use by the Indians is necessary to effectuate the policy of the United States.

Counsel for the appellee suggests that the only interest of the United States is to be able at the end of twenty-five years from the date of allotment to convey the land free from any charge or encumbrance; that if a house upon Indian land were seized and sold for taxes, that would not prevent the United States from conveying the land free from any charge or encumbrance; and that, in such case, the Indians could not claim any breach of contract on the part of the United States. These suggestions entirely ignore the relation existing between the United States and the Indians. It is not a relation simply of contract, each party to which is capable of guarding his own interests, but the *Indians are in a state [443] of dependency and pupilage, entitled to the care and protection of the government. When they shall be let out of that state is for the United States to determine without interference by the courts or by any state. The government would not adequately discharge its duty to these people if it placed its engagements with them upon the basis merely of contract, and failed to exercise any power it possessed to protect them in the possession of such improvements and personal property as were necessary to the enjoyment of the land held in trust for them. In Choctaw Nation v. United States, 119 U. S. 1, 28, 30 L. ed. 306, 315, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 75, 90, this court said: "The recognized relation between the parties to this controversy, therefore, is that between a superior and an inferior, whereby the latter is placed under the care and control of the former, and which, while it authorizes the adoption on the part of the United States of such policy as their own public interests may dictate, recognizes, on the other hand, such an interpretation of their acts and promises as justice and reason demand in all cases where power is exerted by the strong over those to whom they owe care and protection. The parties are not on an equal footing, and that inequality is to be made good by the superior justice which looks only to the substance of the right, without regard to technical rules framed under a system of municipal jurisprudence, formulating the rights and obligations of private persons equally subject to the same laws." See also Minnesota v. Hitchcock, 185 U. S. 373, 396, 46 L. ed. 954, 966, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 650.

III. Was the personal property, consisting of cattle, horses, and other property of like character, which had been issued to these Indians by the United States, and which they were using upon their allotments, liable to assessments and taxation by the officers of Roberts county in 1899 and 1900? This is the third one of the certified questions.

The answer to this question is indicated by what has been said in reference to the assessment and taxation of the land and the permanent improvements thereon. The personal property in question was purchased with the money of the government, and was furnished to the Indians in order to maintain them on the land allotted during the period of the trust estate, and to *in- [444] duce them to adopt the habits of civilized life. It was, in fact, the property of the United States, and was put into the hands of the Indians to be used in execution of the purpose of the government in reference to them. The assessment and taxation of the personal property would necessarily have the effect to defeat that purpose.

IV. Has the United States such an interest in this controversy or in its subjects as entitles it to maintain this suit? This is the fourth one of the certified questions.

In view of the relation of the United States to the real and personal property in question, as well as to these dependent Indians still under national control, and in view of the injurious effect of the assessment and taxation complained of upon the plans of the government with reference to the Indians, it is clear that the United States is entitled to maintain this suit. No argument to establish that proposition is necessary.

V. Has the United States a remedy at law so prompt and efficacious that it is deprived of all relief in equity? This is the last of the certified questions.

We do not perceive that the government has any remedy at law that could be at all efficacious for the protection of its rights in the property in question and for the attainment of its purposes in reference to these Indians. If the personal property and the structures on the land were sold for taxes and possession taken by the purchaser, then the Indians could not be maintained on the allotted lands, and the government, unless it abandoned its policy to maintain these Indians on the allotted lands, would be compelled to appropriate more money and apply it in the erection of other necessary structures on the land and in the purchase of other stock required for purposes of cultivation. And so on, every year. It is manifest that no proceedings at law can be prompt and efficacious for the protection of the rights of the government, and that adequate relief can only be had in a court of equity, which, by a comprehensive decree, can finally determine once for all the question of the validity of the assessment and taxation in question, and thus give security against any action upon the part of the local authorities tending to interfere with the complete control, not only of the Indians *by the government, but of the property supplied to them by the government and in use on the allotted lands. Union P. R. Co. v. McShane, 22 Wall. 444, 22 L. ed. 747; Coosaw Min. Co. v. South Carolina, 144 U. S. 550, 564-566, 36 L. ed. 537, 543, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 689.

Some observations may be made that are applicable to the whole case. It is said that the state has conferred upon these Indians the right of suffrage and other rights that ordinarily belong only to citizens, and that they ought, therefore, to share the burdens of government like other people who enjoy such rights. These are considerations to be addressed to Congress. It is for the legislative branch of the government to say when these Indians shall cease to be dependent and assume the responsibilities attaching to citizenship. That is a political question, which the courts may not determine. We can only deal with the case as it exists under the legislation of Congress.

We answer the fourth question in the affirmative, and the first, second, third, and fifth questions in the negative. It will be so certified to the circuit court of appeals.

Answers certified.

Mr. Justice Brewer took no part in the decision of this case.

UNITED STATES, Plff. in Err.,
v.

ARTHUR LYNNAH et al.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 445-485.)

Courts—jurisdiction of circuit court—suit against United States—compensation for property taken for public use—destruction of value in improving navigation.

1. A circuit court of the United States has jurisdiction of a suit against the United States to recover compensation for the alleged total destruction of the value of real property as a necessary result of the acts of its officers and agents in improving navigation, where the government does not deny plaintiff's title, and admits that the work done was authorized by Congress, but denies that such work produced the alleged injury and destruction.
2. The turning of a valuable rice plantation into an irreclaimable and valueless bog, as the necessary result of an improvement in navigation undertaken by the United States government, is a taking of the land, within the meaning of the 5th Amendment to the Federal Constitution.
3. The liability of the United States, under the 5th Amendment to the Federal Constitution, to make just compensation for an appropriation of land for public use, is not defeated because such land was taken by the government in the exercise of its power to improve navigation.

[No. 45.]

Argued October 30, 31, 1902. Ordered for reargument December 22, 1902. Reargued January 9, 1903. Decided February 23, 1903.

IN ERROR to the Circuit Court of the United States for the District of South Carolina to review a judgment for plaintiff in a suit to recover from the United States compensation for the destruction of real property by an improvement in navigation. Affirmed.

See same case below, 106 Fed. 121, on motion for new trial or for an amendment of the findings of fact.

Statement by Mr. Justice Brewer:

On February 4, 1897, defendants in error commenced their action in the circuit court of the United States for the district of South Carolina to recover of the United States the sum of $10,000 as compensation for certain real estate (being a part of a plantation known as Verzenobre) taken and appropriated by the defendant.

NOTE.—As to what constitutes a taking of property by eminent domain—see note to Memphis & C. R. Co. v. Birmingham, S. & T. R. Co. (Ala.) 18 L. R. A. 166.

As to right of riparian owner to compensation for injuries in improving navigation—see note to Gibson v. United States, 41 L. ed. U. S. 997.

The petition alleged in the 1st paragraph the citizenship and residence of the petitioners; in the 2d, that they had a claim against the United States under an implied contract for compensation for the value of property taken by the United States for public use; 3d, that they were the owners as tenants in common of the plantation; and in the 4th and 7th paragraphs:

“Fourth. That for several years continuously, and now continuously, the said government of the United States of America, 447] in the exercise of its power of eminent domain under the Constitution of the United States and by authority of the acts of Congress, duly empowering its officers and agents thereto, in that case made and provided, did erect, build, and maintain, and continuously since have been erecting, building and maintaining, and are now building, erecting, and maintaining in and across the said Savannah river, in the bed of the said Savannah river, certain dams, training walls, and other obstructions, obstructing and hindering the natural flow of the said Savannah river through, in, and along the natural bed thereof and raising the said Savannah river feet at the point of and above the said obstructions and dams in the bed of the said Savannah river, and causing the said waters of the Savannah river aforesaid to be kept back and to flow back and to be raised and elevated above the natural height of the Savannah river along its natural bed at the points of the said dams, training walls, and obstructions, and at points above the said dams, training walls, and obstructions in said river.”

“Seventh. And your petitioners further show that the said acts of the government of the United States, as aforesaid, have been done and are being done lawfully by the officers and agents of the United States under the authority of the United States in the exercise of its powers of eminent domain and regulation of commerce under the Constitution of the United States and the laws of Congress for the public purpose of the improvement of the harbor of Savannah and deepening the waters of the Savannah river at the port of Savannah, a port of entry of the United States and seaport of the United States of America, situated within the state of Georgia, on the Savannah river, and with the purpose of deepening and enlarging the navigable channel and highway for commerce of the said Savannah river for the public use, purpose, and benefit of interstate and foreign and international trade and commerce, and for other public purposes, uses, and benefits.”

The remaining paragraphs set forth the effect of the placing by the government of the dams, restraining walls, and other obstructions in the river, together with the value of the property appropriated by the overflow. The answer of the government averred:

*“First. That this defendant has no knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to the truth of the allegations contained in the 1st and 3d paragraphs of the said petition and complaint. [448]

“Second. That this defendant denies all of the allegations contained in the 2d, 4th, 5th, 6th, 7th, and 8th paragraphs of the said petition and complaint except so much of the 4th paragraph as alleges that the said United States heretofore erected certain dams in the Savannah river pursuant to power vested in it by law, and except so much of the 7th paragraph as alleges that the said dams heretofore erected by the United States were lawfully erected by its officers and agents.”

For a further defense the statute of limitations was pleaded. The case came on for trial before the court without a jury, which made findings of fact, and from them deduced conclusions of law and entered a judgment against the defendant for the sum of $10,000. The findings were to the effect that the plaintiffs were the owners of the plantation, deriving title by proper mesne conveyances from “a grant by the lord’s proprietors of South Carolina,” made in 1736. Other findings pertinent to the questions which must be considered in deciding this case were as follows:

“IV. A certain parcel of these plantations, measuring about 420 acres, had been reclaimed by drainage, and had been in actual continued use for seventy years and upwards as a rice plantation, used solely for this purpose. This rice plantation was dependent for its irrigation upon the waters of the Savannah river and its ditches, drains, and canals, through and by which the waters of the river were flowed in and upon the lands, and were then drained therefrom, were adapted to the natural level of the said Savannah river, and dependent for their proper drainage and cultivation upon the maintenance of the natural flow of the said river in, through, and over its natural channel along its natural bed to the waters of the ocean.

“V. This portion of the plantation fronting on the river and dedicated to the culture of rice, extended almost up to, if not quite to, low-water mark, and a large part of it was between mean high-water and low-water mark, protected from the river by an embankment. Through this embankment trunks or water ways were constructed, with flood gates therein. The outer opening of the trunk was about a foot or a little less above the mean low-water mark of the river, in which the tide ebbs and flows. When it is desired to flow the lands, the flood gates are opened and the water comes in. When it is desired to draw off this water and to effect the drainage of the lands, the flood gates are opened at low water and the water escapes. It is essential that the outlets of the trunks or water ways should always be above the mean low-water mark. [449]

"VII. For several years last past and at the present time the government of the United States, under its proper officers, authorized thereto by the act of Congress, have been engaged in the improvement of the navigation of the Savannah river, a navigable water of the United States, this improvement being carried on by virtue of the provisions of § 8, art. I. of the Constitution, giving to the Congress the power to regulate commerce.

"VIII. In thus improving navigation of this navigable water the United States has built and maintained, and is now building and maintaining, in and across the Savannah river, in the bed thereof, certain dams, training walls, and other obstructions, obstructing the natural flow of said river in and along its natural bed, and so raising the level of the said river above said obstructions, and causing its waters to be kept back and to flow back and to be elevated above its natural height in its natural bed.

"IX. This rice plantation Verzenobre is above these obstructions. The direct effect thereof is to raise the level of the Savannah river at this plantation, and to keep the point of mean low water above its natural point, so that the outlet of the trunks and water ways above spoken of in the bank of said plantation, instead of being above this point of low-water mark, is now below this point. Another direct result was that by seepage and percolation the water rose in the plantation until the water level in the [450] land gradually rose to the height *of the increased water level in the river, and the superinduced addition of water in the plantation was about 18 inches thereby. By reason of this it gradually became difficult, and has now become impossible, to let off the water on this plantation or to drain the same, so that these acres dedicated to the culture of rice have become boggy, unfit for cultivation, and impossible to be cultivated in rice.

"X. By the raising of the level of the Savannah river by these dams and obstructions, the water thereof has been backed up against the embankment on the river and has been caused to flow back upon and in this plantation above the obstruction, and has actually invaded said plantation, directly raising the water in said plantation about 18 inches, which it is impossible to remove from said plantation. This flooding is the permanent condition now, and the rice plantation is thereby practically destroyed for the purpose of rice culture or any other known agriculture, and is an irreclaimable bog and has no value.

"XI. By reason of this superinduced addition of water actually invading the said rice plantation, and its destruction thereby for all purposes of agriculture, plaintiffs have been compelled to abandon the cultivation of said rice plantation and have been forced to pursue their calling of planting rice on other plantations below the dams. The direct result to plaintiffs is an actual and practical ouster of possession from this rice 188 U. S.

plantation, cultivated by themselves and family for many years.

"XII. Beyond the backing up of the water on and in the plantation by reason of the dams and obstruction, and the invasion of these lands by this superinduced addition of water at and in the plantation as above described, rendered necessary by the execution of the government's plans, the United States is not in actual possession of these lands.

"XIII. Up to this time no other use has been discovered for these lands than for rice culture, and the direct results above stated have totally destroyed the market value of the lands. They now have no value.

"XIV. The value of these rice lands before the obstructions *aforesaid were put in-[451] to the river was about $30 per acre; between $25 and $30 per acre. The value of the rice plantation, 420 acres, thus destroyed, is $10,000."

Upon these findings of fact the important conclusions of law were thus stated:

"V. The crucial question in this case is, Was there a taking of this land in the sense of the Constitution?

"The facts found show that by reason of the obstruction in the Savannah river the water has been directly backed up against the embankment on the river and the banks on and in this plantation, the superinduced addition of water actually invading it and destroying its drainage and leaving it useless for all practical purposes. The government does not in a sense take this land for the purposes of putting its obstructions on it. But it forces back the water of the river on the land as a result necessary to its purpose, without which its purpose could not be accomplished. For the purpose of the government, that water in the river must be raised. The banks of this plantation materially assist this operation, for by their resistance the water is kept in the channel. The backing up of the water against the banks to create this resistance raises the water in the plantation and destroys the drainage of the plantation. This is a taking. 'It would,' says Mr. Justice Miller, 'be a very curious and unsatisfactory result if, in construing a provision of constitutional law, always understood to have been adopted for protection and security to the rights of the individual as against the government, and which had received the commendation of jurists, statesmen, and commentators as placing the just principles of the common law on that subject beyond the power of ordinary legislation to change or control them, it shall be held that if the government refrains from the absolute conversion of real property to the uses of the public, it can destroy its value entirely, can inflict irreparable and permanent injury to any extent; can, in effect, subject to total destruction without making any compensation, because in the narrowest sense of that word it has not been taken for the public use.' *Pumpelly v. Green Bay & M. Canal *Co.* 13 [452] Wall. 177, 178, 20 L. ed. 560. In that case the backing up of water on land was held to be a taking.

"VI. The plantation of plaintiffs being actually invaded by superinduced addition of water directly caused by the government dams and obstructions backing up the water of the Savannah river, and raising the water level at and in the rice plantation, and making it unfit for rice cultivation or for any other known agriculture, and plaintiffs having been compelled thereby to abandon the plantation, and this actual and practical ouster of possession being continued and permanent by reason of the permanent condition of the flooding of the plantation, and the plantation being thereby now an irreclaimable bog of no value,—makes the action of the government a taking of lands for public purposes within the meaning of the 5th Amendment, for which compensation is due to the plaintiffs. Pumpelly v. Green Bay & M. Canal Co. 13 Wall. 182, 20 L. ed. 561; Mugler v. Kansas, 123 U. S. 668, 31 L. ed. 212, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 273.

"VII. The government has not gone into actual occupancy of this land, but by reason of these dams and obstructions made necessary by this public work and fulfilling its purpose the water in the Savannah river has been raised at the plaintiffs' plantation and has been backed up on it and remains on it so that the drainage has been destroyed and ditches filled up and super-added water permanently kept on the land and forced up into it, making it wholly unfit for cultivation, and the plaintiffs have thereby been practically and actually ousted of their possession. This is taking of the land for public purposes, for which compensation must be provided. Pumpelly v. Green Bay & M. Canal Co. 13 Wall. 181, 20 L. ed. 561."

The case involving the application of the Constitution of the United States was brought by writ of error directly to this court.

Mr. Robert A. Howard argued the cause, and, with Solicitor General Richards, filed a brief for plaintiff in error:

There can be no doubt that, in England, a subject may be the owner of a portion or tract of shore by ancient charter or grant.

Hall, Sea Shores, 15; Hale, De Jure Maris, Hargrave's Law Tracts, chap. 5; Constable's Case, 5 Coke, 107.

And so, in this country, the individual may be owner of a portion of shore by grant from the state.

Shively v. Bowlby, 152 U. S. 1, 38 L. ed. 331, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 548; Morris v. United States, 174 U. S. 196, 43 L. ed. 946, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 649.

But the subject or individual takes this ownership, whether from the Crown or the state, subject to the trust devolving upon the state for the public, which cannot be destroyed or diminished.

Illinois C. R. Co. v. Illinois, 146 U. S. 387, 36 L. ed. 1018, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 110; State v. Pacific Guano Co. 22 S. C. 58; Atty. Gen. v. Parmeter, 10 Price, 378; Hale, De Jure Maris, Hargrave's Law Tracts, chap. 6, p. 36.

The lands are held by the state, as they were by the King, in trust for the public use of navigation and fishery; and the erection thereon of wharves, piers, lighthouses, beacons, and other facilities of navigation and commerce. Being subject to this trust, they were publici juris; in other words, they are held for the use of the people at large.

Stockton v. Baltimore & N. Y. R. Co. 1 Inters. Com. Rep. 411, 32 Fed. 9.

The power granted to Congress by the Constitution to regulate commerce is without limitation.

Gibbons v. Ogden, 9 Wheat, 196, 6 L. ed. 70; Hoboken v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 124 U. S. 656, 31 L. ed. 543, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 643; Mobile County v. Kimball, 102 U. S. 691, 26 L. ed. 238; South Carolina v. Georgia, 93 U. S. 4, 23 L. ed. 782; Scranton v. Wheeler, 179 U. S. 141, 45 L. ed. 126, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 48.

The improvement of harbors, bays, and navigable rivers, the building of piers, wharves, etc., and the erection of dams, come within the regulation of commerce.

Mobile County v. Kimball, 102 U. S. 691, 26 L. ed. 238; Stockton v. Baltimore & N. Y. R. Co. 1 Inters. Com. Rep. 411, 32 Fed. 9.

Congress has power to order obstructions to be placed in the navigable waters of the United States. It may build lighthouses in the bed of the stream. It may construct jetties.

Gilman v. Philadelphia, 3 Wall. 724, 18 L. ed. 99; South Carolina v. Georgia, 93 U. S. 4, 23 L. ed. 782; Pensacola Teleg. Co. v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 96 U. S. 1, 24 L. ed. 708.

All navigable waters are under the control of the United States for the purpose of regulating and improving navigation, and although the title to the shore and submerged soil is in the various states and individual owners under them, it is always subject to the servitude in respect of navigation created in favor of the Federal government by the Constitution.

Gibson v. United States, 166 U. S. 269, 41 L. ed. 996, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 578.

The circuit court had no jurisdiction.

Hill v. United States, 149 U. S. 593, 37 L. ed. 862, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1011; Schillinger v. United States, 155 U. S. 163, 39 L. ed. 108, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 85.

Whatever excludes all idea of a contract excludes at the same time a remedy which can spring from contract only, which affirms it, and seeks its enforcement.

Lloyd v. Hough, 1 How. 153, 11 L. ed. 83.

The doctrine of waiver of tort is simply a question of the election of remedies.

Keener, Quasi Contracts, pp. 159–161; National Trust Co. v. Gleason, 77 N. Y. 400; United States v. Great Falls Mfg. Co. 112 U. S. 657, 28 L. ed. 850, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 306; Great Falls Mfg. Co. v. Garland, 124 U. S. 597, 31 L. ed. 532, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 631.

The title and rights of riparian or littoral proprietors in the soil below high-water mark of navigable waters are governed by the local laws of the several states, subject to the rights granted to the United States by the Constitution.

Hardin v. Jordan, 140 U. S. 371, 35 L. ed. 428, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 808, 838; Hoboken v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 124 U. S. 688, 31 L. ed. 551, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 643; People v. New York & S. I. Ferry Co. 68 N. Y. 71; Illinois C. R. Co. v. Illinois, 146 U. S. 387, 36 L. ed. 1018, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 110.

The soil under navigable waters being held by the people of the state in trust for the common use and as a portion of their inherent sovereignty, any act of legislation concerning their use affects the public welfare. It is therefore appropriately within the exercise of the police power of the state.

Illinois C. R. Co. v. Illinois, 146 U. S. 459, 36 L. ed. 1045, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 110. See also McCreedy v. Virginia, 94 U. S. 391, 24 L. ed. 248; Pollard v. Hagan, 3 How. 212, 11 L. ed. 565; Boston v. Leckaw, 17 How. 426, 15 L. ed. 118; Com. v. Charlestown, 1 Pick. 180, 11 Am. Dec. 161; Com. v. Alger, 7 Cush. 53; Rundie v. Delaware & R. Canal Co. 14 How. 80, 14 L. ed. 335; Fisher v. Haldeman, 20 How. 186, 15 L. ed. 879; Phear, Rights of Water, 52, 53.

Mr. J. P. Kennedy Bryan argued the cause and filed a brief for defendants in error:

The backing up of water, destroying land, is a taking.

Pumpelly v. Green Bay & M. Canal Co. 13 Wall. 166, 20 L. ed. 557; Northern Transp. Co. v. Chicago, 99 U. S. 635, 25 L. ed. 336; Mugler v. Kansas, 123 U. S. 667, 31 L. ed. 212, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 273; Gibson v. United States, 166 U. S. 269, 41 L. ed. 996, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 578; Seranton v. Wheeler, 179 U. S. 141, 45 L. ed. 126, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 48; Kaukauna Water Power Co. v. Green Bay & M. Canal Co. 142 U. S. 254, 35 L. ed. 1004, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 173; King v. United States, 59 Fed. 9.

Power to regulate commerce, exercised by Congress in the improvement of a navigable river, is subject to the limitations of the 5th Amendment to the Constitution; and when private property is taken for, and in the course of, such improvements, just compensation must be provided.

Monongahela Nav. Co. v. United States, 148 U. S. 312, 37 L. ed. 463, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 622; Seranton v. Wheeler, 179 U. S. 153, 45 L. ed. 133, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 48.

Whether there was any actual intention on the part of the government to take the land is immaterial. This question is determined, as matter of law, upon the legal effect of the ultimate facts found, and not by any arbitrary standard of intention or nonintention on the part of the government, its agents or officers.

Pumpelly v. Green Bay & M. Canal Co. 13 Wall. 166, 20 L. ed. 557; Monongahela Nav. Co. v. United States, 148 U. S. 312, 37 L. ed. 463, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 622.

In the state of South Carolina the public trust for navigation is only in the beds of rivers below low water; the shore of a tidal river is grantable to the individual absolutely.

Chisolm v. Caines, 67 Fed. 290; State v. Pacific Guano Co. 22 S. C. 83.

188 U. S.

The public trust for navigation does not attach to reclaimed lands on the shore.

Com. v. Alger, 7 Cush. 68; Shively v. Bowlby, 152 U. S. 19, 38 L. ed. 338, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 548; Boston v. Leckaw, 17 How. 426, 15 L. ed. 118; Richardson v. Boston, 19 How. 269, 15 L. ed. 642; Illinois C. R. Co. v. Illinois, 146 U. S. 387, 36 L. ed. 1018, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 110; Hoboken v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 124 U. S. 691, 31 L. ed. 552, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 643; Hanford v. St. Paul & D. R. Co. 43 Minn. 110, 7 L. R. A. 722, 44 N. W. 1144; Miller v. Mendenhall, 43 Minn. 95, 8 L. R. A. 89, 44 N. W. 1141.

The United States has recognized a vested right, by use and occupancy of the citizen, upon improvements in a navigable river.

Monongahela Nav. Co. v. United States, 148 U. S. 312, 37 L. ed. 463, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 622; Seranton v. Wheeler, 179 U. S. 141, 45 L. ed. 126, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 48; United States v. Rio Grande Dam & Irrig. Co. 174 U. S. 690, 43 L. ed. 1136, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 770.

Mr. J. P. Kennedy Bryan, with Mr. Julian Mitchell, Jr., of counsel for defendants in error in United States v. Williams, filed a joint brief for defendants in error:

There is an implied contract on the part of the government to pay compensation where it takes private property.

Pumpelly v. Green Bay & M. Canal Co. 13 Wall. 166, 20 L. ed. 557; Mugler v. Kansas, 123 U. S. 667, 31 L. ed. 212, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 273; Seranton v. Wheeler, 179 U. S. 153, 45 L. ed. 133, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 48; United States v. Jones, 109 U. S. 513, 27 L. ed. 1015, 3 Sup. Ct. Rep. 346; Kaukauna Water Power Co. v. Green Bay & M. Canal Co. 142 U. S. 254, 35 L. ed. 1004, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 173; Monongahela Nav. Co. v. United States, 148 U. S. 312, 37 L. ed. 463, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 622; United States v. Great Falls Mfg. Co. 112 U. S. 645, 28 L. ed. 846, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 306; Great Falls Mfg. Co. v. Garland, 124 U. S. 581, 31 L. ed. 527, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 631.

The obligation that the law imposes raises an implied contract.

Pacific Mail S. S. Co. v. Joliffe, 2 Wall. 450, 17 L. ed. 805.

Implied contracts are such as reason and justice dictate, and which, therefore, the law presumes that every man undertakes to perform.

1 Parsons, Contr. p. 5.

Contracts implied in law are legal fictions adopted for the purpose of enforcing legal duties by actions ex contractu, where no actual contract exists, either express or implied. In the case of a contract implied in law, the intention is disregarded.

15 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 1078.

Wherever the defendant has converted the property of the owner to his own use, the owner may either disaffirm his act and treat him as a wrongdoer, or sue for trespass, etc., or affirm his acts and sue in assumpsit.

Cocley, Torts, p. 109.

Indebitatus assumpsit lies where the duty is to pay money.

2 Harvard Law Review, "The History of Assumpsit," pp. 64-66.

An implied contract arises, by operation of the law, out of the lawful taking by the government of private property in the exercise of the power to regulate commerce and eminent domain, and the limitation thereof.

United States v. Great Falls Mfg. Co. 112 U. S. 645, 28 L. ed. 846, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 306; Great Falls Mfg. Co. v. Garland, 124 U. S. 581, 31 L. ed. 527, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 631; United States v. Jones, 109 U. S. 513, 27 L. ed. 1015, 3 Sup. Ct. Rep. 346.

The position of the counsel for the government is in direct contradiction to the decision of this court in the Chicago Lake Front Cases, 146 U. S. 387, 36 L. ed. 1018, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 110, in which this court held that, after the reclamation and occupation of lands out to the point of navigability in the lake, there was thereafter no trust in the state, and that the same was private property, and that its absolute alienation was consistent with the law of the trust in navigable waters held by the state and the United States.

Mr. Justice Brewer delivered the opinion of the court:

There are three principal questions in this case? First, Did the circuit court have jurisdiction? second, Was there a taking of the land within the meaning of the 5th Amendment? and, third, If there was a taking, was the government subject to the obligation of making compensation therefor?

Did the circuit court have jurisdiction? It may be premised that this question was not raised in the circuit court, nor was it presented to this court on the first argument, but only upon the reargument. This omission on the part of the learned counsel for the government is certainly suggestive. Nevertheless, as the question, now for the first time presented, is one of jurisdiction, it must be considered and determined. To sustain the challenge of jurisdiction it is insisted by the government that there was no implied contract, but simply tortious acts on the part of its officers; and Hill v. United States, 149 U. S. 593, 37 L. ed. 862, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1011, and Schillinger v. United States, 155 U. S. 163, 39 L. ed. 108, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 85, are relied upon. Let us see what those cases were and what they decided. In the former the plaintiff sued to recover from the United States for the use and occupation of land for a lighthouse. The land upon which the lighthouse was built was submerged land in Chesapeake [459] bay. *The government pleaded that it had a paramount right to the use of the land, and that plea was demurred to. It was held that the circuit court had no jurisdiction, and in the opinion delivered by Mr. Justice Gray it was said, after referring to several cases (pp. 598, 599, L. ed. p. 864, Sup. Ct. Rep. p. 1013):

"In Langford v. United States [101 U. S. 341, 25 L. ed. 1010], it was accordingly adjudged that, when an officer of the United States took and held possession of land of a private citizen, under a claim that it belonged to the government, the United States could not be charged upon an implied obligation to pay for its use and occupation.

544

"It has since been held that if the United States appropriates to a public use land which they admit to be private property, they may be held, as upon an implied contract, to pay its value to the owner. United States v. Great Falls Mfg. Co. 112 U. S. 645, 28 L. ed. 846, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 306, and 124 U. S. 581, 31 L. ed. 527, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 631. It has likewise been held that the United States may be sued in the court of claims for the use of a patent for an invention, the plaintiff's right in which they have acknowledged. Hollister v. Benedict & B. Mfg. Co. 113 U. S. 59, 28 L. ed. 901, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 717; United States v. Palmer, 128 U. S. 262, 32 L. ed. 442, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 104. But in each of these cases the title of the plaintiff was admitted, and in none of them was any doubt thrown upon the correctness of the decision in Langford's Case. See Schillinger v. United States, 24 Ct. Cl. 278.

"The case at bar is governed by Langford's Case. It was not alleged in this petition, nor admitted in the plea, that the United States had ever in any way acknowledged any right of property in the plaintiff as against the United States. The plaintiff asserted a title in the land in question, with the exclusive right of building thereon, and claimed damages of the United States for the use and occupation of the land for a lighthouse. The United States positively and precisely pleaded that the land was submerged under the waters of Chesapeake bay, one of the navigable waters of the United States, and that the United States, 'under the law, for the purpose of a lighthouse, has a paramount right to its use as against the plaintiff or any other person;' and the plaintiff demurred to this plea."

In the other case it appeared that the architect of the capitol contracted with G. W. Cook for the laying of pavement in the *capitol grounds. The contractor in laying the pavement infringed, as petitioners claimed, upon rights granted to them by patent. Thereafter this suit was brought, not against the party guilty of the alleged infringement, but against the United States, which had accepted the pavement in the construction of which, as petitioners claimed, the contractor had infringed upon their rights. In the opinion it was said (p. 170, L. ed. p. 111, Sup. Ct. Rep. p. 87):

"Here the claimants never authorized the use of the patent right by the government; never consented to, but always protested against it, threatening to interfere by injunction or other proceedings to restrain such use. There was no act of Congress in terms directing, or even by implication suggesting, the use of the patent. No officer of the government directed its use, and the contract which was executed by Cook did not name or describe it. There was no recognition by the government or any of its officers of the fact that in the construction of the pavement there was any use of the patent, or that any appropriation was being made of claimant's property. The government proceeded as though it were acting only in the management of its own property and the exercise of its own rights, and without any trespass upon the rights of the claimants. There was no point in the whole transaction, from its commencement to its close, where the minds of the parties met or where there was anything in the semblance of an agreement. So, not only does the petition count upon a tort, but also the findings show a tort. That is the essential fact underlying the transaction and upon which rests every pretense of a right to recover. There was no suggestion of a waiver of the tort or a pretense of any implied contract until after the decision of the court of claims that it had no jurisdiction over an action to recover for the tort."

188 U. S.

How different is the case at bar! The government did not deny the title of the plaintiffs. It averred in the answer simply that it had "no knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief," but did not couple such averment with any denial, nor did it pretend that it owned the property or had a paramount proprietary right to its possession. It did not put in issue the question of title, but rested upon a denial [461] that the acts its officers *had done by its direction had overflowed the land and wrought the injury as alleged, or that such overflow and injury created an implied contract, and also upon the bar of the statute of limitations. Nowhere in the record did it set up any title to the property antagonistic to that claimed by the plaintiffs. It simply denied responsibility for what it had caused to be done, and pleaded that if it had ever been liable, the statute of limitations had worked a bar. No officer of the government, as in the Langford Case, claimed that the property found by the court to be the property of the plaintiffs belonged to the government. While there was no formal admission of record that the land belonged to the plaintiffs, the case was tried alone upon the theory that the government could not be held responsible for what it had done. It did not repudiate the actions of its officers and agents, but on the contrary in terms admitted that they acted by authority of Congress, and that all that they did was lawfully done. So that if the overflow and destruction of this property was, as we shall presently inquire, a taking and appropriation within the scope of the 5th Amendment to the Constitution, the jurisdictional question now presented is whether such appropriation, directed by Congress, created an implied contract on the part of the government to pay for the value of the property so appropriated. Let us see what this court has decided. In United States v. Great Falls Mfg. Co. 112 U. S. 645, 28 L. ed. 846, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 306, Congress having made an appropriation therefor, a dam was constructed across the Potomac with the view of supplying the city of Washington with water. In the construction of such dam certain lands belonging to the plaintiff were taken, although such lands were not by the act of Congress specifically ordered to be taken. The property so taken not having been paid for, plaintiff brought this 188 U. S.

action in the court of claims to recover the value thereof, and it was held that the action might be maintained, and in the opinion it was said (p. 656, L. ed. p. 850, Sup. Ct. Rep. p. 310):

"It seems clear that these property rights have been held and used by the agents of the United States, under the sanction of legislative enactments by Congress; for the appropriation of money specifically for the construction of the dam from the *Maryland[462] shore to Conn's island was, all the circumstances considered, equivalent to an express direction by the legislative and executive branches of the government to its officers to take this particular property for the public objects contemplated by the scheme for supplying the capital of the nation with wholesome water. The making of the improvements necessarily involves the taking of the property; and if, for the want of formal proceedings for its condemnation to public use, the claimant was entitled, at the beginning of the work, to have the agents of the government enjoined from prosecuting it until provision was made for securing, in some way, payment of the compensation required by the Constitution—upon which question we express no opinion—there is no sound reason why the claimant might not waive that right, and, electing to regard the action of the government as a taking under its sovereign right of eminent domain, demand just compensation. Kohl v. United States, 91 U. S. 367, 374, 23 L. ed. 449, 452. In that view we are of opinion that the United States, having by its agents, proceeding under the authority of an act of Congress, taken the property of the claimant for public use, are under an obligation, imposed by the Constitution, to make compensation. The law will imply a promise to make the required compensation, where property, to which the government asserts no title, is taken, pursuant to an act of Congress, as private property to be applied for public uses. Such an implication being consistent with the constitutional duty of the government, as well as with common justice, the claimant's cause of action is one that arises out of implied contract, within the meaning of the statute which confers jurisdiction upon the court of claims of actions founded 'upon any contract, express or implied, with the government of the United States.'"

In Great Falls Mfg. Co. v. Atty. Gen. 124 U. S. 581, sub nom. Great Falls Mfg. Co. v. Garland, 31 L. ed. 527, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 631, an action, which, like the preceding, grew out of provisions made by Congress to supply water to the city of Washington, and in which the relief sought was the removal of all structures on the premises, or if it should appear that the property had been legally condemned, the framing of an issue, triable by jury, to ascertain the plaintiff's damages, and a judgment for the amount thereof, it was said, referring to the *con[463] tention that there were certain defects in the proceedings taken by the government (p. 597, L. ed. p. 532, Sup. Ct. Rep. p. 637):

"Even if the Secretary's survey and map, 545 and the publication of the Attorney General's notice did not, in strict law, justify the former in taking possession of the land and water rights in question, it was competent for the company to waive the tort, and proceed against the United States, as upon an implied contract, it appearing, as it does here, that the government recognizes and retains the possession taken in its behalf for the public purposes indicated in the act under which its officers have proceeded."

In Hollister v. Benedict & B. Mfg. Co. 113 U. S. 59, 28 L. ed. 901, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 717, an action by the assignees of a patent against a United States collector for infringement, the law is thus stated (p. 67, L. ed. p. 904, Sup. Ct. Rep. p. 721):

"If the right of the patentee was acknowledged, and, without his consent, an officer of the government, acting under legislative authority, made use of the invention in the discharge of his official duties, it would seem to be a clear case of the exercise of the right of eminent domain, upon which the law would imply a promise of compensation, an action on which would lie within the jurisdiction of the court of claims, such as was entertained and sanctioned in the case of United States v. Great Falls Mfg. Co. 112 U. S. 645, 28 L. ed. 846, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 306."

In United States v. Palmer, 128 U. S. 262, 32 L. ed. 442, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 104, an action in the court of claims by a patentee against the government to recover upon an implied contract for the use of the patented invention, it appeared that the petitioner was the patentee of certain improvements in infantry equipments which were adopted by the Secretary of War as a part of the equipment of the infantry soldiers of the United States, and, sustaining the jurisdiction of the court of claims, it was said (p. 269, L. ed. p. 444, Sup. Ct. Rep. p. 105):

"No tort was committed or claimed to have been committed. The government used the claimant's improvements with his consent; and, certainly, with the expectation on his part of receiving a reasonable compensation for the license. This is not a claim for an infringement, but a claim of compensation for an authorized use—two [464] things totally distinct in the law, as *distinct as trespass on lands is from use and occupation under a lease."

In United States v. Berdan Fire-Arms Mfg. Co. 156 U. S. 552, 39 L. ed. 530, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 420, a judgment of the court of claims against the United States on an implied contract for the use of an improvement in breech-loading firearms was sustained, although there was no act of Congress expressly directing the use of such improvement. In the opinion it was said (p. 567, L. ed. p. 535, Sup. Ct. Rep. p. 424):

"While the findings are not so specific and emphatic as to the assent of the government to the terms of any contract, yet we think they are sufficient. There was certainly no denial of the patentee's rights to the invention; no assertion on the part of the government that the patent was wrongfully issued; no claim of a right to use the invention regardless of the patent; no disregard of all claims of the patentee, and no use, in spite of protest or remonstrance. Negatively, at least, the findings are clear. The government used the invention with the consent and express permission of the owner, and it did not, while so using it, repudiate the title of such owner."

And then, after quoting from several of the findings, it was added (p. 569, L. ed. 536, Sup. Ct. Rep. p. 425):

"The import of these findings is this: That the officers of the government, charged specially with the duty of superintending the manufacture of muskets, regarded Berdan as the inventor of this extractor ejector; that the difference between the spiral and flat spring was an immaterial difference; that, therefore, they were using in the Springfield musket Berdan's invention; that they used it with his permission as well as that of his assignee, the petitioner, and that they used it with the understanding that the government would pay for such use as for other private property which it might take, and this, although they did not believe themselves to have authority to agree upon the price."

The rule deducible from these cases is that when the government appropriates property which it does not claim as its own, it does so under an implied contract that it will pay the value of the property it so appropriates. It is earnestly contended in argument that the government had a right to appropriate this property. *This may be [465] conceded, but there is a vast difference between a proprietary, and a governmental, right. When the government owns property, or claims to own it, it deals with it as owner and by virtue of its ownership, and if an officer of the government takes possession of property under the claim that it belongs to the government (when in fact it does not), that may well be considered a tortious act on his part, for there can be no implication of an intent on the part of the government to pay for that which it claims to own. Very different from this proprietary right of the government in respect to property which it owns is its governmental right to appropriate the property of individuals. All private property is held subject to the necessities of government. The right of eminent domain underlies all such rights of property. The government may take personal or real property whenever its necessities, or the exigencies of the occasion, demand. So, the contention that the government had a paramount right to appropriate this property may be conceded, but the Constitution in the 5th Amendment guarantees that when this governmental right of appropriation—this asserted paramount right—is exercised it shall be attended by compensation.

The government may take real estate for a postoffice, a courthouse, a fortification, or a highway; or in time of war it may take merchant vessels and make them part of its naval force. But can this be done without an obligation to pay for the value of that which is so taken and appropriated? Whenever in the exercise of its governmental rights it takes property the ownership of which it concedes to be in an individual, it impliedly promises to pay therefor. Such is the import of the cases cited as well as of many others.

The action which was taken, resulting in the overflow and injury to these plaintiffs, is not to be regarded as the personal act of the officers, but as the act of the government. That which the officers did is admitted by the answer to have been done by authority of the government, and although there may have been no specific act of Congress directing the appropriation of this property of the plaintiffs, yet if that which the officers of the government did, acting under its direction, resulted in an appropriation, *it is to be treated as the act of the government. South Carolina v. Georgia, 93 U. S. 4, 13, 23 L. ed. 782, 784; Wisconsin v. Duluth, 96 U. S. 379, 24 L. ed. 668; United States v. Great Falls Mfg. Co. 112 U. S. 645, 22 L. ed. 846, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 306.

Congress for many successive terms appropriated money for the improvement of the Savannah river. 21 Stat. at L. 470, 480, chap. 136; 22 Stat. at L. 194, 200, chap. 375; 23 Stat. at L. 140, chap. 229; 24 Stat. at L. 321, 331, chap. 929; 25 Stat. at L. 413, chap. 860; 26 Stat. at L. 442, chap. 907; 27 Stat. at L. 101, chap. 158; 28 Stat. at L. 351, chap. 299. These appropriations were in the river and harbor bills, and were generally of so much money for improving the river, but some deserve special mention. Thus, in 21 Stat. at L. 470, chap. 136, it was provided that "one thousand dollars may be applied to payment of damages for land taken for widening the channel opposite Savannah." In 24 Stat. at L. 331, chap. 929, the Secretary of War was directed to cause a survey to be made of the "Savannah river from cross tides above Savannah to the bar, with a view to obtaining twenty-eight feet of water in the channel." The appropriation in the 25 Stat. at L. 413, chap. 860, was for the improvement of the river, "completing the present project and commencing the extended project contained in the report of engineer for year ending June 30, 1887." And by the same statute, 431, among the matters referred to the Secretary of War for survey and examination was "whether the damage to the Verzenobie freshet bank in 1887 was caused by the work at cross tides, and whether the maintenance of said bank is essential to the success of the work at cross tides, and what will be the cost of so constructing said bank as to confine the water of said river to its bed." The report of the engineers for the year 1887, referred to in the section above quoted, shows that part of the work which was being done by the government was in the construction of training walls, and wing dams, by which the width of the water way was reduced.

Further, the same year (25 Stat. at L. 94, chap. 194, U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 3525), an act was passed, entitled "An Act to Facilitate the Prosecution of Works Projected for the Improvement of Rivers and Harbors," which authorized the Secretary of War to commence proceedings "for the acquirement by condemnation of any land, right of way, or material needed to enable him to maintain, operate, or prosecute works for the improvement of rivers and harbors for which provision *has been made by law; [467] . . . provided, however, that when the owner of such land, right of way, or material shall fix a price for the same, which, in the opinion of the Secretary of War, shall be reasonable, he may purchase the same at such price without further delay."

Thus, beyond the effect of the admission in the answer, and beyond the presumption of knowledge which attends the action of all legislative bodies, it affirmatively appears, not only that Congress was making appropriations from year to year for the improvement of the river, but also that it had express notice of damage to the banks along this very plantation; that the works which were being done by the engineers had in view the narrowing of the width of the water way; that land would be damaged as the result of those works, and that it authorized the Secretary of War to take proceedings in eminent domain to acquire the land, right of way, and material which might be necessary for maintaining, operating, or prosecuting works of river improvement, or, if the price could be agreed upon, to purchase the same.

This brings the case directly within the scope of the decision in United States v. Great Falls Mfg. Co. 112 U. S. 645, 22 L. ed. 846, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 306, where, as here, there was no direction to take the particular property, but a direction to do that which resulted in a taking, and it was held that the owner might waive the right to insist on condemnation proceedings, and sue to recover the value.

It does not appear that the plaintiffs took any action to stop the work done by the government, or protested against it. Their inaction and silence amount to an acquiescence—an assent to the appropriation by the government. In this respect the case is not dissimilar to that of a landowner who, knowing that a railroad company has entered upon his land and is engaged in constructing its road without having complied with the statute in respect to condemnation, is estopped from thereafter maintaining either trespass or ejectment, but is limited to a recovery of compensation. Roberts v. Northern P. R. Co. 158 U. S. 1, 11, 39 L. ed. 873, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 756; Northern P. R. Co. v. Smith, 171 U. S. 260, 43 L. ed. 157, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 794, and cases cited in the opinion.

The case, therefore, amounts to this: The plaintiffs alleged *that they were the [468] owners of certain real estate bordering on the Savannah river; that the government, in the exercise of its powers of eminent domain and regulation of commerce, through officers and agents duly empowered thereto by acts of Congress, placed dams, training walls, and other obstructions in the river in such manner as to hinder its natural flow and to raise its waters so as to overflow the land of plaintiffs, and overflow it to such an extent as to cause a total destruction of its value. The government, not denying the ownership of plaintiffs, admitted that the work which was done by their officers and agents was done by authority of Congress, but denied that those works had produced the alleged injury and destruction. We are of opinion that under these pleadings and the issues raised thereby the circuit court had jurisdiction to inquire whether the acts done by the officers of the United States under the direction of Congress had resulted in such an overflow and injury of the plaintiff's land as to render it absolutely valueless, and if thereby the property was, in contemplation of law, taken and appropriated by the government, to render judgment against it for the value of the property so taken and appropriated.

Was there a taking? There was no proceeding in condemnation instituted by the government, no attempt in terms to take and appropriate the title. There was no adjudication that the fee had passed from the landowner to the government, and if either of these be an essential element in the taking of lands, within the scope of the 5th Amendment, there was no taking.

Some question is made as to the meaning of the findings. It appears from the 5th finding, as amended, that a large portion of the land flooded was in its natural condition between high-water mark and low-water mark, and was subject to overflow as the water passed from one stage to the other; that this natural overflow was stopped by an embankment, and in lieu thereof, by means of flood gates, the land was flooded and drained at the will of the owner. From this it is contended that the only result of the raising of the level of the river by the government works was to take away the possibility of drainage. But findings IX.

[469] and X. show that, both by seepage and *percolation through the embankment, and an actual flowing upon the plantation above the obstruction, the water has been raised in the plantation about 18 inches; that it is impossible to remove this overflow of water, and, as a consequence, the property has become an irreclaimable bog, unfit for the purpose of rice culture or any other known agriculture, and deprived of all value. It is clear from these findings that what was a valuable rice plantation has been permanently flooded, wholly destroyed in value, and turned into an irreclaimable bog; and this as the necessary result of the work which the government has undertaken. Does this amount to a taking? The case of Pumpelly v. Green Bay & M. Canal Co. 13 Wall. 166, 20 L. ed. 557, answers this question in the affirmative. And on the argument it was conceded by the learned counsel for the government (and properly conceded in view of the findings) that so far as respects the mere matter of overflow and injury there was no substantial distinction between the two cases. In that case the Green Bay Company, as authorized by statute, constructed a dam across Fox river, by means of which the land of Pumpelly was overflowed and rendered practically useless to him. There, as here, no proceedings had been taken to formally condemn the land. Referring to this it was said (p. 177, L. ed. p. 560):

"The argument of the defendant is that there is no taking of the land within the meaning of the constitutional provision, and that the damage is a consequential result of such use of a navigable stream as the government had a right to for the improvement of its navigation.

"It would be a very curious and unsatisfactory result, if in construing a provision of constitutional law, always understood to have been adopted for protection and security to the rights of the individual as against the government, and which has received the commendation of jurists, statesmen, and commentators as placing the just principles of the common law on that subject beyond the power of ordinary legislation to change or control them, it shall be held that if the government refrains from the absolute conversion of real property to the uses of the public, it can destroy its value entirely, can inflict irreparable and permanent injury to any extent; can, in effect, subject it to *total destruction without[470] making any compensation, because, in the narrowest sense of that word, it is not taken for the public use. Such a construction would pervert the constitutional provision into a restriction upon the rights of the citizen, as those rights stood at the common law, instead of the government, and make it an authority for invasion of private right under the pretext of the public good, which had no warrant in the laws or practices of our ancestors."

Reference was also made to the case of Sinnickson v. Johnson, 17 N. J. L. 129, 34 Am. Dec. 184, in respect to which it was said: "The case is mainly valuable here as showing that overflowing land by backing the water on it was considered as 'taking' it within the meaning of the principle." Again, on page 179, L. ed. p. 561, it was said: "But there are numerous authorities to sustain the doctrine that a serious interruption to the common and necessary use of property may be, in the language of Mr. Angell, in his work on Watercourses, equivalent to the taking of it, and that under the constitutional provisions it is not necessary that the land should be absolutely taken." And in a footnote the following authorities were cited: Angell, Watercourses, § 465a; Hooker v. New Haven & N. Co. 14 Conn. 146, 36 Am. Dec. 477; Rowe v. Granite Bridge Corp. 21 Pick. 344; Canal Appraisers v. People ex rel. Tibbits, 17 Wend. 604; Lackland v. North Missouri R. Co. 31 Mo. 180; Stevens v. Middlesex Canal, 12 Mass. 466.

It is clear from these authorities that where the government by the construction of a dam or other public works so floods lands belonging to an individual as to substantially destroy their value there is a taking within the scope of the 5th Amendment.

While the government does not directly proceed to appropriate the title, yet it takes away the use and value; when that is done it is of little consequence in whom the fee may be vested. Of course, it results from this that the proceeding must be regarded as an actual appropriation of the land, including the possession, the right of possession, and the fee; and when the amount awarded as compensation is paid, the title, the fee, with whatever rights may attach thereto—in this case those at least which [471] belong to a riparian proprietor—*pass to the government and it becomes henceforth the full owner.

Passing to the third question, it is contended that what was done by the government was done in improving the navigability of a navigable river, that it is given by the Constitution full control over such improvements, and that if in doing any work therefor injury results to riparian proprietors or others, it is an injury which is purely consequential, and for which the government is not liable. But if any one proposition can be considered as settled by the decisions of this court it is that, although in the discharge of its duties the government may appropriate property, it cannot do so without being liable to the obligation cast by the 5th Amendment of paying just compensation.

In Monongahela Nav. Co. v. United States, 148 U. S. 312, 336, 37 L. ed. 463, 471, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 622, 630, it was said:

"But like the other powers granted to Congress by the Constitution, the power to regulate commerce is subject to all the limitations imposed by such instrument, and among them is that of the 5th Amendment we have heretofore quoted. Congress has supreme control over the regulation of commerce, but if in exercising that supreme control it deems it necessary to take private property, then it must proceed subject to the limitations imposed by this 5th Amendment, and can take only on payment of just compensation."

In that case Congress had passed an act for condemning what was known as "the upper lock and dam of the Monongahela Navigation Company," and provided "that in estimating the sum to be paid by the United States, the franchise of said corporation to collect tolls should not be considered or estimated," but we held that this proviso was beyond the power of Congress; that it could not appropriate the property of the navigation company without paying its full value, and that a part of that value consisted in the franchise to take tolls. So in the recent case of Scranton v. Wheeler, 179 U. S. 141, 153, 45 L. ed. 126, 133, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 48, 53, we repeated the proposition in these words:

"Undoubtedly compensation must be made or secured to the owner when that which is [472] done is to be regarded as a taking *of private property for public use within the meaning of the 5th Amendment of the Constitution, and, of course, in its exercise of the power to regulate commerce, Congress 188 U. S., U. S., Book 47.

may not override the provision that just compensation must be made when private property is taken for public use."

It is true that a majority of the court held, in that case, that the destruction of access to land abutting on a navigable river by the construction by Congress of a pier on the submerged lands in front of the upland was not a taking of private property for public uses, but only an instance of consequential injury to the property of the riparian owner. But the right of compensation in case of a taking was conceded. There have been many cases in which a distinction has been drawn between the taking of property for public uses and a consequential injury to such property, by reason of some public work. In the one class the law implies a contract, a promise to pay for the property taken, which, if the taking was by the general government, will uphold an action in the court of claims; while in the other class there is simply a tortious act doing injury, over which the court of claims has no jurisdiction. Thus, in Northern Transp. Co. v. Chicago, 99 U. S. 635, 25 L. ed. 336, the city, duly authorized by statute, constructed a tunnel along the line of LaSalle street and under the Chicago river. The company claimed that it was deprived of access to its premises by and during the construction. This deprivation was not permanent, but continued only during the time necessary to complete the tunnel, and it was held that there was no taking of the property, but only an injury, and that a temporary injury thereto. In the course of the opinion, after referring to the Pumpelly Case, 13 Wall. 166, 20 L. ed. 557, and Eaton v. Boston, C. & M. R. Co. 51 N. H. 504, 12 Am. Rep. 147, we said (p. 642, L. ed. p. 338):

"In those cases, it was held that permanent flooding of private property may be regarded as a 'taking.' In those cases there was physical invasion of real estate of the private owner, and a practical ouster of his possession. But in the present case, there was no such invasion. No entry was made upon the plaintiffs' lot. All that was done was to render for a time its use more inconvenient."

**Chicago v. Taylor*, 125 U. S. 161, 31 L. [473] ed. 638, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 820, while recognizing and reaffirming the rule there laid down, was decided upon the ground that a new rule was established by the Illinois Constitution of 1870, which provided that "private property shall not be taken or damaged for public use without just compensation." Montana Co. v. St. Louis Min. & Mill. Co. 152 U. S. 160, 38 L. ed. 398, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 506, held that a mere order for inspection of mining property was not a taking thereof, because all that was done was a temporary and limited interruption of the exclusive use. Gibson v. United States, 166 U. S. 269, 41 L. ed. 996, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 578, decided that, where by the construction of a dyke by the United States in the improvement of the Ohio river the plaintiff, a riparian owner, was through the greater part of the gardening season deprived of the use of her landing for the shipment of products from and supplies to her farm, whereby the value of her farm was reduced $150 to $200 per acre, there was no taking of the property, but only a consequential injury. See also Marchant v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 153 U. S. 380, 38 L. ed. 751, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 894; Meyer v. Richmond, 172 U. S. 82, 43 L. ed. 374, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 106. In this connection Mills v. United States, 12 L. R. A. 673, 46 Fed. 738, decided in the district court for the southern district of Georgia, is worthy of notice by reason of its similarity in many respects and its clearly marked distinction in an essential matter. It was an action for injuries to a rice plantation on the banks of the Savannah river resulting from works done by the United States in improving the navigability of that river, apparently the very improvement made by the government in the present case. The condition of the claimant's rice plantation prior to the improvement was substantially that of these plaintiffs' property, and the lands were drained by opening the gates when the river was at low-water mark. The complaint was that the erection by the government of what was called the "cross-tides dam," running from the upper end of Hutchinson's island to the lower end of Argyle island, cut off all the flow of water from the stream connecting the front and back rivers, raised both the high and low water levels in the front river, and not only destroyed the facilities for draining these lands into the front river, but rendered it necessary to raise the levees around the rice fields, to prevent flooding the fields at high [474] water. *This, it was alleged, unfitted the lands for rice culture and made it necessary that new drainage into back river be provided where the water levels were suitable. Obviously, there was no taking of the plaintiff's lands, but simply an injury which could be remedied at an expense as alleged of $10,000, and the action was one to recover the amount of this consequential injury. The court rightfully held that it could not be sustained. Here there is no finding, no suggestion, that by any expense the flooding could be averted. We may, of course, know that there is theoretically no limit to that which engineering skill may accomplish. We know that vast tracts have in different parts of the world been reclaimed by levees and other works, and so we may believe that this flooding may be prevented, that some day all these submerged lands may be reclaimed. But as a practical matter, and for the purposes of this case, we must, under the findings, regard the lands in controversy as irreclaimable and their value wholly and finally destroyed.

Therefore, following the settled law of this court, we hold that there has been a taking of the lands for public uses, and that the government is under an implied contract to make just compensation therefor.

The judgment is affirmed.

Mr. Justice Brown concurring:

I concur in the opinion of the court, both with respect to its jurisdiction and the merits of the case, but I am unable to assent to the ground upon which our jurisdiction is rested. While I think the overflowing of the lands in controversy constitutes a taking within the meaning of the 5th Amendment to the Constitution, I see no reason for holding that there was an implied contract to pay for them within the meaning of the Tucker act. The taking appears to me an ordinary case of trespass to real estate, containing no element whatever of contract. In such case there can be no waiver of the tort. Jones v. Hoar, 5 Pick. 285; Smith v. Hatch, 46 N. H. 146.

*But I think our jurisdiction may be supported, irrespective of the question of contract or tort, under that clause of the Tucker act which vests the court of claims with jurisdiction of "all claims founded upon the Constitution of the United States or any law of Congress."

As we had occasion to remark in Dooley v. United States, 182 U. S. 222-224, 45 L. ed. 1074, 1078, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 762, the 1st section of the Tucker act [24 Stat. at L. 505, chap. 359, U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 752], evidently contemplates four distinct classes of cases: (1) Those founded upon the Constitution or any law of Congress, with an exception of pension cases; (2) cases founded upon a regulation of an Executive Department; (3) cases of contract, express or implied, with the government; (4) actions for damages, liquidated or unliquidated, in cases not sounding in tort. The words "not sounding in tort" are in terms referable only to the fourth class of cases.

In my view, claims founded upon the Constitution may be prosecuted in the court of claims, whether sounding in contract or in tort; and wherever the United States may take proceedings in eminent domain for the condemnation of lands for public use, the owner of such lands may seek relief in the court of claims if his lands be taken without such proceedings, whether such taking be tortious or by virtue of some contract, express or implied, to that effect. That the case under consideration is one of that class is made clear by the act of April 24, 1888 (25 Stat. at L. 94, chap. 194, U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 3525), which enacts "that the Secretary of War may cause proceedings to be instituted, in the name of the United States, in any court having jurisdiction of such proceedings, for the acquirement by condemnation of any land, right of way, or material needed to enable him to maintain, operate, or prosecute works for the improvement of rivers and harbors for which provision has been made by law; such proceedings to be prosecuted in accordance with the laws relating to suits for the condemnation of property of the states wherein the proceedings may be instituted."

I fully concur in the opinion of the court that "the government may take real estate for a postoffice, a courthouse, a fortification, or a highway, or in time of war it may take merchant vessels and make them part of its naval force," but this cannot *be "done with- [476] out an obligation to pay for the value of that which is so taken and appropriated." I am also of opinion that whenever in the exercise of its governmental rights it takes property the ownership of which it concedes to be in an individual, it is bound to pay therefor, but I do not think that there is any distinction between cases where the government impliedly promises to pay by taking property with the assent of the owner, and those where it takes property forcibly and against the will of the owner. It does not seem reasonable to hold that, where the invasion of the owner's right to property is the greater, his remedy for the recovery of its value should be less, and that he should be compelled to resort to the tedious and unsatisfactory method of appealing to the bounty of Congress for relief.

Suppose, for instance, in time of war and under threat of invasion it seizes upon vessels without the consent of the owner and against his protest. There is certainly the same moral obligation to pay for them as if they had been appropriated with his consent, and I see no reason why an action for their value may not be maintained in the court of claims. Yet, as I understand the opinion of the court in this case, it holds indirectly, if not directly, that no such action would lie unless the property were taken with the consent of the owner and under an implied contract to pay for it. The consequences of recognizing such distinctions seem to me so serious that nothing short of clear language in the statute will justify it.

None such is even hinted at in United States v. Russell, 13 Wall. 623, 20 L. ed. 474, one of the earliest cases, wherein the owner of three steamers seized under "imperative military necessity" sought to recover compensation for their services. These steamers were impressed into the public service and employed as transports for carrying government freight for a certain length of time, when they were returned to the owner. He was held entitled to recover, the court holding that "extraordinary and unforeseen occasions arise, however, beyond all doubt, in cases of extreme necessity, in time of war, or of immediate and impending public danger, in which private property may be impressed into the public service, or may be seized and appropriated to the public [477] use, *or may be even destroyed without the consent of the owner." The case followed that of Mitchell v. Harmony, 13 How. 115, 14 L. ed. 75, and was distinguished from that of Filor v. United States, 9 Wall. 45, 19 L. ed. 549.

While the cases reported prior to 131 U. S. are based upon the original court of claims act, which limited the jurisdiction of that court to "claims founded upon any law of Congress, or upon any regulation of an Executive Department, or upon any contract, express or implied, with the government of the United States," and are therefore not strictly pertinent under the Tucker act, that of the Great Falls Mfg. Co. 112 U. S. 645, 28 L. ed. 846, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 306, is almost exactly in point, and is strongly corroborative of the position here taken. 188 U. S.

This was a claim for land taken at the Great Falls of the Potomac in the construction of an aqueduct for bringing water to Washington. Proceedings were taken in Maryland for condemnation, which were discontinued, and the government took possession of the land. Whether such possession was taken with or without the consent of the owner does not appear, although there had been negotiations between the parties. The claimant was held to be entitled to recover upon the ground that the appropriation of the money for the construction of the improvements was equivalent to an express direction by Congress to take this particular property for the objects contemplated by the scheme, and that there was no sound reason why the claimant might not waive any right he might have to an injunction, and elect to regard the action as a taking by the government under its sovereign right of eminent domain, and therefore demand compensation. The case was not put upon the ground that the owner had consented to the taking.

In Langford's Case, 101 U. S. 341, 25 L. ed. 1010, the action was brought to recover for the use and occupation of certain lands and buildings to which the claimant asserted title, which were seized for the use of the government under claim that they were public property. It was admitted that if the government takes property for public use, acknowledging its ownership to be private or individual, there arises an implied obligation to pay the owner its value; but that it was a different matter when the government *claimed the property as its own [478] and recognized no superior title. This was also the case in Hill v. United States, 149 U. S. 593, 37 L. ed. 862, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1011, where the government erected a lighthouse upon submerged land which it claimed as its own. The case was held to be governed by that of Langford.

None of the more recent cases under the Tucker act conflicts with the position here taken: That wherever the United States may proceed to condemn property under its sovereign right of eminent domain, the owner may maintain a petition in the court of claims to recover its value, in case no such proceedings are taken. That act (24 Stat. at L. 505, chap. 359, U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 752), first introduced among the cognizable claims all such as were founded upon the Constitution of the United States, and also introduced, after the words "for damages, liquidated or unliquidated," the words "in cases not sounding in tort." Construing this statute, it was held in the Jones Case, 131 U. S. 1, 33 L. ed. 90, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 669, that it did not confer jurisdiction in equity to compel the issue and delivery of a patent for public land; and in Schilling's Case, 155 U. S. 163, 39 L. ed. 108, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 85, that the owner of a patent which had been infringed by the United States could not recover damages for such infringement in the court of claims, though it would be otherwise if the property had been appropriated with the consent of the patentee and in view of compensation therefor. Although there was in Schilling-er's Case an appropriation of the right of a patentee to the monopoly of his invention, the case was nothing more in its essence than the infringement of a patent, and so the action was really one for damages sounding in tort. While it is possible an individual might be able to condemn the patentee's right by proceedings in eminent domain, that remedy would be at least doubtful, when the government sought merely to appropriate so much of it as was necessary for its own use. It would be an unprecedented exercise of the right of eminent domain, and could scarcely be held to be a claim arising under the Constitution. The case was not put upon the ground that it was such a case, but that it was merely an action to recover damages for infringement. Said the court: "It is plainly and solely an action for an infringement" and one sounding in tort. The question whether it was a claim arising under the Consti-

[479] tution was not *considered, except in the dissenting opinion of Mr. Justice Harlan, who said: "The constitutional obligation cannot be evaded by showing that the original appropriation was without the express direction of the government, nor by simply interposing a denial of the title of the claimant to the property, or property rights alleged to have been appropriated." If there were any doubt in that case of the power of the government to condemn the right of the patentee by proceedings in eminent domain, there is certainly none such in this case, where the land was taken by the government with no pretense of consent by the owner.

I think it is going too far to hold that the words of the Tucker act, "not sounding in tort," must be referred back to the first class of cases, namely, "those founded upon the Constitution," and that they should be limited to actions for damages, liquidated or unliquidated, and, hence, the consent of the owner cuts no figure in this case. I freely admit that, if property were seized or taken by officers of the government without authority of law, or subsequent ratification, by taking possession or occupying property for public use, there could be no recovery, since neither the government nor any other principal is bound by the unauthorized acts of its agents. But in endeavoring to raise an implied contract to pay for an ordinary trespass to real estate, I think the opinion of the court misconceives the true source of our jurisdiction.

Mr. Justice Shiras and Mr. Justice Peckham concurred in the above opinion in so far as it holds that the court had jurisdiction on the ground stated therein, as well as upon the ground stated in the opinion of the court.

Mr. Justice White, with whom concurs Mr. Chief Justice Fuller and Mr. Justice Harlan, dissenting:

The court now holds that it has jurisdiction, because, as a *legal conclusion from the findings of fact, it is held that the property of the appellee has been taken for public use by the United States, and the judgment below is affirmed on the merits for the same reason. As, in my opinion, the findings of fact do not support the conclusion that the property has been taken by the United States, I dissent both on the subject of jurisdiction and on the merits.

The findings of fact are in most respects sufficiently reproduced in the opinion of the court, and need not here be set out in full. It results from the findings that the land is situated on the Savannah river; that it is between high and low water mark, and naturally subject to be overflowed, but that it is protected in some measure from overflow by an embankment, and that through this embankment sluices or water ways were placed, by means of which water was let in on the land for irrigation in the cultivation of rice, and was drawn off when the land was required to be drained in order to carry on the same culture. This was done by gates in the sluices, which were opened to allow the water to flow through the water ways to the inner side of the embankment and thus flood the land when it was requisite to do so, and by opening the gates at low tide to allow the water to flow off when it was required to drain the land. As the exact situation of the water ways through the embankment is important, I reproduce the statement on the subject contained in the findings:

"Through this embankment trunks or water ways were constructed, with flood gates therein. The outer opening of the trunk was about a foot or a little less above the mean low-water mark of the river, in which the tide ebbs and flows. When it is desired to flow the lands the flood gates are opened and the water comes in. When it is desired to draw off this water and to effect the drainage of the lands, the flood gates are opened at low water and the water escapes. It is essential that the outlets of the trunks or water ways should be above the mean low-water mark."

It is now decided that there has been a taking of the property by the United States, because it is thought that the findings establish that the obstructions placed by the government *in the bed of the river at a [481] point lower down the stream than is, the plantation, for the purpose of improving the navigation of the river, have so raised the water as to cause it to flow over the embankment at the plantation and flood the same, thus destroying its value. On this subject the court says: "Findings IX. and X. show that both by seepage and percolation through the embankment and the actual flowing upon the plantation above the obstructions, the water has been raised in the plantation above 18 inches," etc. Whilst it is not disputable that the findings show a percolation through the embankment, I can discover nothing in them supporting the conclusion that the obstructions placed by the government in the bed of the river below the point where the plantation is situated have caused the water in the river to go over the embankment at the plantation and flood the land. On the contrary, to me it seems that the findings necessitate the conclusion that the permanent damage which the property has suffered arises solely from the fact that the drainage of the plantation into the river has been rendered impossible. And this because the work done by the government has resulted in raising the mean low tide about 12 to 15 inches, so as to cause the water in the river at mean low tide to be above the point of discharge of the water ways, thus rendering drainage through them no longer possible. There may be a wide legal difference arising from damage consequent on an interference with the drainage of property situated, as this is, by work done by the government in the improvement of navigation, and damage caused by the actual flooding of such property resulting from such work. To determine whether the findings show an actual flowing, or a mere injury to drainage, findings VIII., IX., and X. need to be considered. Let us see whether they give support to the claim of actual flooding by an overflow of the embankment at the plantation. Finding VIII. says:

[482] "VIII. In thus improving navigation of this navigable water, the United States has built and maintained and is now building and maintaining in and across the Savannah river, in the bed thereof, certain dams, training walls, and other obstructions, obstructing the natural flow of said river in and along its natural bed, *and so raising the level of said river above said obstructions, and causing its waters to be kept back and to flow back, and to be elevated above its natural height in its natural bed."

Certainly there is nothing in this finding supporting the inference that the government work has caused the river to overflow the plantation embankment. Finding IX. says:

"This rice plantation Verzenobre is above these obstructions. The direct effect thereof is to raise the level of the Savannah river at this plantation, and to keep the point of mean low water above its natural point, so that the outlet of the trunks and water ways above spoken of in the bank of said plantation, instead of being above this point of low-water mark, is now below this point."

Here, then, is the statement that the effect resulting from the government work was simply to raise the mean low-water mark as previously existing, so as to cause it to cover the water ways which were—as declared by the previous finding—a little less than a foot above the former low-water mark. The finding continues:

"Another direct result was that by seepage and percolation the water rose in the plantation until the water level in the land gradually rose to the height of the increased water level in the river, and the superinduced addition of water in the plantation was about 18 inches thereby. By reason of this it gradually became difficult, and has now become impossible, to let off the water on this plantation, or to drain the same, so that these acres, dedicated to the culture of rice, have become boggy, unfit for cultivation, and impossible to be cultivated in rice."

This but declares that because the mean low stage of the water had been raised by the government work so as to cause it to be about 8 inches above the mouth of the water ways and to rest against the embankment about 18 inches, that percolation took place and the drainage was destroyed, the result of the loss of drainage being to render the plantation a bog and no longer suitable for the cultivation of rice. It is submitted nothing in the findings hitherto referred to even intimates *that the effect of the [483] work of the government caused the water to flow over the embankment and flood the plantation. On the contrary, the very opposite is the result of the findings.

Let me next consider the 10th finding. It reads as follows:

"By the raising of the level of the Savannah river by these dams and obstructions, the water thereof has been backed up against the embankment on the river and has been caused to flow back upon and in this plantation above the obstruction, and has actually invaded said plantation, directly raising the water in said plantation about 18 inches, which it is impossible to remove from said plantation."

Now, the flowing described here can only relate to the seepage and percolation referred to in the previous finding. The words "above the obstructions" relate, not to the embankment on the plantation, but to the obstructions put in the bed of the river by the government below the point where the plantation is situated; and, therefore, what the finding means is that above this obstruction the water is caused to flow back against, not over, the embankment, as described in the previous finding. And this finding shows besides that it was the impossibility of removing the water which percolated or was the result of rain fall—in other words, the injury to the drainage—which was the cause of the damage.

Thus, eliminating all question of the flooding of the land by the overflow of the embankment, the question for decision is this: When a plantation or a portion thereof is situated on the bank of a navigable river, below high-water mark, and because of such situation is dependent for its profitable operation upon drainage into the river at mean low tide, does the United States appropriate the property by the simple fact that in improving the navigation of the river it raises the mean low tide slightly above the height where it was wont theretofore to be, and by reason of which the drainage of the land below high-water mark is destroyed? It seems to me to state this question is to answer it in the negative. The owner of the land situated below high-water mark acquired no easement or servitude in the bed of the river by the construction of an embankment along *the margin of [484] his land at the river below high water, by which he could forever exact that the level of the water within the natural banks of the river could never be changed without his consent, and thus deprive the United States of its control over the improvement of navigable rivers conferred by the Constitution. If damage by the loss of drainage into the river at mean low tide of land so situated was caused by the lawful exercise by the United States of its power to improve navigation it was damnum absque injuria, and redress must be sought at the hands of Congress, and cannot be judicially afforded by a ruling that a damage so resulting constitutes a taking of the property by the United States, and creates an implied contract to pay the value of the property. Such a doctrine is directly—as I see it—in conflict with the decisions of this court in Gibson v. United States, 166 U. S. 269, 41 L. ed. 996, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 578, and Scranton v. Wheeler, 179 U. S. 141, 45 L. ed. 126, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 48. The far-reaching consequence of the doctrine now announced cannot be overestimated.

But even under the hypothesis that the government work caused the land to be overflowed by raising the water above the embankment, I do not conceive that there would be a taking, even in that case, of the property, for a remedy would be easily afforded for any permanent injury to the land by raising the embankment. The quantum of damages would thus not be the value of the property, but the mere cost of increasing the height of the embankment so as to prevent the water from flowing over it. The fact, then, that a taking is now held to exist, and therefore the United States is compelled to pay the value of the entire property, submits the United States, in the exercise of a power conferred upon it by the Constitution, to a rule which no individual would be subjected to in a controversy between private parties. Nor is this answered by the suggestion that there is a taking because the paying by the United States of the sum of money necessary to raise the level of the embankment so as to prevent the overflow would not compensate the owner, as the property would still be worthless because of the want of drainage. To so suggest is but to admit that the damage complained of results from the inability to drain the land, which, for the reasons already pointed out does not, in my opinion, constitute a taking.

[485] *Indeed, the reasoning hitherto indicated as to the assumed overflow of the embankment is equally apposite to the damage by loss of drainage. For injury to the drainage the remedy would be readily afforded by, if possible, draining the plantation elsewhere than into the river, or by resort to the pumping appliances necessary to lift out the water accumulating from rainfall or percolation. The cost of doing these things would then be the measure of damages. That a resort to these simple expedients is unavailing as to this particular property because of its being situated below high-water mark does not, I submit, show that the government has taken the property for public use, but simply establishes that the property is so situated that it is subjected to a loss necessarily arising from the fact that it is below high-water mark and therefore absolutely dependent for its drainage on the right of the owner to exact that the mean low tide of the river should be forever unchanged. As the right to so exact does not exist, the loss of drainage does not constitute an appropriation of the property by the United States, and is but the result of the natural situation of the land. If equities exist, Congress is alone capable of providing for them.

I am authorized to say that the Chief Justice and Mr. Justice Harlan concur in this dissent.

Mr. Justice McKenna took no part in the decision of this case.

UNITED STATES

v.

CHARLES A. WILLIAMS et al.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 485.)

Courts—jurisdiction of circuit court—suit against United States—compensation for property taken for public use—destruction of value in improving navigation.

This case is governed by the decision in United States v. Lynah, ante, 539.

[No. 59.]

Argued October 30, 31, 1902. Ordered for reargument December 22, 1902. Reargued January 9, 1903. Decided January 26, 1903.

IN ERROR to the Circuit Court of the United States for the District of South Carolina to review a judgment for plaintiff in a suit to recover from the United States compensation for the destruction of real property by an improvement in navigation. Affirmed.

Mr. Robert A. Howard argued the cause, and, with Solicitor General Richards, filed a brief for plaintiff in error.

For their contentions see their briefs as reported in United States v. Lynah, ante, 539.

Mr. Julian Mitchell, Jr., argued the cause, and, with Messrs. Julian Mitchell and Henry A. M. Smith, filed a brief for defendants in error:

Under the facts of this case there has been a "taking."

Pumpelly v. Green Bay & M. Canal Co. 13 Wall. 177, 20 L. ed. 560.

The finding of the court below that the flooding was a direct result of the government works, and not a consequential injury, is conclusive on this court.

United States v. Alexander, 148 U. S. 192, 37 L. ed. 417, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 529; Saulet v. Shephard, 4 Wall. 507, 18 L. ed. 446.

The principle of the Pumpelly Case has never been modified.

Mugler v. Kansas, 123 U. S. 667, 31 L. ed. 212, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 273; Gibson v. United States, 166 U. S. 275, 41 L. ed. 1002, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 578; Meyer v. Richmond, 188 U. S.

172 U. S. 96, 43 L. ed. 379, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 106; Scranton v. Wheeler, 179 U. S. 154, 45 L. ed. 134, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 48; United States v. Alexander, 148 U. S. 187, 37 L. ed. 416, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 529.

The 5th Amendment to the Federal Constitution should be construed liberally.

1 Bl. Com. p. 139; Sinnickson v. Johnson, 17 N. J. L. 129, 34 Am. Dec. 184; Eaton v. Boston, C. & M. R. Co. 51 N. H. 504, 12 Am. Rep. 147.

Power to regulate commerce is limited by such amendment.

Monongahela Nav. Co. v. United States, 148 U. S. 336, 37 L. ed. 471, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 622; Scranton v. Wheeler, 179 U. S. 153, 45 L. ed. 133, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 48; Yates v. Milwaukee, 10 Wall. 504, 19 L. ed. 986.

This court has distinctly recognized the right to, and effect of, reclamation of lands between high and low water mark.

Boston v. Lecraw, 17 How. 433, 15 L. ed. 121; Richardson v. Boston, 19 How. 269, 15 L. ed. 642; Hanford v. St. Paul & D. R. Co. 43 Minn. 110, 7 L. R. A. 722, 44 N. W. 1145.

Mr. Julian Mitchell, Jr., with Mr. J. P. Kennedy Bryan, counsel for defendants in error in United States v. Lynah, ante, 539, filed a joint brief for defendants in error.

For their contentions see their brief as reported in United States v. Lynah.

Mr. Justice Brewer delivered the opinion of the court:

This case is in all substantial respects similar to the one just decided [United States v. Lynah, 188 U. S. 445, ante, 539, 23 Sup. Ct. Rep. 349], and for the reasons given in the opinion therein the judgment is affirmed.

For the reasons stated in their dissenting opinion in the prior case, the Chief Justice, Mr. Justice Harlan and Mr. Justice White dissent also in this case.

Mr. Justice McKenna took no part in the decision of this case.

[486] *EDWARD H. CLARKE, Petitioner,
v.

WILBUR LARREMORE, Trustee in Bankruptcy of Raymond W. Kenney, Bankrupt.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 486-490.)

Bankruptcy act—four months' clause—lien of execution creditor on proceeds of sale.

The proceeds in the hands of a sheriff, realized from a sale under an execution, are released from the claim of the execution creditor by the filing of a petition in bankruptcy against the debtor within four months after the judgment is rendered, by virtue of the provisions of the bankruptcy act of 1898, § 67, subd. 1 (30 Stat. at L. 544, 565, chap. 541, U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 3450), that all liens obtained against an insolvent through legal proceedings within four months prior to the filing of a petition in bankruptcy against him "shall be deemed null and void in case he is adjudged a bankrupt," and that the property affected thereby shall be deemed wholly discharged and released therefrom.

[No. 51.]

Argued October 20, 1902. Restored to docket for submission to full bench November 17, 1902. Submitted December 15, 1902. Decided February 23, 1903.

ON WRIT of Certiorari to the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit to review a judgment which affirmed an order of the District Judge for the Southern District of New York restraining a sheriff from paying over the proceeds of an execution sale to the execution creditor, and an order directing the sheriff to pay such proceeds to the trustee in bankruptcy of the judgment debtor. Affirmed.
See same case below, 45 C. C. A. 113, 105 Fed. 897.

Statement by Mr. Justice Brewer:

On January 23, 1899, the petitioner, the owner of certain notes of Raymond W. Kenney, commenced an action thereon in the supreme court of the state of New York. On March 6, 1899, he recovered judgment for the sum of $20,906.66. An execution, issued thereon, was by the sheriff of the county of New York levied upon a stock of goods and fixtures belonging to Kenney. A sheriff's sale thereof, had on March 15, 1899, realized $12,451.09. Shortly after the levy of the execution Leon Abbett sued out in the same court a writ of attachment against the property of Kenney, and caused it to be levied upon the same stock and fixtures. Immediately thereafter, claiming that the debt in judgment was a fraudulent one, he commenced in aid of his attachment an injunction suit to prevent the further enforcement of the judgment, and obtained a temporary order restraining the sheriff from paying petitioner the money received upon the execution sale. Upon a hearing the supreme court decided that the debt was just and honest, and on April 13, 1899, set aside the restraining order. On the same day, and before the sheriff had returned the execution or paid the money collected on it, a petition in involuntary bankruptcy against Kenney was filed in the United States district court for the southern district of New York, and an order made by the district judge restraining the sheriff from paying the money to Clarke, the execution creditor. 95 Fed. 427. Kenney was thereafter adjudged a bankrupt, and on November 25, 1899, the plaintiff having been appointed trustee in bankruptcy, the district judge entered a further order directing the sheriff to pay the money to the trustee. 97 Fed. 555. On review, the United States circuit court of appeals for the second circuit affirmed these orders of the district judge (45 C. C. A. 113, 105 Fed. 897), and thereupon a certiorari was granted by this court. 180 U. S. 640, 45 L. ed. 711, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 927.

Section 67, subdivision f, of the bankrupt act of 1898 (30 Stat. at L. 544, 565, chap. 541, U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 3450), reads:

"That all levies, judgments, attachments, or other liens, obtained through legal proceedings against a person who is insolvent, at any time within four months prior to the filing of a petition in bankruptcy against him, shall be deemed null and void in case he is adjudged a bankrupt, and the property affected by the levy, judgment, attachment, or other lien shall be deemed wholly discharged and released from the same, and shall pass to the trustee as a part of the estate of the bankrupt, unless the court shall, on due notice, order that the right under such levy, judgment, attachment, or other lien shall be preserved for the benefit of the estate; and thereupon the same may pass to and shall be preserved by the trustee for the benefit of the estate as aforesaid. And the court may order such conveyance as shall be necessary to carry the purposes of this section into effect: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall have the effect to destroy or impair the title obtained by such levy, judgment, attachment, or other lien of a bona fide purchaser for value who shall have acquired the same without notice or reasonable cause for inquiry."

Mr. S. Livingston Samuels argued the cause and filed a brief for petitioner:

It is the levy which perfects the lien of the execution, and retains such lien until a sale, for the purpose of allowing the title of the purchaser to relate back to it.

Bond v. Willett, 1 Keyes, 377.

While the personal property continues to rest under the levy, the judgment debtor remains the owner thereof, and he can convey title subject to the lien of the execution.

Mumper v. Rushmore, 79 N. Y. 19; Ansonia Brass & Copper Co. v. Conner, 103 N. Y. 502, 9 N. E. 238.

The sheriff, by virtue of his proceedings, becomes a debtor to the execution creditor.

Turner v. Fendall, 1 Cranch, 117, 2 L. ed. 53.

The specific money collected by the sheriff belongs to him in his official capacity, and if it is lost before payment to the judgment creditor, the loss falls on the officer.

Phillips v. Lamar, 27 Ga. 228, 73 Am. Dec. 731; Shaw v. Bauman, 34 Ohio St. 32; Gilmore v. Moore, 30 Ga. 628; United States v. Dashiell, 4 Wall. 182, 18 L. ed. 319.

The execution sale satisfies the debt.

United States v. Dashiell, 3 Wall. 688, 18 L. ed. 268; Taylor v. Rannacy, 4 Hill, 621.

A sheriff collecting money under an execution becomes a debtor to the creditor for the amount collected, and thereby the latter acquires a cause of action against him for money had and received without demand.

Brewster v. Van Ness, 18 Johns 133; Dygert v. Crane, 1 Wend. 534; People v. Dunning, 1 Wend. 16; Walden v. Davison, 15 Wend. 575; Denton v. Livingston, 9 Johns. 96, 6 Am. Dec. 264; Armstrong v.

Garrow, 6 Cow. 465; Townsend v. Olin, 5 Wend. 207.

The creditor recovers in such an action, not only the amount collected by the sheriff, but interest thereon as on any other debt.

Slingerland v. Swart, 13 Johns. 225; Crane v. Dygert, 4 Wend. 675.

The sheriff, therefore, is in the same position as a bank to whom a depositor has paid money. The depositor loses his title to the specific moneys which he deposits in the bank, even if they can be identified, and they could not be levied on under an execution against him, even if the bank were to pick them out and set them aside for the purpose of such levy (Carroll v. Cone, 40 Barb. 220); but he has a cause of action against the bank for the amount of his deposit, and his claim against the bank could be attached as a chose in action.

It has been held that the claim of a judgment creditor against a sheriff for money collected by the latter under the former's execution can be attached as the creditor's chose in action.

Wehle v. Conner, 83 N. Y. 231.

The sheriff is the agent of the creditor.

Nelson v. Kerr, 59 N. Y. 224.

So clearly is the money collected by the sheriff on execution the property of the execution creditor, that, if the sheriff has by mistake paid the money over to a third party, the execution creditor, and not the sheriff, can sue the latter for the money as his own.

Kingston Bank v. Eltinge, 40 N. Y. 391, 100 Am. Dec. 516; Haebler v. Myers, 132 N. Y. 363, 15 L. R. A. 588, 30 N. E. 963.

The creditor may sue for the money as soon as it is made, even before the return day.

Rogers v. Sumner, 16 Pick. 387; Morland v. Pellatt, 8 Barn. & C. 722; Higgins v. M'Adam, 3 Younge & J. 1.

The act of 1841 vested title as of the date of the adjudication.

Ex parte Bennet, 1 Clark (Pa.) 28, Fed. Cas. No. 1,309; Ex parte Dudley, 1 Clark (Pa.) 96, Fed. Cas. No. 4,114; Miller v. Black, 1 Pa. St. 420; Smith v. ———, 4 Edw. Ch. 653; Berthelon v. Betts, 4 Hill, 577; Buckingham v. McLean, 13 How. 151, 14 L. ed. 90.

Before sale, the execution creditor has no property rights.

Scott v. Morgan, 94 N. Y. 508.

In case of loss of the property levied on, however, it falls on the creditor, not on the debtor.

Peck v. Tiffany, 2 N. Y. 451; United States v. Dashiell, 3 Wall. 688, 18 L. ed. 268; Re Dawson, 110 N. Y. 114, 17 N. E. 668.

Collection by the sheriff is payment to the execution creditor.

Hoover v. Wise, 91 U. S. 308, 23 L. ed. 392; Re Easley, 93 Fed. 419.

The doctrine of relation is not favored in its application to bankruptcy law.

Case v. De Goes, 3 Cal. 261; Johnston v. Jones, 1 Black, 210, 17 L. ed. 117; Jackson ex dem. Henderson v. Davenport, 20 Johns. 537.

Where the right of relation has been claimed by construction or implication only, under the bankruptcy acts, the courts have uniformly refused to make any such construction to the injury of third parties.

Rathbone v. Blackford, 1 Cal. 588; Higgins v. M'Adam, 3 Younge & J. 1; Conner v. Long, 104 U. S. 228, 26 L. ed. 723.

The intention of the section in question is to avoid merely the lien of the attachment or judgment.

Doyle v. Heath, 22 R. I. 213, 47 Atl. 213, 4 Am. Bankr. Rep. 705; Re Beaver Coal Co. 6 Am. Bankr. Rep. 404.

Its failure to mention executions shows to a demonstration that it did not intend to interfere with an execution which had already advanced beyond the stage of the "levy" and had been completed by a sale.

Botts v. Hammond, 40 C. C. A. 179, 99 Fed. 916.

The proviso to § 67, subd. f, applies to a judicial sale occurring after the adjudication, and protects an innocent purchaser, but not the sheriff.

Jones v. Stevens, 94 Me. 582, 48 Atl. 170, 5 Am. Bankr. Rep. 571.

In the case of an attachment the proceeds of the sale remain in the hands of the sheriff subject to the lien of the attachment, which is conditional and dependent upon the rendition of judgment in favor of the creditor.

Miller v. Bowles, 58 N. Y. 253 (decided under the act of 1867); Pratt v. Law, 9 Cranch. 456, 3 L. ed. 791.

The attachment creditor's rights to such proceeds before judgment are exactly the same as they were with reference to the property attached before it was sold. In the case of an execution, however, the sale absolutely at once satisfies the debt, and the right of the creditor to the proceeds in the hands of the sheriff is complete.

The creditor's rights under a prior execution are not opposed to the object of the bankrupt law.

Clark v. Iselin, 21 Wall. 360, 22 L. ed. 568; Pirie v. Chicago Title & T. Co. 182 U. S. 438, 45 L. ed. 1171, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 906.

The judgment is valid and unaffected by the bankruptcy proceedings.

Re Pease, 4 Am. Bankr. Rep. 547.

The nullification of the lien alone is effected by the adjudication in bankruptcy, and in order that that effect should be produced the lien must be in existence at the time of the adjudication, and must not have become functus officio by a previous sale.

Peck v. Connell, 6 Am. Bankr. Rep. 93.

Mr. S. Livingston Samuels also filed a brief for petitioner on submission to full bench:

"Deem," when used in a statute, means to "adjudge."

Blaufus v. People, 69 N. Y. 107, 25 Am. Rep. 148; State v. Price, 11 N. J. L. 203.

In the construction of statutes the general words in one clause may be restrained by the particular words in a subsequent clause of the same statute.

Covington v. McNickle, 18 B. Mon. 262; 188 U. S.

Atkins v. Fibre Disintegrating Co. 18 Wall. 272, 21 L. ed. 841.

The inquiry is not as to the abstract force of the words used, but as to the sense in which the legislature intended to use them; and this sense is to be collected from the context; and a narrower or more extended meaning will be given according to the intention thus indicated.

McIntyre v. Ingraham, 35 Miss. 25.

The word "all" is frequently to be restrained in an act, not only by the context but by the general form and scheme of the statute as demonstrative of the intention of the legislature.

Phillips v. State, 15 Ga. 518.

In statutes as well as in common parlance, the word "all" is a general, rather than a universal, term, and is to be understood in one sense or the other according to the demands of sound reason.

Stone v. Elliott, 11 Ohio St. 252; Kieffer v. Ehler, 18 Pa. 388.

Where a particular construction of a statute will occasion great inconvenience, or produce inequality or injustice, that view is to be avoided if another and more reasonable interpretation is present in the statute.

Knoulton v. Moore, 178 U. S. 41, 44 L. ed. 969, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 747.

Mr. Nelson S. Spencer argued the cause and filed a brief for respondent:

Petitioner recovered his judgment subject to the operation of the bankrupt act, and the provisions of that act must be read into his judgment contract.

Mather v. Bush, 16 Johns. 233, 8 Am. Dec. 313; Walker v. Whitehead, 16 Wall. 314, 21 L. ed. 357; Barnitz v. Beverly, 163 U. S. 118, 41 L. ed. 93, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1042; Bronson v. Kinzie, 1 How. 311, 11 L. ed. 143.

A void judgment may be such ab initio, in which case all acts performed under it, and all claims growing out of it, are also void, and it may be wholly disregarded (Freeman, Judgm. 4th ed. § 117); or it may be such because of a fact subsequent, or of error.

While it is unreversed it is valid and a protection to the sheriff. A bona fide purchaser on a sale made by its authority is protected, but the proceeds must be restored to the judgment debtor, or to anyone who has succeeded to his rights.

Bank of United States v. Bank of Washington, 6 Pet. 8, 8 L. ed. 299; Northwestern Fuel Co. v. Brock, 139 U. S. 216, 35 L. ed. 151, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 523; Haebler v. Myers, 132 N. Y. 363, 15 L. R. A. 588, 30 N. E. 963; Conner v. Long, 104 U. S. 228, 26 L. ed. 723.

Mr. Justice Brewer delivered the opinion of the court:

The contention of the petitioner is that—
 *—"The sheriff having sold the goods levied [488] on before the filing of the petition in bankruptcy, the proceeds of the sale were the property of the plaintiff in execution, and not of the bankrupt, at the time of the adjudication, and the trustee, therefore, has no title to the same."

This contention cannot be sustained. The judgment in favor of petitioner against Kenney was not like that in Metcalf Bros. v. Barker, 187 U. S. 165, ante, 122, 23 Sup. Ct. Rep. 67, one giving effect to a lien theretofore existing, but one which, with the levy of an execution issued thereon, created the lien; and as judgment, execution, and levy were all within four months prior to the filing of the petition in bankruptcy, the lien created thereby became null and void on the adjudication of bankruptcy. This nullity and invalidity relate back to the time of the entry of the judgment, and affect that and all subsequent proceedings. The language of the statute is not "when" but "in case he is adjudged a bankrupt," and the lien obtained through these legal proceedings was by the adjudication rendered null and void from its inception. Further, the statute provides that "the property affected by"—not the property subject to—the lien is wholly discharged and released therefrom. It is true that the stock and fixtures, the property originally belonging to the bankrupt, had been sold, but having, so far as the record shows, passed to a "bona fide purchaser for value," it remained by virtue of the last clause of the section the property of the purchaser, unaffected by the bankruptcy proceedings. But the money received by the sheriff took the place of that property.

It is said that that money was not the property of the bankrupt, but of the creditor in the execution. Doubtless as between the judgment creditor and debtor, and while the execution remained in force, the money could not be considered the property of the debtor, and could not be appropriated to the payment of his debts as against the rights of the judgment creditor, but it had not become the property absolutely of the creditor. The writ of execution had not been fully executed. Its command to the sheriff was to seize the property of the judgment debtor, sell it, and pay the proceeds over to the creditor. The time within which that was to be done had not elapsed, and the execution *was still in his hands, not fully executed. The rights of the creditor were still subject to interception. Suppose, for instance, there being no bankruptcy proceedings, the judgment had been reversed by an appellate court and the mandate of reversal filed in the trial court; could it for a moment be claimed that, notwithstanding the reversal of the judgment, the money in the hands of the sheriff belonged to the judgment creditor, and could be recovered by him, or that it was the duty of the sheriff to pay it to him? The purchaser at the sheriff's sale might keep possession of the property which he had purchased, but the money received as the proceeds of such sale would undoubtedly belong and be paid over to the judgment debtor. The bankruptcy proceedings operated in the same way. They took away the foundation upon which the rights of the creditor, obtained by judgment, execution, levy, and sale, rested. The duty of the sheriff to pay the money over to the judgment creditor was gone and that money became the property of the bankrupt, and was subject to the control of his representative in bankruptcy.

It was held in Turner v. Fendall, 1 Cranch, 116, 2 L. ed. 53, that money collected by a sheriff on an execution could not be levied upon under execution placed in his hands against the judgment creditor, and that the latter could maintain an action against the sheriff for a failure to pay the money thus collected. A similar ruling was made in New York (Baker v. Kenworthy, 41 N. Y. 215), in which it appeared that a sheriff had collected money on an execution in favor of one Brooks; that he returned the execution without paying the money to Brooks, but, on the contrary, levied upon it under an execution against Brooks, and it was held that such levy did not release him from liability to Brooks. It was said in the opinion (p. 216):

"The money paid into the hands of the sheriff on the execution in favor of Brooks did not become the property of Brooks until it had been paid over to him. Until that was done, the sheriff could not levy upon it by virtue of the execution against Brooks then in his hands."

The rule in that state in respect to a levy upon money in the hands of a sheriff may have been changed,—at least, *so far as an[490] attachment is concerned. See Wehle v. Conner, 83 N. Y. 231.

In Nelson v. Kerr, 59 N. Y. 224, it is said: "The money collected by the sheriff belongs to the plaintiff." But in that case the execution had been returned, and yet the officer had not paid the money to the execution creditor. See also Kingston Bank v. Eltinge, 40 N. Y. 391, 100 Am. Dec. 516.

In none of those cases had anything been done to affect the validity or force of the writ of execution. Whatever was done was done under a writ whose validity and potency were unchallenged and undisturbed; while here, before the writ of execution had been fully executed, its power was taken away. Its command had ceased to be obligatory upon the sheriff, and the execution creditor had no right to insist that the sheriff should further execute its commands.

A different question might have arisen if the writ had been fully executed by payment to the execution creditor. Whether the bankruptcy proceedings would then so far affect the judgment and execution, and that which was done under them, as to justify a recovery by the trustee in bankruptcy from the execution creditor, is a question not before us, and may depend on many other considerations. It is enough now to hold that the bankruptcy proceedings seized upon the writ of execution while it was still unexecuted and released the property which was held under it from the claim of the execution creditor.

The judgment of the Court of Appeals is affirmed.

Mr. Justice White and Mr. Justice Peckham dissented.

[491]*HENRY BIGELOW WILLIAMS and Charles F. Ayer, Trustees, Plffs. in Err.,
v.

HERBERT PARKER, Attorney General of Massachusetts.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 491-505.)

Constitutional law—due process—restriction on height of buildings—compensation.

Due process of law is not denied the owners of property damaged by the enforcement of a restriction on the height of buildings on certain Boston streets, imposed by Mass. act May 23, 1898, on the theory that the right of action thereby given to recover the damages from the city of Boston "in the manner prescribed by law for obtaining payment for damages by any person whose land is taken in the laying out of a highway" does not afford adequate provision for compensation because the city, not being a party to the taking, is not technically estopped to deny its liability, since such statutory liability is of a character which, under the decisions of the state courts, the legislature may impose on a municipality.

[No. 116.]

Argued December 5, 1902. Decided February 23, 1903.

IN ERROR to the Supreme Judicial Court of the State of Massachusetts to review a judgment directing a removal of those parts of a building on a Boston street above the height of 90 feet. Affirmed.

See same case below, 174 Mass. 476, 47 L. R. A. 314, 55 N. E. 77, 178 Mass. 330, 59 N. E. 812.

Statement by Mr. Justice Brewer:

On May 23, 1898, the legislature of Massachusetts passed the following act:

"Sec. 1. Any building now being built, or hereafter to be built, rebuilt, or altered in the city of Boston, upon any land abutting on St. James avenue, between Clarendon street and Dartmouth street, or upon land at the corner of Dartmouth street and Huntington avenue, now occupied by the Pierce building, so-called, or upon land abutting on Dartmouth street, now occupied by the Boston Public Library building, or upon land at the corner of Dartmouth street and Boylston street, now occupied by the New Old South Church building, may be completed, built, rebuilt, or altered to the height of 90 feet, and no more; and upon any land or lands abutting on Boylston street, between Dartmouth street and Clarendon street, may be completed, built, rebuilt, or altered to the height of 100 feet, and no more: Provided, however, That there may be *erect-[492] ed on any such building, above the limits hereinbefore prescribed, such steeples, towers, domes, sculptured ornaments and chimneys as the board of park commissioners of said city may approve.

"Sec. 2. The provisions of chapter 313 of the acts of the year 1896, and of chapter 379 of the acts of the year 1897, so far as they limit the height of buildings, shall not be construed to apply to the territory specified and restricted in § 1 of this act.

"Sec. 3. The owner of, or any person having an interest in, any building upon any land described in § 1 of this act, the construction whereof was begun, but not completed, before the 14th day of January in the current year, who suffers damage under the provisions of this act by reason or in consequence of having planned and begun such construction, or made contracts therefor, for a height exceeding that limited by § 1 of this act for the locality where said construction has been begun, may recover damages from the city of Boston for material bought or actually contracted for, and the use of which is prevented by the provisions of this act, for the excess of cost of material bought or actually contracted for over that which would be necessary for such building if not exceeding in height the limit prescribed for that locality by § 1 of this act, less the value of such materials as are not required on account of the limitations resulting from the provisions of this act, and the actual cost or expense of any rearrangement of the design or construction of such building made necessary by this act, by proceedings begun within two years of the passage of this act, and in the manner prescribed by law for obtaining payment for damages sustained by any person whose land is taken in the laying out of a highway in said city.

"Sec. 4. Any person sustaining damage or loss in his property by reason of the limit of the height of buildings provided for in this act may recover such damage or loss from the city of Boston, by proceedings begun within three years of the passage of this act, and in the manner prescribed by law for obtaining payment for damages sustained by any person whose *land is taken-[493] in the laying out of a highway in said city." Acts and Resolves of Massachusetts, 1898, chap. 452.

The building of plaintiff in error comes within the scope of this statute, and on September 17, 1898, the attorney general of Massachusetts filed an information in the supreme judicial court of that state to enjoin the maintenance of that part of the building above the 90-foot line. To this information the defendants pleaded, among other things, that "the statute, . . . in its application to the defendants, . . . is in violation of the 2d clause of § 1 of the 14th Amendment, and of other provisions of the Constitution of the United States." Pending this proceeding, the defendants commenced actions against the city of Boston for damages, as provided in §§ 3 and 4 of the statute. The city filed a general denial. The defendants then moved that the attorney general be required to join the city as a party defendant, in order that the question of the city's liability to damages might be conclusively determined in this proceeding, or, in default of such joinder, that it be stayed until the city's liability could be conclusively determined. This motion was denied, and the defendants appealed from the denial thereof. The facts were agreed upon, and the case reserved by the presiding justice for the consideration of the full court. Upon March 13, 1901, a decree was entered, sustaining the contention of the attorney general, and directing a removal of those parts of the building above the height of 90 feet, without prejudice, however, to the right of defendants under the statute to maintain such steeples, towers, etc., as the board of park commissioners of the city of Boston should approve. 174 Mass. 476, 47 L. R. A. 314, 55 N. E. 77. To review such judgment this writ of error was sued out.

NOTE.—As to what constitutes due process of law—see Kuntz v. Sumption (Ind.) 2 L. R. A. 655, and note; Re Gannon (R. I.) 5 L. R. A. 359, and note; Uiman v. Baltimore (Md.) 11 L. R. A. 224, and note; and Gilman v. Tucker (N. Y.) 13 L. R. A. 304, and note. And see notes to People v. O'Brien (N. Y.) 2 L. R. A. 255; Pearson v. Yewdall, 24 L. ed. U. S. 436; and Wilson v. North Carolina, 42 L. ed. U. S. 865.

Mr. Albert E. Pillsbury argued the cause, and, with Mr. Grant M. Palmer, filed a brief for plaintiffs in error:

Due provision for just compensation for private property taken for public uses is essential to the validity of an act of eminent domain.

Perry v. Wilson, 7 Mass. 393; Stevens v. Middlesex Canal, 12 Mass. 466; Brickett v. Haverhill Aqueduct Co. 142 Mass. 394, 8 N. E. 119; Atty. Gen. v. Old Colony R. Co. 160 Mass. 62, 22 L. R. A. 112, 35 N. E. 252; Bent v. Emery, 173 Mass. 495, 53 N. E. 910.

Without such provision the statute is unconstitutional and void, and does not justify an entry upon the land of the owner without his consent.

Connecticut River R. Co. v. Franklin County, 127 Mass. 50, 34 Am. Rep. 338.

It is not enough that the statute purports to make provision for compensation. The provision must be certain, amounting to assurance of it, without risk of failure in any event. It is beyond legislative power to cast upon the property owner any hazard of loss of his property without compensation.

Drury v. Midland R. Co. 127 Mass. 571; Haverhill Bridge v. Essex County, 103 Mass. 120, 4 Am. Rep. 518; Atty. Gen. v. Old Colony R. Co. 160 Mass. 62, 22 L. R. A. 112, 35 N. E. 252; Connecticut River R. Co. v. Franklin County, 127 Mass. 50, 34 Am. Rep. 338; Brewster v. J. & J. Rogers Co. 169 N. Y. 73, 58 L. R. A. 495, 62 N. E. 164; Bent v. Emery, 173 Mass. 495, 53 N. E. 910; Kennedy v. Indianapolis, 103 U. S. 599, 26 L. ed. 550; Cherokee Nation v. Southern Kansas R. Co. 135 U. S. 641, 34 L. ed. 295, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 965; Bauman v. Ross, 167 U. S. 548, 42 L. ed. 270, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 966; United States v. Gettysburg Electric R. Co. 160 U. S. 668, 40 L. ed. 576, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 427.

Due provision securing just compensation to the owner of property taken in the exercise of the power of eminent domain by or under the states is required by the due process clause of the 14th Amendment.

Monongahela Nav. Co. v. United States, 148 U. S. 312, 37 L. ed. 463, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 622; Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Chicago, 166 U. S. 226, 41 L. ed. 979, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 581; Long Island Water Supply Co. v. Brooklyn, 166 U. S. 685, 41 L. ed. 1165, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 718; Smyth v. Ames, 169 U. S. 466, 42 L. ed. 819, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 418; Backus v. Fort Street Union Depot Co. 169 U. S. 557, 42 L. ed. 853, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 445; Norwood v. Baker, 172 U. S. 269, 43 L. ed. 443, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 187.

The Federal requirement of due process of law extends to judicial, as well as to legislative, action of the states. The decree of a court may invade the requirement, no less than a statute.

Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Chicago, 166 U. S. 226, 41 L. ed. 979, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 581. See also Virginia v. Rives, 100 U. S. 313, 25 L. ed. 667; Ex parte Virginia, 100 U. S. 339, 25 L. ed. 676; Civil Rights Cases, 109 U. S. 3, 27 L. ed. 836, 3 Sup. Ct. Rep. 18; Logan v. United States, 144 U. S. 263, 36 L. ed. 429, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 617; Scott v. McNeal, 154 U. S. 34, 38 L. ed. 896, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1108; Gibson v. Mississippi, 162 U. S. 565, 40 L. ed. 1075, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 904; Williams v. Mississippi, 170 U. S. 213, 42 L. ed. 1012, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 583; Blake v. McClung, 172 U. S. 239, 43 L. ed. 432, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 165.

The state cannot be held liable for the acts of its public officers, whether merely tortious or in course of judicial procedure, under a void statute.

Connecticut River R. Co. v. Franklin County, 127 Mass. 50, 34 Am. Rep. 338; Murdock Parlor Grate Co. v. Com. 152 Mass. 28, 8 L. R. A. 399, 24 N. E. 854; Bent v. Emery, 173 Mass. 495, 53 N. E. 910.

The provision for damages cannot be presumed valid or enforceable unless it clearly appears, upon its face, to be so. The existence, at the time of passage of a statute, of facts essential to its validity, may be presumed; but no presumption as to the determination of a future event, so uncertain as the result of contested litigation, can satisfy this imperative constitutional requirement.

Haverhill Bridge v. Essex County, 103 Mass. 120, 4 Am. Rep. 518; Connecticut River R. Co. v. Franklin County, 127 Mass. 50, 34 Am. Rep. 338; Bent v. Emery, 173 Mass. 495, 53 N. E. 910.

Substantial certainty of compensation cannot be predicated of a statute which leaves the right to depend upon the event of litigation with a third party which disputes, has a right to dispute, and has reasonable grounds for disputing, its liability.

Unless the legislature has power to compel a city to establish public parks, it has no power to compel a city to take or pay for property for improving them when established. In the states in which the direct question whether the legislature may compel a city or town to establish public parks has been judicially raised, under constitutional provisions substantially like those of Massachusetts, it has uniformly been determined in the negative.

People ex rel. Le Roy v. Hurlbut, 24 Mich. 44, 9 Am. Rep. 103; People ex rel. Park Comrs. v. Detroit, 28 Mich. 228, 15 Am. Rep. 202, 29 Mich. 343; Thompson v. Moran, 44 Mich. 602, 7 N. W. 180; Webb v. New York, 64 How. Pr. 10; Dill. Mun. Corp. 4th ed. §§ 71-74a. See also Atkins v. Randolph, 31 Vt. 226; State ex rel. McCurdy v. Tappan, 29 Wis. 664; Louisville v. University of Louisville, 15 B. Mon. 642; State ex rel. Geake v. Fox (Ind.) 56 L. R. A. 893, 63 N. E. 19.

Until the present case, the Massachusetts court has never gone so far as to hold that the legislature may compel a city to tax its inhabitants for a system of public parks, nor is there believed to be authority for this proposition in any state. It has gone no farther than to hold that the legislature may authorize taxation for this purpose.

Holt v. Somerville, 127 Mass. 408; Foster v. Boston Park, 133 Mass. 321.

And that court seems to regard parks, when established by a city under legislative authority, as held by it in a quasi-private and proprietary character, beyond legislative power to take away.

Mt. Hopc Cemetery v. Boston, 158 Mass. 509, 33 N. E. 695.

It was formerly understood in Massachusetts that the property of the inhabitants was liable to seizure on execution for a debt of a city or town.

Connecticut River R. Co. v. Franklin County, 127 Mass. 50, 34 Am. Rep. 338.

Apparently this can no longer be regarded as the law.

Rees v. Watertown, 19 Wall. 107, 22 L. ed. 72; Merriwether v. Garrett, 102 U. S. 472, 26 L. ed. 197.

Merely to give the owner a right of action is to comply with the constitutional requirement in form, while violating it in substance.

Haverhill Bridge v. Essex County, 103 Mass. 120, 4 Am. Rep. 518; Atty. Gen. v. Old Colony R. Co. 160 Mass. 62, 22 L. R. A. 112, 35 N. E. 252.

In the ordinary case the owner of property taken by eminent domain has not only the security of the statutory provision for compensation, but if for any reason that provision fails, equity will exclude the taker and restore the original owner to possession; so solicitous is the law for his protection.

Atty. Gen. v. Old Colony R. Co. 160 Mass. 62, 22 L. R. A. 112, 35 N. E. 252; Rockport Water Co. v. Rockport, 161 Mass. 279, 37 N. E. 168; Sweet v. Rechel, 159 U. S. 389, 40 L. ed. 193, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 43.

Here, while the city, which alone is made liable for damages, is refusing to pay, and contesting any obligation to pay, as it has a right to do, the state court proceeds to destroy the property, putting it beyond reach of restoration; and this, notwithstanding ing it is beyond the power of that court finally to determine the liability of the city, which power belongs to this court alone.
188 U. S.

Mr. Edmund A. Whitman argued the cause, and, with Mr. Samuel J. Elder, filed a brief for defendant in error:

Due process means only such process as recognizes the right of the owner to be compensated if his property be taken from him and transferred to the public. All that is essential is that a proper inquiry should be made as to the amount of compensation, and this constitutes "due process."

Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Chicago, 166 U. S. 226, 41 L. ed. 979, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 581; Sweet v. Rechel, 159 U. S. 389, 40 L. ed. 188, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 43.

The Federal courts ought not to interfere,—especially with a statute which has been declared constitutional by the state supreme court,—unless it clearly appears that there is some abuse of law amounting to confiscation of property or deprivation of personal rights.

Cass Farm Co. v. Detroit, 181 U. S. 396, 45 L. ed. 914, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 644.

It is not necessary that there should be any particular mode of proceeding in the state court for the recovery of compensation.

Simon v. Craft, 182 U. S. 427, 45 L. ed. 1165, 27 Sup. Ct. Rep. 836.

The 14th Amendment in no way undertakes to control the power of a state, or to determine by what process legal rights may be asserted or legal obligations be enforced, provided the method of procedure adopted for this purpose gives reasonable notice and affords fair opportunity to be heard before the issues are decided.

Iowa C. R. Co. v. Iowa, 160 U. S. 389, 40 L. ed. 467, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 344.

A large discretion is necessarily vested in the state legislature to determine not only what the interests of the public require, but what measures are necessary for the protection of such interests.

Holden v. Hardy, 169 U. S. 366, 42 L. ed. 780, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 383.

It is not necessary that compensation should be determined in advance of the taking. It is sufficient if any adequate provision for compensation is made. Proper inquiry as to the amount of the compensation constitutes due process.

Backus v. Fort Street Union Depot Co. 169 U. S. 557, 42 L. ed. 853, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 445.

Due process of law is process according to the law of the land. This process is regulated by the law of the state.

French v. Barber Asphalt Paving Co. 181 U. S. 324, 45 L. ed. 879, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 625.

If this statute in question can be construed as an exercise of the power of taxation, the rule is still the same.

Davidson v. New Orleans, 96 U. S. 97, 24 L. ed. 616; Mobile County v. Kimball, 102 U. S. 691, 26 L. ed. 238; Hagar v. Reclamation Dist. No. 108, 111 U. S. 701, 28 L. ed. 569, 4 Sup. Ct. Rep. 663; Fallbrook
561

Irrig. Dist. v. Bradley, 164 U. S. 112, 41 L. ed. 369, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 56.

Nor does it make any difference with the constitutionality of the statute that the legislature of Massachusetts has imposed the entire burden of this public improvement upon the city of Boston.

Sweet v. Rechel, 159 U. S. 380, 40 L. ed. 188, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 43; Willard v. Presbury, 14 Wall. 676, 20 L. ed. 719; Bauman v. Ross, 167 U. S. 548, 42 L. ed. 270, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 966; Webster v. Fargo, 181 U. S. 394, 45 L. ed. 912, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 644; Williams v. Eggleston, 170 U. S. 304, 42 L. ed. 1047, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 617; Freeland v. Hastings, 10 Allen, 570; Kingman, Petitioner, 153 Mass. 566, 12 L. R. A. 417, 27 N. E. 778; Old Colony R. Co. v. Framingham Water Co. 153 Mass. 561, 13 L. R. A. 332, 27 N. E. 662.

The decision of a supreme court of a state in construing its own Constitution is binding on this court.

Iowa C. R. Co. v. Iowa, 160 U. S. 389, 40 L. ed. 467, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 344; Orr v. Gilman, 183 U. S. 278, 46 L. ed. 196, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 213.

This court is bound to give the same meaning to a state statute as was given it by the supreme court of the state.

Stockard v. Morgan, 185 U. S. 27, 46 L. ed. 785, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 576; Missouri P. R. Co. v. Nebraska, 164 U. S. 403, 41 L. ed. 489, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 130.

The legislature of Massachusetts has imposed at various times a sewerage system, a water system, and a park system upon the city of Boston and the adjoining cities and towns, constituting what the legislature has called a metropolitan district, and the constitutionality of such statutes has been affirmed after careful consideration.

Kingman, Petitioner, 153 Mass. 570, 12 L. R. A. 417, 27 N. E. 778; Adams, Petitioner, 165 Mass. 497, 43 N. E. 682; De Las Casas, Petitioner, 178 Mass. 213, 59 N. E. 664.

Mr. Justice Brewer delivered the opinion of the court:

Counsel for plaintiffs in error state in their brief that "the single question in the case is, substantially, whether it is consistent with due process of law for a court to decree the actual destruction of property under a statute of eminent domain by which the state takes certain rights in it, making provision for compensation only by giving the owners a right of action against a city for their damages, while the city, which had no part in the taking, denies the validity of the provision for compensation, upon which the validity of the taking depends, and refuses to pay any damages unless and until it is held liable therefor in another proceeding, which is yet undetermined."

That the statute does not conflict with the Constitution of the state is for this court settled by the decision of the state court. Merchants' & Mfrs. Bank v. Pennsylvania, 167 U. S. 461, 42 L. ed. 236, 7
562

Sup. Ct. Rep. 829, and cases cited; Rasmussen v. Idaho, 181 U. S. 198, 45 L. ed. 820, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 594. The constitutional provision of the state, and that found in the 5th Amendment to the Federal Constitution, are substantially alike. The Massachusetts provision reads: "Whenever the public exigencies require that the property of any individual should be appropriated to public uses, he shall receive a reasonable compensation therefor." Declaration of Rights, art. 10. And the 5th Amendment says: "Nor shall private property be taken for public use without just compensation."

So far as the Federal Constitution is concerned, it is settled by repeated decisions that a state may authorize the taking of possession prior to any payment, or even final determination of the amount of compensation. In Backus v. Ft. Street Union Depot Co. 169 U. S. 557, 568, 42 L. ed. 853, 858, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 445, 449, we said:

"Is it beyond the power of a state to authorize in condemnation cases the taking of possession prior to the final determination *of the amount of compensation and pay-[503] ment thereof? This question is fully answered by the opinions of this court in Cherokee Nation v. Southern Kansas R. Co. 135 U. S. 641, 34 L. ed. 295, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 965, and Sweet v. Rechel, 159 U. S. 380, 40 L. ed. 188, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 43. There can be no doubt that if adequate provision for compensation is made authority may be granted for taking possession pending inquiry as to the amount which must be paid and before any final determination thereof."

We pass, therefore, to inquire as to the adequacy of the provision for compensation. No question is made as to the general solvency of the city of Boston. Although in the agreed facts it is stated that the city has no "moneys specially appropriated to any such purpose as that prescribed by the damage clauses of this statute, nor any express statutory power or authority to raise, appropriate, or pay money for such a purpose," yet, as this statute provides that "any person sustaining damage . . . may recover such damage . . . in the manner prescribed by law for obtaining payment for damages by any person whose land is taken in the laying out of a highway," and as there is a general statute making suitable provision for such a recovery,—the question of solvency does not seem to be material.

It is true that the city is not a party to the proceedings, and therefore not estopped to deny its liability by reason of having sought and obtained the condemnation. In that respect the statute differs from ordinary statutes giving to corporations, municipal or private, the right to condemn. While there is no technical estoppel by judicial proceeding, yet the state supreme court adjudged the validity of the statute, not merely in respect to the taking, but also in respect to the liability of the city. In its opinion it said (p. 481, L. R. A. p. 317, N. E. p. 78):

"It may be contended that if the legislature could take this right for the use of the public, it could not require the city of Boston to make compensation for it, but should have provided for the payment of damages from the treasury of the commonwealth. This contention would limit too strictly the power of the legislature in the distribution of public burdens. Very wide discretion is left with the lawmaking power in this particular. The legislature may change the [504] political subdivisions *of the commonwealth by creating, changing, or abolishing particular cities, towns, or counties. It may require any of them to bear such share of the public burdens as it deems just and equitable. This right has been exercised in a great variety of ways. Kingman, Petitioner, 153 Mass. 566, 12 L. R. A. 417, 27 N. E. 778, and cases and statutes there cited."

And this decision is in harmony with prior adjudications of that court.

It is also true that the proceeding here taken is in many respects novel. Perhaps no case like it has arisen in this country. But as the court of last resort of Massachusetts has treated it as a condemnation, a taking for the public use, it is a taking for the use primarily of the citizens of Boston, and comes within the repeated rulings of the state court in respect to the competency of the legislature to cast the burden thereof upon the city. And while, as stated, there may be no technical estoppel by judgment, yet in view of these rulings it would be going too far to hold that it is essential that there be a judgment establishing the liability of the city before it can be affirmed that adequate provision for compensation has been made.

That there may be novel questions in respect to the measure of damage, the value of the property that is taken, does not avoid the fact that a solvent debtor,—one whose solvency is not liable to go up or down like that of an individual, but is of substantial permanence,—is provided, as well as a direct and appropriate means of ascertaining and enforcing the amount of all such damage. In view, therefore, of the prior decisions of the supreme court of the state as well as that in this case, we are of opinion that it cannot be held that there was a failure to make adequate provision for the payment of the damages sustained by the taking.

We have not considered any question of purely state cognizance, nor have we stopped to comment on the suggestion made by the supreme court of the state, that this statute might be sustained as an exercise of the police power, or, if it could be so sustained, that it could be enforced without any provision for compensation. Consider-[505] ing simply the distinct *proposition so ably presented by the counsel for plaintiffs in error, we are of opinion that the statute in question cannot be adjudged in conflict with the Federal Constitution, and therefore the judgment of the Supreme Judicial Court of Massachusetts is affirmed.

188 U. S.

AUGUSTUS G. REETZ, Plff. in Err.,
v.

PEOPLE OF THE STATE OF MICHIGAN.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 505-510.)

Constitutional law—due process of law—validity of state law as to practice of medicine—ex post facto laws.

1. The grant to a board of registration in medicine, by Mich. Pub. Acts 1899, act No. 237, of the power to decide whether an applicant for registration had been "legally registered" under a prior statute, with no provision in terms for a review of the proceedings of such board, does not render the act obnoxious to the Federal Constitution.
2. Due process of law requires no special provision for granting a hearing to applicants for registration by the board of registration in medicine created by Mich. Pub. Acts 1899, act No. 237, where such act provides for semiannual meetings of the board at specified times at the state capitol.
3. The provision against the practice of medicine by unregistered persons, which is made by Mich. Pub. Acts 1899, act No. 237, creating a board of registration in medicine, does not render such act ex post facto as to one licensed under a prior act, where provision is made for registration of persons presenting sufficient proof of legal registration under such prior act.

[No. 143.]

Argued January 21, 1903. Decided February 23, 1903.

IN ERROR to the Supreme Court of the State of Michigan to review a judgment which affirmed a conviction in the Circuit Court for the County of Muskegon of a violation of a state statute prohibiting the practice of medicine by unregistered persons. Affirmed.

See same case below, 127 Mich. 87, 86 N. W. 396.

NOTE.—As to the constitutional right to practice a profession—see note to Louisville Safety Vault & T. Co. v. Louisville & N. R. Co. (Ky.) 14 L. R. A. 581.

On judicial power to review actions of boards in respect to licenses of physicians, dentists, etc.—see note to Iowa Eclectic Medical College Asso. v. Schrader (Iowa) 20 L. R. A. 355.

As to what constitutes due process of law—see Kuntz v. Sumption (Ind.) 2 L. R. A. 655, and note; Re Gannon (R. I.) 5 L. R. A. 359, and note; Uiman v. Baltimore (Md.) 11 L. R. A. 224, and note; Gilman v. Tucker (N. Y.) 13 L. R. A. 304, and note. And see notes to People v. O'Brien (N. Y.) 2 L. R. A. 255; Pearson v. Yewdall, 24 L. ed. U. S. 436; and Wilson v. North Carolina, 42 L. ed. U. S. 865.

On notice and hearing required to constitute due process of law—see notes to Kuntz v. Sumption (Ind.) 2 L. R. A. 657; Chauvin v. Valiton (Mont.) 3 L. R. A. 194; and Ulman v. Baltimore (Md.) 11 L. R. A. 225.

As to what laws are ex post facto—see notes to State v. Cooler (S. C.) 3 L. R. A. 181; Anderson v. O'Donnell (S. C.) 1 L. R. A. 632; Calder v. Bull, 1 L. ed. U. S. 648; Sturges v. Crowninshield, 4 L. ed. U. S. 529; Re Medley, 33 L. ed. U. S. 835; Otoe County v. Baldwin, 28 L. ed. U. S. 331; and Barnitz v. Beverly, 41 L. ed. U. S. 94.

Statement by Mr. Justice Brewer:

Act No. 237 of the public acts of the state of Michigan (1899) directed the appointment of "a board of registration in medicine," to hold two regular meetings at specified times in each year at the state capitol, and additional meetings at such times and places as it might determine; required all persons engaging in the practice of medicine and surgery to obtain from such board a certificate of registration; prescribed the [506] conditions *upon which such certificate should be granted, and forbade, under penalty, the practice of medicine or surgery without such certificate. The conditions above referred to were either a satisfactory examination, or the possession of "a diploma from any legally incorporated, regularly established, and reputable college of medicine, . . . having at least a three years' course of eight months in each year, or a course of four years of six months in each year, . . . as shall be approved and designated by the board of registration," with a proviso that "the board of registration shall not register any person by reason of a diploma from any college which sells, or advertises to sell, diplomas 'without attendance,' nor from any other than a regularly established and reputable college." Another provision was that an applicant should be given a certificate of registration if he should "present sufficient proof within six months after the passage of this act of his having already been legally registered under act No. 167 of 1883, as amended in 1887, entitled 'An Act to Promote Public Health.'" The plaintiff in error was prosecuted and convicted in the circuit court for the county of Muskegon of a violation of this statute, which conviction was affirmed by the supreme court of the state (127 Mich. 87, 86 N. W. 396), to reverse which ruling this writ of error was sued out.

Mr. William P. Belden argued the cause, and, with Messrs. Edwin A. Burlingame and Jesse F. Orton, filed a brief for plaintiff in error:

In whatever language a statute may be framed, its purpose must be determined by its natural and reasonable effect.

Henderson v. Wickham, 92 U. S. 259, 23 L. ed. 543.

The confiding of judicial power to a body not a regularly organized court of justice, or at least to a body not possessing the essential powers and attributes of a court, does not constitute due process of law.

Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. v. Minnesota, 134 U. S. 418, 33 L. ed. 970, 3 Inters. Com. Rep. 209, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 462, 702.

The least that the legislature could do, and keep within the limits of due process of law, would be to provide a tribunal possessing the powers necessary to give persons interested a fair hearing, the right to secure the testimony of witnesses in their own behalf, and the right to have their unlawful acts established affirmatively, without being required to prove their own innocence.

Schlitz v. Roenitz, 86 Wis. 31, 21 L. R. A. 483, 56 N. W. 194; Pennoyer v. Neff, 95 U. S. 714, 24 L. ed. 565; State v. Carneall, 10 Ark. 156.

The duties which the act of 1899 attempts to confide to the state board of registration are, at least, of a quasi-judicial character, and would involve action of the board requiring the exercise of discretion, so that, after such exercise, the decision of the board could not be reviewed by a court in mandamus proceedings.

State ex rel. Hathaway v. State Bd. of Health, 103 Mo. 22, 15 S. W. 322.

Rights cannot be divested by quasi-judicial bodies without a hearing and orderly procedure.

Stuart v. Palmer, 74 N. Y. 183, 30 Am. Rep. 289; Hutson v. Woodbridge Protection Dist. No. 1, 79 Cal. 90, 16 Pac. 549, 21 Pac. 435; Gamble v. McCrady, 75 N. C. 509; Mercantile Trust Co. v. Texas & P. R. Co. 51 Fed. 529.

It is a maxim of fundamental law that no man shall be condemned without a hearing. A hearing assumes notice of specific grounds of complaint, and a reasonable opportunity for answering them.

O'Hara v. Stack, 90 Pa. 477.

The deprivation of the plaintiff in error of the right to practise medicine by the board of registration, without any hearing or opportunity for hearing and without the means of producing the necessary evidence, discloses such an interpretation of the law and such a custom of procedure on the part of the board of registration as amount to the plainest violation of the Federal Constitution.

Vick Wo v. Hopkins, 118 U. S. 356, 30 L. ed. 220, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1064.

The right of a person in his profession is such a right that to deprive him of the privilege of pursuing it, without due process of law, is to deprive him of both his liberty and his property without due process of law.

Butchers' Union S. H. & L. S. L. Co. v. Crescent City L. S. L. & S. H. Co. 111 U. S. 746, 28 L. ed. 585, 4 Sup. Ct. Rep. 652; Re Jacobs, 98 N. Y. 98, 50 Am. Rep. 636; Powell v. Pennsylvania, 127 U. S. 678, 32 L. ed. 253, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 992, 1257. See also People v. Marx, 99 N. Y. 377, 52 Am. Rep. 34, 2 N. E. 29; Ritchie v. People, 155 Ill. 98, 29 L. R. A. 79, 40 N. E. 454; O'Hara v. Stack, 90 Pa. 477.

The impropriety of confiding to administrative officers or boards such powers as are by the Michigan statute given to the state board of registration has often been the subject of judicial comment.

State v. Allen, 2 McCord L. 55; Huber v. Reily, 53 Pa. 112; Ex parte McNulty, 77 Cal. 164, 19 Pac. 237.

The method of exclusion of medical practitioners from the further practice of medicine, adopted by the law of 1899, even though it is only a qualified or conditional exclusion, makes said law, so far as these persons are concerned, both a bill of attainder and an ex post facto law.

Ex parte Garland, 4 Wall. 333, 18 L. ed. 366; Cummings v. Missouri, 4 Wall. 277, 18 L. ed. 356.

Mr. Charles B. Cross argued the cause, and, with Messrs. Horace M. Oren and George S. Lovelace, filed a brief for defendant in error:

The act in question is substantially similar to those now in force in nearly all the states, and which, in every case brought before the courts for final adjudication, have been determined not to violate this provision of the Federal Constitution.

Dent v. West Virginia, 129 U. S. 114, 32 L. ed. 623, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 231; People v. Hasbrouck, 11 Utah, 291, 39 Pac. 918.

A parchment purporting to be a diploma to practise medicine is not evidence per se that the college issuing it is a regularly constituted medical institution.

Hill v. Boddie, 2 Stew. & P. (Ala.) 56.

And the registration of such a diploma is no evidence that the owner thereof is a legally qualified physician. In fact the converse of this proposition may be taken as true, that an institution which grants diplomas under the circumstances shown in this case is not a "legally incorporated, regularly established, and reputable college of medicine," and that the owner thereof was not legally registered.

Metcalf v. State Bd. of Registration in Medicine, 123 Mich. 661, 82 N. W. 512.

The state has the power to regulate the practice of any profession requiring special skill and training.

Allopathic State Bd. of Medical Examiners v. Fowler, 50 La. Ann. 1358, 24 So. 809; State ex rel. Powell v. State Medical Examining Board, 32 Minn. 324, 50 Am. Rep. 575, 20 N. W. 238; Hewitt v. Charier, 16 Pick. 353; Spaulding v. Alford, 1 Pick. 33; Wright v. Lanckton, 19 Pick. 288; Coolsey, Const. Lim. 745.

The power which the legislature has to promote the general welfare is very great, and the discretion which that department of the government has in the employment of means to that end is very large.

Powell v. Pennsylvania, 127 U. S. 678, 32 L. ed. 253, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 992, 1257.

The right of contract, like all other rights, is held subject to the necessities of the social state.

State v. Addington, 12 Mo. App. 214.

The state legislatures have the power, unless there be something in their own constitutions to prohibit it, of entirely abolishing or placing under restriction any trade or profession which they may think expedient.

Austin v. State, 10 Mo. 593.

The prohibition of the manufacture of beer, etc., though its effect was to destroy the value of brewery property, was held valid in Mugler v. Kansas, 123 U. S. 623, 31 L. ed. 205, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 273.

This is not an ex post facto law.

Dent v. West Virginia, 129 U. S. 114, 32 L. ed. 623, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 231; Hawker v. 188 U. S. U. S., Book 47.

New York, 170 U. S. 189, 42 L. ed. 1002, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 573; Eastman v. State, 109 Ind. 281, 58 Am. Rep. 400, 10 N. E. 97; State v. Creditor, 44 Kan. 568, 24 Pac. 346; Craig v. State Bd. of Medical Examiners, 12 Mont. 211, 29 Pac. 532.

Statutes similar in character have been held constitutional as a proper exercise of the police power, in nearly every state of the Union.

Dent v. West Virginia, 129 U. S. 114, 32 L. ed. 623, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 231; Ritchie v. People, 155 Ill. 98, 29 L. R. A. 79, 40 N. E. 454; Singer v. State, 72 Md. 464, 8 L. R. A. 551, 19 Atl. 1044; State v. Randolph, 23 Or. 74, 17 L. R. A. 470, 31 Pac. 201; Eastman v. State, 109 Ind. 278, 58 Am. Rep. 400, 10 N. E. 97; State ex rel. Burroughs v. Webster, 150 Ind. 607, 41 L. R. A. 212, 50 N. E. 750; Ex parte Frazer, 54 Cal. 94; Harding v. People, 10 Colo. 387, 15 Pac. 727; Williams v. People, 121 Ill. 84, 11 N. E. 881; People use of State Bd. of Health v. Blue Mountain Joe, 129 Ill. 370, 21 N. E. 923; State v. Mosher, 78 Iowa, 321, 43 N. W. 202; Iowa Eclectic Medical College Assn. v. Schrader, 87 Iowa, 659, 20 L. R. A. 355, 55 N. W. 24; Driscoll v. Com. 93 Ky. 393, 20 S. W. 431; State v. Fleischer, 41 Minn. 69, 42 N. W. 696; State ex rel. Kellogg v. First Judicial Dist. Ct. 13 Mont. 370, 34 Pac. 298; Dogge v. State, 17 Neb. 140, 22 N. W. 348; Ex parte Spinney, 10 Nev. 323; Re Roe Chung, 9 N. M. 130, 49 Pac. 952; Re Smith, 10 Wend. 449; People v. Fulda, 52 Hun. 65, 4 N. Y. Supp. 945; State v. Van Doran, 109 N. C. 864, 14 S. E. 32; Barnmore v. State Bd. of Medical Examiners, 21 Or. 301, 28 Pac. 8; Logan v. State, 5 Tex. App. 306; Fox v. Territory, 2 Wash. Terr. 297, 5 Pac. 603; State v. Carey, 4 Wash. 424, 30 Pac. 729; State v. Knowles, 90 Md. 646, 49 L. R. A. 695, 45 Atl. 877; France v. State, 57 Ohio St. 1, 47 N. E. 1041; State Bd. of Health v. Roy, 22 R. I. 538, 48 Atl. 802; State ex rel. Kellogg v. Currens, 111 Wis. 431, 56 L. R. A. 252, 87 N. W. 561; State v. Call, 121 N. C. 643, 28 S. E. 517; State v. Hathaway, 115 Mo. 36, 21 S. W. 1081.

Mr. Charles A. Blair also argued the cause for defendant in error.

Mr. Justice Brewer delivered the opinion of the court:

The power of a state to make reasonable provisions for determining the qualifications of those engaging in the practice of medicine, and punishing those who attempt to engage therein in defiance of such statutory provisions, is not open to question. Dent v. West Virginia, 129 U. S. 114, 32 L. ed. 623, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 231; Hawker v. New York, 170 U. S. 189, 42 L. ed. 1002, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 573, and cases cited in the opinion; State ex rel. Burroughs v. Webster, 150 Ind. 607, 41 L. R. A. 212, 50 N. E. 750, and cases cited.

*It is objected in the present case that the [507] board of registration is given authority to exercise judicial powers without any appeal from its decision, inasmuch as it may refuse a certificate of registration if it shall find that no sufficient proof is presented that the applicant had been "legally registered under act No. 167 of 1883." That, it is contended, is the determination of a legal question which no tribunal other than a regularly organized court can be empowered to decide. The decision of the state supreme court is conclusive that the act does not conflict with the state Constitution, and we know of no provision in the Federal Constitution which forbids a state from granting to a tribunal, whether called a court or a board of registration, the final determination of a legal question. Indeed, it not infrequently happens that a full discharge of their duties compels boards, or officers of a purely ministerial character, to consider and determine questions of a legal nature. Due process is not necessarily judicial process. Den ex dem. Murray v. Hoboken Land & Improv. Co. 18 How. 272, 15 L. ed. 372; Davidson v. New Orleans, 96 U. S. 97, 24 L. ed. 616; Ex parte Wall, 107 U. S. 265, 289, 27 L. ed. 552, 562, 2 Sup. Ct. Rep. 569; Dreyer v. Illinois, 187 U. S. 71, 83, ante, 79, 85, 23 Sup. Ct. Rep. 28, 32; People v. Hasbrouck, 11 Utah, 291, 39 Pac. 918. In the last case this very question was presented, and in the opinion, on page 305, Pac. p. 921, it was said:

"The objection that the statute attempts to confer judicial power on the board is not well founded. Many executive officers, even those who are spoken of as purely ministerial officers, act judicially in the determination of facts in the performance of their official duties; and in so doing they do not exercise 'judicial power,' as that phrase is commonly used, and as it is used in the organic act in conferring judicial power upon specified courts. The powers conferred on the board of medical examiners are nowise different in character in this respect from those exercised by the examiners of candidates to teach in our public schools, or by tax assessors or boards of equalization in determining, for purposes of taxation, the value of property. The ascertainment and determination of qualifications to practise medicine by a board of competent experts, appointed for that purpose, is not the exercise of a power which appropriately belongs to the judicial department of the government."

[508] *In Hurtado v. California, 110 U. S. 516, 28 L. ed. 232, Mr. Justice Matthews, speaking for the court, discussed at some length and with citation of many authorities the essential elements of due process of law, and summed up the conclusions in these words (p. 537, L. ed. p. 239):

"It follows that any legal proceeding enforced by public authority, whether sanctioned by age and custom, or newly devised in the discretion of the legislative power, in furtherance of the general public good, which regards and preserves these principles of liberty and justice, must be held to be due process of law."

Neither is the right of appeal essential to due process of law. In nearly every state are statutes giving, in criminal cases of a minor nature, a single trial, without any right of review. For nearly a century trials under the Federal practice for even the gravest offenses ended in the trial court, except in cases where two judges were present and certified a question of law to this court. In civil cases a common rule is that the amount in controversy limits the entire litigation to one court, yet there was never any serious question that in these cases due process of law was granted.

In Pittsburgh, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Backus, 154 U. S. 421, 38 L. ed. 1031, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1114, upon the question whether the right of appeal was essential to the validity of a taxing statute, we said (p. 427, L. ed. p. 1036, Sup. Ct. Rep. p. 1117):

"Equally fallacious is the contention that, because to the ordinary taxpayer there is allowed, not merely one hearing before the county officials, but also a right of appeal with a second hearing before the state board, while only the one hearing before the latter board is given to railroad companies in respect to their property, therefore the latter are denied the equal protection of the laws. If a single hearing is not due process, doubling it will not make it so."

In McKane v. Durston, 153 U. S. 684, 687, 38 L. ed. 867, 868, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 913, 915, this court declared that "a review by an appellate court of the final judgment in a criminal case, however grave the offense of which the accused is convicted, was not at common law, and is not now, a necessary element of due process of law." See also Andrews v. Swartz, 156 U. S. 272, 39 L. ed. 422, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 389.

But while the statute makes in terms no provision for a review *of the proceedings of [509] the board, yet it is not true that such proceedings are beyond investigation in the courts. In Metcalf v. State Bd. of Registration, 123 Mich. 661, 82 N. W. 512, an application for mandamus to compel this board to register the petitioner was entertained, and, although the application was denied, yet the denial was based, not upon a want of jurisdiction in the court, but upon the merits.

It is further insisted that it is essential to a judicial or quasi-judicial proceeding that it should give a person accused or interested the benefit of a hearing, and that there is in this statute no special provision for notice, or hearing, or authority to summon witnesses or to compel them to testify. The statute provides for semiannual meetings at specified times at the state capitol, but the plaintiff in error did not appear at any of these meetings or there present an application for registration or showing of his right thereto; he simply sent to the secretary of the board a certified copy of his registration under the prior statute, and his diploma from the Independent Medical College of Chicago, Illinois. The latter was returned with a notice from the board that it had denied the application for registration. When a statute fixes the time and place of meeting of any board or tribunal, no special notice to parties interested is required. The statute is itself sufficient notice. If plaintiff in error had applied at any meeting for a hearing the board would have been compelled to grant it, and if on such hearing his offer of or demand for testimony had been refused, the question might have been fairly presented to the state courts to what extent the action of the board had deprived him of his rights.

He seems to assume that the proceedings before the board were in themselves of a criminal nature, and that the state by such proceedings was endeavoring to convict him of an offense in the practice of his profession. But this is a mistake. The state was simply seeking to ascertain who ought to be permitted to practise medicine or surgery, and criminality arises only when one assumes to practise without having his right so to do established by the action of the board. The proceedings of the board to determine his qualifications are no more criminal than examinations of applicants to [510] teach or practise law, and if the *provisions for testing such qualifications are reasonable in their nature, a party must comply with them, and has no right to practise his profession in defiance thereof.

It is further insisted that having once engaged in the practice, and having been licensed so to do, he had a right to continue in such practice, and that this statute was in the nature of an ex post facto law. The case of Hawker v. New York, 170 U. S. 189, 42 L. ed. 1002, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 573, is decisive upon this question. The statute does not attempt to punish him for any past offense; and in the most extreme view can only be considered as requiring continuing evidence of his qualifications as a physician or surgeon. As shown in Dent v. West Virginia, 129 U. S. 114, 32 L. ed. 623, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 231, there is no similarity between statutes like this and the proceedings which were adjudged void in Cummings v. Missouri, 4 Wall. 277, 18 L. ed. 356, and Ex parte Garland, 4 Wall. 333, 18 L. ed. 366.

We fail to see anything in the statute which brings it within the inhibitions of the Federal Constitution, and therefore the judgment of the Supreme Court of Michigan is affirmed.

Mr. Justice Harlan concurs in the result.

GUSTAVUS LEACH, William F. Leach,
Chester H. Shaw, et al.,
Plffs. in Err.,
v.

CHARLES R. BURR, Executor, and Samuel
H. Lucas.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 510-516.)

Publication—meaning of "week"—who may complain of defective publication—wills—mental soundness—when not a question for the jury—burden of proof.

1. Two publications in each of four consecutive periods of seven days from the date of an order of publication satisfy the requirement of the act of Congress of June 8, 1898 (30 Stat. at L. 434, chap. 394, § 6), requiring such publication in the District of Columbia at least "twice a week for a period of not less than four weeks," although there was but one publication in the last calendar week of such period.

NOTE.—On presumption and burden of proof as to sanity—see note to State v. Scott (La.) 36 L. R. A. 721.

188 U. S.

2. Caveators who appear and go to trial in a proceeding to probate a will, without seeking further time for the purpose of securing additional testimony or preparing for the hearing, cannot claim to have been prejudiced by a defect in a notice of publication.
3. The fact that a white testator devised his entire estate to a negro who had been for years his business and household companion, to the exclusion of his cousins, does not require the submission of the issue of his mental soundness to the jury, where the only conclusion that can be drawn from the direct testimony is in favor of his mental soundness when the will was made.
4. The burden of proof on the issue of the mental soundness of a testator is, in the District of Columbia, upon the caveators.

[No. 145.]

Argued January 27, 1903. Decided February 23, 1903.

IN ERROR to the Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia to review a judgment which affirmed an order of the Supreme Court of the District admitting a will to probate. Affirmed.

See same case below, 17 App. D. C. 128.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. William A. Meloy and George F. Hoar argued the cause and filed a brief for plaintiffs in error:

Where legislation points out specifically how an act is to be done, it must be strictly pursued. Where a statute in granting a new power prescribes how it shall be exercised, it can lawfully be exercised in no other way. The grant is strictly construed; the mode must be strictly pursued.

Sutherland, Stat. Constr. § 454.

The order was to publish "twice a week for four weeks." This means twice in each week, as designating, in universal common parlance, that series of days called the week, "numbered or named, in succession, Sunday (or first day, etc.), Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday, Thursday, Friday, Saturday;" the six working ways of the week; the week minus Sunday."

Ronkendorff v. Taylor, 4 Pet. 349, 7 L. ed. 882; Thruston v. Masterson, 4 Dana, 126; Jordan v. Giblin, 12 Cal. 100; Richardson v. Bates, 23 How. Pr. 516.

Jurisdiction cannot be maintained without the strictest and fullest compliance with the requirements of the statute.

Settlemier v. Sullivan, 97 U. S. 444, 24 L. ed. 1110; Hernandez v. His Creditors, 57 Cal. 333; Koch's Estate, 19 N. Y. Civ. Proc. Rep. 165; Guaranty Trust & S. D. Co. v. Green Cove Springs & M. R. Co. 139 U. S. 137, 35 L. ed. 116, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 512.

Consent could not cure this omission.

National Safe Deposit, Sav. & T. Co. v. Heiberger, 19 App. D. C. 506.

It was error in the case at bar for the court to take the facts from the jury and direct their verdict.

McCommon v. McCommon (Ill.) 31 N. E. 491; McCommon v. McCommon, 151 Ill. 428, 38 N. E. 145; Olmstead v. Webb, 5 App. D. C. 38; Hardy v. Wise, 5 App. D. C. 108; United States v. Ohidester, 140 U. S. 49, 35 L. ed. 339, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 650; Grand Trunk R. Co. v. Ives, 144 U. S. 408, 36 L. ed. 485, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 679; Richmond & D. R. Co. v. Powers, 149 U. S. 43, 37 L. ed. 642, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 748; Gardner v. Michigan C. R. Co. 150 U. S. 349, 37 L. ed. 1107, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 140; 3 Graham & W. New Trials, 872.

This very disherison of his heirs is in itself strong evidence of a state of mind incapable of making a valid will.

Delafield v. Parish, 25 N. Y. 9. See also Phoenix Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Doster, 106 U. S. 30, 27 L. ed. 65, 1 Sup. Ct. Rep. 18; Randall v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. 109 U. S. 478, 27 L. ed. 1003, 3 Sup. Ct. Rep. 322; Humiston v. Wood, 124 U. S. 12, 31 L. ed. 354, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 347; Wilkins v. Allen, 18 How. 385, 15 L. ed. 396; Philleo v. Holliday, 24 Tex. 38; Zimmerman v. Hafer, 81 Md. 347, 32 Atl. 316; Gurley v. Park, 135 Ind. 440, 35 N. E. 279; Thomas v. Carter, 170 Pa. 272, 33 Atl. 81; Orchardson v. Cofield, 171 Ill. 14, 40 L. R. A. 256, 49 N. E. 197; Schouler, Wills, 2d ed. 545; Theobald, Wills, 2d ed. 610.

The confidential relations subsisting between the deviser and devisee cast the burden of proof upon the latter to sustain the devise.

Marx v. McGlynn, 88 N. Y. 357; Daniel v. Hill, 52 Ala. 431; Smith's Estate, 3 Pa. Dist. R. 247; Good v. Zook (Iowa) 88 N. W. 376; Moran v. Sullivan, 12 App. D. C. 137; Slater v. Hamacher, 15 App. D. C. 558; Bailey, Onus Probandi & Preparation for Trial, p. 403.

Mr. J. J. Darlington argued the cause, and, with Mr. R. B. Behrend, filed a brief for defendants in error:

The word "week" in the act is not justly subject to the technical construction sought to be affixed to it.

Early v. Homans, 16 How. 616, 14 L. ed. 1079.

The sanity of a testator is to be presumed until the contrary is shown, and the burden of proof is upon the caveators.

Higgins v. Carlton, 28 Md. 115, 92 Am. Dec. 666; Tyson v. Tyson, 37 Md. 567; Dunlop v. Peter, 1 Cranch, C. C. 403, Fed. Cas. No. 4,168.

Mr. Justice Brewer delivered the opinion of the court:

Plaintiffs in error, caveators in the trial court, seek a review of the order of the supreme court of the District, holding a special term for orphans' court business, admitting to probate the will of Ezra W. Leach. The order was entered March 17, 1900, and on appeal was sustained by the court of appeals of the District, November 6, 1900. 17 App. D. C. 128. Thereupon this writ of error was sued out.

568

Whatever may have been the fact theretofore, it is not seriously questioned that by the act of June 8, 1898. (30 Stat. at L. 434, chap. 394), the trial court had jurisdiction to entertain the application for probate, for by § 2 of that act it is provided that "ple-nary jurisdiction is hereby given to the said court holding the said special term to hear and determine all questions relating to the execution and to the validity of any and all wills devising any real estate within the District of Columbia, and of any and all wills and testaments properly presented for probate therein, and to admit the same to probate and record in said special term." The specific objection to its action is an alleged defect in the publication required in case any party in interest is not found; the statute (§ 6) providing that the court "shall order publication at least twice a week for a period of not less than four weeks of a copy of the issues and notification of trial in some newspaper of general circulation in 'the District of Columbia, and [512] may order such other publication as the case may require.'" The order was made on January 26, 1900, setting the hearing for February 26, 1900, and was "that this order and a copy of said issues heretofore framed shall be published twice a week for four weeks in The Evening Star." Publication was made January 26 and 30, February 2, 6, 9, 13, 16, and 20. There were, therefore, two publications in each successive seven days from the date of the order. January 26 was on Friday. The contention is that the word "week" means that series of days called a week commencing Sunday and ending Saturday, and that under this construction there was only one publication in the last week. Ronkendorff v. Taylor, 4 Pet. 349, 7 L. ed. 882, is cited as authority. In that case notice of a tax sale was required "by advertising once a week, in some newspaper printed in the city of Washington, for three months," and it was held that this did not require a publication on the same day in each week, the court saying (p. 361, L. ed. p. 886):

"A week is a definite period of time, commencing on Sunday and ending on Saturday. By this construction the notice in this case must be held sufficient. It was published Monday, January the 6th, and omitted until Saturday, January the 18th, leaving an interval of eleven days; still, the publication on Saturday was within the week succeeding the notice of the 6th."

But the language of this statute is not "for four weeks," but "for a period of not less than four weeks," and the words of the order must be construed in the light of the statute. A like difference was called to the attention of the court in Early v. Homans, 16 How. 610, 14 L. ed. 1079, where the publication was to be "once in each week, for at least twelve successive weeks," and commenting thereon it was said (p. 617, L. ed. p. 1082):

"The preposition 'for' means of itself duration, when it is put in connection with time, and, as all of us use it in that way in our everyday conversation, it cannot be presumed that the legislator, in making this statute, did not mean to use it in the same way. Twelve successive weeks is as definite a designation of time, according to our division of it, as can be made. When we say that anything may be done in twelve weeks, or that it shall not be done for twelve [513] weeks, after the happening of a *fact which is to precede it, we mean that it may be done in twelve weeks or eighty-four days, or, as the case may be, that it shall not be done before."

188 U. S.

Further, the object of a notice is to enable the parties affected thereby to be present and obtain a hearing. The caveators appeared and without seeking further time, for the purpose of securing additional testimony or preparing for the hearing, went to trial on the issues submitted to the jury. They at least cannot claim to be prejudiced by any defect in the notice.

But the substantial question is whether the court erred in taking the case from the jury and directing a verdict sustaining the will. The questions submitted for consideration were whether the testator was at the time of executing the will "of sound mind, capable of executing a valid deed or contract;" whether the will was "procured by the threats, menaces, and duress exercised over him (the testator) by Samuel H. Lucas or any other person or persons," and whether it was "procured by the fraud of Samuel H. Lucas or any other person or persons."

Although jurors are the recognized triers of questions of fact, the power of a court to direct a verdict for one party or the other is undoubted, and when a court has done so and its action has been approved by the unanimous judgment of the direct appellate court, we rightfully pay deference to their concurring opinions. Patton v. Texas & P. R. Co. 179 U. S. 658, 45 L. ed. 361, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 275, and cases cited. An examination of the testimony satisfies us that there was no error in directing the verdict. The testator was seventy-three years old, white, childless, unmarried, his nearest relatives being cousins, the plaintiffs in error. He had lived in this District for at least twenty years. He was a man positive in his opinions, not easily influenced, of strong religious convictions and much attached to his church. His business was that of a florist. He owned two or three parcels of real estate of the value of about $8,000, and also a little personal property worth something like $300. The devisee was Samuel H. Lucas, a young colored man, with whom alone he had kept house for ten or a dozen years, such relation commencing at his invitation and continuing by his wish. For some years Lucas had the general management of the [514] business. Testator's illness *was brief, lasting only eight days. He died on December 21, 1896, between 12 and 1 o'clock. Early in the morning of that day, between 9 and 10 o'clock, the pastor of the church to which he belonged called, and to him he said:

"Pastor, I did not expect to go so early; there are some things which I wanted to perform and have neglected. I wanted to give the church a parsonage. I cannot do it now; it is too late. I will be unable, on account of the laws of Maryland, which apply to the District of Columbia, to do anything of that sort, for they will not allow a man to do anything of that sort within thirty days of the time of his death. I want you to prepare the papers and turn everything over to Sam."

Thereupon the pastor sent for a notary and prepared a deed conveying the real estate to Lucas. After that had been executed the pastor, who had never before prepared a deed, suggested that possibly he had not got everything in just right, and that if the testator wanted to make sure he could make a will. The testator then asked the notary to draw up a will, and it was drawn up and executed. At the time he directed the preparation of the deed he told Lucas what he would like to have done in reference to the parsonage, and Lucas replied that he would carry out his wishes. There was not a syllable of testimony, not a hint, that Lucas, or any other person, requested or suggested any disposition of the property. All that was done was done at the instance and upon the request of the testator. The caveators called four witnesses as to his mental condition, only one of whom was present at any time during his sickness, and that the pastor above referred to. So far from their testimony tending to show mental weakness, it was abundant and emphatic that he was a man of positive convictions, clear-headed, though perhaps eccentric in some views, but at all times fully capable of making his own contracts and attending to his own affairs. The testimony of the pastor, who, as stated, was present on the morning of his death and detailed the circumstances of that interview, shows that his mind was then clear, that he knew what he was doing, and was simply attempting to carry out by the deed and the will that which had been for a long time his intentions. Neither his attending *physician, the notary, the executor, nor Lu- [515] cas were called as witnesses, although all were present that morning. Evidently the caveators were content to rest their case in this respect upon the evidence of the pastor. Seven physicians were called, who, upon a hypothetical question, substantially concurred that it was contrary to their experience and reading that a man seventy-three years of age, dying of acute pneumonia, should have testamentary capacity between three and four hours before death. The only evidence of the cause of his death was the certificate from the health department, which named as such cause broncho-pneumonia. One of these seven physicians testified (and he alone gave evidence in that respect) that the unconsciousness preceding death from acute pneumonia was not characteristic of death from bronchial pneumonia, and that the circumstances disclosed by the pastor would tend to show that there was not mental inability to make a valid deed or contract. That acute pneumonia, especially in one of his age, would ordinarily cloud the intellect for hours before death, would be irrelevant to the question of his mental condition that morning, unless it was shown that he was suffering from such disease, and that does not appear.

From this direct testimony but one conclusion could be drawn, and that in favor of the mental soundness of the testator at the time he made the will. Nor is the caveators' case strengthened by that which counsel so forcibly presented to our attention, to wit, the right of a jury to take into consideration that which is common knowledge and springs from the ordinary experiences and relations of life. The testator was a white man, the devisee colored, and race prejudice we all know exists. But this testator, eccentric in his views and of positive convictions, is shown to have made this colored man his business and household companion for years. Such continued intimacy, excluding other parties therefrom, is satisfactory evidence that he at least was not moved by such prejudice. The potency of blood relationship is also appealed to, but affection between cousins is often not very strong. The testator lived in this District while the caveators lived in New England, and the testimony fails to show that he visited them or they him; *that they ever even corresponded, or that the caveators ever manifested any interest in him or his until after his death, when they asserted a right to inherit his property.

Upon questions of this kind submitted to a jury the burden of proof, in this District at least, is on the caveators. Dunlop v. Peter, 1 Cranch, C. C. 403, Fed. Cas. No. 4, 168. See also Higgins v. Carlton, 28 Md. 115, 143, 92 Am. Dec. 666; Tyson v. Tyson, 37 Md. 567. The caveators in the present case failed to sustain this burden, and we are of the opinion that the trial court did not err in directing a verdict against them.

The judgment is affirmed.

HANNAH SCHAEFER, Plff. in Err.,
v.

JULIUS WERLING, Henry Draper, and Martin B. Schaefer.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 516-519.)

Constitutional law—frontage rule of assessment—error to state court—Federal question.

1. A state statute under which the cost of a public improvement may be assessed upon the abutting property in proportion to frontage does not violate the Federal Constitution, where, as construed by the state courts, it requires such assessment to conform to the actual special benefits accruing to each of the abutting property owners.
2. The question whether a municipality, by refusing to hear objections to a public improvement, is estopped to collect any portion of the cost thereof from the objector. Is not a Federal question which may be reviewed by the Supreme Court of the United States on writ of error to a state court.

NOTE.—On constitutionality of frontage rule of assessment—see Raleigh v. Peace (N. C.) 17 L. R. A. 330, and note.

On writs of error from United States Supreme Court to state courts—see notes to Hamblin v. Western Land Co. 37 L. ed. U. S. 267; Kipley v. Illinois, 42 L. ed. U. S. 998; and Re Buchanan, 39 L. ed. U. S. 884.

570

[No. 151.]

Argued January 27, 28, 1903. Decided February 23, 1903.

IN ERROR to the Supreme Court of the State of Indiana to review a decision of that court affirming the validity of an assessment for a public improvement. Affirmed.

See same case below, 156 Ind. 704, 60 N. E. 149.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Samuel M. Saylor and W. W. Dudley argued the cause, and, with Mr. L. T. Michener, filed a brief for plaintiff in error:

The avowed purpose of the Barrett law is to formulate a method by which public improvements can be made, regardless of the objections or protests of property owners. It is predicated on the assumption that, as a rule, property along the line of a street improvement will be equally benefited; that, as a rule, property fronting upon a street, foot by foot, will be of equal value, and should therefore be equally assessed.

Palmer v. Stumph, 29 Ind. 329.

The only warrant for a special assessment against abutting property for the payment of a street improvement is that the benefit must be equal to or exceed the assessment.

Cooley, Taxn. 2d ed. 606; Illinois C. R. Co. v. Decatur, 147 U. S. 197, 37 L. ed. 134, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 293; Tide-water Co. v. Coster, 18 N. J. Eq. 531, 90 Am. Dec. 634.

Courts of equity are always open to afford a remedy where there is an attempt, under the guise of legal proceedings, to deprive a person of his life, liberty, or property without due process of law.

French v. Barber Asphalt Paving Co. 181 U. S. 324, 45 L. ed. 879, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 625.

An unlimited right in the law-making power to concentrate the burden of a tax upon specified property does not exist.

Hammett v. Philadelphia, 65 Pa. 152, 3 Am. Rep. 615; State, Agents, Prosecutor, v. Newark, 37 N. J. L. 415, 18 Am. Rep. 729.

The reasoning in cases concerning the police power of the states is apposite to the cause.

Lawton v. Steele, 152 U. S. 137, 38 L. ed. 388, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 499; Chicago & N. W. R. Co. v. Fuller, 17 Wall. 560, 21 L. ed. 710; Stone v. Farmers' Loan & T. Co. 116 U. S. 331, 29 L. ed. 644, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 334, 388, 1191; Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. v. Minnesota, 134 U. S. 418, 33 L. ed. 970, 3 Inters. Com. Rep. 209, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 462, 702; Smyth v. Ames, 169 U. S. 466, 42 L. ed. 819, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 418.

Mr. John C. Chaney argued the cause, and, with Messrs. Alphonso Hart, William H. Hart, John G. Cline, and Clifford F.

188 U. S.

Jackman, filed a brief for defendants in error:

Laws which impose upon property the cost of local improvements do not deprive the owner of his property without due process of law, within the meaning of the 14th Amendment of the Constitution.

Davidson v. New Orleans, 96 U. S. 97, 24 L. ed. 616; Mobile County v. Kimball, 102 U. S. 691, 26 L. ed. 238; Hagar v. Reclamation Dist. No. 108, 111 U. S. 701, 28 L. ed. 569, 4 Sup. Ct. Rep. 663; Wurtz v. Hoagland, 114 U. S. 606, 29 L. ed. 229, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1086; Walston v. Nevin, 128 U. S. 578, 32 L. ed. 544, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 192; Spencer v. Merchant, 125 U. S. 345, 31 L. ed. 763, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 921; Williams v. Eggleston, 170 U. S. 304, 42 L. ed. 1047, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 617; Parsons v. District of Columbia, 170 U. S. 45, 42 L. ed. 943, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 521.

The power of taxation rests exclusively in the legislature.

United States v. New Orleans, 98 U. S. 381, 25 L. ed. 225; Meriwether v. Garrett, 102 U. S. 472, 26 L. ed. 197.

The legislature may designate the common council of a city or the board of trustees of a town to dispose of the details of improvements, such as figuring out the costs, calculating the benefits, etc.

Ft. Wayne v. Cody, 43 Ind. 197; Palmer v. Stumph, 29 Ind. 337; Garvin v. Daussman, 114 Ind. 435, 16 N. E. 826; Spencer v. Merchant, 125 U. S. 345, 31 L. ed. 763, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 921.

The way of arriving at the amount may be, in some instances, inequitable and unequal, but that is far from rising to the level of a constitutional problem, and far from a case of taking property without due process of law.

Fallbrook Irrig. Dist. v. Bradley, 164 U. S. 112, 41 L. ed. 369, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 56; Walston v. Nevin, 128 U. S. 578, 32 L. ed. 544, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 192. See also Cleveland v. Tripp, 13 R. I. 59; Kelly v. Pittsburgh, 104 U. S. 78, 26 L. ed. 658; Parsons v. District of Columbia, 170 U. S. 45, 42 L. ed. 943, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 521; French v. Barber Asphalt Paving Co. 181 U. S. 324, 45 L. ed. 879, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 625; Webster v. Fargo, 181 U. S. 394, 45 L. ed. 912, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 623.

Frontage may be made the basis of apportionment.

Dill. Mun. Corp. 1890; Cooley, Taxn. 2d ed. 1886, p. 644; Illinois C. R. Co. v. Decatur, 147 U. S. 190, 37 L. ed. 132, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 293; White v. People, 94 Ill. 604; Craw v. Tolono, 96 Ill. 255, 36 Am. Rep. 143; Enos v. Springfield, 113 Ill. 65; Sterling v. Galt, 117 Ill. 11, 7 N. E. 471; Springfield v. Green, 120 Ill. 269, 11 N. E. 261; Sheley v. Detroit, 45 Mich. 431, 8 N. W. 52; Elliott, Roads & Streets, 392, 393; 2 Dill. Mun. Corp. 760b; Cooley, Taxn. 451; 2 Beach, Pub. Corp. §1072; 25 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 306; Palmyra v. Morton, 25 Mo. 594; Fowler v. St. Joseph, 37 Mo. 228; Powell v. St. Joseph, 31 Mo. 347; St. Joseph v. O'Donoghue, 31 Mo. 345; St. Louis use of 188 U. S.

McGrath v. Clemens, 49 Mo. 554; Kiley v. Cranor, 51 Mo. 541; Weber v. Schergens, 59 Mo. 390; Rutherford v. Hamilton, 97 Mo. 543, 11 S. W. 249; Farrar v. St. Louis, 80 Mo. 379; Watson v. Chicago, 115 Ill. 78, 3 N. E. 430; Bigelow v. Chicago, 90 Ill. 53; Pagan v. Chicago, 84 Ill. 234; Galesburg v. Searles, 114 Ill. 217, 29 N. E. 686; Springfield v. Sale, 127 Ill. 359, 20 N. E. 86; O'Reilley v. Kingston, 114 N. Y. 439, 21 N. E. 1004; Whiting v. Townsend, 57 Cal. 515; Burnett v. Sacramento, 12 Cal. 76, 73 Am. Dec. 518; Parker v. Challis, 9 Kan. 155; Newman v. Emporia, 41 Kan. 583, 21 Pac. 593; Iudlow v. Cincinnati Southern R. Co. 78 Ky. 357; Baltimore v. Johns Hopkins Hospital, 56 Md. 1; State ex rel. Steteler v. Reis, 38 Minn. 371, 38 N. W. 97; State, Sigler, Prosecutor, v. Fuller, 34 N. J. L. 227; Ernst v. Kunkle, 5 Ohio St. 520; Northern Indiana R. Co. v. Connelly, 10 Ohio St. 159; Corry v. Folz, 29 Ohio St. 320; Crawford v. Cincinnati, 26 Ohio L. J. 215; Magee v. Com. 46 Pa. 358; McGonigle v. Allegheny, 44 Pa. 118; Baumont v. Wilkes-Barre, 142 Pa. 198, 21 Atl. 888; Davis v. Lynchburg, 84 Va. 861, 6 S. E. 230; Cleveland v. Tripp, 13 R. I. 59; Rolph v. Fargo, 7 N. D. 640, 42 L. R. A. 646, 76 N. W. 242; Roberts v. First Nat. Bank, 8 N. D. 504, 79 N. W. 1049.

Mr. Justice Brewer delivered the opinion of the court:

In September, 1892, the plaintiff in error, the owner of five *lots on Williams street, in [517] Schaefer's addition to the city of Huntington, Indiana, with other lot owners, petitioned the city council to have the street graded and graveled. On July 10, 1893, the petition was granted and the street ordered to be so improved. After this improvement had been ordered some of the lot owners petitioned the city council to order the street paved with brick. This petition was presented on August 14, 1893. A remonstrance was at the same time presented, the plaintiff in error being one of the parties thereto. Notwithstanding the remonstrance the city council ordered that the street be paved with brick, and let a contract therefor to the defendants in error. They completed the work according to the contract, and the lots abutting on Williams street were assessed for the cost thereof,—the assessment being made by the front foot,—and a precept to collect the amount due on the lots of the plaintiff in error issued to the city treasurer. Further proceedings were had on appeal, in accordance with the provisions of the statute, which ended in a decision of the supreme court affirming the validity of the assessment, on the authority of Adams v. Shelbyville, 154 Ind. 467, 49 L. R. A. 797, 57 N. E. 114, and thereupon the case was brought here on writ of error.

The case involves the validity of a statute of Indiana known as the "Barrett law," enacted in 1899. Burns's Rev. Stat. 1894, §§ 4288-4298. We deem it sufficient to refer to the opinion in Adams v. Shelbyville, 154 Ind. 467, 49 L. R. A. 797, 57 N. E. 114, in which the supreme court of Indiana closed an elaborate discussion of the various provisions of the law in these words:

"We therefore conclude that § 3, Acts 1889 (Burns's Rev. Stat. 1894, § 4290), must be construed as providing a rule of prima facie assessments in street and alley improvements, which allotments by the city or town engineer, under § 6 of said act of 1889 (Burns's Rev. Stat. 1894, § 4293), are subject to review and alteration by the common council and board of trustees, under § 7 of said act of 1889, as amended (Acts 1891, p. 324; Acts 1899, p. 64; Burns's Rev. Stat. 1894, § 4294), upon the basis of actual special benefits received by the improvement; and that under said § 7, the common [518] council of a city or board of trustees of *an incorporated town have not only the power, but it is their imperative duty, to adjust the assessments for street and alley improvements, under said act, to conform to the actual special benefits accruing to each of the abutting property owners."

Of course, the construction placed by the supreme court of a state upon its statutes is, in a case of this kind, conclusive upon this court. Forsyth v. Hammond, 166 U. S. 506, 518, 41 L. ed. 1095, 1100, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 665, and cases cited. And with that construction the following recently decided cases, in which the matter of street assessment was fully considered, sustain the decision of the state court upholding the validity of the law: French v. Barber Asphalt Paving Co. 181 U. S. 324, 45 L. ed. 879, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 625; Wight v. Davidson, 181 U. S. 371, 45 L. ed. 900, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 616; Tonawanda v. Lyon, 181 U. S. 389, 45 L. ed. 908, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 609; Webster v. Fargo, 181 U. S. 394, 45 L. ed. 912, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 623; Cass Farm Co. v. Detroit, 181 U. S. 396, 45 L. ed. 914, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 644; Detroit v. Parker, 181 U. S. 399, 45 L. ed. 917, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 624; Wormley v. District of Columbia, 181 U. S. 402, 45 L. ed. 921, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 609; Shumate v. Heman, 181 U. S. 402, 45 L. ed. 922, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 645; Farrell v. West Chicago Park, 181 U. S. 404, 45 L. ed. 924, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 609; King v. Portland, 184 U. S. 61, 46 L. ed. 431, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 290; Voigt v. Detroit, 184 U. S. 115, 46 L. ed. 459, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 337; Goodrich v. Detroit, 184 U. S. 432, 46 L. ed. 627, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 397.

Another question presented is this: The plaintiff in error appeared by counsel before the city council and filed written objections to the brick pavement "because the cost of said improvement will greatly exceed the benefit of said improvement; second, said proposed improvement is not necessary to said real estate, and is not of public utility to said real estate." The record of the city council shows that "after some discussion on the matter Mr. Levy moved to place the communication on file, which motion was concurred in." In her answer filed in the circuit court plaintiff in error alleged that she appeared before the common council, "and offered to present her objections to the necessity of said improvement, but that the said common council refused to hear her objections to the improvement of said street with brick, treating her said objections as a mere communication, and ordering the same placed on file." She further averred that she could and would have shown by witnesses that the improvement was not necessary, and also "that by reason of the refusal of the said action thereon the said city of Huntington, Indiana, is estopped from proceeding to collect any benefits assessed on *the lots herein described." The circuit [519] court sustained a demurrer to this answer. It may be observed that, so far as the question was one of estoppel, it was a purely state, and not a Federal, question. Gillis v. Stinchfield, 159 U. S. 658, 40 L. ed. 295, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 131; Phoenix F. & M. Ins. Co. v. Tennessee, 161 U. S. 174, 40 L. ed. 660, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 471; Beals v. Cone, 188 U. S. 184, ante, 435, 23 Sup. Ct. Rep. 275. Further, the matter was not noticed by the supreme court, and its judgment is the one before us for review.

We see no error in the record, and the judgment is affirmed.

JAMES TARRANCE, Will Smith, Amos Clark, et al., Plffs. in Err.,
v.

STATE OF FLORIDA.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 519-525.)

Constitutional law—equal protection of the laws—negroes as jurors—discrimination against—error to state court—conclusiveness of state decision.

1. The denial of a motion to quash an indictment, and the overruling of challenges to the array of jurors, which raise the objection that negroes were discriminated against in the selection of grand and petit jurors, is not error, where no evidence is received or offered in support of such charge except defendants' affidavit attached to the motion to quash, stating that the facts set up in such motion are true "to their best knowledge, information, and belief."
2. The settled rule of a state court that objections to the manner of selecting grand jurors on behalf of one who has been indicted by such jurors must be taken by plea in abatement, and not by motion to quash the venire and panel, is binding on the Supreme Court of the United States on writ of error to the state court.

[No. 202.]

Argued April 17, 1902. Decided February 23, 1903.

NOTE.—As to negroes as grand jurors—see notes to State v. Russell (Iowa) 28 L. R. A. 204; and Carter v. Texas, 44 L. ed. U. S. 839. As to when United States Supreme Court follows decisions of state courts—see notes to Forepaugh v. Delaware, L. & W. R. Co. (Pa.) 5 L. R. A. 508; United States ex rel. Butz v. Muscatine, 19 L. ed. U. S. 490; and Elmendorf v. Taylor, 6 L. ed. U. S. 290.

IN ERROR to the Supreme Court of the State of Florida to review a judgment which affirmed a conviction in the Circuit Court of Escambia County of the crime of murder. Affirmed.

See same case below, 30 So. 685.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Isaac L. Purcell argued the cause and filed a brief for plaintiffs in error:

Where the discrimination is made by officers of the law, the equal protection of the law is equally denied as though made by the law itself.

Henderson v. Wickham, 92 U. S. 259, 23 L. ed. 543; Chy Lung v. Freeman, 92 U. S. 275, 23 L. ed. 550; Virginia v. Rives, 100 U. S. 329, 25 L. ed. 673; Neal v. Delaware, 103 U. S. 370, 26 L. ed. 567.

The question could be raised either by plea in abatement or motion to quash.

Ellis v. State, 25 Fla. 703, 6 So. 768; Potsdamer v. State, 17 Fla. 895.

The state of facts as set up by defendants' motion, if true, would justify the quashing of the venire.

Carter v. Texas, 177 U. S. 442, 44 L. ed. 839, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 687.

The state neither denied nor traversed the motion, and, inasmuch as the allegations therein set forth are not denied, they are admitted to be true; and, if true, the motion ought to have been granted and the indictment quashed.

Ibid.; Williams v. Mississippi, 170 U. S. 213, 42 L. ed. 1012, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 583; Neal v. Delaware, 103 U. S. 370, 26 L. ed. 567.

The question whether a right or privilege claimed under the Constitution or laws of the United States was sufficiently pleaded and brought to the notice of a state court is itself a Federal question, in the decision of which this court on writ of error, is not concluded by the view taken by the highest state court.

Neal v. Delaware, 103 U. S. 370, 26 L. ed. 567; Mitchell v. Clark, 110 U. S. 633, 28 L. ed. 279, 4 Sup. Ct. Rep. 170, 312; Boyd v. Nebraska, 143 U. S. 135, 36 L. ed. 103, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 375; Carter v. Texas, 177 U. S. 442, 44 L. ed. 839, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 687.

Mr. William B. Lamar argued the cause and filed a brief for defendant in error.

Mr. Justice Brewer delivered the opinion of the court:

[520] Plaintiffs in error were convicted in the circuit court of Escambia county, Florida, of the crime of murder, and sentenced to fifteen years in prison. The supreme court of the state having affirmed this sentence (30 So. 685), the case was brought here on writ of error.

The contention of plaintiffs in error is that they were denied the equal protection of the laws, by reason of an actual discrimination against their race. The law of the state is not challenged, but its administration is complained of. As said by their counsel:

188 U. S.

"We do not contend that the colored men are discriminated against by any law of this state in the selection of names for jury duty, nor do we contend that a negro being tried for a criminal offense is entitled to a jury composed wholly or in part of members of his race; but do claim that when a negro is tried for a criminal offense, he is entitled to a jury selected without any discrimination against his race on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude; and when this is not the case, he is denied the equal protection of the laws as guaranteed by the 14th Amendment to the Constitution of the United States."

Such an actual discrimination is as potential in creating a denial of equality of rights as a discrimination made by law. But such an actual discrimination is not presumed. It must be proved or admitted. The record discloses these facts: On December 3, 1900, a grand jury was impaneled, and on December 5 returned an indictment charging the defendants with the crime of murder. On December 5 they filed a motion to quash the venire and the panels of the grand and petit jurors. In the motion it was stated that there was in the county as many colored citizens of sound judgment, approved integrity, fair character, and fully qualified for jury duty, as white, and stated as grounds for the motion that "the county commissioners, in selecting the lists of names for jury duty for and during the present year, discriminated against all colored men of African descent, on account of their race, color, and previous condition of servitude, and from said lists were drawn the grand jury which found the indictment against these defendants and the petit jury which is to try them." And that "for many years *all colored men of Af-[521] rican descent have been discriminated against, and none have been selected or drawn or summoned as grand or petit jurors in this or in any of the courts of this county, although there are more than one thousand four hundred colored men in said county, a large number of whom are taxpayers, and of approved integrity, fair character, sound judgment, and intelligence, well known to the county commissioners to be such; and this discrimination is based entirely on race, color, and previous condition of servitude."

On December 6 the state's attorney moved the court to strike out the defendants' motion, on the grounds that it was impertinent, submitted nothing for the court's determination or consideration, was not such a motion as the court could consider, and set up no state of facts which, if true, would justify the quashing of the venire. On the same day this motion of the state's attorney was sustained, and the motion of the defendants to quash was stricken out. On the same day they filed a motion to quash the indictment on substantially the same grounds. This motion was overruled. Special venires were issued before the trial jury was finally impaneled, and as one by one these venires were returned the defendants challenged the array of jurors on the ground that the sheriff, in the selection of jurors, knowingly discriminated against all colored men, and refused and failed to select any to serve on the jury, although knowing that there were more than five hundred colored men in the county fully qualified to serve. No evidence was received or offered in support of any of these several motions except an affidavit of the defendants attached to the motion to quash the indictment, stating that the facts set up in the motion were true "to their best knowledge, information, and belief."

In respect to all these motions, except the one to quash the venire and panels of the grand and petit jurors, it is sufficient to refer to Smith v. Mississippi, 162 U. S. 592, 600, 40 L. ed. 1082, 1085, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 900; Carter v. Texas, 177 U. S. 442, 44 L. ed. 839, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 687. In the first case the motion to quash was supported by an affidavit similar to the one here presented, and it was held no evidence of the facts stated, and that therefore the denial of the motion was not erroneous. In the second case the bill of exceptions showed that the defendant asked *leave to introduce witnesses, and offered to introduce witnesses, to prove the allegations in his motion, but that the court refused to hear any evidence in support of the motion, but overruled it without investigating into the truth or falsity of the allegations therein; and this was adjudged error.

We pass, therefore, to a consideration of the ruling on the first motion. No evidence was received or offered in its support, but the motion itself was stricken out, and it is contended that the motion to strike out was equivalent to a demurrer which admitted the truth of the allegations challenged thereby, and in support thereof Neal v. Delaware, 103 U. S. 370, 26 L. ed. 567, and Mitchell v. Clark, 110 U. S. 633, 28 L. ed. 279, 4 Sup. Ct. Rep. 170, 312, are cited. But in the former case the court held that an agreement by the attorney general, appearing for the state, was to be regarded as an admission of the truth of the facts stated in the motion and therefore waived the necessity for further evidence; and in the second case there was only a distinct ruling upon a demurrer to a plea.

In reference to the action of the trial court in this matter the supreme court of the state said:

"The first motion filed by defendants was to quash the venire drawn for the term, and the panels of grand and petit jurors. The venire drawn for the term at that time consisted only of the grand and petit jurors then in attendance. In so far as the panel of petit jurors was concerned, the defendants had no right to move to quash that. It was summoned for the first week of the term only, and had and could have no connection whatever with defendants' case, because their case was not to be tried until a subsequent week, when another and different panel of petit jurors would be in attendance. The petit jury objected to had not been called to try defendants' case and would not be, as their term of service would, under the law, expire long before defendants' case would be called for trial. The defendants had no right to challenge the array of petit jurors until their case was called for trial, and it was proposed to impanel upon the jury to try them some member of the objectionable panel.

"As to the grand jury, the defendants had no right at that time to move to quash the panel. If defendants could properly *move[523] to quash the panel or challenge the array of grand jurors for the reasons stated in this motion, it could only be done before the grand jury was impaneled, or at least before the indictment was found. Whether it could be done in that way, we do not now decide. We are clear, however, that a motion to quash the panel of grand jurors by one who has been indicted by such jurors is not proper practice. Gladden v. State, 13 Fla. 623. As we shall show further on, a plea in abatement of the indictment is the proper remedy. We regard the ruling sustaining the motion to strike, as equivalent to holding that the motion to quash was not the proper method of raising the question sought to be raised; and while we do not approve of the practice of moving to strike a motion, we do not see that the defendants have been injured by the form of the ruling complained of.

"We are of opinion that the proper method of presenting the question sought to be presented by this motion is by plea in abatement of the indictment, and not by motion to quash, and that the ruling upon the motion can be sustained upon that ground. It has for many years been the practice in this state, sanctioned by repeated rulings of this court, that all objections to the competency of, and to irregularities in selecting, drawing, and impaneling grand jurors, not appearing of record, must be taken advantage of by plea in abatement of the indictment, and not by motion to quash it. Woodward v. State, 33 Fla. 508, 15 So. 252; Kitrol v. State, 9 Fla. 9; Gladden v. State, 13 Fla. 623; Tervin v. State, 37 Fla. 396, 20 So. 551. See also State v. Foster, 9 Tex. 65."

The authorities cited in this opinion sustain the propositions laid down. In Kitrol v. State, 9 Fla. 9, 13, it was said:

"We are, therefore, of the opinion that the incompetency of the grand jurors, by whom indictment is preferred, may be pleaded by the defendant in abatement."

In Gladden v. State, 13 Fla. 623, 630, the court uses this language:

"In Massachusetts, New York, and other states, it has been held that objections to the legality of the returns of grand *jurors[524] cannot affect an indictment found by them after it has been received by the court and filed; that such objection must be interposed before indictment found, and even before the grand jury is sworn. But it seems to be now settled that such objection may be made by plea in abatement to the indictment at any time before pleading in bar. This is substantially the rule announced by the supreme court of this state in Kitrol v.

State, 9 Fla. 9. The opinion of the supreme court of Mississippi in McQuillen v. State, 8 Smedes & M. 587, delivered by Chief Justice Sharkey, announces what we consider the true and correct practice in such a case. Such matters are reached by plea in abatement only (though in some states a challenge to the array is treated, we do not say properly so, as a substitute for a plea in abatement), and matters in abatement in criminal as well as in civil cases must be pleaded before pleading in bar."

In Burroughs v. State, 17 Fla. 643, 661, where the validity of the composition of the jury was sought to be challenged on a motion in arrest of judgment, the court said:

"Aside from the fact that there is no such bill of exceptions as is required to present any question of that character to this court, if it had been properly raised, we are of the opinion that all objections to the legality of grand jurors must be made by plea in abatement to the indictment before pleading in bar. Such is the rule as announced by this court in Gladden v. State, 13 Fla. 623."

The force of this decision is not weakened by what was said by the same court in Potsdamcr v. State, 17 Fla. 895, 897:

"The rule is that such objections must be taken by motion or plea in abatement before pleading to the indictment. It is not proper ground of a motion for a new trial;" for Gladden v. State and Burroughs v. State are both cited as authority. What kind of a motion the Chief Justice had in mind when he spoke of "motion or plea in abatement" is not disclosed. At any rate, such a general statement cannot be considered as overruling prior decisions.

[525] *In Tervin v. State, 37 Fla. 396, 20 So. 551, the ruling of the court was expressed in these words (p. 403, So., p. 553):

"On the 25th of October, 1895, the defendant moved to quash the indictment and for his discharge upon the ground that 'there is nothing upon the records of this court to show that the grand jurors who found the indictment were drawn in accordance with chapter 1015 of the acts of the legislature of A. D. 1891.' This motion was overruled, and such ruling constitutes the fourth assignment of error. There is no merit in this assignment. If there was any such irregularity in the drawing or impaneling of the grand jury that found the indictment as would render such indictment void or illegal, the proper way to make it appear was by plea in abatement, instead of by motion to quash."

Neither is there anything in the cases referred to by counsel for plaintiff in error against this ruling. So we have not merely the declaration of the court in this particular case as to the practice to be observed, but a declaration supported by many prior decisions. Obviously, it is the settled rule in the state.

These are all the matters called to our attention by counsel, and in them appearing no error, the judgment of the Supreme Court of Florida is affirmed.

188 U. S.

Mr Justice Harlan did not hear the argument or take part in the decision of this case.

*NORTHERN PACIFIC RAILWAY COM-[526]
PANY, Appt.,

v.

JOHN A. SODERBERG.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 526-537.)

Appeal—from circuit court of appeals—finality of decision—jurisdiction of circuit court—case arising under the laws of the United States—railway land grant—what are mineral lands.

1. The judgment of the circuit court of appeals is not final under the circuit court of appeals act of 1891, § 6 (26 Stat. at L. 828, chap. 517, U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 549), unless the original jurisdiction of the circuit court was dependent "entirely" upon diverse citizenship.
2. A suit over the ownership of real property, in which plaintiff's title rests upon a proper interpretation of the exception of mineral lands in the Northern Pacific Railroad land grant act of July 2, 1864 (13 Stat. at L. 365, chap. 217), is one arising under the laws of the United States, of which a circuit court has jurisdiction wholly independent of citizenship.
3. Lands valuable solely or chiefly for granite quarries are "mineral lands" within the meaning of the exception of such lands, in the act of July 2, 1864 (13 Stat. at L. 365, chap. 217), from the grant made therein to the Northern Pacific Railroad Company.

[No. 61.]

Argued October 31, 1902. Ordered for re-argument November 17, 1902. Leave to United States to intervene December 8, 1902. Reargued December 12, 1902. Decided February 23, 1903.

APPEAL from the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit to review a decree which affirmed a decree of the Circuit Court for the District of Washington, dismissing a bill to enjoin the removal or disposal of granite from land held under a mineral location, and quieting the title of defendant to such land. Affirmed.

See same case below, 43 C. C. A. 620, 104 Fed. 425.

Statement by Mr. Justice Brown:

This was a bill filed by the railway company in the circuit court for the district of Washington to enjoin the defendant Soderberg from taking, removing, or disposing of

NOTE.—As to Federal question as conferring jurisdiction on United States courts—see notes to Montana Ore-Purchasing Co. v. Boston & M. Consol. Copper & S. Min. Co. 35 C. C. A. 7; Bailey v. Mosher, 11 C. C. A. 308; and Re Buchanan, 39 L. ed. U. S. 884.

As to land grants to railroads—see note to Kansas P. R. Co. v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. 28 L. ed. U. S. 794.

granite from a quarter section of land of which he had taken possession under a mineral location, and for an account of the granite quarried or removed.

The bill alleged the incorporation of the Northern Pacific Railroad Company under an act of Congress of July 2, 1864 (13 Stat. at L. 365, chap. 217), with power to construct a railroad from Lake Superior to Puget sound, with a branch line via Columbia river to Portland; the grant of every alternate odd-numbered section of public land, **not mineral*, to the amount of twenty alternate sections per mile, on each side of the line when passing through the territories; acceptance of the act by the railroad company; a joint resolution of Congress approved May 31, 1870, authorizing the company to issue bonds for the construction of the road, with a privilege to the company of building its main road by the valley of the Columbia river, with a branch across the Cascade mountains to Puget sound; the definite location on March 26, 1884, of the Cascade branch of the road; the completion and acceptance of the road coterminus with its public lands; the conveyance on August 3, 1896, of all its property to the Northern Pacific Railway Company, which has since continuously operated such road.

The bill further alleged that the quarter section in dispute was rough, mountainous land, the principal value of which consisted in the existence of a ledge of granite of good merchantable quality, and valuable for building stone; that the defendant in 1898 entered upon this quarter section and began to quarry, remove, and dispose of such granite under a mineral location of the land in question, contending that such land is excepted from the general land grant, and that the question whether this land is mineral or nonmineral has not yet been determined by the department. Wherefore an injunction was prayed.

The answer raised no issue of fact, but averred that the lands were mineral in character and as such excepted from the grant, and that defendant having complied with the rules and regulations of the Land Department and made the proper proof, it was assumed and decided that the defendant was entitled to a patent. That he paid the proper fees to the receiver, who forwarded the proofs and records to the Land Department with a recommendation that a patent issue. The patent, however, does not seem to have been actually issued until after the beginning of this suit.

The court heard the case upon a stipulation of facts, and entered a decree dismissing the bill, and quieting the title of the defendant to the lands in question. 99 Fed. 506. On appeal to the circuit court of appeals this decree was affirmed. 43 C. C. A. 620, 104 Fed. 425.

Mr. C. W. Bunn argued the cause, and, with Mr. James B. Kerr, filed a brief for appellant:

The use of the term "mines," in the pre-emption law, was interpreted by the Interior Department as not excluding stone lands from acquisition under that law.

Jacob's Case, 7 Copp's Landowner, 83; Conlin v. Kelly, 12 Land Dec. 1.

This court has treated the exception of mines, in the pre-emption law, and mineral lands from grants both to states and to railroads, as synonymous.

Davis v. Weibbold, 139 U. S. 507, 35 L. ed. 238, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 628.

The general rule of the Land Department is against granite, or any other ordinary building stone, being capable of acquisition under the mineral laws. Moreover, it is clear that lands containing building stone could be acquired under the pre-emption laws, which, as we have shown, excepted "mines."

Re Hopper, 1 Land Dec. 561; Re Dobbs Placer Mine, 1 Land Dec. 568; Re Dunluce Placer Mine, 6 Land Dec. 761; Conlin v. Kelly, 12 Land Dec. 1; Clark v. Ervin, 16 Land Dec. 122; Hayden v. Jamison, 16 Land Dec. 537; Gary v. Todd, 18 Land Dec. 58; Jordan v. Idaho Aluminum Min. & Mfg. Co. 20 Land Dec. 500.

Land simply valuable for its deposit of limestone is not mineral.

Jacob's Case, 7 Copp's Landowner, 83.

Phosphate rock is not mineral.

Tucker v. Florida R. & Nav. Co. 19 Land Dec. 414.

Land producing petroleum is not mineral.

Re Union Oil Co. 23 Land Dec. 222.

Magnesia is not considered a mineral.

Gibson v. Tyson, 5 Watts, 34.

Petroleum is not embraced in the exception of "all minerals."

Dunham v. Kirkpatrick, 101 Pa. 36, 47 Am. Rep. 696.

Mineral land must contain metals in quantities sufficient to render it available and valuable for mining purposes.

Alford v. Barnum, 45 Cal. 482; Merrill v. Dixon, 15 Nev. 407.

A mining claim is a parcel of land containing precious metal in its soil or rock.

St. Louis Smelting & Ref. Co. v. Kemp, 104 U. S. 649, 26 L. ed. 875; McKeon v. Bisbee, 9 Cal. 137, 70 Am. Dec. 642.

No valid location of a mining claim can be made until a vein or deposit of gold, silver, or metalliferous ore or rock in place has been discovered.

Overman Silver Min. Co. v. Corcoran, 15 Nev. 147.

Minerals mean, ordinarily, metallic fissile bodies.

Listowell v. Gibbings, 9 Ir. C. L. Rep. 223.

A lead cannot exist without valuable ore.

Stevens v. Gill, 1 Morrison, Min. Rep. 579.

A lode is "metal-bearing rock."

Eureka Consol. Min. Co. v. Richmond Consol. Min. Co. 4 Sawy. 302, Fed. Cas. No. 4, 548.

"Metal zone" is equivalent to "mineral zone."

Mount Diablo Mill & Min. Co. v. Callison, 5 Sawy. 439, Fed. Cas. No. 9,886. See also Reynolds v. Iron Silver Min. Co. 116 U. S. 695, 29 L. ed. 777, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 601;

Richmond Min. Co. v. Eureka Min. Co. 103 U. S. 839, 26 L. ed. 557; Jupiter Min. Co. v. Bodie Consol. Min. Co. 7 Sawy. 96, 11 Fed. 666.

This court recognizes the distinction between mines and quarries, and between deposits of precious metals and deposits of substances which fall within the strict scientific definition of "mineral."

Barden v. Northern P. R. Co. 154 U. S. 288, 38 L. ed. 992, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1030.

If the plaintiff's title arises directly from an act of Congress, and if the question involved depends on the construction of the act, the case is one arising under the laws of the United States.

Cooke v. Avery, 147 U. S. 375, 37 L. ed. 209, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 340; Spokane Falls & N. R. Co. v. Ziegler, 167 U. S. 65, 42 L. ed. 79, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 728. See also Doolan v. Carr, 125 U. S. 618, 31 L. ed. 844, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1228.

The following cases, decided at the last term, support the jurisdiction of this court in this case:

Sweringen v. St. Louis, 185 U. S. 38, 46 L. ed. 795, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 569; Huguley Mfg. Co. v. Galtion Cotton Mills, 184 U. S. 290, 46 L. ed. 546, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 452; Patton v. Brady, 184 U. S. 608, 46 L. ed. 713, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 493; Howard v. United States, 184 U. S. 676, 46 L. ed. 754, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 543.

Mr. J. T. Ronald argued the cause and filed a brief for appellee:

The mining laws are to be read in the light of matters of public history relating to the mineral lands of the United States.

Jennison v. Kirk, 98 U. S. 453, 25 L. ed. 240.

Where the statute operates as a grant of public property to an individual, that construction should be adopted which will support the claim of the government, rather than that of the individual.

Re Alabama & C. R. Co. 3 Land Dec. 243; Charles River Bridge v. Warren Bridge, 11 Pet. 420, 9 L. ed. 773; Dubuque & P. R. Co. v. Litchfield, 23 How. 66, 16 L. ed. 500; Rice v. Minnesota & N. W. R. Co. 1 Black, 360, 17 L. ed. 147; Leavenworth, L. & G. R. Co. v. United States, 92 U. S. 733, 23 L. ed. 634; Stidell v. Grandjean, 111 U. S. 412, 28 L. ed. 321, 4 Sup. Ct. Rep. 475; Barden v. Northern P. R. Co. 154 U. S. 288, 38 L. ed. 992, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1030.

In case of a doubtful or ambiguous law, the contemporaneous construction of the statute by the executive officers whose duty it is to construe it, or those who have been called upon to carry it into effect, is entitled to great respect, and should ordinarily control the construction of the statute by the courts.

United States v. Moore, 95 U. S. 760, 24 L. ed. 588; United States v. Burlington & M. River R. Co. 98 U. S. 336, 25 L. ed. 198; United States v. Graham, 110 U. S. 219, 28 L. ed. 126, 3 Sup. Ct. Rep. 582; Brown v. United States, 113 U. S. 568, 28 L. ed. 1079, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 648; The Laura, 114 U. S. 413, sub nom. Pollock v. Bridgeport S. B. 188 U. S.

Co. 29 L. ed. 147, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 881; United States v. Philbrick, 120 U. S. 52, 30 L. ed. 559, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 413; Robertson v. Downing, 127 U. S. 613, 32 L. ed. 271, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1328; Hastings & D. R. Co. v. Whitney, 132 U. S. 365, 33 L. ed. 367, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 112; Heath v. Wallace, 138 U. S. 578, 34 L. ed. 1066, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 380; Pennoyer v. McConnaughy, 140 U. S. 23, 35 L. ed. 370, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 699; Barden v. Northern P. R. Co. 154 U. S. 288, 38 L. ed. 992, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1030.

The word "mineral," when used in an act of Congress, must be understood in its widest signification, unless there be something in the context or nature of the case to control its meaning; and when the words "mines" and "minerals" are both used in the same statute, the word "mineral" is not on that account to suffer limitation of its meaning.

Lindley, Mines, §§ 90, 91.

Lands valuable only for granite or building stone of a good commercial quality are "mineral lands."

Pacific Coast Marble Co. v. Northern P. R. Co. 25 Land Dec. 237; Bainbridge, Mines, 4th ed. p. 1; Stewart, Mines, p. 9; Sweet, Law Dict.; Rosse v. Wainman, 14 Mees. & W. 859; Micklethwait v. Winter, 6 Exch. 644; Midland R. Co. v. Checkley, L. R. 4 Eq. 19; Midland R. Co. v. Haunchwood Brick & Tile Co. L. R. 20 Ch. Div. 552; Hezt v. Gill, L. R. 7 Ch. 699; Atty. Gen. v. Tomline, L. R. 5 Ch. Div. 750; Atty. Gen. v. Welsh Granite Co. 35 Week. Rep. 617; Glasgow v. Farie, L. R. 13 App. Cas. 657; Bell v. Wilson, 2 Drew. & S. 395; Jamieson v. North British R. Co. 6 Scot. L. Rep. 188; Tucker v. Linger, L. R. 8 App. Cas. 508; Cleveland v. Meyrick, 16 Week. Rep. 104; Ruabon Brick & Terra Cotta Co. v. Great Western R. Co. L. R. 1 Ch. 427; Errington v. Metropolitan Dist. R. Co. L. R. 19 Ch. Div. 559; Atty. Gen. v. Mylchreest, L. R. 4 App. Cas. 294; Lindley, Mines, §§ 90, 98.

The Land Department of the government has universally held stone to be a mineral.

Hooper's Case, 1 Land Dec. 560; Bennet's Case, 3 Land Dec. 116; McGlenn v. Wienbroer, 15 Land Dec. 370; Van Doren v. Plsted, 16 Land Dec. 508; Gibson's Case, 21 Land Dec. 329; Pacific Coast Marble Co. v. Northern P. R. Co. 25 Land Dec. 244.

The mere reservation of lands, with no provision for disposal, does not make the reserved lands nonmineral.

McFadden v. Mountain View Min. & Mill. Co. 38 C. C. A. 354, 97 Fed. 679.

Stone lands are "mineral lands" within the exception in grants to railroads and to states.

Re Atlantic & P. R. Co. 12 Land Dec. 116; Mineral Lands, 19 Land Dec. 21; Pacific Coast Marble Co. v. Northern P. R. Co. 25 Land Dec. 247; Aldritt v. Northern P. R. Co. 25 Land Dec. 349; Re Florida C. & P. R. Co. 26 Land Dec. 600; Richter v. Utah, 27 Land Dec. 95; Tulare Oil & Min. Co. v. Southern P. R. Co. 29 Land Dec. 269; Schrumpf v. Northern P. R. Co. 29 Land Dec. 327; Beaudette v. Northern P. R. Co.

29 Land Dec. 248; Morrill v. Northern P. R. Co. 30 Land Dec. 475.

Though a particular mineral may not be mentioned or known to exist at the time of the grant, yet if it is fairly included in the general terms used, it will be excluded.

Barringer & Adams, Mines & Mining, p. 131.

Chromate of iron was included in the reservation of the grant reserving "all minerals."

Gibson v. Tyson, 5 Watts, 35.

Paintstone is a mineral.

Hartwell v. Camman, 10 N. J. Eq. 128, 64 Am. Dec. 448.

Petroleum oil is a mineral.

Funk v. Haldeman, 53 Pa. 229; Gird v. California Oil Co. 60 Fed. 531.

Stone is included in the word "minerals" as used in a lease.

Griffin v. Fellows, 81* Pa. 114.

Natural gas is included within the meaning of the word "mineral."

Westmoreland & C. Natural Gas Co. v. DeWitt, 130 Pa. 235, 5 L. R. A. 731, 18 Atl. 724; State ex rel. Corwin v. Indiana & O. Oil, Gas, & Min. Co. 120 Ind. 575, 6 L. R. A. 579, 2 Inters. Com. Rep. 758, 22 N. E. 778; Re Buffalo Natural Gas Fuel Co. 73 Fed. 191.

Granite is included in a purchase of "minerals and ores."

Armstrong v. Lake Champlain Granite Co. 147 N. Y. 495, 42 N. E. 186.

And see further, as to what are mineral lands,—

Lindley, Mines, §§ 94, 95; Ah Yew v. Choate, 24 Cal. 562; Davis v. Wiebold, 139 U. S. 507, 35 L. ed. 238, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 628; Freezer v. Sweeney, 8 Mont. 508, 21 Pac. 20.

The policy of Congress was to exempt all mineral substances from railroad grants.

Broder v. Natoma Water & Min. Co. 101 U. S. 274, 25 L. ed. 790; Barringer & Adams, Mines & Mining, p. 194; Morton v. Nebraska, 21 Wall. 660, 22 L. ed. 639; Barden v. Northern P. R. Co. 154 U. S. 317, 38 L. ed. 998, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1030.

Independent of the question whether stone was understood to be a mineral at the time of the passage of the act, Congress has so extended the mining laws as to make minerals include stone, and has otherwise reserved and appropriated stone lands, and consequently, at the date when the railroad became entitled to select these lands, they were otherwise reserved and appropriated, and were not free from other claims or rights, but were mineral lands within the meaning of the laws at that date, and subject to other claims or rights. There can be no doubt of the power of Congress to do this, and especially when the grant was made subject to the reserved power of Congress to add to, alter, or amend the act.

Menotti v. Dillon, 167 U. S. 703, 42 L. ed. 333, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 945; Northern P. R. Co. v. Sanders, 166 U. S. 620, 41 L. ed. 1139, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 671; Lindley, Mines, § 158.

The Land Department has been adhering to this same doctrine.

Re Northern P. R. Co. 20 Land Dec. 332, 26 Land Dec. 422.

A reservation for any purpose, within the limits of the withdrawal, made prior to the definite location of the line of the railroad and existing at such time, excepts the land covered thereby from the operation of the grant.

Re Northern P. R. Co. 27 Land Dec. 505; Northern P. R. Co. v. Martin, 6 Land Dec. 657.

It was the policy of the government from the beginning to secure to itself a fair proportion of the minerals, and the control of the same.

Ivanhoe Min. Co. v. Keystone Consol. Min. Co. 102 U. S. 167, 26 L. ed. 126.

If there is a deposit of any substance belonging to the mineral kingdom, and the land is more valuable for that particular substance than for agriculture, then it is mineral land; and if it is not a vein of quartz or other rock in place, then it is a placer.

Lindley, Mines, § 419.

This court in Deffebach v. Hawke, 115 U. S. 392, 29 L. ed. 423, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 95, recognizes the criterion to be the value. See also Davis v. Wiebold, 139 U. S. 507, 35 L. ed. 238, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 628.

The test of the character of railroad lands is the same as applied to the question between mineral and agricultural claims, viz., Are they more valuable for mineral than for agricultural purposes?

Ivanhoe Min. Co. v. Keystone Consol. Min. Co. 102 U. S. 167, 26 L. ed. 126; Barringer & Adams, Mines & Mining, 533, note 2; Barden v. Northern P. R. Co. 154 U. S. 288, 38 L. ed. 992, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1030.

The burden of proof is upon the railroad company to show the agricultural character of land that is returned as mineral by the Surveyor General.

Re Central P. R. Co. 13 Land Dec. 603.

The question whether a given tract of land within the primary or place limits of a railroad grant is mineral, and therefore excepted out of the grant, is to be determined according to the state of the law and the facts as they exist at the time the railroad company applies for its patent.

Mullan v. United States, 118 U. S. 271, 30 L. ed. 170, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1041; Lindley, Mines, §§ 154, 159; Northern P. R. Co. v. Sanders, 1 C. C. A. 192, 7 U. S. App. 47, 49 Fed. 134; Northern P. R. Co. v. Hinchman, 53 Fed. 526; Barden v. Northern P. R. Co. 154 U. S. 288, 330, 38 L. ed. 992, 1002, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1030; Northern P. R. Co. v. Cannon, 4 C. C. A. 303, 7 U. S. App. 507, 54 Fed. 252.

Land in reservation at the date of definite location is excepted from the terms of the grant.

Atlantic & P. R. Co. v. McCabe, 4 Land Dec. 94; St. Paul, M. & M. R. Co. v. Northern P. R. Co. 4 Land Dec. 429; Southern P. R. Co. v. Nimmo, 4 Land Dec. 100; Sansom v. Southern P. R. Co. 4 Land Dec. 357;

Story v. Southern P. R. Co. 4 Land Dec. 397.

If this land was subject to entry under the mineral laws existing at the date of definite location of the road, then it was not "free from other claims or rights," and it did not pass to the road.

Holmes v. Northern P. R. Co. 5 Land Dec. 336; Northern P. R. Co. v. McLean, 5 Land Dec. 529; Northern P. R. Co. v. Burt, 3 Land Dec. 490; Northern P. R. Co. v. Duden, 6 Land Dec. 6.

Lands reserved by the President after the grant, the reservation still being in force at date of definite location, are not "free from other claims," and are reserved, and do not pass to the road.

Re Jackson, L. & S. R. Co. 5 Land Dec. 432.

The condition of the land at the date of definite location determines whether it will pass under the grant.

Cayce v. St. Louis & I. M. R. Co. 6 Land Dec. 356; Neilson v. Northern P. R. Co. 9 Land Dec. 402; Showell v. Central P. R. Co. 10 Land Dec. 167; Olney v. Hastings & D. R. Co. 11 Land Dec. 188; Re Northern P. R. Co. 12 Land Dec. 572.

The discovery of the mineral character of land at any time prior to the issuance of patent to the railroad effectually excludes such land from the railroad grant.

Central P. R. Co. v. Valentine, 11 Land Dec. 238; Atlantic & P. R. Co. v. Tiernan, 17 Land Dec. 587; Atlantic & P. R. Co. v. Willard, 17 Land Dec. 554; Northern P. R. Co. v. Champion Consol. Min. Co. 14 Land Dec. 699; Re Northern P. R. Co. 13 Land Dec. 691. See also Lindley, Mines, § 162.

When the original jurisdiction of the circuit court of the United States is invoked upon the sole ground that the determination of the suit depends upon some question of a Federal nature, it must appear at the outset, from the declaration of the bill of the party suing, that the suit is of that character.

Colorado Cent. Consol. Min. Co. v. Turek, 150 U. S. 143, 37 L. ed. 1032, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 35.

In order to maintain that the decision of the circuit court of appeals was not final, it must appear that the jurisdiction of the circuit court was not dependent entirely upon the opposite parties being citizens of different states.

Borgmeyer v. Idler, 159 U. S. 412, 40 L. ed. 200, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 34.

Under this doctrine it appears from the subpoena and bill of complaint herein "that the suit was one of which cognizance could be properly taken on the ground of diverse citizenship, and it did not appear therefrom that jurisdiction rested or could be asserted on any other ground."

See also Press Pub. Co. v. Monroe, 164 U. S. 105, 41 L. ed. 367, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 40.

Mr. R. A. Ballinger argued the cause for appellee on reargument.

Assistant Attorney General Van Devanter argued the cause, and, with Mr. Arthur B. Pugh, filed a brief for the United States: 188 U. S.

The term "mineral lands" and terms of like import, wherever used in the acts of Congress making railroad or other land grants, or in the mining laws, either as words of reservation or as authorizing the disposal of lands thus described, have the same meaning and the same breadth of signification.

Davis v. Weibbold, 139 U. S. 507, 35 L. ed. 238, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 628; 1 Lindley, Mines, §§ 86, 152, pp. 92, 170.

Coal lands are "mineral lands" within the meaning of that term as used in statutes regulating the disposition of the public domain.

Mullan v. United States, 118 U. S. 271, 30 L. ed. 170, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1041.

Lands valuable for minerals, whether of the metallic or nonmetallic class, are subject to location, entry, and purchase under the provisions of the mining laws, and are also within the exception of "mineral lands" from railroad land grants.

Montague v. Dobbs, 9 Copp's Landowner, 165; Hooper's Case, 1 Land Dec. 560; Maxwell v. Brierly, 10 Copp's Landowner, 50; 1 Lindley, Mines, §§ 96, 98, 137, 158, 162, pp. 113, 116, 153, 183, 188, 189; McGlenn v. Wienbroer, 15 Land Dec. 370; Van Doren v. Plesled, 16 Land Dec. 508; Hayden v. Jamison, 16 Land Dec. 537; Shepherd v. Bird, 17 Land Dec. 82; Gary v. Todd, 18 Land Dec. 58; Gibson's Case, 21 Land Dec. 327; Union Oil Co.'s Case, 25 Land Dec. 354; Pacific Coast Marble Co. v. Northern P. R. Co. 25 Land Dec. 233; Aldritt v. Northern P. R. Co. 25 Land Dec. 349; Re Florida C. & P. R. Co. 26 Land Dec. 60; Richter v. Utah, 27 Land Dec. 95; McQuiddy v. California, 29 Land Dec. 181; Tulare Oil & Min. Co. v. Southern P. R. Co. 29 Land Dec. 269; Beaudette v. Northern P. R. Co. 29 Land Dec. 248; Schrumpf v. Northern P. R. Co. 29 Land Dec. 327; Morrill v. Northern P. R. Co. 30 Land Dec. 475.

The construction given to a statute by those charged with the duty of executing it is always entitled to the most respectful consideration, and ought not to be overruled without cogent reasons.

United States v. Moore, 95 U. S. 760, 24 L. ed. 588; Edwards v. Darby, 12 Wheat. 210, 6 L. ed. 604; United States v. State Bank, 6 Pet. 29, 8 L. ed. 308; United States v. Macdaniel, 7 Pet. 1, 8 L. ed. 587; Brown v. United States, 113 U. S. 568, 28 L. ed. 1079, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 648; Robertson v. Downing, 127 U. S. 607, 32 L. ed. 269, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1328; 23 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 342. See also United States v. Graham, 110 U. S. 219, 28 L. ed. 126, 3 Sup. Ct. Rep. 582; United States v. Philbrick, 120 U. S. 52, 30 L. ed. 559, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 413; Barden v. Northern P. R. Co. 154 U. S. 288, 38 L. ed. 992, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1030; Pennoyer v. McConnaughy, 140 U. S. 1, 35 L. ed. 363, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 699.

The legislative branch of the government is presumed to be cognizant of the construction given to a statute by public officers whose duty it is to execute it; and after long continuance of such construction without legislative dissent, the courts will adopt it.

Sutherland, Stat. Constr. § 309. See also Black, Constr. & Interpretation of Laws, pp. 215, 216; Endlich, Interpretation of Statutes, § 360.

Nothing passes by implication under grants of a public nature but in the clear and explicit language of the grant must be found all that is conveyed by it. When doubt arises, the grant must be construed most strictly against the grantee.

Dubuque & P. R. Co. v. Litchfield, 23 How. 66, 16 L. ed. 500; Slidell v. Grandjean, 111 U. S. 412, 28 L. ed. 321, 4 Sup. Ct. Rep. 475. See also Barden v. Northern P. R. Co. 154 U. S. 288, 38 L. ed. 992, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1030; Leavenworth, L. & G. R. Co. v. United States, 92 U. S. 733, 23 L. ed. 634.

The value of the mineral deposit, rather than its kind, appears to have been the controlling factor in determining whether the lands containing it were subject to entry and patent under the mining law.

Pacific Coast Marble Co. v. Northern P. R. Co. 25 Land Dec. 233.

The criterion of value has also been recognized by this court as the means of determining whether lands containing mineral deposits are within the meaning of the mining laws.

Deffebach v. Hawke, 115 U. S. 392, 29 L. ed. 423, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 95. See Davis v. Weibbold, 139 U. S. 507, 35 L. ed. 238, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 628.

Lands containing a valuable stone quarry were subject to location and purchase under the placer mining laws.

Freezer v. Sweeney, 8 Mont. 508, 21 Pac. 20; Johnston v. Harrington, 5 Wash. 73, 31 Pac. 316. See also Montague v. Dobbs, 9 Copp's Landowner, 165; Gird v. California Oil Co. 60 Fed. 531.

An exception or reservation of "mines and minerals," contained in a lease of lands, includes all substances otherwise falling under the definition of minerals, which have a use and value of their own, either for the purpose of sale or for other purposes, independently of and separably from the use of the rest of the soil.

Johnstone v. Crompton, 68 L. J. Ch. N. S. 559.

Granite is a mineral within the meaning of a reservation of "minerals and ores," used in a deed of conveyance.

Armstrong v. Lake Champlain Granite Co. 147 N. Y. 495, 42 N. E. 186.

Limestone or granite ledges were within the meaning of an exception of "all mines and minerals" from a deed of conveyance.

Brady v. Brady, 31 Misc. 411, 65 N. Y. Supp. 621.

Marble is a mineral within the meaning of an exception of "mines and minerals" from a conveyance of land.

Phelps v. Church of Our Lady, 53 C. C. A. 407, 115 Fed. 882.

"Paintstone" is a mineral within the meaning of an exception of "mines and minerals," contained in a deed of conveyance.

Hartwell v. Camman, 10 N. J. Eq. 128, 64 Am. Dec. 448.

Petroleum is a mineral.

Gill v. Weston, 110 Pa. 312, 1 Atl. 921. See also Westmoreland & C. Natural Gas Co. v. De Witt, 130 Pa. 235, 5 L. R. A. 731, 18 Atl. 724; Hague v. Wheeler, 157 Pa. 324, 22 L. R. A. 141, 27 Atl. 714.

Natural gas is a "crude mineral."

Re Buffalo Natural Gas Fuel Co. 73 Fed. 191.

A statute imposing damages upon any person mining or digging out "any coal, iron, or other minerals, knowing them to be upon the land of another," applies to the act of digging and carrying away building stone from an open quarry on the surface of the ground.

Ruttledge v. Kress, 17 Pa. Super. Ct. 490.

A mineral has been defined to be a fossil, or what is dug out of the earth. The term may, however, in the most enlarged sense, be described as comprising all the substances which now form, or which once formed, part of the solid body of the earth, both external and internal, and which are now destitute of and incapable of supporting animal or vegetable life. In this view, it will embrace as well the bare granite of the high mountain as the deepest hidden diamonds and metallic ores.

Bainbridge, Mines, pp. 1, 2.

"Mineral," in its general legal sense, is any valuable inert or lifeless substance formed or deposited in its present position through natural agencies alone, and which is found either in or upon the soil of the earth or in the rocks beneath the soil.

Barringer & Adams, Mines, p. lxxvi.

The mining laws from their earliest history have been administered by the Land Department as applicable in all their force and effect to the public mineral lands within the limits of the grant.

Central P. R. Co. v. Valentine, 11 Land Dec. 238.

This practice has been sustained by this court.

Barden v. Northern P. R. Co. 154 U. S. 288, 38 L. ed. 992, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1030.

The term "minerals," standing alone and as understood in mining law, generally comprehends and includes all the substances in the earth's crust which are sought for and removed by man for the substance itself.

1 Snyder, Mines & Mining, §§ 134, 140, 143-145, 148; 2 Snyder, Mines & Mining, § 926.

*Mr. Justice Brown delivered the opinion [528] of the court:

Motion was made to dismiss this appeal for the reason that, as the jurisdiction of the circuit court was invoked upon the ground of diverse citizenship, the decree of the circuit court of appeals is final, under § 6 of the court of appeals act of 1891 (26 Stat. at L. 828, chap. 517, U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 549), as interpreted by the decisions of this court in Colorado Cent. Consol. Co. v. Turck, 150 U. S. 138, 37 L. ed. 1030, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 35; Borgmeyer

v. Idler, 159 U. S. 408, 40 L. ed. 199, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 34; and Press Pub. Co. v. Monroe, 164 U. S. 105, 41 L. ed. 367, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 40. But, to impress the attribute of finality upon a judgment of the circuit court of appeals, it must appear that the original jurisdiction of the circuit court was dependent "entirely" upon diverse citizenship. That is not the case here. Plaintiff's bill does, indeed, set up a diversity of citizenship as one ground of jurisdiction, but, as it appears that its title rests upon a proper interpretation of the land grant act of 1864 as to the exception of nonmineral lands, there is another ground wholly independent of citizenship under that clause of § 1 of the act of 1888 (25 Stat. at L. 433, chap. 866) clothing the circuit court with jurisdiction of all civil suits involving over $2,000, "and arising under the Constitution or laws of the United States." If the case made by the plaintiff be one which depends upon the proper construction of an act of Congress, with the contingency of being sustained by one construction and defeated by another, it is one arising under the laws of the United States. Doolan v. Carr, 125 U. S. 618, 31 L. ed. 844, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1228; Cooke v. Avery, 147 U. S. 375, 37 L. ed. 209, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 340. Under the allegations of the bill, the fact that the Land Department had not determined whether the land in question was mineral or nonmineral does not involve a question of fact, as the facts are admitted, but solely a question of law whether land valuable for its granite is mineral or nonmineral under the terms of the grant. Morton v. Nebraska, 21 Wall. 660, 22 L. ed. 639. The fact that a patent issued pending suit [529] is neither set up in the pleadings nor *noticed in the opinion of either court. The motion to dismiss must therefore be denied.

2. We are thus brought to the main question in the case, viz.: Whether lands valuable solely or chiefly for granite quarries are mineral lands within the exception of the grant of 1864? The 3d section of the act containing the granting clause of land "not mineral" also contains the following provisos: "Provided further, That all mineral lands be, and the same are hereby, excluded from the operations of this act. . . . And provided, further, That the word 'mineral' when it occurs in this act shall not be held to include iron or coal." [13 Stat. at L. 365, chap. 217.] The inference from this proviso is that in the absence of a special provision both iron and coal would be considered as minerals, and thus to repel the idea that only metals were included in the word "mineral." This inference is strengthened by the fact that the day before this act was passed, July 1, 1864 (13 Stat. at L. 343, chap. 205,) another act was approved authorizing the public sale to the highest bidder of "any tracts embracing coal beds or coal fields," and providing that any lands not thus disposed of shall thereafter be liable to private entry. Relying largely upon this act as a "legislative declaration" this court held, in Mullan v. 188 U. S. U. S., Book 47.

United States, 118 U. S. 271, 30 L. ed. 170, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1041, that coal lands are mineral lands within the meaning of that term as used in the statutes regulating the disposition of the public domain. This effectually disposes of the argument that the word "mineral" must be construed as synonymous with metalliferous.

Upon the other hand, § 2 declares that "the right, power, and authority is hereby given to said corporation to take from the public lands adjacent to the line of said road material of earth, stone, timber, etc., for the construction thereof." There is a possible inference from this that stone was not to be regarded as mineral, although it is more likely that a grant was intended of all material serviceable in the construction of the road, even though it might otherwise be excepted from the grant as a mineral. Taking these two sections together, it would seem that the reason for providing in the 3d section that iron and coal lands should not be deemed mineral was the same as the liberty given by the 2d section to take materials of earth, stone, and timber; namely, to facilitate the construction and operation of the railroad, in which large quantities of coal and iron would be required.

The word "mineral" is used in so many senses, dependent upon the context, that the ordinary definitions of the dictionary throw but little light upon its signification in a given case. Thus, the scientific division of all matter into the animal, vegetable, or mineral kingdom would be absurd as applied to a grant of lands, since all lands belong to the mineral kingdom, and therefore could not be excepted from the grant without being destructive of it. Upon the other hand, a definition which would confine it to the precious metals—gold and silver—would so limit its application as to destroy at once half the value of the exception. Equally subversive of the grant would be the definition of minerals found in the Century Dictionary; as "any constituent of the earth's crust;" and that of Bainbridge on Mines; "All the substances that now form, or which once formed, a part of the solid body of the earth." Nor do we approximate much more closely to the meaning of the word by treating minerals as substances which are "mined," as distinguished from those which are "quarried," since many valuable deposits of gold, copper, iron, and coal lie upon or near the surface of the earth, and some of the most valuable building stone, such, for instance, as the Caen stone in France, is excavated from mines running far beneath the surface. This distinction between underground mines and open workings was expressly repudiated in Midland R. Co. v. Haunchwood Brick & Tile Co. L. R. 20 Ch. Div. 552, and in Hext v. Gill, L. R. 7 Ch. 699.

The ordinance of May 20, 1785, authorizing the sale of lands in the western territory, with a reservation of "one third part of all gold, silver, lead, and copper mines, to be sold or otherwise disposed of, as Congress shall hereafter direct," was evidently [531] intended as an assertion of the right of the government to a royalty upon the more valuable metals—a prerogative which had belonged to the English Crown for centuries, though there confined to gold and silver, which were only considered as royal metals, and having its origin in the King's prerogative of coinage. 1 Bl. Com. 394. While intrinsically the precious metals are the more valuable, in the aggregate, the non-precious metals have probably contributed as much or more to the general wealth of the country.

A division of lands into agricultural and mineral would also be a most uncertain guide to a proper construction of the word "mineral," since most of the lands included in the limits of this grant are neither one nor the other, but desert or rocky land, of no present value for agriculture, and of little value for their mineral deposits. So, too, the general reservations in the earlier acts of Congress of lead mines and saline springs seem to have been dictated by the fact that those were the only valuable minerals known to exist in the states to which the acts were applied, while in Michigan and Wisconsin there was a similar reservation of copper, lead, and other valuable ores, which were just then being discovered and made available. In the earlier grants of Congress in aid of railroads there was generally no reservation of mineral lands, but in the grants subsequent to 1860, to the Lake Superior and Pacific roads, through unsurveyed and almost unknown territories, a reservation was invariably made of lands suspected of being rich in metals. It is quite true that, had it not been for the actual or suspected presence of these metals, Congress might not have deemed it worth while to reserve the nonmetallic mineral lands; but when its attention was called to the fact that valuable mines might exist along the line of these roads, as it appears to have been about 1860, its policy was changed, and not only metalliferous, but all mineral lands were reserved. Subsequent to that, it was only in states which had already received grants without reservation, or in known agricultural states, that such grants continued to be made.

Considerable light is thrown upon the congressional definition of the word "minerals" by the acts subsequent to the Northern Pacific grant of 1864, and prior to the definite location of the line in 1884. The first of these acts, that of July 26, 1866 (14 Stat. at L. 251, chap. 262), declares that the "mineral lands" of the public domain shall be free and open to exploration and occupation, subject to such rules as may be prescribed by law, and subject also to the local customs or rules of miners in the several mining districts. The 2d section provides that whenever any person or association of persons claim a vein or lode of quartz, or other rock in place, bearing gold, silver, cinnabar, or copper, he shall be entitled to enter such tract and receive a patent therefor, upon complying with certain preliminaries, and with a right to follow such vein, etc., into adjoining lands. The argument made in this connection by the railway company would confine the term "mineral lands" to lands bearing gold, silver, cinnabar, or copper, which would exclude all other metalliferous lands, such as contain iron, lead, tin, nickel, platinum, aluminum, etc.,—a limitation wholly inconsistent with the use of the word "mineral" in the 1st section.

This act was amended July 9, 1870 (16 Stat. at L. 217, chap. 235), to allow the entry of "placer" claims, "including all forms of deposits, excepting veins of quartz, or other rock in place," and declaring that they shall be subject to patent under the same provisions as vein or lode claims. As placers are merely superficial deposits, occupying the beds of ancient rivers or valleys, washed down from some vein or lode (United States v. Iron Silver Min. Co. 128 U. S. 673, 32 L. ed. 571, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 195), this act has little bearing upon the present case, though in Freese v. Sweeney, 8 Mont. 508, 21 Pac. 20, it was held by the supreme court of Montana to authorize the locating and patenting of a stone quarry.

Another act having a more important bearing is that of May 10, 1872 (17 Stat. at L. 91, chap. 152), "to promote the development of the mining resources of the United States," and providing in the 1st section that "all valuable mineral deposits" in public lands should be open to exploration and purchase, according to the local customs or rules of miners. This section is an obvious extension of § 1 of the act of 1866, above cited, by substituting the words "valuable mineral deposits in lands" for the words "mineral lands," as used in the prior act. The 2d section is also in line with the 2d section of the act of 1866, and provides that "mining claims upon veins or lodes of quartz, or other rock in place bearing gold, silver, cinnabar, lead, tin, copper, or other valuable deposits heretofore located, shall be governed as to length along the vein or lode by the customs, regulations, and laws in force at the date of their location." [533] This section, like § 2 of the act of 1866, is susceptible of two interpretations: either that the words "valuable mineral deposits" of the 1st section are limited to the particular metals described in the 2d section, or that those metals stood in particular need of regulation as to the length and breadth of vein, and power to pursue such veins downward vertically, and even beyond the vertical side lines of the locations. This appears to us the more reasonable interpretation. The fact that no such limits were imposed on veins of coal or other minerals or metals indicates, not that the act was intended to be confined to the minerals enumerated in § 2, since that would be a clear restriction upon the words "valuable mineral deposits" in the 1st section, but that these particular metals stood in special need of limitation and protection.

Equally pregnant with meaning is the act of June 3, 1878 (20 Stat. at L. 69, chap. 151, U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 1545), for the sale of timber lands in California, Oregon, Nevada, and Washington, which provides that lands "valuable chiefly for timber, but unfit for cultivation," as well as lands "valuable chiefly for stone," may be sold in quantities not exceeding 160 acres, with a proviso excluding mining claims, or lands containing gold, silver, cinnabar, or coal. This was followed by another act, August 4, 1892 (27 Stat. at L. 348, chap. 375, U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 1434), authorizing the entry of lands "chiefly valuable for building stone," under the placer mining laws, and extending the previous act to all public land states. This act was passed after the line of the road had been definitely located, and consequently has no direct bearing upon the case, and can only be regarded as explaining to some extent the previous reservation of all lands valuable for mineral deposits.

[534] Conceding that in 1864 Congress may not have had a definite idea with respect to the scope of the word "mineral," it is clear that in 1884, when the line of this road was definitely located, it had come to be understood as including all lands containing "valuable mineral deposits," as well as lands "chiefly valuable for stone," and that when the grant of 1864 first attached to particular lands by the definite location of the road in 1884, the railway found itself confronted with the fact that the word "mineral" had [534] by successive declarations of Congress *been extended to include all valuable mineral deposits. As no vested rights had been acquired by the railway company, prior to the definite location of its line, it took the lands in question encumbered by such definitions as Congress had seen fit to impose upon the word "mineral," subsequent to 1864.

Indeed, by the very terms of the granting act of July 2, 1864, not only are mineral lands excluded, but the grant is limited to those lands to which "the United States have full title, not reserved, sold, granted, or otherwise appropriated, and free from pre-emption, or other claims or rights, at the time the line of said road is definitely fixed, and a plat thereof filed in the office of the Commissioner of the General Land Office." It results from this that if, before the definite location of the road, Congress had withdrawn certain of these lands from the grant, the company was bound by such withdrawal and compelled to accept other lands in lieu thereof within the indemnity limits of the grant.

In construing this grant we must not overlook the general principle announced in many cases in this court, that grants from the sovereign should receive a strict construction,—a construction which shall support the claim of the government rather than that of the individual. Nothing passes by implication, and unless the language of the grant be clear and explicit as to the property conveyed, that construction will be adopted which favors the sovereign rather than the grantee.

188 U. S.

The rulings of the Land Department, to which we are to look for the contemporaneous construction of these statutes, have been subject to very little fluctuation, and almost uniformly, particularly of late years, have lent strong support to the theory of the patentee, that the words "valuable mineral deposits" should be construed as including all lands chiefly valuable for other than agricultural purposes, and particularly as including nonmetallic substances, among which are held to be alum, asphaltum, borax, guano, diamonds, gypsum, resin, marble, mica, slate, amber, petroleum, limestone, building stone, and coal. The cases are far too numerous for citation, and there is practically no conflict in them.

The decisions of the state courts have also favored the same *interpretation. Thus, in [535] Gibson v. Tyson, 5 Watts. 34, chromate of iron was held to be included in a reservation of all minerals. In Hartwell v. Camman, 10 N. J. Eq. 128, 64 Am. Dec. 448, a grant of "all mines, minerals open or to be opened," was held to include paint stone, on the ground that it was valuable for its mineral properties,—the court distinctly repudiating the idea that the term should be confined to metals or metallic ores. In Funk v. Haldeman, 53 Pa. 229, and in Gill v. Weston, 110 Pa. 313, 1 Atl. 921, petroleum was held to be mineral, although the act authorizing the lease of mining lands was passed before petroleum was discovered. See also Gird v. California Oil Co. 60 Fed. 531. The same principle was extended in Westmoreland & C. Natural Gas Co. v. De Witt, 130 Pa. 235, 5 L. R. A. 731, 18 Atl. 724, to natural gas, which was said to be a mineral feræ naturæ. In Armstrong v. Lake Champlain Granite Co. 147 N. Y. 495, 42 N. E. 186, a conveyance of "all minerals, and ores," was held to include granite subsequently discovered on the premises, though it would not pass under the name of "mineral ores." In Johnston v. Harrington, 5 Wash. 78, 31 Pac. 316, the supreme court of that state thought it would hardly be disputed that stone was a mineral, though it seems inconsistent with the subsequent case, in the same volume, of Wheeler v. Smith, 5 Wash. 704, 32 Pac. 784, holding that the term "mineral" was only intended to embrace deposits of ore.

The rulings of the English courts have, with a possible exception in some earlier cases, adopted the construction that valuable stone passed under the definition of minerals. Said Baron Parke in Rosse v. Wainman, 14 Mees. & W. 859, 872: "The term 'minerals' [used in an act of Parliament, reserving to the lord all mines and minerals], though more frequently applied to substances containing metals, in its proper sense includes all fossil bodies or matters dug out of mines; and Dr. Johnson says that all metals are minerals, but all minerals are not metals; and mines, according to Jacob's Law Dictionary, are quarries or places where anything is digged; and in the year book, 17 Edw. III., chap. 7, minerae de pierre and de charbon are spoken of. Beds of stone, which may be dug by winning or quarrying, are therefore properly minerals, [536] and so *we think they must be held to be in the clause in question, bearing in mind that the object of the act was to give the surface for cultivation to the commoners and to leave in the lord what it did not take away for that purpose." This case was followed in Micklethwait v. Winter, 6 Exch. 644, in which the same act of Parliament was held to include stone dug from quarries. In Midland R. Co. v. Checkley, L. R. 4 Eq. 19, stone for road making or paving was held to be a mineral, the Master of the Rolls observing: "Stone is, in my opinion, clearly a mineral, and in fact everything except the mere surface which is used for agricultural purposes. Anything beyond that, which is useful for any purpose whatever, whether it is gravel, marble, fire clay, or the like, comes within the word 'mineral' when there is a reservation of the mines and minerals from a grant of land" In Midland R. Co. v. Haunchwood Brick & Tile Co. L. R. 20 Ch. Div. 552, brick clay was held to be a mineral; and in Hext v. Gill, L. R. 7 Ch. 699, the House of Lords held that china clay, and every substance which may be obtained "from underneath the surface of the earth for the purpose of profit," was a mineral, "unless there is something in the context or in the nature of the transaction to induce the court to give it a more limited meaning." The same rule was applied in several analogous cases of granite, sandstone, flintstone, and in other similar circumstances. Atty. Gen. v. Welsh Granite Co. 35 Week. Rep. 617 (granite); Bell v. Wilson, 2 Drew. & S. 395 (sandstone); Tucker v. Linger, L. R. 8 App. Cas. 508 (flintstone), and a dozen other cases to the same effect.

583

We do not deem it necessary to attempt an exact definition of the words "mineral lands" as used in the act of July 2, 1864. With our present light upon the subject it might be difficult to do so. It is sufficient to say that we see nothing in that act, or in the legislation of Congress up to the time this road was definitely located, which can be construed as putting a different definition upon these words from that generally accepted by the text writers upon the subject. Indeed, we are of opinion that this legislation consists with, rather than opposes, the overwhelming weight of authority to the effect that mineral lands include, not merely metalliferous lands, but all such [537] as are chiefly *valuable for their deposits of a mineral character, which are useful in the arts or valuable for purposes of manufacture.

The decree of the Court of Appeals is therefore affirmed.

Mr. Justice Brewer and Mr. Justice Peckham dissented.

FRANK N. PROUT, Attorney General of the State of Nebraska, Appt.,

v.

JAMES C. STARR, Samuel W. Allerton, and Chicago, Rock Island, & Pacific Railway Company.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 537-545.)

Stipulation—to abide decree of other suits—jurisdiction of Federal courts—suit against state—conflict of jurisdiction.

1. The parties to a suit may make a valid agreement to dispense with the taking of evidence, and to accept the evidence taken and abide by the decrees which shall be entered in certain other cases in which the allegations of fact and the contentions of law are identical with those in the suit in question.
2. A suit against the Nebraska board of transportation for the purpose of preventing the enforcement of the Nebraska act of April 12, 1893, fixing maximum railroad rates, on the ground of the invalidity of such statute under the Constitution and laws of the United States, is not a suit against the state within the meaning of the 11th Amendment to the Federal Constitution.
3. A Federal court is not without jurisdiction of a suit to enjoin the attorney general of Nebraska from enforcing, as a member of the Nebraska board of transportation, the provisions of an unconstitutional state statute fixing maximum railroad rates, on the theory that it seeks to restrain him as attorney general from enforcing the criminal laws of the state.
4. A Federal court has jurisdiction to extend to and against the successors in the office of attorney general of a state, duly substituted, the provisions of an order enjoining the enforcement of an unconstitutional state statute fixing maximum railroad fares by a board of which the attorney general is a member.
5. The jurisdiction of a circuit court of the United States over a cause properly before it cannot be defeated by the institution, by one of the parties in a state court, of subsequent proceedings, whether civil or criminal, involving the same legal questions.

[No. 150.]

Argued January 26, 27, 1903. Decided February 23, 1903.

APPEAL from the Circuit Court of the United States for the District of Nebraska to review a decree which enjoined the attorney general of that State from enforcing the provisions of a state statute fixing maximum railroad rates. Affirmed.

See same case below, 110 Fed. 3.

Statement by Mr. Justice Shiras:

On August 3, 1893, James C. Starr and

NOTE.—As to suits against a state—see notes to Murdock Parlor Grate Co. v. Com. (Mass.) 8 L. R. A. 399; Carr v. State (Ind.) 11 L. R. A. 370; Tindall v. Wesley, 13 C. C. A. 165; and Hans v. Louisiana, 33 L. ed. U. S. 842.

As to conflict of jurisdiction between Federal and state courts—see Louisville Trust Co. v. Cincinnati, 22 C. C. A. 356, and note. And see note to J. I. Case Plow Works v. Flunks, 26 C. C. A. 50.

[538] Samuel W. Allerton, citizens of the state of Illinois, on their own behalf and on behalf of others similarly situated, filed a bill of complaint in the circuit court of the United States for the district of Nebraska, against the Chicago, Rock Island, & Pacific Railway Company; George H. Hastings, attorney general; John C. Allen, *secretary of state; Eugene Moore, auditor of public accounts; Joseph F. Bartley, state treasurer, and A. R. Humpbrey, commissioner of public lands, all of whom were officers of the state of Nebraska, and as such constituted its board of transportation, and William A. Dilworth, J. M. Rountz, and J. W. Johnson, secretaries of said board, and all citizens of Nebraska.

The bill brought into question, under the Constitution and laws of the United States, the validity of a certain act of the legislature of Nebraska, approved April 12, 1893, entitled "An Act to Regulate Railroads, to classify Freights, to Fix Reasonable Maximum Rates to be Charged for the Transportation of Freight upon Each of the Railroads in the State of Nebraska, and to Provide Penalties for the Violation of this Act." It was alleged that if the provisions of the act were put into effect, the earnings of the said railroad company from its business in the state would be materially lessened, and would not pay the operating expenses thereof, nor yield any money from which the railroad property could be maintained, and would, in effect, work a confiscation thereof; that if the penalties imposed in the said act were enforced, the entire property of the company would be taken away; that the plaintiffs were stockholders of the company, and had requested the officers and directors thereof to take proceedings to contest the validity of said act, but they had refused to do so. The principal prayers of the bill were that the company, its officers, agents, and employees, should be restrained by injunction from adopting a schedule of rates to be charged for the transportation of freight on its road, according to the terms and provisions of the said act; and that the said board of transportation, and its members and secretaries, should be enjoined from entertaining or determining any complaint, and from instituting or prosecuting any proceeding or action to enforce the observance of the provisions of said act; and that the attorney general should in like manner be enjoined from bringing any proceedings by way of injunction, or by other process or civil action or indictment against said company for or on account of the nonobservance by it of the provisions of said act.

[539] Thereupon a restraining order of the circuit court was issued, *enjoining the railroad company, the board of transportation and its members, and the said attorney general, as prayed for in the bill; said order was to remain in force until a formal motion for injunction or to set aside the order be made, heard, and decided; and a bond was to be given in the sum of $10,000. This order was duly served upon each and every of the said defendants, together with process of subpoena.

Afterwards, on the 2d day of September, 1893, a joint and several answer was filed by the said board of transportation, its members and secretaries. Therein it was averred that the said defendants were all agents and officers of the state of Nebraska, and had no personal or pecuniary interest whatever in the event of the suit, and were not proper parties thereto, but that said bill of complaint should have been brought against the state of Nebraska; that the said state was the real party in interest, and that the state had not and did not in any way whatever consent to the bringing of the action, and had not and did not submit in any way to the jurisdiction of the said circuit court to hear and determine the matters complained of in said bill; and the defendants submitted that, under the 11th Amendment of the Constitution of the United States, the courts of the United States were wholly without jurisdiction to try, hear, and determine the several matters in difference charged and set forth in the bill of complaint; and that, under the Constitution of the United States and the Constitution and laws of the state of Nebraska, the complainants had a full and adequate remedy at law. The defendants further denied that the state legislation in question violated the provisions of the Constitution of the United States which forbid any state to deprive any person of his property without due process of law, or to deny any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws, or to pass a law impairing the obligation of a contract, or which interferes with commerce between the states.

On October 3, 1893, the complainants filed their replication to the answer.

At and about the same time, and in the same court, certain stockholders of the Chicago, Burlington, & Quincy Railroad *Com-[540]pany, of the Chicago & Northwestern Railway Company, and of the Union Pacific Railway Company, filed three other bills of complaint, in which the said railroad companies and the said persons comprising the board of transportation were defendants, and in which bills the same facts and circumstances were alleged and the same relief was prayed for as in the bill in the present case. All of the state officers appeared and answered by the same counsel, and alleged the same defenses and contentions as were alleged in their answer in this suit. Those cases were put at issue, and after a large amount of evidence was put in, final decrees were rendered against the defendants, and, on March 7, 1898, the decrees of the circuit court were affirmed by this court. Smyth v. Ames, 169 U. S. 466, 42 L. ed. 819, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 814. No testimony was taken by either party in the present case, but it was agreed, while the other cases were pending, that the proofs taken in them should be accepted with the same force and effect as if taken in this case; that the case should not be further particularly proceeded in until the Supreme Court should have rendered its decree in the other cases, when a decree should be entered conformable to those entered by the Supreme Court in the other three cases.

Meanwhile, Hastings, the attorney general when the bills were filed, was succeeded in his office by Smyth, who by proper order was substituted as defendant and appellant. Overlooking or disregarding the existing preliminary injunction of the circuit court, and the agreement that this case should abide the result in the other cases, Smyth, as attorney general, brought an action in the supreme court of the state of Nebraska against the said Chicago, Rock Island, and Pacific Railway Company, alleging that the company, in violation of the act of April 12, 1893, at divers times had charged for the transportation of freight between points on its road in Nebraska rates in excess of those fixed by the act, and claiming judgment for $310,000, the amount of penalties alleged to have accrued. The attention of Attorney General Smyth was then called to the injunction order of the circuit court, and he thereupon gave the counsel of the company to understand that before the expiration of his term of office he would dismiss said action. Relying upon the under-[541]standing *and agreement aforesaid, the company took no proceedings to enforce the said injunction and agreement.

On or about January 1, 1901, the said defendant, Frank N. Prout, succeeded the said Smyth in his office of attorney general, who declined to dismiss the said action in the supreme court of Nebraska. Whereupon the company filed its answer in the said action in due form, alleging the prior pendency of the action in the circuit court of the United States, and the existence, in full force and effect, of the injunction order of that court. No reply to this answer appears to have ever been filed, and thereupon, on or about February 15, 1901, the company moved the said court for judgment upon the pleadings, but the court denied said motion, upon grounds set out in its opinion. State v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 61 Neb. 545, 85 N. W. 556. No further proceedings have been taken in said action, and the injunction order of the circuit court remains unmodified, and in full force and effect.

On April 6, 1901, Starr and Allerton filed, in the circuit court of the United States, their supplemental bill, alleging the foregoing facts, and praying that the order and injunction previously issued upon their original bill be extended to and against the said Frank N. Prout, as attorney general, and that he be enjoined and restrained from further prosecuting the action brought in the name of the state of Nebraska against the railway company.

To this supplemental bill Frank N. Prout filed a demurrer on the ground that the bill was against the defendant in his official capacity as attorney general of the state, and was against the state, and that therefore the court was, under the 11th Amendment of the Constitution, without jurisdiction.

Upon argument, the demurrer was overruled, and the injunction prayed for was issued. The order directing the injunction provided that if the defendant elected to stand by his demurrer and declined further to plead, a final decree should go, as in the case of Smyth v. Ames, and, the defendant having elected in open court to stand upon his demurrer, a final decree was entered conformable to that in Smyth v. Ames. From that decree the defendant, Frank N. Prout, appealed to this court.

Mr. Frank N. Prout argued the cause and filed a brief for appellant:

The duty of state courts to uphold the fundamental law of the United States is no less imperative than that of the Federal courts.

Fitts v. McGhee, 172 U. S. 532, 43 L. ed. 543, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 269.

A Federal court is without jurisdiction to enjoin an attorney general from prosecuting in the state court a suit brought in the name of the state to recover penalties.

Fitts v. McGhee, 172 U. S. 516, 43 L. ed. 535, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 269; State v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 61 Neb. 545, 85 N. W. 556; Louisiana v. Jumel, 107 U. S. 723, 27 L. ed. 448, 2 Sup. Ct. Rep. 128; Cunningham v. Macon & B. R. Co. 109 U. S. 446, 27 L. ed. 992, 3 Sup. Ct. Rep. 292, 609; Haygood v. Southern, 117 U. S. 52, 29 L. ed. 805, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 608; Re Ayers, 123 U. S. 497, 31 L. ed. 226, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 164; Reagan v. Farmers' Loan & T. Co. 154 U. S. 362, 38 L. ed. 1014, 4 Inters. Com. Rep. 560, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1047; Harkrader v. Wadley, 172 U. S. 148, 43 L. ed. 399, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 119.

Mr. J. M. Woolworth argued the cause, and, with Mr. W. D. McHugh, filed a brief for appellees:

An agreement in the Rock Island Case that it should abide the result here of the three other cases was eminently proper.

Pacific R. Co. v. Ketchum, 101 U. S. 289, 25 L. ed. 932.

A suit against individuals for the purpose of preventing them, as officers of a state, from enforcing an unconstitutional enactment to the injury of the rights of the plaintiff, is not a suit against the state within the meaning of U. S. Const. 11th Amend.

Smyth v. Ames, 169 U. S. 466, 42 L. ed. 819, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 418; Reagan v. Farmers' Loan & T. Co. 154 U. S. 362, 38 L. ed. 1014, 4 Inters. Com. Rep. 560, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1047.

If two courts have concurrent jurisdiction of a controversy, the one in which suit is first brought will retain it until final disposition, to the entire exclusion of any process or inquiry in the other.

Peck v. Jenness, 7 How. 612, 12 L. ed. 841; Chittenden v. Brewster, 2 Wall. 191, 17 L. ed. 839; Orton v. Smith, 18 How. 263, 15 L. ed. 393; Sharon v. Terry, 13 Sawy. 387, 1 L. R. A. 572, 36 Fed. 337; Harkrader v. Wadley, 172 U. S. 148, 43 L. ed. 399, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 119.

*Mr. Justice Shiras delivered the opinion [542] of the court:

As the appellant demurred to the supplemental bill, and elected to stand on his demurrer when the final decree of the circuit court was entered, we have now only to consider the questions of law presented by the demurrer.

That it was competent for the parties, plaintiffs and defendants, to agree to dispense with taking evidence, to accept the evidence taken in the other cases, and to abide by the decrees therein to be entered, we have no reason to doubt (Pacific R. Co. v. Ketchum, 101 U. S. 289, 25 L. ed. 932), and that such an agreement was entered into is conceded. The allegations of fact and the contentions of law being the same in all the cases, such an arrangement was convenient and proper. The decrees in the other cases having been affirmed by this court, it was in accordance with that agreement that the circuit court should enter a similar decree in the present case. In so far, then, as the substantial merits of the case are concerned, we are not called upon to consider them. They have been concluded by the reasoning and opinion of this court in the other cases. Smyth v. Ames, 169 U. S. 466, 42 L. ed. 819, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 418.

But by this appeal we are asked to declare that the circuit court had no jurisdiction, because it appears, on the face of the bill, that the complaint is essentially against the state of Nebraska, and is in contravention of the 11th Amendment of the Constitution of the United States.

It is a sufficient answer to this contention that it was made, considered, and determined in Smyth v. Ames. In the opinion in that case it was said:

[543] "Within the meaning of the 11th Amendment of the Constitution, the suits are not against the state, but against certain individuals charged with the administration of a state enactment, which, it is alleged, cannot be enforced without violating the constitutional rights of the plaintiffs. It is the settled doctrine of this court that a suit against individuals, for the purpose of preventing them, as officers of a state, from enforcing an unconstitutional enactment to the injury of the rights of the plaintiff, is not a suit against the state within the meaning of that amendment. Pennoy v. McConaughy, 140 U. S. 10, 35 L. ed. 365, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 699; Re Tyler, 149 U. S. 164, 37 L. ed. 689, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 785; Reagan v. Farmers' Loan & T. Co. 154 U. S. 362, 38 L. ed. 1014, 4 Inters. Com. Rep. 560, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1047; Scott v. Donald, 165 U. S. 58, 41 L. ed. 632, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 265; Tindal v. Wesley, 167 U. S. 204, 42 L. ed. 137, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 770."

The Constitution of the United States, with the several amendments thereof, must be regarded as one instrument, all of whose provisions are to be deemed of equal validity. It would, indeed, be most unfortunate if the immunity of the individual states from suits by citizens of other states, provided for in the 11th Amendment, were to be interpreted as nullifying those other provisions which confer power on Congress to regulate commerce among the several states, 188 U. S.

which forbid the states from entering into any treaty, alliance, or confederation, from passing any bill of attainder, ex post facto law, or law impairing the obligation of contracts, or, without the consent of Congress, from laying any duty of tonnage, entering into any agreement or compact with other states, or from engaging in war,—all of which provisions existed before the adoption of the 11th Amendment, which still exist, and which would be nullified and made of no effect if the judicial power of the United States could not be invoked to protect citizens affected by the passage of state laws disregarding these constitutional limitations. Much less can the 11th Amendment be successfully pleaded as an invincible barrier to judicial inquiry whether the salutary provisions of the 14th Amendment have been disregarded by state enactments. On the other hand, the judicial power of the United States has not infrequently been exercised in securing to the several states, in proper cases, the immunity intended by the 11th Amendment. Hans v. Louisiana, 134 U. S. 10, 33 L. ed. 845, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 504; North Carolina v. Temple, 134 U. S. 22, 33 L. ed. 849, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 509; Harkrader v. Wadley, 172 U. S. 148, 43 L. ed. 399, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 119; Fitts v. McGhee, 172 U. S. 516, 43 L. ed. 535, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 269.

*It is one of the important functions of [544] this court to so interpret the various provisions and limitations contained in the organic law of the Union that each and all of them shall be respected and observed.

It is further argued by the appellant, as one of the grounds of his demurrer, that he was complained against in his official capacity as attorney general of the state of Nebraska, and not in his individual capacity as a citizen thereof, and that the attorney general of a state cannot be restrained by an injunction of a United States court from enforcing the criminal laws of the state.

This, we think, is only another phase of the same question.

It is true that the defendant was included in the bill as the attorney general of the state, but that was because he was one of the board of transportation, which was directed to enforce the provisions of the act. The bill did not seek to interfere with the acts of the attorney general in prosecuting offenders against the valid criminal laws of the state, but its object was to prevent him from collecting penalties that had accrued under the provisions of a statute judicially determined to be void. The injunction must be so read and understood.

Several changes of incumbents in the office of attorney general took place while the cases were proceeded in, but that did not deprive the court of jurisdiction. The successors in office were duly substituted, and thus became subjected to the preliminary and final decrees of the court. The object of the supplemental bill was to restrain the present appellant, as successor to Smyth, from attempting to transfer the very matters that stood for judgment in the Federal court to the state court by filing a bill in the latter. Such a course might bring about a conflict between those courts, and create the confusion so often deprecated by this court. Peck v. Jenness, 7 How. 625, 12 L. ed. 846; Chittenden v. Brewster, 2 Wall. 191, 17 L. ed. 839; Orton v. Smith, 18 How. 263, 15 L. ed. 393.

The jurisdiction of the circuit court could not be defeated or impaired by the institution, by one of the parties, of subsequent proceedings, whether civil or criminal, involving the same legal questions, in the state court. Harkrader v. Wadley, 172 U. S. 148, 166, 43 L. ed. 399, 405, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 119, 126.

The decree of the Circuit Court is affirmed.

Mr. Justice Harlan, concurring:

I am in favor of modifying the judgment in some particulars and then affirming it, but I do not concur in all the reasoning of the opinion.

TOMAS C. GUTIERRES et al., Appts.,
v.

ALBUQUERQUE LAND & IRRIGATION COMPANY.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 545-557.)

Public waters—appropriation of—validity of territorial legislation.

1. Territorial as well as state legislation with respect to the regulation of the use of public waters was authorized by the provisions of the acts of Congress of March 3, 1891 (26 Stat. at L. 1095, chap. 561, U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 1570), and of July 26, 1866 (14 Stat. at L. 253, chap. 262, § 9, Rev. Stat. § 2339, U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 1437), recognizing, so far as the United States is concerned, the validity of local customs and decisions in respect to the appropriation of water, and those of the desert land act of March 3, 1877 (19 Stat. at L. 377, chap. 107, U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 1549), permitting the appropriation of water for irrigation and the reclamation of desert land.
2. Power to authorize irrigation corporations organized under N. M. act February 24, 1887, to take and divert surplus public waters over and above the needs of prior appropriators, was not denied to the legislature of that territory by the proviso in the desert land act of March 3, 1877, 19 Stat. at L. 377, chap. 107, U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 1549), that surplus water on the public domain shall remain and be held free for the appropriation and use of the public for irrigation, mining, and manufacturing purposes, subject to existing rights.

[No. 16.]

Argued January 9, 1902. Decided February 23, 1903.

NOTE.—On the right of prior appropriation of water—see note to Isaacs v. Barber (Wash.) 30 L. R. A. 665.

A PPEAL from the Supreme Court of the Territory of New Mexico to review a judgment which affirmed a judgment of the District Court for the First Judicial District of that Territory within and for the County of Santa Fé, granting a perpetual injunction against interference with a survey by an irrigation corporation. Affirmed. See same case below, 61 Pac. 357.

Statement by Mr. Justice White:

*This litigation was begun by the appellee, [546] in the district court for the second judicial district of the territory of New Mexico, within and for the county of Bernalillo. In the bill of complaint, equitable relief was sought against the now appellants. It was alleged, in substance, that plaintiff, on December 31, 1897, became a body corporate, pursuant to the provisions of an act of the general assembly of the territory of New Mexico, approved February 24, 1887, for the purpose of constructing a canal, ditch, and pipe line between named points in the county of Bernalillo, in the territory of New Mexico; that, as preliminary to the construction of such canal, ditch, and pipe line, a survey of lands along the proposed route thereof was necessary, and such survey was authorized by law; and that the defendants, asserting ownership of lands along such proposed route, had forcibly prevented the employees of the plaintiff from entering on said lands to make survey thereof. It was prayed that temporarily, pending the suit, and perpetually by the final decree, the defendants might be enjoined from further interference with the making of the survey, and there was also a prayer for general relief. In their answer the defendants admitted their interferences with the proposed survey, as complained of in the bill, but asserted their right to do so. Reiterating the allegations of the answer, by cross complaint, a perpetual injunction was asked restraining entry by the plaintiff upon the lands. An order was issued temporarily restraining the defendants, as prayed, and thereafter a demurrer to the answer and cross complaint of the defendant was filed and overruled. After replication by the respective parties the cause was transferred to the district court of the first judicial district for the territory of New Mexico, within and for the county of Santa Fé. In that court trial was had and judgment was entered in favor of the plaintiff, perpetuating the preliminary injunction and dismissing the cross complaint of the defendants. *The [547] following findings of fact and conclusions of law were embodied in the judgment:

"Findings of Fact.

"1. That the plaintiff is a corporation and has complied with the provisions of the laws of the territory of New Mexico. It is organized for the purpose of constructing a canal from a point on the Rio Grande about 28 miles above the city of Albuquerque to the railroad bridge across said Rio Grande, at Isleta, the initial and terminal points of said canal being within the county of Bernalillo.

"II. That the headgate of plaintiff's proposed canal is to be at a point on the Rio Grande three eighths ( $\frac{3}{8}$ ) of a mile below or south of the Indian village of San Felipe, about 28 miles above the city of Albuquerque; that the ultimate terminus or point of discharge into the river is at the railroad bridge near Isleta, the entire length of the canal to be about thirty-five (35) miles. The present proposed terminus is at the city of Albuquerque.

"III. That the engineer of the company was proceeding with a survey of the line between Albuquerque and the headgate when defendants interfered with and obstructed the said engineer in the making of said survey.

"IV. That the capacity of the said proposed canal is two hundred and ten (210) cubic feet of water per second.

"V. That there are at present thirteen ditches taking water from the river between the proposed headgate of plaintiff's canal and Albuquerque, and seven between Albuquerque and the Indian town of Isleta.

"VI. That the aggregate capacity of all the said old ditches is four hundred and ninety-eight (498) cubic feet per second, and the court finds that there has been a valid prior appropriation by the owners of said old ditches of the said four hundred and ninety-eight (498) feet per second of water.

"VII. That during a few months or parts of the summer months of the years 1894, 1895, 1896, and 1897 there was no surplus water flowing in the river at the proposed headgate, but during a large majority of the [548] months of each of these years *there was a large amount of surplus water flowing past that point, and that those years were the only years within ten or twenty years in which the river was dry at or above Albuquerque.

"VIII. That in a majority of the last ten years there has been surplus water flowing in the said river at the proposed headgate at all times.

"IX. That the river became dry at Albuquerque about the last of June, 1894, and remained so for twenty-two days, and also in June, 1896, for a number of days, the court being unable to find the exact number or length of time from the evidence.

"X. That the months of June, July, August, and September are the 'dry season.'

"XI. That the planting and growing season in the Rio Grande valley begins in February and ends with October.

"XII. That very few farmers served by the present ditches sow wheat, oats, barley, or rye in the fall of the year, but do so in the spring, beginning during February or March, and that very little, if any, of the water now appropriated is used for these crops after June 15th, but the water is used for chili, corn, alfalfa, and melons after that time, and for alfalfa as late as October.

"XIII. That for all the months in most years, and for most of the months in every year, there is a surplus of water flowing in 188 U. S.

the Rio Grande over and above the amount appropriated by said old ditches.

"XIV. The court finds that there is no evidence that plaintiff relies on any source of water supply than the Rio Grande, or that the proposed canal of plaintiff is expected or intended to receive and distribute stored waters.

"XV. That the plaintiff is not the owner of any lands along the line of its proposed canal or elsewhere.

"XVI. That there is no evidence that plaintiff has any contract with or employment by any person who is the owner of lands irrigable from said proposed canal for the conduct of water upon any such lands, or that any owner of lands not now irrigated from existing acequias, desires or intends to irrigate such lands from plaintiff's canal when completed.

"XVII. That the proposed canal of the [549] plaintiff will cross and recross the existing acequias of Bernalillo nine times within a distance of 1 mile of its length.

"XVIII. That some of the defendants and some of their associates are the owners of lands through which the plaintiff proposes to construct its canal.

"Conclusions of Law.

"I. That the plaintiff corporation is entitled to exercise the power of eminent domain.

"II. That the plaintiff, by the filing of its articles of incorporation with the secretary of the territory of New Mexico, and complying with the provisions of the act under which it is incorporated, has acquired a right to construct its canals and reservoirs to divert through its proposed canal surplus and unappropriated waters flowing in the Rio Grande, and that such a right of eminent domain does not depend upon the ownership of lands by plaintiff or the employment of plaintiff prior to the construction of its canal by owners of lands to carry waters for such owners.

"III. That the defendants, at the time of the filing of the complaint herein, unlawfully obstructed the plaintiff in the exercise of powers lawfully conferred upon it by the act under which it is incorporated.

"IV. That the defendants do not and cannot in this action lawfully represent the rights of such persons claiming a right to the use of the waters of the Rio Grande, by prior appropriation, when the appropriation of such persons was effected at a point below the mouth of the proposed canal of plaintiff.

"V. That the defendants cannot lawfully set up in this action any rights secured to them and their associates or their predecessors in title by the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo, and that the allegations of paragraph ten of the answer of defendants with reference to the treaty of defendants are immaterial.

"VI. That the plaintiff is entitled to the relief demanded in the complaint, including a perpetual injunction, as prayed for.

"VII. That defendants are not entitled to any part of the *relief demanded in their [550] cross complaint, but the same should be dismissed."

A motion to set aside the findings and judgment and for a new trial having been overruled, the cause was taken to the supreme court of the territory. That court affirmed the judgment of the trial court and adopted as its own the findings of fact made by the judge of the district court. Thereupon this appeal was allowed.

Mr. Neill B. Field argued the cause and filed a brief for appellants:

Neither the state legislature nor the state courts have any independent power to interfere with the primary disposal of the public lands of the United States, or to detract from the estates in such lands granted under the laws of the United States.

Lux v. Haggin, 69 Cal. 255, 10 Pac. 674.

The power of the territorial legislature to make this grant is utterly inconsistent with the right of the United States to control and dispose of its own property wheresoever the same may be situated.

Gibson v. Chouteau, 13 Wall. 92, 20 L. ed. 534; Van Brocklin v. Tennessee, 117 U. S. 151, sub nom. Van Brocklin v. Anderson, 29 L. ed. 845, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 670; Van Sickle v. Haines, 7 Nev. 262; Thorp v. Freed, 1 Mont. 680; Paige v. Peters, 70 Wis. 178, 35 N. W. 328.

The right to the use of water for the purposes of irrigation is incident to the ownership or occupation of lands, without which it does not exist.

Basey v. Gallagher, 20 Wall. 683, 22 L. ed. 454; Millheiser v. Long (N. M.) 61 Pac. 111; Starr v. Beck, 133 U. S. 541, 33 L. ed. 761, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 350; Turner v. Cole, 31 Or. 154, 49 Pac. 971; Combs v. Agricultural Ditch Co. 17 Colo. 146, 28 Pac. 966; Creek v. Bozeman Waterworks Co. 15 Mont. 121, 38 Pac. 459; Senior v. Anderson, 115 Cal. 496, 47 Pac. 454; Smith v. Hawkins, 110 Cal. 122, 42 Pac. 453; Simpson v. Williams, 18 Nev. 432, 4 Pac. 1213; Barrows v. Fox, 98 Cal. 63, 32 Pac. 811; Faulkner v. Rondoni, 104 Cal. 140, 37 Pac. 883; Farmers' High Line Canal & Reservoir Co. v. Southworth, 13 Colo. 111, 4 L. R. A. 767, 21 Pac. 1028; Rominger v. Squires, 9 Colo. 327, 12 Pac. 213; Schilling v. Rominger, 4 Colo. 104; Becker v. Marble Creek Irrig. Co. 15 Utah, 225, 49 Pac. 893, 1119; St. Luis Water Co. v. Estrada, 117 Cal. 168, 48 Pac. 1076; Tyler v. Wilkinson, 4 Mason, 397, Fed. Cas. No. 14,312; Rigney v. Tacoma Light & Water Co. 9 Wash. 576, 26 L. R. A. 425, 38 Pac. 147.

In case of a conflict between a law of the territory of New Mexico, and a treaty stipulation of the United States made in pursuance of law, the treaty is of paramount authority, and must prevail.

Head Money Cases, 112 U. S. 598, sub nom. Edge v. Robertson, 28 L. ed. 803, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 247; Hauenstein v. Lynham, 100 U. S. 488, 25 L. ed. 630; Ware v. Hylton, 3 Dall. 199, 1 L. ed. 568; Barker v. Harvey, 181 U. S. 486, 45 L. ed. 965, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 690.

590

The act in question is void because it is not a reasonable exercise of legislative power.

People v. Daniels, 6 Utah, 288, 5 L. R. A. 444, 22 Pac. 159; Ellison v. Linford, 7 Utah, 166, 25 Pac. 744; Baew v. Perez, 8 N. M. 187, 42 Pac. 162.

The right of the appellee to exercise the power of eminent domain depends upon its ability to show affirmatively that it is organized to serve the public, and not merely for private gain.

Re Niagara Falls & W. R. Co. 108 N. Y. 384, 15 N. E. 429; Union River Logging R. Co. 12 Land. Dec. 581; Noble v. Union River Logging R. Co. 147 U. S. 172, 37 L. ed. 126, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 271.

The conclusion of the courts below that appellee, by the mere filing of its articles of incorporation, became authorized to exercise the power of eminent domain, is in direct conflict with principles established by a very large number of decisions.

Weidenfeld v. Sugar Run R. Co. 48 Fed. 615; Bridal Veil Lumbering Co. v. Johnson, 30 Or. 205, 34 L. R. A. 368, 46 Pac. 790; Re Deansville Cemetery Assn. 66 N. Y. 569, 23 Am. Rep. 86; Re Eureka Basin Warehouse & Mfg. Co. 96 N. Y. 42; Re Rochester, H. & L. R. Co. 110 N. Y. 119, 17 N. E. 678; Re New York, L. & W. R. Co. 99 N. Y. 12, 1 N. E. 27; Re Split Rock Cable Road Co. 128 N. Y. 408, 28 N. E. 506; Aper Transp. Co. v. Garbade, 32 Or. 582, 52 Pac. 573, 54 Pac. 367, 882; Consolidated Channel Co. v. Central P. R. Co. 51 Cal. 269; Coster v. Tide Water Co. 18 N. J. Eq. 54; People ex rel. Robinson v. Pittsburgh R. Co. 53 Cal. 694.

There is nothing in the legislation of Congress which, even impliedly, recognizes the validity of the act in question.

Bear Lake & River Waterworks & Irrig. Co. v. Garland, 164 U. S. 18, 41 L. ed. 334, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 7; United States v. Rio Grande Dam & Irrig. Co. 174 U. S. 690, 43 L. ed. 1136, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 770.

The object sought to be accomplished by the territorial legislature is not only not in harmony with the policy of Congress, but is directly opposed to it.

Ferris v. Higley, 20 Wall. 375, sub nom. Perris v. Higley, 22 L. ed. 383; Clayton v. Utah, 132 U. S. 632, 33 L. ed. 455, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 190; Ex parte Lothrop, 118 U. S. 113, 30 L. ed. 108, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 984.

Territorial legislation is invalid when in conflict or inconsistent with the legislation of Congress.

Ferris v. Higley, 20 Wall. 375, sub nom. Perris v. Higley, 22 L. ed. 383; Lewis v. Pima County, 155 U. S. 57, 39 L. ed. 67, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 22; Clayton v. Utah, 132 U. S. 632, 33 L. ed. 455, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 190; United States v. McMillan, 165 U. S. 504, 41 L. ed. 805, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 395.

The doctrine of prior appropriation, as established in the arid region, does not completely supersede all riparian rights.

Union Mill & Min. Co. v. Dangberg, 81 Fed. 94; Barrows v. Fox, 98 Cal. 66, 32 Pac.

188 U. S.

811; Lux v. Haggin, 69 Cal. 255, 10 Pac. 674; Hall's Mexican Law, §§ 1396, 1397.

Mr. William B. Childers argued the cause and filed a brief for appellee:

Whenever the title has passed, been conveyed by the sovereign, and the land has become private property, "primary disposal of the soil has been made." Thereafter any legislation relating thereto does not "interfere with the primary disposal of the soil."

Gibson v. Chouteau, 13 Wall. 99, 20 L. ed. 536; Henshaw v. Bissell, 18 Wall. 255, 21 L. ed. 835; King v. Thomas, 6 Mont. 409, 12 Pac. 865.

Congress has expressly recognized the power of the legislature to legislate on this subject.

Basey v. Gallagher, 20 Wall. 681, 22 L. ed. 454. See also Jennison v. Kirk, 98 U. S. 453, 25 L. ed. 240; Broder v. Natoma Water & Min. Co. 101 U. S. 274, 25 L. ed. 790; Atchison v. Peterson, 20 Wall. 513, 22 L. ed. 416.

The validity of such legislation by a territory has never been questioned. It has been expressly recognized.

Sturr v. Beck, 133 U. S. 545, 33 L. ed. 762, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 350.

The act of Congress of 1866, as well as the desert land acts, applies only to the public domain.

Long, Irrigation, § 30; Cruse v. McCauley, 96 Fed. 369; Smith v. Denniff, 24 Mont. 20, 50 L. R. A. 741, 60 Pac. 398; Carson v. Gentner, 33 Or. 512, 43 L. R. A. 130, 52 Pac. 506.

Whether a particular region is a farming neighborhood, and whether the supply of water to that neighborhood constitutes a public use, are questions of fact.

Long, Irrigation, § 5, p. 14; Lindsay Irrig. Co. v. Mehrtens, 97 Cal. 676, 32 Pac. 802; Lux v. Haggin, 69 Cal. 255, 10 Pac. 674; Aliso Water Co. v. Baker, 95 Cal. 268, 30 Pac. 537.

The doctrine of riparian rights has never prevailed in New Mexico, either under Mexico or the United States.

Long, Irrigation, § 10; Trambley v. Luteran, 6 N. M. 16, 27 Pac. 312; Millheiser v. Long (N. M.) 61 Pac. 111; Lux v. Haggin, 69 Cal. 255, 10 Pac. 674.

The Spanish and Mexican law existed in New Mexico, and continues to exist, except so far as changed by statute. That law as to water rights was based on the principle of prior appropriation. This principle was also early recognized by the courts of the Pacific and Rocky Mountain states.

Barnett v. Barnett, 9 N. M. 205, 50 Pac. 338; American Ins. Co. v. Canter, 1 Pet. 544, sub nom. American Ins. Co. v. 356 Bales of Cotton, 7 L. ed. 255; United States v. Pereheman, 7 Pet. 82, 8 L. ed. 615; Mitchell v. United States, 9 Pet. 729, 9 L. ed. 289; Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. McGlinn, 114 U. S. 546, 29 L. ed. 271, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1005; Insular Cases, 182 U. S. 1-391, 45 L. ed. 1041-1146, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 742-826.

New Mexico is a territory, but in it the legislature has all legislative power, except as limited by the Constitution of the United States.

States and the organic act and the laws of Congress appertaining thereto.

Walker v. New Mexico & S. P. R. Co. 165 U. S. 604, 41 L. ed. 843, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 421.

The use of water for irrigation, when distributed by an irrigation company, is a public use.

Long, Irrigation, § 4, p. 12, and authorities there cited; Oury v. Goodwin (Ariz.) 26 Pac. 376; Fallbrook Irrig. Dist. v. Bradley, 164 U. S. 112, 41 L. ed. 369, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 56.

In the case of the public domain it is not essential that the appropriator should have acquired, or have the right to acquire, title to the land upon which the water is to be used; and an alien may make a valid appropriation of water on the public land, although he may be incompetent to acquire title to the land itself.

Long, Irrigation, § 35; Ely v. Ferguson, 91 Cal. 187, 27 Pac. 587; Santa Paula Waterworks v. Peralta, 113 Cal. 38, 45 Pac. 168; Toohy v. Campbell, 24 Mont. 13, 60 Pac. 396; Thorpe v. Tenem Ditch Co. 1 Wash. 566, 20 Pac. 588.

Mr. Justice White, after making the foregoing statement, delivered the opinion of the court:

The pertinent portions of the territorial act of February 24, 1887, under which the plaintiff below was incorporated, are noted in the margin.†

*It will be seen that the act authorized the formation of corporations for the purpose of constructing and maintaining reservoirs and canals, or ditches and pipe lines, and that two purposes *were to be subserved by the formation of such companies (1) the supplying of water for irrigation, mining, manufacturing, domestic, and other public uses, including cities and towns; and (2) the colonization and the improvement of lands in connection therewith. The articles of association of the appellee set out the second of the aforesaid objects as being the †Corporation Laws of New Mexico, 1897.

§ 468. Any five persons who may desire to form a company for the purpose of constructing and maintaining reservoirs and canals, or ditches and pipe lines, for the purpose of supplying water for the purpose of irrigation, mining, manufacturing, domestic, and other public uses, including cities and towns, and for the purpose of colonization and the improvement of lands in connection therewith, for either or both of said objects, either jointly or separately, shall make and sign articles of incorporation, which shall be acknowledged before the secretary of the territory, or some person authorized by law to take the acknowledgment of conveyances of real estate, and when so acknowledged such articles shall be filed with such secretary.

§ 469. Such articles shall set forth: First. The full names of the incorporators and the corporate name of such company.

Second. The purpose or purposes for which such company is formed, and, if the object be to construct reservoirs and canals, or ditches and pipe lines for any of the purposes herein specified, the beginning point and terminus of the main line of such canals and ditches and pipe purpose for which the company was formed. The organization of the company in conformity to the requirements of the statute is not questioned, and the existence of surplus water over and above the needs of prior appropriators of water at the point where it was proposed to divert the waters of the Rio Grande for the proposed canal is a fact found by the trial court and not disputed either in the supreme court of the territory or in the argument made at bar.

The contentions urged upon our notice substantially resolve themselves into two general propositions: First, that the territorial act was invalid, because it assumed to dispose of property of the United States without its consent; and, second, that said statute, in so far, at least, as it authorized the formation of corporations of the character of the complainant, was inconsistent with the legislation of Congress and therefore void. These propositions naturally admit of consideration together.

The argument in support of the first proposition proceeds upon the hypothesis that the waters affected by the statute are public waters, the property, not of the territory or of private individuals, but of the United States; that by the statute private individuals, or corporations, for their mere pecuniary profit, are permitted to acquire the unappropriated portion of such public waters, in violation of the right of the United States to control and dispose of its own property wheresoever situated. Assuming that the appellants are entitled to urge the objection referred to, we think, in view of the legislation of Congress on the subject of the appropriation of water on the public domain, *particularly referred to in the opinion of [553] this court in United States v. Rio Grande Dam & Irrig. Co. 174 U. S. 704-706, 43 L. ed. 1142, 1143, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 770, the objection is devoid of merit. As stated in the opinion just referred to, by the act of July 26, 1866 (14 Stat. at L. 253, chap. 262, § 9, Rev. Stat. § 2339, U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 1437), Congress recognized, as respects the public domain, "so far as the United States are concerned, the validity of the local customs, laws, and decisions of courts in respect to the appropriation of water." By the act of March 3, 1877 (19 Stat. at L. 377, chap. 107, U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 1549), the right to appropriate such an amount of water as might be necessarily used for the purpose of irrigation and reclamation of desert land, part of the public domain, was granted, and it was further provided that "all surplus water over and above such actual appropriation and use, together with the water of all lakes, rivers, and other sources of water supply upon the public lands and not navigable, shall remain and be held free for the appropriation and use of the public for irrigation, mining, and manufacturing purposes, subject to existing rights."

That the purpose of Congress was to recognize as well the legislation of a territory as of a state with respect to the regulation of the use of public waters, is evidenced by the act of March 3, 1891 (26 Stat. at L. 1095, chap. 561, U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 1570). By the 18th section of the act of lines, and the general course, direction, and length thereof shall be stated.

Third. The amount of the capital stock and the number of shares as definitely as practicable.

Fourth. The term of existence of the company, which shall not exceed fifty years.

Fifth. The number of directors, and the names of those who shall manage the business of the company for the first year.

Sixth. The name of the city or town and county in which the principal place of business of the company is to be located.

§ 484. Corporations formed under this act for the purpose of furnishing and supplying water for any of the purposes mentioned in section four hundred and sixty-eight shall have, in addition to the powers hereinbefore mentioned, rights as follows:

First. To cause such examination and surveys for their proposed reservoirs, canals, pipe lines, and ditches to be made, as may be necessary to the selection of the most eligible locations and advantageous routes, and for such purpose, by their officers, agents, and servants, to enter upon the lands or water of any person or of this territory.

Second. To take and hold such voluntary grant of real estate and other property as shall be made to them in furtherance of the purposes of such corporation.

Third. To construct their canals, pipe lines, or ditches upon or along any stream of water.

Fourth. To take and divert from any stream, lake, or spring the surplus water, for the purpose of supplying the same to persons, to be used for the objects mentioned in section four hundred and sixty-eight of this act, but such corporations shall have no right to interfere with the rights of, or appropriate the property of, any persons except upon the payment of the assessed value thereof, to be ascertained as in this act provided. And provided, further, That no water shall be diverted if it will interfere with the reasonable requirements of any person or persons using or requiring the same, when so diverted.

Fifth. To furnish water for the purposes mentioned in section four hundred and sixty-eight, at such rates as the by-laws may prescribe; but equal rates shall be conceded to each class of consumers.

Sixth. To enter upon and condemn and appropriate any lands, timber, stone, gravel, or other material that may be necessary for the uses and purposes of said companies.

§ 492. That no incorporation of any company or companies to supply water for the purposes of irrigation and other purposes shall have any right to divert the usual and natural flow of water of any stream which by law of 1854 has been declared a public acequia for any use whatever, between the fifteenth day of February and the fifteenth day of October of each year, unless it be with the unanimous consent of all and every person holding agricultural and cultivated lands under such stream or public acequia, and to be irrigated by the water furnished by said stream or public acequia, and that no incorporation of any company or companies shall interfere with the water rights of any individual or company acquired prior to the passage of this act.

1891 it was provided as follows (italics not in original):

"Sec. 18. That the right of way through the public lands and reservations of the United States is hereby granted to any canal or ditch company formed for the purpose of irrigation and duly organized under the laws of any state or territory, which shall have filed, or may hereafter file, with the Secretary of the Interior a copy of its articles of incorporation, and due proofs of its organization under the same, to the extent of the ground occupied by the water of the reservoir and of the canal and its laterals, and 50 feet on each side of the marginal limits thereof; also the right to take, from the public lands adjacent to the line of the canal or ditch, material, earth, and stone necessary for the construction of such canal or ditch: Provided, That no such right of way shall be so located as to interfere with the proper occupation by the government of any *such reservation, and all maps of location shall be subject to the approval of the department of the government having jurisdiction of such reservation, and the privilege herein granted shall not be construed to interfere with the control of water for irrigation and other purposes under authority of the respective states or territories." It may be observed that the purport of the previous acts is reflexively illustrated by the act of June 17, 1902 (32 Stat. at L. 388). That act appropriated the receipts from the sale and disposal of the public lands in certain states and territories to the construction of irrigation works for the reclamation of arid lands. The 8th section of the act is as follows:

"Sec. 8. That nothing in this act shall be construed as affecting or intended to affect or to in any way interfere with the laws of any state or territory relating to the control, appropriation, use, or distribution of water used in irrigation, or any vested right acquired thereunder, and the Secretary of the Interior, in carrying out the provisions of this act, shall proceed in conformity with such laws, and nothing herein shall in any way affect any right of any state or Federal government or of any landowner, appropriator, or user of water in, to, or from any interstate stream or the waters thereof: Provided, That the right to the use of water acquired under the provisions of this act shall be appurtenant to the land irrigated, and beneficial use shall be the basis, the measure, and the limit of the right."

It would necessarily seem to follow from the legislation referred to that the statute which we have been considering is not inconsistent with the legislation of Congress on the subject of the disposal of waters flowing over the public domain of the United States. Of course, as held in the Rio Grande Case, p. 703, L. ed. 1141, Sup. Ct. Rep. 775, even a state, as respects streams within its borders, in the absence of specific authority from Congress, "cannot, by its legislation, destroy the right of the United States, as the owner of lands bordering on a stream, to the continued flow of its waters; so far, 188 U. S.

at least, as may be necessary for the beneficial uses of the government property;" and the power of a state over navigable streams and their tributaries is further limited by the *superior power of the general govern-[555]ment to secure the uninterrupted navigability of all navigable streams within the limits of the United States. Necessarily, these limitations are equally applicable in restraint of the legislative branch of a territorial government, controlled, as is such body, by Congress. If we assume that a restriction on the power of a territory similar to that first stated prevails in favor of private owners of lands along a running stream, the act in question clearly is not violative of such rights, for the same does not attempt to authorize an infringement of them. The water which it is provided may be appropriated is "surplus" water, of any stream, lake, or spring, and it is specifically provided in subdivision 4 of § 17 of the act "That no water shall be diverted, if it will interfere with the reasonable requirements of any person or persons using or requiring the same when so diverted." So, also, in § 25, it is declared "that no incorporation of any company or companies shall interfere with the water rights of any individual or company acquired prior to the passage of this act." The finding of the court below that "surplus" water existed negates the idea that any legitimate appropriation of water which can be made by the appellee can in anywise violate the rights of others.

We perceive no merit in the contention that the proviso in the desert land act of March 3, 1877, declaring that surplus water on the public domain shall remain and be held free for the appropriation and use of the public for irrigation, mining, and manufacturing purposes, subject to existing rights, is an expression of the will of Congress that all public waters within its control or the control of a legislative body of its creation, must be directly appropriated by the owners of land upon which a beneficial use of water is to be made, and that in consequence a territorial legislature cannot lawfully empower a corporation, such as the appellee, to become an intermediary for furnishing water to irrigate the lands of third parties. As all owners of land within the service capacity of appellee's canal will possess the right to use the water which may be diverted into such canal, the use is clearly public (Fallbrook Irrig. Dist. v. Bradley, 164 U. S. 163, 41 L. ed. 390, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 56), and appellee is therefore a public agency, *whose right to divert water and [556] whose continued existence is dependent upon the application by it within a reasonable time of such diverted water to a beneficial use. Irrigation corporations generally are recognized in the legislation of Congress, and the rights conferred are not limited to such corporations as are mere combinations of owners of irrigable land.

It is conceded on behalf of appellant that, by the laws of Mexico in force when the territory of New Mexico was ceded to the United States, the use of the waters of both navigable and unnavigable streams was not limited to riparian lands, but extended as well to lands which did not lie upon the banks of the rivers, and that such use was subject to be regulated and controlled by the public authorities. It is, however, contended that the effect of the statute under consideration is to free the waters from public control and to transfer them to private control, a position which is manifestly unsound, in view of the public nature of such corporations and their liability to regulation by the legislative authority which has in effect created them. The concession above referred to and the implication arising from the statement in the answer and cross bill to the purport that the title of the defendants to their lands was derived, mediately or immediately, from those who held title thereto at the time of the acquisition of New Mexico by the United States, coupled with the finding by the trial court that, after making all due allowances for valid appropriations of water within the portion of the Rio Grande directly affected by the canal of the appellee, there yet existed a surplus of unappropriated water, warranted the trial court in treating as immaterial the claim asserted in the tenth paragraph of the answer of the defendants to the effect that, by the treaty of cession of New Mexico to the United States, the defendants and their associates acquired the right of user of all the waters of the Rio Grande adjacent to their lands. Neither do we think that the trial court was called upon, at the instance of the defendants, entire strangers in every aspect to other appropriators, to inquire into and pass upon the question whether appropriators of water below the mouth of the proposed canal of appellee would be injured by the construction of the [557] canal. The rights of such persons *will not, of course, be injuriously affected by the decree in this cause, and non constat but that they may yet intervene for their own protection, if they deem that the construction of the canal will be an invasion of their rights, or that they may be willing to forego objection to the construction of the canal.

On the whole, we are of opinion that the decree of the Supreme Court of the Territory of New Mexico was correct, and it is therefore affirmed.

Mr. Justice McKenna dissents.

GEORGE C. RANKIN, as Receiver of the Elmira National Bank, Plff. in Err.,
v.

CHASE NATIONAL BANK.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 557-566.)

Payment — in embezzled currency — bona fides — recovery by owner — banks — cashier's implied authority — inapplicable instruction.

NOTE.—On the title to stolen or fraudulently altered negotiable paper—see note to Baldwin v. Ely, 13 L. ed. U. S. 266.

1. One who has in good faith received currency in payment of an existing debt cannot be compelled to make repayment because it subsequently appears that such currency had been embezzled by the one who made the payment.
2. To charge the jury that the authority of a bank cashier to draw a draft in his official capacity in his individual favor may be implied from the course of previous business is error which requires the reversal of a judgment which sustains the right of a collecting bank to retain the proceeds in payment of his individual debt, where such draft was in fact not drawn to his individual order, but by him as cashier to his order as cashier, and indorsed for deposit to his credit as cashier.

[No. 105.]

Argued December 3, 4, 1902. Decided February 23, 1903.

IN ERROR to the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit to review a judgment which affirmed a judgment of a Circuit Court in an action by a receiver of a national bank for a lesser sum than claimed in the complaint. Reversed, and remanded to the Circuit Court for a new trial.

See same case below, 46 C. C. A. 683, 108 Fed. 987.

Statement by Mr. Justice White:

On the 23d day of May, 1893, the Elmira National Bank of Elmira, New York, failed, and a receiver was shortly thereafter appointed. At the date of the failure, on the face of the ledger of the Chase National Bank of New York city, there was a balance to the credit of the Elmira bank which was paid with interest at 6 per cent, as previously agreed on. The receiver at the time of this payment, asserted that he was entitled to a larger sum. This being disputed by the Chase bank, the present suit was brought. In substance the cause of action was based upon the averment that the Chase bank had wrongfully charged the account of the Elmira bank with a check for $15,012.50. The answer, whilst admitting the charging of the check, asserted its validity. In addition, it was averred that, even although the check had not been legally charged, the Elmira bank was not entitled to recover, because at the time the check was debited to its account, and as a result of such charge, two credit items, one of $8,000 and the other of $7,000, had been put to the account of the Elmira bank, to which it otherwise would not have been entitled, and *hence the check had been counterbal-anced by the credits in question. There was verdict and judgment in favor of the Chase bank, and the case was taken by the Elmira bank to the circuit court of appeals. That court decided that the trial court had correctly instructed the jury that the check for $15,012.50 was void, and therefore had been illegally debited to the Elmira bank. The court, moreover, held that the court below was right in instructing that the two credit items, referred to in the answer, could be retained by the Chase bank if the sum thereof belonged to that bank, which had given credit to Elmira for the amount solely as a counter entry to the charge of the check for $15,012.50. The judgment was, however, reversed, and a new trial ordered, because it was concluded there was no proof from which the jury could have inferred that the Chase bank had a right to retain the $7,000 item. 43 C. C. A. 496, 104 Fed. 214. On the new trial the case made was as follows:

[559]

J. J. Bush, who was the cashier of the Elmira bank, borrowed for his individual account from the Chase bank a sum of money, and his debt, evidenced by his demand note, secured by stock of the Elmira bank as collateral, amounted, on the 4th of May, 1893, in principal and interest, to a sum slightly exceeding $15,000. On that day Porter, the vice president of the Chase bank, through the long-distance telephone, called Bush at Elmira, and requested that he either pay his debt or furnish additional security. Bush replied that he would come to New York city on the next morning and settle the matter. On the morning of the 5th of May he appeared at the office of the Chase bank and offered to Porter, the vice president, $8,000 in cash and a draft for $7,000, signed by Bush as cashier of the Elmira bank, drawn on the Quaker City National Bank of Philadelphia. The vice president stated to Bush that the draft on Philadelphia was not equivalent to cash, because of the disturbed financial condition prevailing in Philadelphia, and hence declined to receive the draft in payment of the note. It was thereupon agreed that Bush would give his individual check on the Elmira bank for the principal and interest of his debt; that this check should be by him certified and [560] made payable at the Chase bank; that the cash offered should be received, and that the check and cash should be at once put, respectively, to the debit and credit of the account of the Elmira bank. It was also understood that the draft on Philadelphia should be taken, and when collected its proceeds should be credited to the Elmira account. Thereupon a check was drawn by Bush individually on the Elmira bank. Across the face of this check the following was written:

Certified and accepted May 5, 1893.
Payable at Chase National Bank, New York.
Elmira National Bank.
By J. J. Bush, Cashier.

There was conflict in the testimony as to whether the $7,000 draft on Philadelphia, signed by Bush as cashier, was, when first offered by him, payable to his individual order or to his order as cashier. The officer of the Chase bank testified that when the draft was first offered it was payable to Bush's individual order, and that it was subsequently changed so as to make it payable to the order of Bush as cashier, to carry out the settlement agreed upon. There was no conflict, however, in the proof, showing that the draft on Philadelphia, as actually handed to the Chase bank, was drawn by Bush as cashier of the Elmira bank to his own order as such cashier, and was indorsed by him as cashier for deposit in the Chase bank. The $8,000 in cash, having been received from Bush, was at once credited to the account of the Elmira bank, and also at once the account of that bank was debited with Bush's individual and certified check for the $15,012.50. As the account of the Elmira bank had to its credit a sum more than sufficient to pay the check, it resulted, upon the assumption of the legality and good faith of the Chase bank in charging the check, that it at once received the full amount of the debt due it by Bush. The draft on Philadelphia was forwarded for collection and was thereafter paid, and the proceeds put to the credit of the account of the Elmira bank. It was shown that on the 5th of May, when Bush drew and certified his individual check on the Elmira bank for $15,012.50, his deposit account with that bank *was overdrawn. It was shown [561] that at various times, covering a considerable period, Bush had drawn, as cashier of the Elmira bank, a number of checks for a small amount, each to his individual order, and had used such checks to pay his personal debts, and there was also proof tending to show that the officers and directors of the Elmira bank knew, or had reason to know, that such checks had been drawn by the cashier. Other checks were also offered, from which it was contended the inference of implied authority could be legitimately drawn. It was shown that the Elmira bank had no knowledge of the drawing of the check of $15,012.50, and the fact that such check had been charged by the Chase bank to its account was only learned after the failure of the Elmira bank, when the Chase bank rendered its account to the receiver. It was also shown that Bush, the cashier, had, on the evening of the 4th, or the morning of the 5th of May taken the $8,000 of cash which he paid to the Chase bank from the funds of the Elmira bank.

The court instructed the jury that the check for $15,012.50 was void as to the Elmira bank, "because it was the certification of the cashier's individual check, given and received for his individual benefit, with no authority either to certify or to make it payable elsewhere than at the office of the Elmira National Bank. . . . There is no evidence tending to show that Bush had any real or apparent authority for this certification or to make the check payable at the office of the defendant. . . . The certification by a cashier of his own individual check is void, irrespective of the question whether he had funds in the bank to meet it, for he could not act in regard to the same check in two capacities, both as drawer and as indorser, to bind the bank for its payment."

To this instruction of the court no exception was reserved by the defendant. Having thus eliminated the check of $15,012.50 from the account, the court said:

"The importance of this case turns upon another set of facts, to which I will now call your attention. You will see that [562] Bush, as cashier, certified his own individual check for $15,012.50, and that he left the currency, $8,000, and the Quaker City draft for $7,000. Consequently, whatever is to be found about the liability of the defendant to repay $15,000, there is no question that it is liable to repay $12.50 and interest from May 5, 1893, and your verdict will be for the plaintiff for that sum at least."

To this charge also no exception was reserved by the defendant. The court then proceeded:

"The questions in the case beyond the $12.50 are in regard to the right of the Chase National Bank to retain the $8,000 in currency and the $7,000 draft. You will see that, with the exception of this $12.50, I put the case as though when Bush came in with his bag containing $8,000 in currency and $7,000 in a draft, those two, the currency and the draft, had been received by Porter and credited upon the note, and this form, this illegal, improper form of taking Bush's individual check and having it certified by himself as cashier, had not been gone into. The questions in the case beyond the $12.50 are in regard to the right of the Chase National Bank to retain the $8,000 in currency and the $7,000 draft. Now, this money, this currency, was without question taken by Bush from the vaults of the Elmira bank without authority, and was its property, but inasmuch as it was currency or money, bank bills, if it was received by the defendant in good faith, in due course of business and for the payment of a valid debt, the defendant is not subjected to the risk of repayment to the person from whom it was illegally obtained."

Coming to consider the draft for $7,000, the court first called the attention of the jury to the fact that there was some dispute in the testimony as to whether this draft, when originally offered by Bush to the Chase bank in part payment of his debt, was drawn to his individual order or to his order as cashier, but expressed an opinion that it was satisfactorily established by the testimony adduced by the Chase bank that the draft, when first offered to that bank, was drawn to Bush's individual order, and that the adding of the word "cashier" after the name of Bush, so as to make it payable to him as cashier, was subsequently done, and that such also was the case as to the indorsement on the draft making it payable for deposit in the Chase National Bank to the credit of Bush, cashier, that is, of the Elmira bank. The court, however, in-

[563]structed the jury that in any event the addition of the word cashier upon the face of the draft and the indorsement put upon it was of no importance except as a mere element of proof on the subject of the good faith of the Chase bank in having received the money and draft from Bush. Thus treating the fact that the draft was signed by Bush as cashier, and was payable to his order as cashier for deposit in the Chase bank to the credit of the Elmira bank, as irrelevant, except on the question of good faith, the court came to consider whether the Chase bank was entitled to retain the proceeds of the draft. The jury were instructed that "in the absence of any authority in the cashier to draw cashier's drafts to his own order in payment of his individual debts, the person who receives such a draft in payment of a cashier's individual debt takes the risk of being obliged to pay the draft to the bank. . . . The general authority of the cashier to draw drafts or checks on the bank in the conduct of its business does not, by itself, permit him to draw such drafts or checks in payment of his personal debts, or to raise money for the transaction of his personal business. When, therefore, he draws a draft or a check on the bank payable to his own order, and for his own individual debt, the party acting thereon takes the risk that he may act without authority to do so."

The jury, however, were instructed that either express or implied authority might have been conferred to draw such drafts, but that, as there was no proof tending to show express authority, it could only be found by implication. The source from which such implication might be derived from the proof before it was stated to the jury is as follows:

"The authority of a cashier may be inferred from the general manner in which, for a period sufficiently long to establish a settled course of business, he has been allowed, without interference, to conduct the affairs of the bank. It may be implied from the conduct or acquiescence of a corporation as represented by its board of directors. When during a series of years and in numerous business transactions he has been permitted without objection, and in his official capacity, to pursue a particular course of conduct, it may be presumed, as between his bank and those who in good faith deal with it upon the basis *of his authority to [564] represent the corporation, that he has acted in conformity with instructions received from those who have the right to control its operation. His authority is to be implied from the acquiescence of the directors in permitting an officer, during a series of years, to pursue a particular course of conduct, and this acquiescence is derived from their actual knowledge, or from what should have been their knowledge of the conduct, of the course of business of the officers."

Commenting at length upon the testimony showing the drawing of checks by Bush as cashier to his individual order, and pointing out the fact that the proof on the subject was different and stronger than had been the proof in the case when previously tried, the question of fact as to the existence of the course of business authorizing the inference of authority in Bush was submitted to the jury. Exceptions were reserved by the receiver to the foregoing rulings, as well as to the refusal of the court to give instructions which were asked, embodying asserted principles of law which were directly antagonistic to those charged by the court to the jury. There was verdict and judgment against the Chase bank for $12.50 with interest, and the case was taken again to the circuit court of appeals. That court, considering that all the legal controversies in the case had been settled by its previous opinion, and that the additional evidence on the subject of course of business was sufficient to support the verdict as to the proceeds of the draft for $7,000, affirmed the judgment, for the reasons just mentioned, which were stated in a per curiam opinion.

Mr. Edward B. Whitney argued the cause and filed a brief for plaintiff in error.

Mr. Thomas Thacher argued the cause, and, with Mr. Alfred B. Thacher, filed a brief for defendant in error.

Mr. Justice White, after making the foregoing statement, delivered the opinion of the court:

[565] 1st. The illegality of the check for $15,012.50 and the wrong resulting from charging it to the account of the Elmira bank is not open to controversy. The ruling to that effect on the first *trial seems to have been acquiesced in by the Chase bank, since it prosecuted no writ of error, and this is also true of the case now before us. Besides, no exception was saved by the Chase bank at the trial now under review to the instruction of the court concerning the illegality of the check and its insufficiency as a charge against the funds of the Elmira bank on deposit with the Chase bank. That question may be, therefore, put out of view.

2d. The errors assigned by the receiver of the Elmira bank concerning the right of the Chase bank to retain the $8,000 paid it in cash are also, in substance, not open to inquiry because of the verdict of the jury. Whether the $8,000 in currency was actually received by the Chase bank from Bush in good faith in part payment of his note was left by the court to the jury under adequate instructions, and these issues of fact are therefore foreclosed by the verdict in favor of the Chase bank. It follows that the $8,000 when deposited was the money of the Chase bank, received by it in part payment of a debt. This leaves open only the question whether one, who has in good faith received currency in payment of an existing debt, can be compelled to repay such currency because it subsequently develops that the currency paid had been embezzled by the one who made the payment. That under such conditions repayment cannot be exacted is elementary, and is not disputed. It is equally clear, we think, that the court correctly charged the jury that the burden of showing fraud on the part of the Chase bank was on the receiver.

3d. Conceding, without so deciding, the correctness of the ruling of the court below as to the right to imply authority on the part of the cashier to draw a draft in his official capacity in his individual favor from the course of previous business, we fail to perceive its relevancy to the case before us. The draft for $7,000, which was collected by the Chase bank, was not drawn by the cashier to his individual order, but was drawn by him as cashier to his order as cashier, and was indorsed for deposit to his credit as cashier. It was, therefore, but an order transferring the funds of the Elmira bank, which were on deposit in the Philadelphia bank, to the deposit account of the Elmira *bank with the Chase bank. True it is that Bush, from one view of the testimony, first tendered a draft signed by himself as cashier to his individual order; but such draft was not taken by the Chase bank. It may be, if the principles of authority implied from a course of business as announced by the lower court be sound, and if the facts brought this case within such a rule, if the Chase bank had taken the cashier's draft to his individual order, it could have retained the money. We are not, however, called upon to pass upon the rights of the parties upon the basis of what might have been done, but alone upon what was done. We may not indulge in conjecture, but must dispose of the case as depending upon the real, not the imaginary, transaction. Measuring the rights of the parties by this rule, we see no escape from the conclusion that the money collected by the Chase bank for account of the Elmira bank was obviously the property of the latter. The draft on Philadelphia was refused because of the delay which it was feared would attend its collection. The certified check was taken. It was for the entire debt, principal and interest. It was at once charged. The sum to the credit of the account of the Elmira bank when the check was charged was more than sufficient to pay it. Upon the theory of the good faith of the transaction, on the part of the Chase bank, its debt was paid, and it could have no possible interest in the proceeds of the collection of the draft. Of course, on the theory that the Chase bank was suspicious of the legality of the certified check and of its right to debit the Elmira bank with it, the purpose to retain a right in the proceeds of the draft would be in reason conceivable. But to indulge in this hypothesis would be to assume the existence of bad faith, and hence to defeat the right to the proceeds of the draft and of the money as well.

It follows that there was error committed in the instructions as to the right of the Chase bank to retain the $7,000 collected by it from the proceeds of the draft in favor of the Elmira bank, and the judgment of the Circuit Court of Appeals is therefore reversed, and the case remanded to the Circuit Court, with directions to set aside the verdict and grant a new trial.

[567]*COMMERCIAL PUBLISHING COMPANY, Plff. in Err.,
v.
SAMUEL C. BECKWITH.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 567-577.)

Error to state court—Federal question—construction of contract—judgment—effect in other jurisdiction.

1. Allegations in a complaint, which set up a right to recover as the result of a judicial sale under the decrees of courts of the United States and of a state, raise Federal questions which confer jurisdiction on the Supreme Court of the United States to review a judgment of a state court denying a recovery.
2. The question whether an advertising agent was entitled, on a proper construction of his contract with a newspaper corporation, to retain a specified sum each month out of the moneys received by him, is not Federal in its nature; and a decision of a state court thereon is therefore not subject to review in the Supreme Court of the United States on writ of error to that court.
3. Due effect cannot be said to have been denied the decrees of courts of another jurisdiction by the construction placed upon them by a state court, where the construction contended for by those claiming that such decrees were not given the proper effect cannot be given without indulging in conjecture and giving to those making such contention the benefit of the doubts which arise as to the precise meaning of such decrees.

[No. 132.]

Argued December 19, 1902. Decided February 23, 1903.

IN ERROR to the Supreme Court of the State of New York to review a judgment entered in pursuance of a judgment of the Court of Appeals of that State which reversed a judgment of the Supreme Court in favor of plaintiff in a suit to recover property alleged to have passed under a judicial sale of the property of a corporation in the hands of its receiver, and ordered the complaint to be dismissed. Affirmed.

See same case below, 167 N. Y. 329, 60 N. E. 642.

Statement by Mr. Justice White:

A Tennessee corporation, styled the Commercial Publishing Company, brought this action in a court of the state of New York to recover from Samuel C. Beckwith

NOTE.—On writs of error from United States Supreme Court to state courts—see notes to Hamblin v. Western Land Co. 37 L. ed. U. S. 267; Kiple v. Illinois, 42 L. ed. U. S. 998; and Re Buchanan, 39 L. ed. U. S. 884.

As to full faith and credit to be given to state records and judicial proceedings—see Lindley v. O'Reilly (N. J.) 1 L. R. A. 79, and note; Cummington v. Belchertown (Mass.) 4 L. R. A. 131, and note; and Rand v. Hanson (Mass.) 12 L. R. A. 574, and note. And see notes to Wiese v. San Francisco Musical Fund Soc. (Cal.) 7 L. R. A. 578; Darby v. Mayer, 6 L. ed. U. S. 367; Mills v. Duryee, 3 L. ed. U. S. 411.

a sum of money which, it was averred, belonged to the publishing company. It was alleged in the complaint that the right was derived from one Crawford, who, it was averred, became the owner of certain newspaper advertising accounts, on which payments had been made to Beckwith, the aggregate thereof constituting the amount sued for. The manner in which Crawford was asserted to have acquired the ownership of the accounts will appear in the following statement summarized from the pleadings:

*On September 30, 1893, an action was begun in the chancery court of Shelby county, Tennessee, to foreclose a deed of trust which had been made by the Memphis Appeal Company, publishers of a newspaper known as the Memphis Appeal-Avalanche. Samuel C. Beckwith was made a party defendant to the cause. Contemporaneously with the filing of the bill, a receiver of the assets of the newspaper company was appointed, and he continued the publication of the paper. Although the complaint in the action at bar did not set out the nature of the controversy in the Tennessee suit between the trustees, who were plaintiffs in the action, and Beckwith, it was alleged that a short time after the bill was filed Beckwith procured the removal to a circuit court of the United States of a separate controversy existing between himself and the trustees, in which court, it was averred, such controversy thereafter continued. Subsequently, it was alleged, other actions were filed in the Tennessee court against the Memphis Appeal Company, which actions were ultimately consolidated with the trustee cause. It was charged that in the month of April, 1894, like decrees were simultaneously entered in the consolidated actions in the state court and in the one which had been removed to the United States court, and that, under such decrees, a sale was had on June 16, 1894, of the property vested in the receiver, including the accounts due said receiver, representing moneys earned by the receiver in the operation of the newspaper, of which the accounts upon which Beckwith had collected the money sued for formed a part. At this sale, it was alleged, Crawford became the purchaser of all the property embraced in the order of sale, and he thereafter assigned his purchase to the plaintiff.

In an amended answer Beckwith admitted having collected and retained the moneys sued for, and specially denied the other allegations of the complaint. He also set up as a defense that he had collected the moneys in question rightfully, under the authority of an agreement with the Memphis Appeal Company made prior to the execution of the deed of trust heretofore referred to. He further alleged that the receiver never acquired title to the moneys, and had never offered for sale or sold any right or title thereto. Subsequently, by supplemental answer, it was alleged that after the execution of the decrees of sale, and on appeal from a final decree which had been entered in the consolidated cause, the supreme court of the state of Tennessee adjudicated that the trust deed and all proceedings based thereon were null and void, and that, by reason thereof, the sale in question was a nullity.

The action at bar was tried by a jury, upon an agreed statement of facts. By direction of the court there was a verdict in favor of the plaintiff for the full amount claimed. This judgment was affirmed by the appellate division of the supreme court of the state of New York. An appeal was then taken to the court of appeals of the state, which reversed the judgment, and ordered the complaint to be dismissed with costs. 167 N. Y. 329, 60 N. E. 642. The judgment of the court of appeals having been made that of the trial court, a writ of error from this court was prosecuted.

Mr. A. Walker Otis argued the cause, and, with Mr. Thomas B. Turley, filed a brief for plaintiff in error:

While plaintiff in error claimed title to these accounts under decrees made in the courts of a sister state having jurisdiction of the parties and subject-matter, the New York court refused to give effect to these decrees. This raises a Federal question and gives this court jurisdiction.

Dupasseur v. Rochereau, 21 Wall. 130, 22 L. ed. 588; Crapo v. Kelly, 16 Wall. 610, 21 L. ed. 430; Huntington v. Attrill, 146 U. S. 7, 36 L. ed. 1123, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 224; Peacock Nat. Bank v. Farnum, 176 U. S. 640, 44 L. ed. 619, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 506; Dowell v. Applegate, 152 U. S. 327, 38 L. ed. 463, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 611.

Whether due effect has been given by a state court to a judgment or decree of a court of the United States is a Federal question within the jurisdiction of this court on a writ of error to the supreme court of the state.

Crescent City L. S. L. & S. H. Co. v. Butchers' Union S. H. & L. S. L. Co. 120 U. S. 141, 30 L. ed. 614, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 472; Central Nat. Bank v. Stevens, 169 U. S. 432, 42 L. ed. 807, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 403.

If it appear from the record, by clear and necessary intendment, that the Federal question must have been directly involved, so that the state court could not have given judgment without deciding it, that will be sufficient.

Green Bay & M. Canal Co. v. Patten Paper Co. 172 U. S. 58, 43 L. ed. 364, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 97.

It is the settled practice in the chancery court of Tennessee to sell, in advance of the final hearing, property in the hands of a receiver, where the same is depreciating in value.

Gleaves v. Ferguson, 2 Shannon Cas. 560.

It is the settled law of Tennessee that at a judicial sale made under a decree of the chancery court an innocent purchaser obtains a good title to the property sold, even though the decree of sale is afterwards reversed.

Anderson v. Ammonett, 9 Lea, 1; Greenlaw v. Greenlaw, 16 Lea, 435; Blanz v. Bain, 95 Tenn. 87, 31 S. W. 159.
188 U. S.

Mr. Anthony B. Porter argued the cause, and, with Mr. Thomas Kilvert, filed a brief for defendant in error:

No Federal question arises upon the construction by the state court of the agreement of January 3, 1891, as to the rights of the defendant thereunder; and the same is not reviewable under the writ herein.

Kennard v. Nebraska, 186 U. S. 304, 46 L. ed. 1175, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 879.

The defendant's right to collect and devote the money in question to the purposes of the agreement was not affected by the decree of sale in the Tennessee courts, or the sale made thereunder.

Ray v. Norseworthy, 23 Wall. 128, 23 L. ed. 116.

The rule in Murdock v. Memphis, 20 Wall. 634, 22 L. ed. 443, governs the case at bar.

Where the state court takes such a view of the case, within the scope of the pleadings, that a decision of a Federal question presented therein would not be necessary, its judgment, in general, will not be reviewed by this court.

Chapman v. Goodnow, 123 U. S. 540; Chapman v. Crane, 31 L. ed. 235, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 211; Avery v. Popper, 179 U. S. 305, 45 L. ed. 203, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 94.

Mr. Justice White, after making the foregoing statement, delivered the opinion of the court:

As in the complaint the plaintiff in error unquestionably set up a right to recover as the result of a judicial sale made under decrees, both of courts of the United States and of a state, Federal questions exist in the record, and the motion which has been made to dismiss is therefore denied.

Coming to the merits, the questions for decision are whether due effect was given by the court of appeals of New York to the decrees in question. Jacobs v. Marks, 182 U. S. 583, 587, 45 L. ed. 1241, 1244, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 865.

Two questions were considered by the state court in its opinion, viz.: (1) the meaning and effect of the contract entered into between Beckwith and the Memphis Appeal Company; and (2) whether the rights of Beckwith under the contract had been conclusively adjudicated by the prior litigation in Tennessee.

*The agreement referred to was evidenced[570] by two letters and indorsements thereon, and a copy thereof is contained in the margin.†

†Memphis, Tenn., Jan. 3, 1891.

S. C. Beckwith,

48 Tribune Building, New York City.

Dear Sir:—

In consideration of special efforts which you pledge yourself to make in our behalf to the best of your efforts and ability, and furthermore, in consideration of allowing you nothing in the shape of salary, office rents, or traveling expenses, we hereby authorize and appoint you our sole and exclusive agent for a term of five years from September 1st, 1891, and sooner if possible, on a plain commission basis of twenty-five per cent on all business for all that portion of the United States, north of a line running east and west with the southerly boundary of [571] *In disposing of the first question the court held that "the clause of the agreement giving to the defendant [Beckwith] the right to collect all of the bills was evidently intended to give him the control of the proceeds resulting from the advertisements, so that he could apply the same upon his loan to the amount of 1,000 per month," and that the clause referred to "was in the nature of an equitable pledge of the receipts for that purpose." It was further held that the receiver of the newspaper took possession of the assets and business thereof subject to the liens and obligations of the corporation (in other words, took only the interest which the corporation had in the property which it assumed to possess and own), and as the receiver "accepted and published the advertisements procured by the defendant [Beckwith], he [the receiver] must be deemed to have done so under the contract which the defendant [Beckwith] had with the corporation, and under that contract the defendant had the right to collect the moneys accruing for such advertisements, and to retain out of such collections a sum not to exceed $1,000 per month, to be applied upon the loan." It is manifest that the question of the proper construction of this contract being non-Federal in its nature, is not subject to review, and we consequently assume that the construction was correct.

The second question was treated as involving only the issue of res judicata. Considering the final decree entered in the consolidated action, and the decree as subsequently entered by the trial court upon the mandate of the supreme court of Tennessee, it was decided that the Tennessee court "did not adjudicate nor attempt to determine [572]. . . [the] right [of Beckwith] to *the moneys received by him for advertisements inserted in the paper by the receiver after his appointment." The court then said,—evidently assuming that the last decree embodied the direction for sales: "Under the judgment the purchaser became entitled to all the moneys due and owing to the receiver by reason of the publication of the paper, but moneys that did not belong to the receiver, or to which he was not entitled, did not pass to the purchaser, and we find nothing in the prior decree that is an adjudication upon this question." In effect, therefore, the court of appeals of New York construed the decrees of sale and held that the direction to sell merely authorized a sale of the right, title, and interest of the receiver in the accounts in question, and left for future determination, in any controversy which might arise in respect thereto, the question of the extent of the interest, if any, of the receiver in such accounts.

The sole contentions which are open for our consideration are, Did this judgment fail to give full faith and credit to the judicial proceedings in the Tennessee courts as required by § 1 of article 4 of the Constitution? and, Did it deny due efficacy to a title or right claimed under an authority exercised under the United States? It is strenuously argued that, properly interpreted, the decrees directed a sale of the accounts as they stood on the books of the receiver, and that the effect of the decrees and the sale made thereunder was that an right to or lien possessed by Beckwith in the moneys due upon the accounts was transferred to the proceeds of sale of all property of the Memphis Appeal.

In considering this question it is to be observed that the records of the proceedings in the actions in which the decrees relied upon were rendered were not offered at the trial below, but that the case was disposed of solely upon an agreed statement of facts, to which certain of the decrees made in those actions were annexed as exhibits. To this agreed statement, therefore, and to it alone, we are to look, for the purpose of de-

Ohio, Missouri, embracing Cincinnati and St. Louis, including these two points.

All applications for rates, space, etc., from aforesaid territory to be referred to you, and in case we should make a deal direct with any parties, agent, or advertisers, from your territory (which, however, is not contemplated), we will allow you the commission named upon same, and refer it to you for collection.

You are to collect all bills and render monthly statements, and to be held responsible for all accounts, except where a concern should fail through no fault of yours, and, in event of that, you are simply to lose your commission, but not to be liable beyond that.

You are not to represent any other morning paper in the state of Tennessee or Arkansas without our consent in writing, but to do all you can in every way, and at all times, within the above territory, to advance the interests of the Appeal-Avalanche.

Memphis Appeal-Avalanche Company,
T. B. Hatchett, Bus. Manager.

Accepted. S. C. Beckwith.

Memphis, Tenn., Jan. 3d, 1891.
The Memphis Appeal Company,
Memphis, Tenn.

Gentlemen:—

In consideration of a contract this day entered into by and between us, I hereby agree to advance to you thirty thousand dollars ($30,000), as follows:

$5,000 in cash on or before January 7th, $5,000 on or before the 12th of January, 1891, then $5,000 on the 26th of January, 1891, to take up your note now in the Nassau Bank of N. Y. for that amount. And $15,000 from time to time as you may advise me and so desire.

The amount named of $30,000 to be loaned you on the Appeal Company's notes, indorsed by W. A. Collier, and I am to be further secured by a deposit as collateral of an equal amount of the capital stock of your company, and which stock shall not be increased without my consent during the term of this loan; neither shall any encumbrance be placed upon same.

Said loan and interest at 6 per cent to be paid me in monthly instalments by moneys coming into my hands from the advertising in your paper, in amounts, say $1,000 per month, until paid.

S. C. Beckwith.
O. K.: Memphis Appeal Company.
T. B. Hatchett, Business Manager.

(Indorsed): As the debt is reduced I will surrender stock collateral pro rata.

S. C. Beckwith.

188 U. S.

termining the question presented for decision. A summary of the statement will be found in the margin.†

†On January 3, 1891, the Memphis Appeal Company, then engaged in publishing a newspaper at Memphis, entered into the contract with Beckwith which has heretofore been set out. Beckwith made the advances stipulated and $20,000 thereof was owing to him at the time the action at bar was instituted. While the Memphis Appeal Company was a going concern Beckwith, under the contract aforesaid, procured advertising orders, the indebtedness upon which collected by him was the basis of the recovery sought in this action. After the making of the contract and prior to September 30, 1893, the Memphis Appeal Company executed a deed of trust upon its property to secure certain creditors. On the date named Andrew D. Gwynne and others, the trustees under the deed of trust, brought suit to enforce that instrument. Beckwith was made a party defendant, and a receiver was appointed, who took possession of the property of the Memphis Appeal Company and continued the publication of its newspaper from September 30, 1893, to June 16, 1894. On October 5, 1893, Beckwith procured the removal of the controversy between himself and the trustees into a court of the United States, and that controversy there continued, though it does not appear how it was terminated, if it ever was.

Beckwith served written notice on the receiver that he claimed that his rights under the contract were not affected by the appointment of the receiver, and the receiver replied disputing the right of Beckwith to collect moneys for advertising matter which might be published by the receiver.

After the institution of the trustee suit, sundry actions were filed in the same court by general creditors and others against the Memphis Appeal Company, which were afterwards consolidated with the trustee suit. In April, 1894, in the consolidated action, and in the action pending in the United States court, a decree of sale was entered, "on the motion of the several complainants," directing a sale of the property in the hands of the receiver, because of the asserted fact that the property was deteriorating and was not self-supporting. The property which was ordered to be sold, after due advertisement, was thus described in the order:

"The Memphis Appeal-Avalanche newspaper, with all the rights, privileges, benefits, franchises, etc., belonging to or in any way pertaining to same, together with its good will, subscription list, advertising patronage, income, and profits, and all the machinery, appliances, furniture, material, property, assets, etc., of every kind and description, and the general outfit of the newspaper now in the hands of the receiver in these causes.

"He will sell all and every kind and description of property in his hands, saving and except the uncollected book accounts of the Memphis Appeal Company, accruing prior to his appointment as receiver, and which were placed in his hands for collection. Such of these accounts as remain uncollected will not be sold.

"All accounts which may be or are to become due to the receiver by reason of the operation of the newspaper in his hands will pass to and be acquired by the purchaser at this sale, who will become the full owner of the same. And such purchaser will take the property decreed to be sold herein, subject to all of the contract obligations incurred by the receiver, and will assume the payment of same, including any amount due the receiver on the day of sale for overchecks made by him for personal advances on account of the property in his hands. Excepting only the certificates issued by the receiver for the payment of which the purchaser shall in no way be liable."

*It is to be borne in mind that upon the [573] plaintiff in error rested the burden of establishing that the decrees of sale were not

After directing that the receiver report his proceedings under the decree to the court, it was further recited as follows:

"The purchaser at the sale herein ordered will acquire the absolute title to all the property decreed to be sold, free from all claims, liens, and encumbrances whatever, save as provided above as to the contract obligations of the receiver; and the proceeds of sale will stand in these causes in lieu and place of the property itself."

Subsequently the decree of sale was modified by directing a sale to be made by the clerks of the respective courts, as commissioners. Respecting the sale and the confirmation thereof, it is recited in the agreed statement as follows (italics not in original):

"13. Thereafter and on the 16th day of June, 1894, said commissioners, acting under the decrees aforesaid, sold at public auction in the city of Memphis, the property aforesaid, and also all the right, title, and interest of said receiver to the various sums set forth in Exhibit B annexed to the complaint herein, and in and to the claims of said receiver against the parties therein mentioned for said advertisements published by said receiver for their account in said Memphis Appeal-Avalanche between September 30, 1893, and June 16, 1894, as aforesaid, when and where same was struck off to one West J. Crawford, he paying therefor to said J. B. Clough and E. B. McHenry as such commissioners the sum of $65,200, and he being the highest, best, and last bidder therefor. That whatever title the receiver had to said sums set forth in Exhibit B was derived from said trust deed and his appointment as such receiver. On the 3d day of July, 1894, decrees were simultaneously entered in said actions thus pending in said chancery court of Shelby county, and said circuit court of the United States, confirming the sale."

On March 26, 1896, a final decree was entered in the consolidated action determining the rights of a large number of persons, one such being Beckwith, whose claim of a lien on the fund under an execution issued in an action brought by a named party other than Beckwith, in which action judgment had been obtained against the Memphis Appeal Company, was overruled, and he was allowed an appeal. A portion of the defendants thereafter prosecuted an appeal to the supreme court of Tennessee, and after the decision of that appeal a decree was entered in the trial court in conformity to the directions of the appellate court, on July 8, 1896. The appeal of Beckwith was disposed of by a general affirmance of the decree below, except as particularly specified in the judgment of the appellate court.

Crawford, the purchaser at the sale, "duly assigned and transferred to the plaintiff all his claims, demands, and right of action against the defendant, which he acquired by virtue of the sale of June 16, 1894, above referred to." As heretofore stated, the collections made by Beckwith sought to be recovered in the action at bar were made on advertising orders procured by Beckwith under the contract and published by the receiver.

[574] given the due effect to which they were entitled, and if it has *failed to sustain such burden this court cannot say that error was committed by the judgment below rendered.

[575] The decrees of sale were made in the consolidated action in *the state court and in the action pending in the United States court, and preceded, by nearly two years, the making of the final decree, which, however, was entered only in the consolidated cause, and not in the action pending in the United States court. It is disclosed by the record that in two of the actions which were consolidated—that filed by the trustee and one on behalf of certain employees of the Memphis Appeal Company—liens were asserted upon all the assets which came into the possession of the receiver, viz., those embraced in the deed of trust which was sought to be foreclosed. The deed of trust was made long after the execution of the contract between Beckwith and the Memphis Appeal Company, and vested rights, if any, of Beckwith were not affected by the execution of the deed or by the appointment of a receiver. The agreed statement is silent as to what was the controversy between the trustees and Beckwith, but Beckwith, in the correspondence with the receiver, claimed that his contract right was unaffected by the receivership. Now, in the recital in the decrees of sale of the property to be sold there is first an enumeration of property generally, in language similar to that contained in the deed of trust; there is then an exemption from sale of uncollected book accounts accruing prior to the appointment of the receiver; and next is the following recital: "All accounts which may be or are to become due to the receiver by reason of the operation of the newspaper in his hands will pass to and be acquired by the purchaser at this sale, who will become the full owner of the same." It may be fairly inferred that Beckwith then [576] was *and prior thereto had been making direct collections from advertisers under the assumed authority of the contract, and he was undoubtedly asserting the right to retain the moneys which he might collect upon advertisements which had been procured by him. The sum due upon such accounts for advertisements published by the receiver was small as compared with the main assets in the custody of the receiver, yet, in that portion of the decree which made the liens and encumbrances operative against the proceeds of sale, the entire proceeds of sale, and not the proceeds of a particular portion of the property sold, were made subject to all liens and encumbrances sought to be enforced in the litigation.

As before stated, the record shows that, in two of the actions which had been consolidated, the complainants were asserting liens against all the property which had come into the possession of the receiver, and the decree of sale recites that the sale was ordered upon the motion of the complainants. Beckwith nowhere appears to have been an active participant in obtaining such decree or assenting thereto. It does not even appear that, at the time of the entry of the decrees of sale, he was a party to any of the actions which had been consolidated, for it cannot in reason be so inferred from the mere circumstance that nearly two years after, on the entry of the final decree, he is referred to therein as being a cross complainant in one of the actions seeking to enforce a lien, the nature of which was not disclosed.

The stipulations contained in the agreed statement, particularly the recitals in subdivision numbered 13, lend color to the construction that, as respects the accounts in question, all that was intended to be sold was the right, title, and interest of the receiver therein, the nature and extent of which title was left unadjudicated. The expression, "the property aforesaid," used in the paragraph, it may well be argued, was intended to refer to something distinct from the accounts in question, and the language may properly be interpreted as relating to the property covered by the trust deed, which came into the possession of the receiver. A reasonable construction of the paragraph can be adopted, supporting the claim that, as regards the accounts, *all that [577] was sold was the right, title, and interest of the receiver therein. In the light, therefore, of all the circumstances which have been detailed, we cannot sustain the contention of the plaintiff in error that the guaranty clause of the decrees, transferring liens upon the property to the proceeds of sale, was intended to apply to the accounts in question without indulging in conjecture and giving to the plaintiff in error the benefit of the doubts which arise as to the precise meaning of the decrees.

The parties having chosen to try the case on a statement of facts, which does not afford us the means of saying with that certainty which is required, that the judgment below denied due faith and credit to the decrees in question, we cannot, in view of the burden of proof, reverse the judgment below; and it is therefore affirmed.

UNITED STATES, Appr.
v.

ARTHUR B. BARRINGER.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 577-594.)

Government printing office—right of temporary employees to leave of absence.

1. Mere temporary employees in the government printing office are not entitled to leave of absence with pay, by virtue of the provisions of the sundry civil appropriation bill of June 11, 1896 (29 Stat. at L. 413, chap. 420. U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 1556) recapitulating the previous statutes regulating this subject, which have from the beginning been construed by the Public Printer as excluding temporary employees from the provisions for leaves of absence.

NOTE.—As to what claims constitute valid demands against a state—see note to Northwestern & P. Hypotheek Bank v. State (Wash.) 42 L. R. A. 33.

2. Temporary employees of the government printing office, who have from the beginning been denied leaves of absence by a rule of the Public Printer ratified or approved by the legislation of Congress on this subject, were not affected by the provisions of the act of Congress of July 19, 1897 (30 Stat. at L. 134, chap. 9), authorizing the Public Printer to pay employees, former employees, and the legal representatives of deceased former employees such sums as may be due for accrued and unpaid leaves of absence for the fiscal years 1887 to 1894, both inclusive, and appropriating a sum of money therefor.

[No. 252.]

Argued January 5, 1903. Decided February 23, 1903.

A PPEAL from the Court of Claims to review a decree making an award to a temporary employee of the government printing office for alleged accrued but unused leaves of absence. Reversed and remanded, with directions to dismiss the petition.

Statement by Mr. Justice White:

The findings of the court of claims, upon which it predicated the conclusion that the plaintiff was entitled to judgment against the United States, are as follows:

"I. The claimant, Arthur B. Barringer, was from time to time employed as a compositor in the government printing office during the following periods: December 31, 1895, to February 26, 1896, inclusive; July 2, 1897, to July 31, 1897, inclusive; December 10, 1897, to July 16, 1898, inclusive; October 24, 1898, to March 4, 1899, inclusive; October 28, 1899, to April 27, 1900, inclusive, aggregating one (1) year, eight (8) months, and twelve (12) days.

"II. During his term of service as such he was paid at the rate of three dollars and twenty cents ($3.20) per diem of eight hours for the time served prior to July 1, 1899, amounting to one (1) year, two (2) months, and twelve (12) days, and at the rate of four dollars ($4) a day for such service rendered after July 1, 1899, amounting to six (6) months.

"III. He was not, during any of the times of his employment, allowed leave of absence or pro rata pay for leave of absence. If allowed leave of absence of thirty (30) days a year, he would have been entitled to fifty-one (51) days' leave.

"If, instead of taking such leave, he had been paid pro rata for the same, he would have been paid three dollars and twenty cents ($3.20) a day for thirty-six (36) days, and four dollars ($4) a day for fifteen (15) days, amounting to one hundred and seventy-five dollars and twenty cents ($175.20).

"IV. The claimant did not, at any time during his several terms of service, set forth in finding I., apply for a leave of absence or for a money equivalent for the same. No leave of absence was granted or allowed to the claimant, for the reason that, under the 188 U. S.

rules adopted by the Public Printer regarding leaves of absence, persons temporarily employed were not granted leave.

"V. All employees of the government printing office in service from the 1st of July, 1886, to the 30th of June, 1895, whether permanent or temporary, have been paid for all accrued but unused leaves of absence. The last of the appropriations for such unused leaves was that of fifty-seven thousand eight hundred and fifty-nine dollars and sixty cents ($57,859.60), made by the act of July 19, 1897 (30 Stat. at L. 134, chap. 9), and was based on an estimate of the Public Printer, who, in transmitting the same to the Senate, informed that body that it included 'many employees whose terms of service in the office were only for periods of less *than one year,' and that 'the amounts[579] of pro rata leave which accrued to such persons are herewith included in the respective years in which they were earned.'"

Assistant Attorney General Pradt argued the cause, and, with Mr. George M. Anderson, filed a brief for appellant.

Mr. George A. King argued the cause, and, with Mr. William B. King, filed a brief for appellee.

Mr. Justice White, after making the foregoing statement, delivered the opinion of the court:

Although the court below found that among the rules for the government of the printing office adopted by the Public Printer, in pursuance of power conferred by law, there was a rule forbidding the allowance of leaves of absence to temporary employees, the court in effect treated the rule in question as void, since it assumed that, by the acts of Congress governing the printing office, temporary employees of the office were entitled to leave of absence with pay. The court deemed that the duration of such leave of absence was such proportion of the yearly annual leave allowed to permanent employees as the period of service of the temporary employee in each year bore to a year's employment. From the premise of law thus assumed, the court held that where a temporary employee had not been allowed his leave of absence because of the enforcement by the Public Printer of the rule denying the right to such leave, the temporary employee was entitled to be paid an extra amount equal to the sum of his regular wages for the period which would have been embraced by the leave had it been granted. In effect, therefore, the conclusion of the court was that, because the statutes were held to allow to a temporary employee leave of absence with regular pay, they must be construed as allowing to such person extra pay without leave, and this upon the theory that the employee who had a right to leave with pay, who had not received it, under the circumstances stated, was entitled, so to speak, to a commutation in money at his regular rate of wages for the period of leave of which he had been deprived.

*The conclusion thus reached was stated[580] by the court to be exceptional and anomalous, but was deemed to be required by what was conceived to be the unambiguous purport of a provision, held to be mandatory, found in the act of June 11, 1896, making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1897. 29 Stat. at L. 413, chap. 420 (U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 1556). The provision in question was said to be entirely new in the legislation of Congress with respect to leaves of absence to the employees of the government printing office. Whilst the anomalous result of the conclusion, as observed by the court below, is, we think, apparent, it would seem to us that a yet greater anomaly is involved in the premise which was taken for granted,—that is, that the statutes contemplate the enjoyment by mere temporary employees of the provisions of law relating to an annual leave of absence. We think this is so, because, singular as may be the conclusion that since employees enjoy the right to leave, with pay, they are therefore entitled to extra pay without leave, we think it is far more singular to conceive that one who is engaged for a temporary employment, say for a day or a week or a month or so, comes within the purview of the statutes providing for annual leaves of absence.

If, however, the acts of Congress compel the adoption of the premise assumed or the conclusion drawn from it by the court, however anomalous they may be, our duty is to enforce the result. Whether the acts of Congress do either cannot be ascertained by a mere reference to the particular proviso in the appropriation act which constrained the judgment of the court below, but must be determined by an examination of the acts of Congress concerning leaves of absence to employees in the government printing office from the beginning. The review of the statutes for the purpose of determining whether leave with regular pay involves the right to extra pay without leave will also necessarily require us to examine the same statutes upon which the right, if it exists at all, of temporary employees in the printing office to leave of absence, must rest. In proposing to first investigate such question, we are not unmindful of the fact that the government at bar did not at all dispute the assumption indulged in by the lower [581] court, but rested its *claim to reversal on other grounds. In view of the fact, however, that we must correctly administer the statutes, and that the question as to the right of a temporary employee to leave of absence has been fully presented by the appellee, we shall examine and decide it. The problems, then, for solution in the order stated are: First. Do the acts of Congress which provide for leave of absence to the employees of the government printing office embrace mere temporary employees of such office? and, Second. If such employees are so embraced, do the statutes, whilst providing for leave in favor of the temporary employees, with pay during the term of the leave, provide also for extra pay without leave, where the leave has not been enjoyed because of a rule of the printing office forbidding its allowance?

The original grant of authority to allow leaves of absence, with pay, to employees of the printing office was the act of June 30, 1886. 24 Stat. at L. 91, chap. 572. The statute consisted of two sections, in the second of which it was provided that the act should take effect on and after the first day of July, 1886. The first section is as follows:

"That the employees of the government printing office, whether employed by the piece or otherwise, be allowed a leave of absence, with pay, not exceeding fifteen days in any one fiscal year, after the service of one year, and under such regulations and at such time as the Public Printer may designate. Such employees as are engaged on piece-work shall receive the same rate of pay for the said fifteen days' leave as will be paid to day hands: Provided, That those regularly employed on the Congressional Record shall receive leave, with pay, at the close of each session, pro rata, for the time of such employment."

We think the employees embraced within this statute were permanent employees, and not those who might be called in for temporary or emergency purposes, since the object of the statute was to provide for annual leave during each fiscal year, and the leave was allowed only after the service of one year. Any doubt as to this construction is removed by the proviso which allows a pro rata leave to regular employees of the Congressional Record. As the duration of the work which this class of employees performed was necessarily limited by the sessions of *Congress, it is obvious [582] that they were considered as excluded by the general language in the prior portions of the act, and hence an exceptional provision giving them its advantages was inserted. And the proviso itself adds emphasis to the significance arising from its enactment, since it conferred the benefits only on such employees as were regularly employed for such work, and therefore excluded those merely called in to meet an emergency in the employment in question.

It is also obvious that the Public Printer, in administering this act, did not interpret it as embracing temporary employees, since the rules of his office excluded employees of that character from the grant of leaves of absence. And the appropriations made by Congress to execute the act of 1886, one of the acts being enacted by the very Congress which passed the act of 1886, serve to enforce the meaning arising on the face of the act itself. Those appropriations were thus defined: "To enable the Public Printer to comply with the provisions of the law granting fifteen days' annual leave to the employees of the government printing office." Act August 4, 1886, making appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, 24 Stat. at L. 255, chap. 902 (U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 1489); Act of March 3, 1887, 24 Stat. at L. 509, chap. 362 (U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 2437); and the urgency deficiency appropriation act of March 30, 1888, 25 Stat. at L. 47, chap. 47, making appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888. From the subsequent legislation, to which we shall hereafter refer, we think that it may be inferred that those charged with the administration of the act of 1886 construed it as meaning that a year's service was necessary to give the right to receive leave of absence, and that, if, after earning and enjoying leave by a year's service, before the completion of another full year the employee severed his connection with the service, he was not entitled to any proportional leave. On August 1, 1888, an act was approved, which, with its title, reads as follows (25 Stat. at L. 352, chap. 722):

"An Act to Extend the Leave of Absence of Employees in the Government Printing Office to Thirty Days Per Annum.

"That the act entitled 'An Act Granting Leave of Absence to Employees in the Government Printing Office,' approved June thirtieth, eighteen hundred and eighty-six, [583] be so amended as to *extend the annual leave of absence therein described to thirty days in each fiscal year: Provided, That it shall be lawful to allow pro rata leave to those serving fractional parts of a year."

Clearly this act was but an amendment of the act of 1886, and did not attempt to repeal that act or to extend its benefits to classes of employees not embraced by the prior act. Its object on its face was simply to extend the period of leave of absence from fifteen to thirty days and to confer upon the permanent employees who were entitled to leave, in accordance with the terms of the previous act, an additional right to enjoy the benefits of a pro rata leave, if thereafter they severed their connection with the service before they had completed another entire year's service so as to be entitled to that year's leave.

Undoubtedly the statute was thus construed by the Public Printer in its administration, since he continued in force the rule forbidding leaves of absence to temporary employees, and besides construed the statute as giving the right to proportional leave of absence to only a permanent employee who had served sufficient time to earn at least one annual leave. As the act of 1888 considered and dealt with the prior law, as administered by the Public Printer in pursuance of the authority conferred upon him by the act of 1886, and as the act of 1888 conferred only a new right in one particular—that is, as to fractional leaves to permanent employees—it is not probable that, if it was intended to overthrow the construction which the Public Printer had put upon the previous act, by formulating a rule expressly excluding temporary employees from the right to leave, that some express provision on that subject would not have been incorporated into the amendatory act.

What was intended by the act of August, 1888, is, moreover, shown by an act passed by the very same Congress at the same session. Thus, the appropriation act for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1889, became a law on October 2, 1888. That act contained an appropriation "To enable the Public Printer to comply with the provisions of the law granting thirty days' annual leave to the employees of the government printing office." This was immediately followed by an appropriation "To pay pro rata leaves of absence to employees who resign or are discharged * (decision of the [584] First Comptroller)." [25 Stat. at L. 548, chap. 1069]. We have not been referred to the decision of the Comptroller to which the act adverts, nor have we been able to find it. But the appropriation made in furtherance of the act 1888 shows that such act was designed for the benefit solely of the regular employees, and the authority to pay pro rata leaves of absence which it granted was such pro rata leaves of absence to employees who, from the nature of their previous and permanent service, might expect to earn a full annual leave, but were prevented from doing so by resignation or discharge. Appropriations of like character, couched in substantially identical language, were made for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1890 (25 Stat. at L. 980, chap. 411; 26 Stat. at L. 159, chap. 429); for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1891 (26 Stat. at L. 371, chap. 837); and for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1892 (26 Stat. at L. 948, chap. 542 [U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 2923]). Indeed, the appropriation act for the last quarter of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1890, makes clear what was the legislative conception of the meaning of the right to pro rata leave, granted by the amendatory act of 1888, and the character of the employees embraced by it, for that act, after appropriating a sum to pay employees entitled to annual leave of absence, added the sum necessary to pay for the pro rata leaves of "such" employees "who resign or are discharged."

The contention, then, that temporary employees were embraced within the provisions of the act of 1888 not only is in conflict with the text of that act, but is opposed to the administrative construction placed upon the act by the Public Printer charged with its execution. It is, besides, directly repugnant to the legislative interpretation of that act manifested by Congress, during a period of nearly five years, in appropriating the money for its execution.

In the appropriation acts for the fiscal years ending June 30, 1893, 1894, and 1895 (27 Stat. at L. 388, chap. 380; 27 Stat. at L. 572, chap. 208; 28 Stat. at L. 41, chap. 37), whilst appropriations were made for the allowance of annual leaves of absence to the employees of the government printing office, in substance in the same words as found in the previous acts, the clause contained in the previous acts providing for the allowance of pro rata leaves to such employees was omitted. It followed, therefore, that, although the act of 1888 provided for **pro rata* leave to the regular employ-was evidently directed to this omission, since, on June 19, 1894, the deficiency appropriation act for the fiscal year of 1894 (28 Stat. at L. 94, chap. 108) contained the following:

"To enable the Public Printer to pay to the employees heretofore or now employed in the government printing office since July first, eighteen hundred and ninety-three, such sums as may be due them for leaves of absence, notwithstanding the fact that thirty days' leave of absence, with pay, had been granted to such persons in said fiscal year on account of service rendered in the preceding fiscal year, and also to pay all employees of the said office any leave of absence which they may have failed to obtain from the lack of necessary appropriations or other cause, sixty-five thousand dollars, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

"Hereafter the Public Printer is authorized to pay pro rata leave of absence out of any appropriation for leaves of absence to employees of the government printing office in any fiscal year, notwithstanding the fact that thirty days' leave of absence, with pay, may have been granted to such employees in that fiscal year on account of service rendered in a previous fiscal year." 28 Stat. at L. 94, chap. 108.

This act also created no new class of beneficiaries of leaves of absence. It recognized the right of permanent employees, who had for annual services in a previous fiscal year earned leave, to be granted in a succeeding year in addition their pro rata leave when they were prevented from completing a full year of service, by resignation or discharge, as provided in the previous statute. The act, besides, corrected the omission, if omission resulted, from the silence of the regular appropriation on the subject of pro rata leaves for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1894, and, looking to the future, provided a rule for the guidance of the Public Printer, making appropriations for leave of absence without particular specification applicable to pro rata leaves in cases where they were allowed by law.

[586] All *the reasoning previously adverted to on the subject of the prior acts is applicable to this, and constitutes but another confirmation by Congress of the settled construction excluding temporary employees from the operation of the provisions as to leave of absence. It would seem from a document to which we shall have occasion hereafter to more particularly advert, that the construction of the pro rata leave of absence clause was somewhat widened in its practical administration after that, from and including the fiscal year 1893, by allowing a pro rata leave to a permanent employee who had not served a year, and therefore had not earned the full leave of thirty days because of the termination of his permanent employment, by resignation or discharge, before the completion of the year. The exact origin of this broadening of the construction of the act has not been made manifest, but it is inferable that it arose from expressions used in an opinion of the acting Comptroller of the Treasury, of date July 3, 1894. Dec. First Comp. 1893-1894, p. 260. Whilst the ruling in question was subsequently somewhat modified, such modification had no relation to the particular expressions in the opinion lending themselves to the construction in question. III. Dec. Comp. Treas. 28.

In 1895 a general act relative to the conduct of the government printing office was passed. 28 Stat. at L. 601, chap. 23 (U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 2543). The 23d section of that act, in effect, re-enacted and recapitulated the existing laws on the subject of leaves of absence to the employees of the government printing office, as follows:

"The employees of the government printing office, whether employed by the piece or otherwise, shall be allowed leaves of absence, with pay, to the extent of not exceeding thirty days in any one fiscal year, under such regulations and at such times as the Public Printer may designate, at the rate of pay received by them during the time in which said leave was earned; but such leaves of absence shall not be allowed to accumulate from year to year. Such employees as are engaged on piece-work shall receive the same rate of pay for the said thirty days' leave as will be paid to day hands: Provided, That those regularly employed on the Congressional Record shall receive leave, with pay, at the close of each session pro rata for the time of *such employment: [587] And provided further, That it shall be lawful to allow pro rata leave to those serving fractional parts of the year."

The text of this section contains nothing which can, we think, be construed as changing the past legislation so as to extend leaves of absence to temporary employees. It cannot, in reason, be argued that Congress, in re-enacting the legislation in question, did not have in mind the class of employees entitled to leaves of absence, since in the act of 1895 it expressly reproduced the exception making a class of temporary employees—those regularly employed on the Congressional Record—beneficiaries of the leave of absence legislation, and excluded from the class of temporary employees so benefited those not regularly employed in such temporary work. When it is considered that the language thus re-enacted had been construed by the Public Printer, the officer charged with the execution of the previous statutes, for nearly ten years, as excluding temporary employees other than the particular class of such employees referred to in the statute, viz., those regularly employed on the Congressional Record, it follows that the re-enactment of the previous laws carried with it the settled administrative construction which had prevailed in their enforcement from the beginning. Here, again, it cannot in reason be said that the mind of the lawmaker did not address itself to the necessity of making a change in the previous laws where one was deemed necessary, since the act as re-enacted not only goes over the ground covered by the progress of the statutes since 1886, and re-enacts the legislative steps manifested in such progress, but also adds a new provision concerning accumulations of leaves of absence not contained in any prior statute.

When the deficiency appropriation act for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1895, was adopted on March 2, 1895 (28 Stat. at L. 868, chap. 187), the provision found in the appropriation act of June 19, 1894, was substantially reiterated, except in some particulars not necessary to be noticed, with no words contained therein giving rise to the implication that there was any intention to alter the uniform rule which had obtained from the beginning respecting leaves of absence, excluding temporary employees [588] from the benefit of such *leave, except the particular class of such employees enumerated in the previous statutes.

In the appropriation act for the year ending June 30, 1896 (28 Stat. at L. 910, chap. 189 [U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 3768]), the sum set apart was simply "to enable the Public Printer to comply with the provisions of the law granting thirty days' annual leave to the employees of the government printing office." Doubtless, any specific provision as to payment of pro rata leaves of absence to regular employees who had severed their connection with the service was omitted because of the general provision in the prior statute authorizing the use of leave of absence appropriations for the payment of pro rata leaves. In the act of June 11, 1896, making appropriations for the fiscal year of 1897 (29 Stat. at L. 413, chap. 420 [U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 1556]), the same general language was used as contained in the previous act, making an appropriation applicable to payment of leaves of absence of employees in the government printing office, but such provision was followed by a recapitulation of the previous statutes regulating the subject of leaves of absence to such employees, in the following language:

"The employees of the government printing office, whether employed by the piece or otherwise, shall be allowed leaves of absence, with pay, to the extent of not exceeding thirty days in any one fiscal year, under such regulations and at such times as the Public Printer may designate, at the rate of pay received by them during the time in which said leave was earned; but such leaves of absence shall not be allowed to accumulate from year to year. Such employees as are engaged on piece-work shall receive the same rate of pay for the said thirty days' leave as will be paid to day hands: Provided, That those regularly employed on the Congressional Record shall receive leave, with pay, at the close of each session, pro rata for the time of such employment: And provided further, That it shall be lawful to allow pay for pro rata leave to those serving fractional parts of a year; also to allow pay for pro rata leave of absence to employees of the government printing office in any fiscal year, notwithstanding the fact that thirty days' leave of absence, with pay, may have been granted to such employees in that fiscal year on account of service rendered in a previous fiscal year. 188 U. S.

vious fiscal year. *And the Public Printer [589] is hereby authorized to pay to the legal representatives of any employees who have died during the fiscal years of eighteen hundred and ninety-four, eighteen hundred and ninety-five, eighteen hundred and ninety-six, or may hereafter die, who have or hereafter may have any accrued leave of absence due them as such employees, and said claims to be paid out of any unexpended balances of appropriations for the payment of leaves of absence to the employees of the government printing office, for the fiscal years eighteen hundred and ninety-four, eighteen hundred and ninety-five, eighteen hundred and ninety-six, and out of any future appropriations for leaves of absence."

It is language contained in the provision just quoted which the court of claims found to be new, and constrained it to decide that a temporary employee who had not been allowed leave of absence was nevertheless entitled to pay therefor by way of commutation. We do not stop now to consider that question, as we are not presently concerned with it. Now, an analysis of the act of 1896 discloses nothing which lends support to the argument that, in reiterating the previous law in this appropriation act, it was the intention of Congress to depart from the rule applied from the beginning by conferring the right to leave of absence on a mere temporary employee. On the contrary, this statute—like the previous ones—reiterates the exception in favor of a particular class of temporary employees, and by its silence is a further manifestation of the approval by the lawmaking power of the construction of the previous statutes resulting from the rule adopted by the Public Printer from the beginning, excluding temporary employees from the right to leave. And this recapitulation again demonstrates that the mind of Congress was addressed to the necessity of making such changes as it deemed wise, since there is a new provision allowing the legal representatives of deceased employees who were entitled to a leave to recover the amount due therefor.

From the review of the statutes which we have just made, our conclusion is that the assumption that temporary employees of the government printing office were entitled to leave, upon which the decision of the lower court necessarily rests, was *mistakenly [590] made, and therefore the judgment below was erroneous, unless it be that the plain text of the statutes, reiterated time and time again, and settled by years of administrative construction, is to be disregarded, in consequence of what is asserted to be a congressional interpretation to the contrary, arising from an act passed in 1897, and the retroactive effect which it is claimed must necessarily follow as the result of this law and as a consequence of the fifth finding which the court below made.

To the contrary, we think an analysis of the matters relied upon serves but to confirm the construction which we have given to the acts of Congress which we have previously reviewed. In 1896, in the first session of the Fifty-fourth Congress, a resolution was passed by the Senate calling upon the Public Printer for information concerning the employees in the government printing office who had failed to receive their annual leaves of absence during the fiscal years of 1890, 1891, 1892, 1893, and 1894, and asking a statement of the amount due each person therefor. Temporary employees during the years named could not have been included in the purposes of the resolution, since the general appropriation act passed at that very session contained the provision to which we have heretofore referred, re-enacting the leave of absence laws, containing no repudiation of the rule prevailing from the beginning excluding temporary employees from the right to leave of absence. To conceive that the inquiry concerned leaves not granted to temporary employees would be to assume that inquiry was made as to a class of employees who had been deprived of their right to leave of absence in the past, whilst at the same time such employees, by the re-enactment of the previous laws and the approval of the previous rule governing the printing office, had been declared at that session not to be entitled to such leave. Moreover, the fact that the resolution did not reach other years than 1890 to 1894 shows that it was not the denial of leave of absence to temporary employees which had been complained of, and as to which the resolution made inquiry, because, undoubtedly, temporary employees had not received a leave of absence, not only prior to 1890, but [591] also subsequent to 1894 and *up to the time of the passage of the resolution. If the denial of leave to temporary employees had been the subject of the inquiry, it would have been concerning the past and existing evil, and not to a mere fraction thereof.

The reply of the Public Printer to the resolution was made at the following session of Congress, in 1897, and practically consisted of a transmittal of a report to the Public Printer made by the cashier of the government printing office, which was printed by the Senate as a public document (Sen. Doc. 59, 54th Congress, 2d Sess.), and is largely reproduced in the brief of counsel for the appellee. The report, instead of confining itself to the years from 1890 to 1894, both inclusive, which were inquired about, proceeded to call attention to the subject of unpaid leave of absence claims prior to the year 1890, as follows:

"In view of the anticipated legislation looking forward to the liquidation of the unpaid leave of absence claims of present and former employees of this office, as indicated by Senate resolutions, it would seemingly appear, in the interest of justice and equity, that the scope of such legislation should not be limited or confined simply to the fiscal years of 1890 to 1894, inclusive, but that its provision should also embrace such accrued and unpaid leave of absence claims which were also lost and forfeited during the fiscal years of 1887, 1888, and 1889, and to that end I would respectfully submit for your further consideration a supplemental statement, in detail, covering such leaves of absences as were unpaid in the fiscal years of 1887, 1888, and 1889."

This was followed by a statement of the amount which would be needed to pay such prior claims.

Now, it cannot be that the report had in view the refusal to give leave or pay for leave to merely temporary employees, since such claims, if they existed, would have covered a much longer period than that embraced in the report. It could not, moreover, have covered such claims, inasmuch as at that very time such leaves were not being allowed and could not be allowed under the rules of the office. What the report contemplated was loss of leave in the past sustained by permanent employees of the government printing office, through a construction *of the statute which no longer obtained,[592] or for failure of appropriations in particular fiscal years, or other cause. Acting upon the report, an act was passed by Congress, which became a law on July 19, 1897 (30 Stat. at L. 134, chap. 9), authorizing the Public Printer to pay employees, former employees, and the legal representatives of deceased former employees of the government printing office such sums as may be due said employees and former employees, for accrued and unpaid leaves of absence for the fiscal years 1887 to 1894, both inclusive, and appropriating a sum of money therefor.

Now we think from what has already been said concerning the resolution of inquiry, and the report made in answer thereto, which were the foundations of the act in question, that it is impossible to construe this act as at all affecting temporary employees, without assuming that both Congress and the Public Printer, and indeed everybody concerned, were engaged at one and the same time in rectifying a wrong and in perpetuating the wrong for the future. The act, however, lends itself to no such deduction. Its provisions become clear when the review of the legislation which we have made is considered. From that review it results that the exclusion of temporary employees from the right to leave of absence had prevailed from the beginning, and the rule so excluding had been ratified and approved by Congress over and over again, whenever it considered the subject. But it was also true that, from 1886 to 1894, in which latter year the legislation as to leave of absence in the government printing office crystallized, except as to a minor provision, added by the law of 1896, Congress had been called upon in each successive step when it considered the subject to broaden in favor of the permanent employees entitled to leave, the construction placed upon its prior action on the subject. Thus, permanent employees, at each successive consideration by Congress of the subject, had become entitled thereafter to leaves of absence which had been denied the employees prior thereto. And the purpose of the appropriation act of 1897 was, first, as an act of grace to equalize this condition where it had resulted from a change of legislation, and, second, by an act of jus-[593] tice to provide for the cases, where, by *lack of appropriations, which the review we have made shows may have sometimes been the case, leaves of absence to permanent employees had not been provided for.

Without going into detail, it suffices to say, we repeat, that the confining of the appropriation in the act of 1897 to the years covered by the act causes the conclusion just stated, we think, to be irresistible, since it conflicts with the conception that the act was intended or did embrace temporary employees who had been denied leave from the beginning, including the period down to the time of the passage of the appropriation act in question.

It remains only to consider the fifth finding made by the court below. When the text of that finding is analyzed, we think it but embodies an inference of law deduced by the court from its consideration of the report of the Public Printer made in answer to the Senate inquiry, and the court's construction of the provisions of the act of 1897. But the matters from which such legal inference was drawn, as we have seen, are in conflict with the import which we have given them. For instance, the language quoted in the finding and taken from the letter of the Public Printer in answering the resolution of inquiry of the Senate heretofore referred to, in full is as follows:

"Your attention is also called to the fact that during the fiscal years of 1890 to 1893, inclusive, many employees whose terms of service in the office were only for periods of less than one year have never received any pro rata leave of absence, with pay, which appears to have been the practice of the office during that period."

The construction adopted by the court below, that this clause necessarily referred to temporary employees, is dispelled by the history of the legislation and practice to which we have referred. That clause embraced only the permanent employees during the years in question to whom leave of absence had not been given, owing to the construction prevailing at the time named, which was either departed from by express changes made in subsequent acts of Congress, or by a construction thereafter placed upon the same. This is the result of the concluding words of the passage relied on,

[594] viz., "which appears to *have been the practice of the office during that period," excluding, therefore, temporary employees, since not only at that period but at all times from the beginning, and at the time the report was made, temporary employees were excluded from a right to leave of absence by the express rule of the office. If we were to treat the finding as one of fact, in view of the history of the legislation, the absence of any appropriation at any time to pay temporary employees for leaves of absence, the ever presence of the rule forbidding leave to such employees, and the findings as a whole of the court below, and what we deem to be the only implication deducible from the act of 1897 and the communication upon which the court below rested its construction, we should be obliged to say that the ultimate fact which the fifth finding embodies is not consistent with the other findings, and is not entitled to weight.
188 U. S.

Our conclusion that temporary employees are not entitled to leaves of absence under the acts of Congress renders it wholly unnecessary to consider the second question which we at the outset proposed, that is, whether, if such employees were entitled to leave with regular pay, they had a claim for pay without leave against the United States because of the rule adopted for the government of the printing office by which no leave was allowed. However, whilst not deciding this question, we deem it our duty to direct attention to the fact that the significance which the court below attached to the language found in the act of 1896, and the statement that that language was new in the legislation on the subject, was, we assume, caused by overlooking the various appropriation acts between 1888 and 1894, which the court did not allude to in its opinion, where the language in question is to be found.

The decree of the Court of Claims is reversed, and the cause is remanded to that court, with directions to dismiss the claimant's petition.

*W. T. WAGGONER, Plff. in Err., [595]
v.

J. M. FLACK.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 595-605.)

Contracts — impairment of obligation — change of remedy.

The obligation of the contract of the state of Texas with a purchaser of public lands was not impaired by Tex. Laws 1897, chap. 37, p. 39, which repealed a statute in force when the contract was made, denying the remedy of forfeiture for nonpayment of interest as agreed upon, and provided such a forfeiture as a remedy, since the prior act did not amount to a contract that the state would not enlarge the remedy, or grant another on account of the purchaser's violation of his contract.

[No. 28.]

Submitted January 30, 1902. Ordered that Attorney General of Texas be notified of pendency of suit February 24, 1902. Ordered for oral argument before full bench May 19, 1902. Argued December 9, 1902. Decided February 23, 1903.

IN ERROR to the Court of Civil Appeals for the Second Supreme Judicial District of the State of Texas to review a judgment which affirmed a judgment of a District

NOTE.—That impairing the remedy impairs the obligation of contract—see notes to Best v. Baumgardner (Pa.) 1 L. R. A. 356; Louisiana ex rel. Ranger v. New Orleans, 26 L. ed. U. S. 132; and Phinney v. Phinney (Me.) 4 L. R. A. 348.

Court of that State in favor of defendant in a suit to recover the possession of land. Affirmed.

See same case below, 21 Tex. Civ. App. 449, 52 S. W. 584.

Statement by Mr. Justice Peckham:

The plaintiff in error brought his action against the defendant in error in a district court of Texas to recover as owner certain land described in his petition, and of which he alleged the defendant to be in possession. [596] The defendant denied the averments of the petition, and upon the trial judgment was given in his favor and he was adjudged to be the owner of the land. An appeal was taken to the court of civil appeals of Texas, where the judgment was affirmed, and upon application to the supreme court of the state for a writ of error, the application was denied. The plaintiff then sued out a writ of error from this court to the court of civil appeals, and the record has been brought here for review.

The plaintiff in error alleges the existence of a contract with the state of Texas, the obligations of which he asserts have been impaired by subsequent legislation in that state. The case involves an inquiry into some of the legislation of the state in regard to its public lands, providing for their sale and for the application of the proceeds of such sales for the benefit of its public schools and for other public purposes.

The state has been and is the owner of a large amount of public lands, portions of which it has put upon the market for sale from time to time, under different acts of its legislature, which acts have provided a general system for the sale or leasing of such lands and for the disposition of the proceeds arising therefrom. Among others the legislature passed the act of 1879 (chap. 28, Laws of that year, p. 23). That act provided in detail for the sale of certain public lands, and the terms and conditions upon which the sales were to be made and patents therefor granted. The 12th section provided that, upon a failure of the purchaser to pay the purchase money as agreed upon, it should be the duty of the district attorney to cause a writ to be issued to show cause why the purchaser should not be ejected from the land, and upon his failure to show such cause, a judgment was to be rendered against him and a writ of possession issued in favor of the state. In 1881 the act was amended in immaterial matters.

By chapter 88 of the Laws of 1883, p. 85, another general system for the sale of the public lands for the benefit of the public school system, etc., was enacted, the 9th and 10th sections of which provided for payment of instalments of principal and interest, and [597] in case of failure to pay, the lands were *to be entered as "lands forfeited," without any judicial inquiry. This act provided that the interest on the obligations given by the purchaser of the lands should be payable on the 1st of March in each year. Subsequently by chapter 12 of the Laws of 1885, p. 13, approved February 16, 1885, the 9th and 10th sections of the act of 1883 were amended, the right of forfeiture of the land being still retained, only there was an extension of the time for payment of interest from the 1st of March to the 1st of August in each year before the forfeiture could be asserted. In one week after the passage of the act last named the same legislature passed an act, approved February 23, 1885 (Laws of Texas, 1885, p. 18), by which it was enacted "that the failure of a holder of public free school, university, or asylum land, under contract of purchase from the state, to make the annual payments of principal or interest thereon prior to the 1st day of August after the same becomes due, shall not cause a forfeiture of the rights of such holder in such land." By this act it is claimed that all laws providing for forfeitures of land because of nonpayment of instalments of principal or interest prior to August 1st after the same became due were repealed, and while the law thus stood the plaintiff in error's grantor purchased the land in controversy.

By chapter 99 of the Laws of 1887, page 83, a further provision for the sale or leasing of public lands was made. Section 11, page 86, restored the provisions as to forfeiture without resort to judicial proceedings, and by chapter 47, Laws of 1895, § 11, as well as by chapter 37, Laws of 1897, page 39, approved March 25 and taking effect August 20, 1897, further provision was made in regard to forfeitures without a resort to the courts. It was under the act of 1897 that the forfeiture herein was asserted, and the 1st section, the only material one here, is set forth in the margin.†

*D. B. Phillips, under the act of 1883, as [598] amended by the act of February 16, 1885, and modified by the act of February 23, 1885, made application to purchase the land

†Sec. 1. Be it enacted by the Legislature of the State of Texas, That if upon the first day of November of any year any portion of the interest due by any person to the state of Texas for lands heretofore sold by the state of Texas, whether said lands be a part of the public domain or shall have been heretofore set apart for the public schools, university, or any of the other various state institutions, has not been paid, it shall be the duty of the land commissioner to indorse on the obligation for said lands, "Lands forfeited," and shall cause an entry to that effect to be made on the account kept with such purchaser, and thereupon said land shall thereby be forfeited to the state, without the necessity of re-entry or judicial ascertainment, and shall revert to the particular fund to which it originally belonged, and be resold under the provisions of the existing law, or any future law: Provided, The purchaser of said land shall have the right, at any time within six months after such indorsement of "Lands forfeited," to institute a suit in district court of Travis county, Texas, against the commissioner of the general land office, for the purpose of contesting such forfeiture and setting aside the same, upon the ground that the facts did not exist, authorizing such forfeiture, but if no such suit has been instituted as above provided, such forfeiture of the commissioner of the general land office shall then become fixed in question on the 30th of October, 1885, and the land was duly awarded him in November of that year. The plaintiff in error, by proper transfers and deeds, has become the vendee, or grantee through others, of Phillips, and represents all the rights that the latter or his grantees had with regard to the premises in controversy.

Phillips, or those claiming under him, paid the interest on the purchase money up to January 1, 1893, and no interest was thereafter paid. The land was forfeited for nonpayment of interest since 1893, by the commissioner of the general land office, without any judicial procedure or suit in court, on August 20, 1897, the day the act of 1897 took effect. In answer to a certified question from the court of civil appeals, the supreme court of the state held in this case that the state had the right to so forfeit the lands by virtue of that act.

[599] Some time after August 20, 1897, namely, on December 16, *in that year, plaintiff through his agent tendered the state treasurer $286.95 to pay up all accrued interest due on the land purchased by Phillips, and on the last-named date through his agent he asked the reinstating of the account of Phillips, and forwarded to the commissioner of the general land office the transfers or deeds, or copies of the same, showing the chain of title from Phillips to himself, and these transfers were filed by the commissioner in his office, but he refused to reinstate as demanded, on the ground that the rights of the defendant Flack had intervened. Flack, prior to this tender and demand, and on November 17, 1897, made his application in due form to purchase the land. His application was on that day accepted, and his obligation to pay the purchase money was received, and thereafter, in March, 1898, the land was awarded him on his application of the previous November. On August 13, 1898, after this suit was brought, the plaintiff in error, through his attorney, again made written application to have the Phillips account for the purchase of the land reinstated, and for this purpose tendered to the state treasurer of Texas, to pay the interest in arrear, the sum of $345.25, which application was rejected on the ground of the intervening rights of the defendant Flack.

Mr. W. W. Flood for plaintiff in error:

Any deviation from the terms of the contract impairs its obligation and is obnoxious to the Constitution.

and conclusive: Provided, That if any purchaser shall die, or shall have died, his heirs or legal representatives shall have one year in which to make payment after the first day of November next after such death.

This act is cumulative, and is not intended to deny to the state the right to institute any legal proceedings that may be deemed necessary to secure the purchase money or possession of the land so sold. And this act is intended to be applicable to all purchases heretofore made under any or all of the various acts of the legislature under which land may have been sold by the state.

188 U. S.

Green v. Biddle, 8 Wheat. 1, 5. L. ed. 547.

Any law which in its operation amounts to a denial or obstruction of the rights accruing by a contract, though professing to act only on the remedy, is directly obnoxious to the prohibition of the Constitution.

McCracken v. Hayward, 2 How. 608, 11 L. ed. 397.

On this question it is beyond doubt that the courts of the United States will not accept as binding the opinions of the state courts.

Citizens' Sav. Bank v. Owensboro, 173 U. S. 636, 43 L. ed. 840, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 530; Douglas v. Kentucky, 168 U. S. 488, 42 L. ed. 553, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 199.

The means of enforcing the contract, in existence when it is made, are so far a part of it that they cannot be changed to the detriment of the rights of either party to the contract.

Burnitz v. Beverly, 163 U. S. 122, 41 L. ed. 98, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1042.

Mr. C. K. Bell argued the cause, and, with Mr. T. S. Reese, filed a brief for the State of Texas:

The sole question to be decided has been decided by this court.

Wilson v. Standefer, 184 U. S. 399, 46 L. ed. 612, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 384.

The repeal of a law could not constitute, on the part of the state, an obligation that it should not be restored in the future.

Fristoe v. Blum, 92 Tex. 84, 45 S. W. 998.

This court will, even where the question is an impairment by legislation of contract rights, follow the decision of the state court when the question is one of doubt and uncertainty.

Wilson v. Standefer, 184 U. S. 399, 46 L. ed. 612, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 384.

No counsel for defendant in error.

Mr. Justice Peckham, after making the foregoing statement of facts, delivered the opinion of the court:

Referring to the facts in this case, it is seen that the question arising is as to the right of the state to proceed under the act of 1897 to forfeit the lands held by the plaintiff in error for nonpayment of interest.

At the time when the land was purchased by Phillips, in November, 1885, the act of 1883 as amended by the act of February 16, 1885, was in force, excepting, it is said, that the act of February 23, 1885, repealed the provisions in regard to *forfeiture which ex-[600] isted in the prior acts of 1879, 1883, and 1885, so that when Phillips purchased, the state had no right to forfeit the lands, as had theretofore been provided by law.

The attorney general of Texas in his brief filed herein now argues that the act of February 23, 1885, did not unqualifiedly repeal the law in regard to forfeiture as theretofore existing, but simply regulated it so as to place on the same terms those who had purchased lands under the act of 1879 and those purchasing under the act of 1883 as amended by the act of February 16, 1885, so that no forfeiture could be claimed under any act until after August 1 in any year. As the act of 1879 made the interest payable on the 1st of March in each year, and the subsequent acts extended the time for the payment of the moneys for lands sold under their authority to the 1st of August, it is contended that the purpose and effect of the act of 1885 were to place the purchasers of lands under all acts upon the same footing as to the time for the payment of interest. This was in substance held by the court of civil appeals of Texas in 1892 in Berrendo Stock Co. v. McCarty, 20 S. W. 933. The case was, however, reversed in the supreme court in 1893 (85 Tex. 412, 21 S. W. 598), and that court in 1891, in Culbertson v. Blanchard, 79 Tex. 486, 493, 15 S. W. 700, had also held the same principle it announced in the Berrendo Case.

611

It is true that Anderson v. Waco State Bank, 86 Tex. 618, 28 S. W. 344, and Fristoe v. Blum, 92 Tex. 76, 85, 45 S. W. 998, throw some doubt upon the correctness of the former decisions of the supreme court in this respect, but we do not feel here called upon to construe the state statute otherwise than it has been construed up to this time by the court of last resort of the state.

Although this case involves the question of an impairment of an alleged contract by subsequent legislation, and we are not therefore bound by the construction which the state court places upon the statutes of the state which are involved in such an inquiry, yet, as the true construction of the particular statute is not free from doubt, considering the former legislation of the state upon the same subject, we feel that we shall best perform our duty in such case by following the decision of the state court upon the precise question, although doubts as to [601] its correctness *may have been uttered by the same court in some subsequent case. Wilson v. Standefer, 184 U. S. 399, 412, 46 L. ed. 612, 618, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 384.

We come, then, to the question of what was the contract, and whether it has been impaired by virtue of the enactment of the statute of 1897, under which the forfeiture has been enforced? Although not material, it may yet be observed that the act of 1897 is not the first act which was passed subsequently to the act of 1885, reinstating the provisions for a forfeiture. By § 11 of the act of 1887 (Laws 1887, pp. 83, 86), provision was again made for forfeiting the lands on nonpayment of moneys due, and the same was continued by § 11 of the Laws of Texas of 1895, pp. 63, 67.

We assume that, at the time these lands were purchased by Phillips, no statute existed providing for forfeiture by entry on the books of the state commissioner of the general land office, and it is admitted that only by virtue of the act of 1897 can the state now claim the right to forfeit the lands by an entry to that effect on the account kept with the purchaser, because of the failure to pay the interest since 1893. The plaintiff in error asserts that the statute of 1897, reinstating or providing for the right of the state to thus forfeit the lands for nonpayment of moneys due by the purchaser of land, is an impairment of the contract created between the state and Phillips at the time his application for the land was granted by the state authorities; and the plaintiff in error asserts he has succeeded to all the rights of Phillips, and this is not denied.

We must first decide what were the obligations of the contract which was created by the granting of Phillips' application for the purchase of this land and the taking of his notes therefor. The Laws of Texas of 1883, chapter 58, as amended by chapter 12, page 13, Laws of 1885, furnish the evidence of the obligations of the contract. By those acts it was made the duty of the commissioner of the general land office, after an application for a grant of land had been made and approved, to issue a patent to the purchaser or his assigns, etc., upon payment of all the purchase money and interest upon notes given for the purchase of the land, and provision was made for the giving of the notes or other evidences of the obligation of the purchaser *to pay for the land. His obligation was to [602] pay these notes as they matured. The obligation of the state was to give the patent as mentioned. What particular remedy then existed by which the state might enforce the obligations of the contract made by the purchaser is not material in this aspect of the case. It is true that the remedy for the enforcement of a contract sometimes enters into the contract itself, but that is where an endeavor has been made to so change the existing remedy that there is no effective and enforceable one left, or the remedy is so far impaired that the party desirous of enforcing the contract is left practically without any efficient means of doing so; but in the case of an alteration of a remedy, if one is left or provided which is fairly sufficient, the obligations of a contract are not impaired, although the remedies existing at the time it was entered into are taken away.

It appears in the record that the plaintiff in error, or those he represents, failed for years to comply with the obligations of the contract, and failed to pay the interest as it became due, as they promised, and hence the contract was violated.

The question, then, is, What is the remedy against the party who has broken the contract? The statute of 1897 is turned to for the authority to take possession of the land, the right to keep which the plaintiff in error has ceased to retain because of his failure to do that upon which such right was founded.

The plaintiff in error, however, says to the state: You cannot avail yourself of the remedy provided by the act of 1897, because it did not exist when I purchased the land, and you then contracted not to create any such remedy against me, and the evidence of the contract is to be found in the statute of February 23, 1885, which was in force when I purchased. But the answer is that, although at the time Phillips purchased the land a statute had taken away the remedy by way of forfeiture, as therein stated, yet the act taking away the remedy did not constitute a contract on the part of the state with all who purchased lands from it at that time, that it would never pass any other act by which the state might be empowered through its agents to forfeit the lands and take possession thereof by virtue of such forfeiture. The act of February 23, [603] 1885, was a mere *enactment, declaring the law to be as therein stated, upon the subject of a remedy for a violation by a purchaser of the obligations of his contract, and it did not assume to bind the hands of any future legislature that might think proper to deal with the subject. There was no promise or contract expressed in the statute that the state would not enlarge the remedy or grant another on account of the purchaser's violation of his contract, and we think no such contract is to be implied.

A purchaser of lands at the time Phillips purchased had no right to assume that the state would not alter the law in the future so far as to give it another and better or a quicker remedy for a violation of his contract by the purchaser than existed at the time the purchase was made. To enact laws providing remedies for a violation of contracts, to alter or enlarge those remedies from time to time as to the legislature may seem appropriate, is an exercise of sovereignty, and it cannot be supposed that the state, in a case like this, contracts, in a public act of its legislature, to limit its power in the future, even if it could do so, with or without consideration, unless the language of the act is so absolutely plain and unambiguous as to leave no room for doubt that its true meaning amounts to a contract by it to part with its power to increase the effectiveness of existing remedies as against those who purchase lands while the act remains alive. No such language is to be found in the act in question, and none ought to be implied.

We cannot discern the difference in principle between this case and that of Wilson v. Standefer, 184 U. S. 399, 46 L. ed. 612, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 384, which involved a portion of this same legislation. In that case the lands were purchased under the act of 1879, which provided (§ 12) for a forfeiture after judicial inquiry determining the failure of the purchaser to pay the annual instalments of interest as they became due. Subsequently the act of 1897, already mentioned, was passed and that act, it is seen, authorized the commissioner, when any portion of the interest due by the purchaser had not been paid, to declare a forfeiture of the purchase without judicial aid, and it gave to his action the effect of putting an end to the contract. It was under the act of 1897 that the forfeiture was declared in that case. There, as here, it was contended

[604] *that the act of 1897 violated the contract between the parties. It was urged that as the act of 1879 provided a remedy by a resort to judicial proceedings for the purpose of enforcing a forfeiture, that such remedy was a part of the contract, and that the act of 1897, which provided for a forfeiture of the lands without judicial action, was a violation of the contract, and therefore void. This court held that the stipulation in the 12th section of the act of 1879, providing for a judicial forfeiture, did not amount in legal contemplation to a promise by the state that the only remedy which might thereafter be resorted to by it was the one therein provided for. The court recognized the plain distinction between the obligation of a contract and a remedy given by the legislature to enforce that obligation, and it held that the remedy might be modified and enlarged without impairing such obligation.
188 U. S. U. S., Book 47.

It is to be noted that the act of 1897 does not take away from the purchaser the right to be heard in a court of justice upon the question whether he, in fact, is in default in his payments of the obligations given by him for the land which he purchased. The act of 1897 grants the purchaser six months after the land commissioner has indorsed on the purchaser's obligation for payment for the land, the words "Lands forfeited," within which the purchaser may institute suit in the district court of Travis county, Texas, against the commissioner for the purpose of contesting the forfeiture and setting aside the same, upon the ground that the facts do not exist authorizing such forfeiture.

Neither Phillips nor any of the successors to his title availed themselves of the opportunity to be judicially heard afforded by the law of 1897, and, as stated by the court in Wilson v. Standefer, 184 U. S. 399, 415, 46 L. ed. 612, 619, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 384, 390, the reason clearly appears in the admitted facts that the payments were in arrear for a considerable period of time, and that the tender made, if it ever had any legal effect at any time, was manifestly too late after the state had declared a forfeiture and sold the land to another.

We cannot see any difference in principle between a case where an act was in existence when a contract was made, providing a certain remedy for a violation of the contract, and *then, after the contract is entered into, the legislature passes another act, giving an altogether different remedy, as in Wilson v. Standefer, 184 U. S. 399, 46 L. ed. 612, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 384, and a case where an act which denied the remedy of forfeiture when the contract was made, was repealed by a subsequent enactment which provided a forfeiture as a remedy. In both cases there is a plain alteration of remedy, while in neither is there any contract springing from the passage of the first act that no other remedy more effective should be given as against one who purchased land during the existence of the statute. The right to rescind the contract on the part of the state, upon the failure of the purchaser to pay as he had agreed, resided in the state at common law, as the supreme court of Texas has held. Fristoe v. Blum, 92 Tex. 76, 84, 45 S. W. 998. The act of 1897 simply provided a particular means by which such right might be enforced.

We are of opinion that the act of 1897 does not impair the obligation of any contract within the meaning of the Federal Constitution, as asserted by the plaintiff in error, and the judgment of the Court of Civil Appeals of Texas is therefore affirmed.

Mr. Justice Brewer concurred in the result.

RUDOLPH HELWIG, Plff. in Err.,
v.

UNITED STATES.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 605-619.)

Courts—jurisdiction of district court—action to recover penalty—additional sum collected from importer for undervaluation.

The "further sum," equal to 2 per cent of the appraised value of imported merchandise for each 1 per cent that such appraised value exceeds the value declared in the entry, which, under the customs administrative act of June 10, 1890, § 7 (26 Stat. at L. 131, chap. 407, U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 1892), may be collected from an importer for undervaluation "in addition to the duties imposed by law," is a penalty, and exclusive jurisdiction of a suit to recover such sum is, therefore, by U. S. Rev. Stat. § 563 (U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 455), vested in the district courts of the United States.

[No. 65.]

Argued November 4, 1902. Decided February 23, 1903.

ON A CERTIFICATE from the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit presenting a question as to the jurisdiction of a United States Circuit Court of an action to recover the "further sum" imposed by the customs administrative act on an importer for undervaluation, "in addition to the duties imposed by law." Answered in the negative.

Statement by Mr. Justice Peckham:

[606] *This case comes before the court upon a certificate from the United States circuit court of appeals for the second circuit. The certificate contains the following statement:

"In February and March, 1895, Rudolph Helwig, plaintiff in error, made three certain importations of wood pulp into the United States, entering the same at the custom house at the port of New York. As the facts are substantially the same in respect to each importation, except as to values, amounts, date, etc., they are spoken of herein as one importation.

"At the time when said wood pulp was imported the duty imposed by law on wood pulp was ten (10) per centum ad valorem (par. 303, act of August 27, 1894 [28 Stat. at L. 532, chap. 349]).

"Upon making the entries at the custom house, Helwig declared the invoice and market value to be marks 191 per ton; the aggregate invoice value of all three importations was $13,252 in United States currency; at the time of making the entries Helwig paid to the collector of customs $1,325.20, being the duty upon said wood pulp at the rate of ten (10) per centum ad valorem based upon the invoice value.

"The merchandise was thereafter appraised by the United States appraiser, as provided in § 7 of the act of June 10, 1890 (26 Stat. at L. 131, chap. 407, U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 1892), who reported that the foreign market value of said wood pulp was marks 263.70 per ton; Helwig thereupon requested a reappraisal by a United States general appraiser, in accordance with § 13 of the act of June 10, 1890 [26 Stat. at L. 136, chap. 349, U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 1932], a reappraisal was had, and the United States general appraiser reappraised the market value of said wood pulp at marks 245 per ton net; thereupon Helwig appealed to the board of United States general appraisers, in accordance with said § 13 of the act of June 10, 1890, and said board affirmed the decision of the United States general appraiser, thereby deciding that the foreign market value of said wood pulp was marks 245 per ton net, and making an advance over the invoice and entered value of over 27 per centum.

"Thereupon the collector of customs liquidated said entries, *fixing the dutiable value [607] of all of said merchandise at $16,792.20, and computing the duty thereon at the rate of 10 per centum at $1,679.20, and made demand upon said Helwig for the sum of $354, being the difference between the amount already paid by Helwig and the amount of duty at the rate of ten (10) per centum ad valorem found to be due on said final reappraisal; thereafter Helwig paid the sum of $354, and that amount is not in question on this appeal.

"At the time the collector of customs found said additional sum of $354 to be due, as aforesaid, he also found and decided that there was due from Helwig to the United States the further sum of nine thousand and sixty-seven dollars and sixty-eight cents ($9,067.68), and made demand for said amount, said amount being the further sum in addition to the duties imposed by law, ascertained, and fixed as provided in § 7 of the said act of June 10, 1890, being 2 per centum of the total appraised value of said merchandise for each 1 per centum that such appraised value exceeded the value declared in the entry.

"Before the commencement of this action Helwig duly presented his petition to the United States district court for the southern district of New York, claiming that said sum of nine thousand and sixty-seven dollars and sixty-eight cents ($9,067.68) was a penalty, and praying that the district judge would cause an investigation of the facts to be made, in accordance with § 5292 of the Revised Statutes (U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 3604) and §§ 17 and 18 of the act of June 22, 1874 (18 Stat. at L. 186, chap. 391, U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 3606), and cause the facts to be stated and transmitted to the Secretary of the Treasury, and praying that said penalty be remitted on the ground that it had been incurred without wilful negligence or intent to defraud.

[608] "The said district judge caused such summary investigation to be made, and a statement of the facts shown thereon was duly transmitted to the Secretary of the Treasury, who, thereafter, and on the 6th day of July, 1898, found and decided that said penalties had been incurred without wilful negligence or intention of fraud on the part of said Helwig, and thereupon *mitigated the penalties to one half of the amount thereof, namely, $4,533.84.

"Subsequently the collector of customs reliquidated said entries, reducing the amount of said further sum to $4,533.84, and again made demand upon Helwig for payment. As Helwig did not pay the amount, suit was commenced against him in the circuit court for the southern district of New York on the 24th of August, 1898. Upon learning of the pendency of that suit, however, the Secretary of the Treasury advised the collector that he revoked his decision of the 6th of July, 1898, and directed the collector to reliquidate the entries at the original amount and to request the United States attorney to institute suit for nine thousand and sixty-seven dollars and sixty-eight cents ($9,067.68).

"The collector followed these instructions and again reliquidated the entries accordingly.

"The suit then pending was discontinued and the present action begun, including the full amount of the penalty, namely, nine thousand and sixty-seven dollars and sixty-eight cents ($9,067.68).

"The case was tried at the circuit court upon an agreed statement of facts.

"Upon the reading of the agreed statement of facts, the plaintiff in error moved to dismiss the complaint and for the direction of judgment in his favor on the ground that the action was to recover a penalty or penalties arising under the customs laws, and that under the provisions of §§ 629 and 563 of the Revised Statutes (U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, pp. 503, 455) the United States circuit court had no jurisdiction in such an action. The motion was denied and plaintiff in error duly excepted.

"The court subsequently directed judgment in favor of the United States for the amount of nine thousand and sixty-seven dollars and sixty-eight cents ($9,067.68), together with interest and costs.

"The defendant thereafter sued out his writ of error to this court.

"The sum for which judgment was rendered, namely, nine thousand and sixty-seven dollars and sixty-eight cents ($9,067.68), *being the 'further sum' accruing 'in addition to the duties imposed by law,' upon wood pulp, under the provisions of § 7 of the act of June 10, 1890."

Upon these facts the court has asked the following question:

"Has the United States circuit court jurisdiction of an action to recover the aforesaid 'further sum' accruing 'in addition to the duties imposed by law,' under the provisions of § 7 of the act of June 10, 1890 (26 Stat. at L. 131, chap. 407, U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 1892)?"
188 U. S.

Mr. Henry W. Rudd argued the cause and filed a brief for plaintiff in error:

The United States circuit court has no jurisdiction of an action to recover penalties arising under the customs laws.

United States v. Mooney, 116 U. S. 104, 29 L. ed. 550, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 304; Lees v. United States, 150 U. S. 476, 37 L. ed. 1150, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 163.

The "further sum" levied under the provisions of § 7 of the act of June 10, 1890 (26 Stat. at L. 131, chap. 407, U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 1892), is a penalty arising under the customs revenue laws; it is not a customs duty.

Greely v. Thompson, 10 How. 225, 13 L. ed. 397; Maxwell v. Griswold, 10 How. 242, 13 L. ed. 405; Bartlett v. Kane, 16 How. 263, 14 L. ed. 931; Ring v. Maxwell, 17 How. 147, 15 L. ed. 25; Stairs v. Peaslee, 18 How. 521, 15 L. ed. 474; Passavant v. United States, 148 U. S. 214, 37 L. ed. 426, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 572; Additional Duties, 20 Ops. Atty. Gen. 660; Penalties under Tariff Act of 1842, 4 Ops. Atty. Gen. 183; Morris v. Robertson, 37 Fed. 199; Grinnell v. Lawrence, 1 Blatchf. 346, Fed. Cas. No. 5,831; Bannendahl v. Redfield, 4 Blatchf. 223, Fed. Cas. No. 964; Bischoff v. Maxwell, 4 Blatchf. 384, Fed. Cas. No. 1,438; Lehmaier v. Maxwell, Fed. Cas. No. 8,214; Manhattan Gaslight Co. v. Maxwell, 2 Blatchf. 405, Fed. Cas. No. 9,023.

Assistant Attorney General Hoyt argued the cause, and, with Mr. James A. Finch, filed a brief for defendant in error:

Unless the duty is recoverable by suit in the same manner as other fines and penalties it is not a penalty within the meaning of the statute giving jurisdiction to the United States district courts.

Remission of Penalties, 5 Ops. Atty. Gen. 731.

The almost uninterrupted practice of the Treasury Department has been to treat these "additional duties," or "further sums," as duties, and not as penalties.

Treasury Regulations 1857, § 369; Customs Regulations 1874, § 494; Customs Regulations 1899, art. 1426.

There are two instances in which the courts were obliged to pass upon this very question, and wherein these duties were held to be duties, and not penalties.

United States v. Collier, 3 Blatchf. 325, Fed. Cas. No. 14, 833; Maillard v. Lawrence, 3 Blatchf. 378, Fed. Cas. No. 8,972.

Protest is a prerequisite to the recovery of additional duty, but is not required in case of a penalty.

Falleck v. Barney, 5 Blatchf. 38, Fed. Cas. No. 4,625; Kriesler v. Morton, 2 Curt. C. C. 239, Fed. Cas. No. 7,934.

Statutes in regard to the recovery of additional duties for innocent undervaluation, and those which refer to fraudulent undervaluation, "do not relate to the same matters; they describe and provide for dissimilar cases."

United States v. 25 Cases of Cloth, Crabbe, 356, Fed. Cas. No. 16,563; United States v. 67 Packages of Dry Goods, 17 How. 87, 15 L. ed. 54.

Mr. Justice Peckham, after making the foregoing statement of facts, delivered the opinion of the court:

That part of § 7 of the customs administrative act of 1890 (26 Stat. at L. 131, 134, chap. 407, U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 1892), which relates to the question involved in this case is set forth in the margin.†

[610] *By § 629, Revised Statutes (U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 503), subdivisions 3d and 4th, jurisdiction is granted to the circuit court of all suits at common law where the United States, or any officer thereof, suing under the authority of any act of Congress, are plaintiffs, and of all suits at law or equity, arising under any act providing for revenue from imports or tonnage, except suits for penalties and forfeitures.

Under this section the plaintiffs claim the circuit court had jurisdiction in this action as one at common law, etc., or as one arising under any act providing for revenue, and not being one for a penalty or forfeiture.

By § 563, Revised Statutes (U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 455), jurisdiction is conferred upon the district court in various cases, the 3d subdivision of which section gives it jurisdiction of all suits for penalties and forfeitures incurred under any law of the United States.

It has been heretofore held that the act conferred exclusive jurisdiction upon the district court in suits for penalties or forfeitures. The early cases to that effect are cited in United States v. Mooney, 116 U. S. 104, 29 L. ed. 550, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 304; Lees v. United States, 150 U. S. 476, 478, 37 L. ed. 1150, 1151, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 163, and the above two cases reiterate the same holding. It would seem to be beyond the necessity of further argument since the decision of these cases, that the jurisdiction is exclusive in the district court of all actions to recover for a penalty or forfeiture. Indeed, the counsel for the government frankly concedes that if this action be one to recover a penalty or forfeiture exclusive jurisdiction is by the law vested in the district court.

The sole question is whether the sum imposed by § 7, already quoted, is a penalty. Without other reference than to the language of the statute itself, we should conclude that the sum imposed therein was a penalty. It is not imposed upon the importation of all goods, but only upon the importer in certain cases which are stated in the statute, and it is clear that the sum is not imposed for any purpose of revenue, but is in addition to the duties imposed upon the particular article imported, and in each individual case when the sum is imposed it is based upon the particular act of the importer. That particular act is his undervaluation of the goods imported, and it is without doubt a punishment upon the importer on account of it. Whether the statute defines it in terms as a punishment or penalty is not important, if the nature of the provision itself be of that character. If it be said that the provision operates as a warning to importers to be careful and to be honest, it is a warning which is efficacious only by reason of the resulting imposition of the "further sum," in addition to the duties, provided for by the statute.

This case is a good illustration of the penal features of the statute. The aggregate value of the merchandise as entered by the importer was $13,252, and the amount of duty provided for by the statute (10 per centum) was $1,325.20. The final reappraisement made under § 13 of the same act was $16,792.20, and the duties $1,679.20, the difference being $354; yet this difference in valuation between the importer and the appraisers, though the valuation of the importer was made without intent to defraud, brought upon him the imposition, under the statute, § 7, of the additional sum of $9,067.68, being the "further sum" spoken of in the statute in addition to the payment of the $354 of duty, which was demanded of the importer by reason of this difference. Now what can this be but a punishment, or,

†Sec. 7. . . . And the collector within whose district any merchandise may be imported or entered, whether the same has been actually purchased or procured otherwise than by purchase, shall cause the actual market value or wholesale price of such merchandise to be appraised; and if the appraised value of any article of imported merchandise shall exceed by more than ten per centum the value declared in the entry, there shall be levied, collected, and paid, in addition to the duties imposed by law on such merchandise, a further sum equal to two per centum of the total appraised value for each one per centum that such appraised value exceeds the value declared in the entry; and the additional duties shall only apply to the particular article or articles in each invoice which are undervalued; and if such appraised value shall exceed the value declared in the entry more than forty per centum, such entry may be held to be presumptively fraudulent, and the collector of customs may seize such merchandise and proceed as in cases of forfeiture for violations of the customs laws; and in any legal proceedings which may result from such seizure the fact of such undervaluation shall be presumptive evidence of fraud, and the burden of proof shall be on the claimant to rebut the same, and forfeiture shall be adjudged unless he shall rebut said presumption of fraudulent intent by sufficient evidence: Provided, That the forfeitures provided for in this section shall apply to the whole of the merchandise or the value thereof in the case or package containing the particular article or articles in each invoice which are undervalued: And provided further, That all additional duties, penalties, or forfeitures applicable to merchandise entered by a duly certified invoice, shall be alike applicable to goods entered by a pro forma invoice or statement in form of an invoice. The duty shall not, however, be assessed upon an amount less than the invoice or entered value.

in other words, a penalty for undervaluation, whether innocently done or not? It certainly was no reward of merit, and whether called a "further sum" or an "additional duty," or by some other name, the amount imposed was so large in proportion to the value of the merchandise imported, as to show beyond doubt that it was a sum imposed not, in fact, as a duty upon an imported article, but as a penalty, and nothing else.

[612] The statute also provides that, if the appraised value exceed by more than 40 per centum the value declared in the entry, then the entry value is presumed fraudulent and the whole property is to be seized by the collector, who is to proceed as "in the case of a forfeiture, and the burden of showing that the undervaluation was not fraudulent is cast upon the importer. Now, whether the excess in valuation on the reappraisement is more or less than 40 per centum of the value declared in the entry, seems to be important only upon the question of the presumption of fraud and the consequent forfeiture of the whole property. If more than 40 per centum, the presumption of fraud is declared by the statute and the property is forfeited, unless the importer shows there was no fraud. If less, the sum imposed by the statute is to be paid, but the property is not forfeited. In the case of good faith, it is simply a less penalty than in the case of fraud. It is, however, argued that the error for undervaluation not fraudulent is repaired by imposing an additional duty on the particular goods in such invoice which have been undervalued, and there is no penalty, a simple enlarged duty upon merchandise, while in the other case, the presumed fraudulent undervaluation (if the fraud be found), the whole of the merchandise is forfeited by the express terms of the statute.

Whether the error is repaired by imposing the sum named as an additional duty is not material in the consideration of the nature of the imposition. It is still a punishment and nothing else, because of the carelessness, ignorance, or mistake, without fraudulent intent, upon the part of the importer. If the fraudulent intent were present, the penalty would be enlarged and the goods forfeited. In both cases the nature of the penalty is the same, only in one case it is satisfied by the imposition of a certain amount of money, while in the other a total forfeiture is demanded.

To the question, why the additional sum is imposed in the one case, or why the goods are forfeited in the other, there can be but one answer. It is because of the action of the importer with relation to the importation in question, and in one case such action calls down upon his head punishment by way of a money imposition, and in the other it is a forfeiture of his property. In either case there is to be punishment, either for carelessness or fraud.

[613] Although the statute, under § 7, supra, terms the "money demanded as "a further sum," and does not describe it as a penalty, still the use of those words does not change the nature and character of the enactment. Congress may enact that such a provision shall not be considered as a penalty or in the nature of one, with reference to the further action of the officers of the government, or with reference to the distribution of the moneys thus paid, or with reference to its effect upon the individual, and it is the duty of the court to be governed by such statutory direction, but the intrinsic nature of the provision remains, and, in the absence of any declaration by Congress affecting the manner in which the provision shall be treated, courts must decide the matter in accordance with their views of the nature of the act. Although the sum imposed by reason of undervaluation may be simply described as "a further sum" or "an additional duty," if it is yet so enormously in excess of the greatest amount of regular duty ever imposed upon an article of the same nature, and it is imposed by reason of the action of the importer, such facts clearly show it is a penalty in its intrinsic nature, and the failure of the statute to designate it as a penalty, but describing it as "a further sum," or "an additional duty," will not work a statutory alteration of the nature of the imposition, and it will be regarded as a penalty when by its very nature it is a penalty. It is impossible, judging simply from its language, to hold this provision to be other than penal in its nature.
188 U. S.

But it is urged that although this part of the section may be of a penal character within the ordinary or general meaning of the words, yet as used in the various statutes upon the subject it will be seen that those words are not regarded by Congress as imposing a penalty and should not be so treated by the court. If it clearly appear that it is the will of Congress that the provision shall not be regarded as in the nature of a penalty, the court must be governed by that will. This leads to a short examination of the previous legislation upon the subject.

By the act of April 20, 1818, chap. 79, § 11 (3 Stat. at L. 433, 436), the manner of collecting the additional sum imposed by reason of undervaluation was by adding 50 per centum to "the appraised value of the [614] property, and on that aggregate amount the usual duties were to be estimated. The 25th section of that act enacted "That all penalties and forfeitures incurred by force of this act shall be sued for, recovered, distributed, and accounted for in the manner prescribed by" the act of March 2, 1799 (1 Stat. at L. 627, chap. 22), "and may be mitigated or remitted, in the manner prescribed" by the act of March 3, 1797 (1 Stat. at L. 506, chap. 13).

In an opinion delivered by Attorney General Wirt, February, 1821 (5 Ops. Atty. Gen., 730), that officer ruled that the 50 per centum provided by § 11 could not be remitted, because he thought that by the language of the statute, Congress permitted the Secretary of the Treasury to remit penalties or forfeitures only in such cases where, by the provisions of the act, they could be recovered by suit. He did not deny that the additional sums imposed by statute were in the nature of penalties, but the 50 per centum not being recoverable by suit, he thought the Secretary of the Treasury had no power to mitigate or remit.

By the act of March 1, 1823 (3 Stat. at L. 729, 734, chap. 21, § 13), reference was made to a penalty of 50 per centum (the same provision in substance as is set forth in the statute under consideration, only different amounts are provided for), and Congress described the provision as a penalty.

Section 9 of the act passed May 19, 1828 (4 Stat. at L. 270, 274, chap. 55), provided that where the appraisement exceeded by 10 per centum the invoice value there was to be imposed, in addition to the duty imposed by law on the same property, 50 per centum of the duty imposed on the same goods when fairly invoiced, and this amount is described in the statute as a duty of 50 per centum. Further on in the same section, it is provided that the penalty of 50 per centum imposed by the 13th section of the act approved March 1, 1823, supra, was not to attach to any of the property subject to the additional duty of 50 per centum imposed by § 9 of the act of 1828. The sum imposed was in its nature no more a penalty under the 13th section of the act of 1823 than it was a penalty under the 9th section of the [615] act of 1828, yet in the earlier act *it is described as a penalty, and in the later a duty. The mere description was evidently not regarded as of vital importance.

By § 17 of the act of 1842, chap. 270 (5 Stat. at L. 548, 564), the amount imposed is stated to be, "in addition to the duty imposed by law on the same, there shall be levied and collected on the same goods, wares, and merchandise 50 per centum of the duty imposed on the same, when fairly invoiced." Although this 50 per centum mentioned in the above act is not designated in terms as a penalty, yet it was regarded as such by the then Attorney General, Legare, who in response to the question put by the Secretary of the Treasury, whether the latter had power to remit it as a penalty within the meaning of the act of 1797, stated that in his opinion he had, as it was very clear that the 50 per centum was a penalty. 4 Ops. Atty. Gen. 182.

By the act of February 11, 1846, relative to collectors and other officers of the customs (9 Stat. at L. 3, chap. 7, § 3), it was provided that no portion of the additional duties mentioned in the 17th section of the act of 1842, supra, "shall be deemed a fine, penalty, or forfeiture" for the purpose of being distributed to any officer of the customs, but the whole amount thereof, when received, was to be paid directly into the Treasury. This would seem to be a recognition on the part of Congress that the additional duties mentioned in the 17th section would be regarded as penalties, and that it was necessary to provide specifically that they should not be so treated, so far as distribution was concerned. It may possibly be that the legislation was enacted in order to meet the construction of the 17th section put upon it by the Attorney General in his answer to the Secretary of the Treasury, June 7, 1843. At any rate, the opinion and the legislation show that the additional duties had been regarded as penalties, and that such construction was only altered by Congress to the extent of providing that for the purpose of being distributed to any customs officer they should not be so regarded.

The statute of July 30, 1846, chap. 74 (9 Stat. at L. 42), relating to duties, by its 8th section provided that, in case of undervaluation, in addition to the duties imposed by law, a duty of 20 *per centum ad valorem [616] on such appraised value should be imposed, using the same language substantially as had been used in the 17th section of the act of 1842, only reducing the amount from 50 to 20 per centum.

By the 23d section of the act approved June 30, 1864, chap. 171 (13 Stat. at L. 202, 216), it is again declared that, "in addition to the duties imposed by law on the same, there shall be levied, collected, and paid a duty of 20 per centum ad valorem, on such appraised value."

The language used in these various statutes, in making provision for the imposition of additional sums on account of the action of the importer in undervaluing the goods imported, does not give any clear indication on the part of Congress that the sum imposed shall not be regarded as a penalty excepting as to the act of 1846 (9 Stat. at L. 3, chap. 7), relative to collectors, etc., and there the provision is limited to the statement that the sum shall not be deemed a fine, penalty, or forfeiture for the purpose of being distributed to any officer of the customs. At that time, it must be remembered, moiety legislation was in force, by which a certain proportion of some fines and penalties was distributed to the customs officer.

By the act of July 24, 1897, chap. 11, § 32 (30 Stat. at L. 212), Congress has plainly directed that the additional duty therein spoken of shall not be construed as a penalty, and shall not be remitted nor payment thereof in any way avoided, with the exception stated in the statute. As this statute was passed subsequently to the importation mentioned in this case, it does not affect the question as to the character of the legislation which preceded it and which had no such provision as is contained in the last act. It was under the act as it stood in the customs administrative act of 1890, the same under which the question here arises, that on September 9, 1893, Mr. Olney, who was then Attorney General, gave an opinion upon this same question in response to a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury (20 Ops. Atty. Gen. 660). In that opinion the Attorney General reviewed the previous legislation of Congress on this subject, and came to the conclusion that, as the law then stood, the additional duty, so-called, was in its *nature a penalty, [617] and that being so, it was subject to remission like other fines, penalties and forfeitures by the Secretary of the Treasury.

Referring to some of the decisions of this court, we think it is made quite apparent that these provisions of the statute were regarded as in the nature of penalties.

In Bartlett v. Kane, 16 How. 263, 14 L. ed. 931, decided in 1853 under the statute of 1846, where the question of drawback arose, the additional duty of 20 per centum mentioned in the act was regarded as in the nature of a penalty. Mr. Justice Campbell, in delivering the opinion of the court (at page 274, L. ed. p. 935), said:

"An examination of the revenue laws upon the subject of levying additional duties, in consequence of the fact of an undervaluation by the importer, shows that they were exacted as discouragements to fraud, and to prevent efforts by importers to escape the legal rates of duty. In several of the acts, this additional duty has been distributed among officers of the customs upon the same conditions as penalties and forfeitures. As between the United States and the importer, and in reference to the subject of drawback and debenture, it must still be regarded in the light of a penal duty. . . . It does not include, in its purview, any return of the forfeitures or amercements resulting from illegal or fraudulent dealings on the part of the importer or his agents. Those do not fall within the regular administration of the revenue system, nor does the government comprehend them within its regular estimates of supply. They are the compensation for a violated law, and are designed to operate as checks and restraints upon fraud and injustice."

In Greely v. Thompson, 10 How. 225, 13 L. ed. 397, Mr. Justice Woodbury, speaking of the language on this subject used in the act of 1842 (at page 238, L. ed. p. 404), said: "Especially in a penal provision, it could not seem judicious, any more than legal, to extend it beyond the clear language of the act;" and he referred to the immediately succeeding case of Maxwell v. Griswold, 10 How. 242, 13 L. ed. 405. In that case, as stated by Mr. Justice Woodbury, in the opinion of the court (at page 255, L. ed. p. 410), "The importer had put in his invoice the price actually paid for the goods, with [618] charges, and *proposed to enter them at the value thus fixed. But the collector concluded, in that event, to have them appraised, and the value would then, by instructions and usage at New York, be ascertained as at the time of the shipment, which was considerably higher, and would probably subject the importer, not only to pay more duties, but to suffer a penalty. The importer protested against this, but in order to avoid the penalty under such a wrong appraisal, adopted the following course." And again, in speaking of the manner in which the question arose, the justice continued: "The importer, knowing that this would subject him to a severe penalty, in order to avoid it, felt compelled to add to his invoice the amount which the price had risen between the purchase and the shipment." This is in relation to the language already referred to in the act of 1842.

188 U. S.

In Ring v. Maxwell, 17 How. 147, 15 L. ed. 25, the court did not find it necessary to determine whether the additional duties prescribed under the acts of 1842 and 1846 might have been deemed penalties, because the court was of opinion that, whatever was the nature of the sums levied as additional duties under the 8th section of the act of 1846, they were not distributable to the customs officers as penalties.

In Stairs v. Peaslee, 18 How. 521, 15 L. ed. 474, it was said that the penal duty of 20 per centum exacted by the 8th section of the tariff act of July 30, 1846 (9 Stat. at L. 43, chap. 74), was properly levied upon goods entered at their invoice value. Mr. Chief Justice Taney (page 527, L. ed. p. 477), in speaking of the language of the act of 1842 (5 Stat. at L. 563, chap. 270, supra), providing for levying an additional 50 per centum because of undervaluation, said:

"It would seem, however, that this provision was found by experience to operate, in some instances, unjustly upon the importer; and that it sometimes happened that, under favorable opportunities of time or place, goods were purchased in a foreign country for 10 per cent less than their market value in the principal markets of the country from which they were imported into the United States. And if they were so invoiced, the importer was liable for the above-mentioned penal duty, although he was willing and offered to make the entry at their dutiable value. The fact that the invoice value was 10 per cent below the [619] standard of value fixed by law subjected him to the penal duty and he had no means of escaping from it. The 8th section of the tariff act of 1846 was obviously intended to relieve the importer from this hardship."

See also Swanston v. Morton, 1 Curt. C. C. 294, Fed. Cas. No. 13,677, where the court described it as an additional duty, by way of penalty, and the court was by no means clear that the strictly technical term appropriate to such a demand would not be the word "penalty," though in that case it did not feel compelled to go so far.

In Passavant v. United States, 148 U. S. 214, 37 L. ed. 426, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 572, the question of whether these sums are to be regarded as penalties or simply additional duties was not regarded as material, and consequently was not decided in terms, although the case of Bartlett v. Kane, 16 How. 263, 14 L. ed. 931, was quoted from as to the sums imposed by statute being a "compensation for a violated law," etc.

From these various decisions it is seen that the courts have either regarded the language used in these statutes as penal in its nature, and that the sums imposed under the various sections of the statutes were imposed as penalties or the property forfeited, for the careless or fraudulent conduct of the importer in making an undervaluation, or else they have declined to decide the question, because not involved. We think the sum sought to be recovered in this action was a penalty, and the circuit court, therefore, had no jurisdiction.

Whether the Secretary had the power, after he had once reduced the amount to be paid, to raise it to the original sum, as stated in the foregoing certificate, is not material to the question now before us, and we express no opinion regarding it.

The question propounded by the Circuit Court of Appeals is answered in the negative, and it will be so certified.

620] *HARRY J. JAQUITH, Trustee in Bankruptcy of William S. Franklin, Bankrupt, Appt.,

v.

CLARENCE W. ROWLEY et al.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 620-626.)

Bankruptcy—jurisdiction of bankruptcy court—adverse claimant—enjoining proceedings in state courts.

1. The surety on a bankrupt's bail bond, in whose hands property was deposited by the bankrupt to indemnify him for his liability, is an adverse claimant within the meaning of the bankruptcy act of 1898, §§ 23a, b (30 Stat. at L. 552, chap. 541, U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 3431), and cannot be proceeded against in the bankruptcy court unless by his consent, as provided for therein.
2. A court of bankruptcy is without jurisdiction to enjoin the plaintiffs in suits against the bankrupt in the state courts from collecting their judgments from the surety on the bankrupt's bail bond.

[No. 81.]

*Argued and submitted November 10, 1902.
Decided February 23, 1903.*

A PPEAL from the District Court of the United States for the District of Massachusetts to review a judgment which dismissed for want of jurisdiction a petition to enjoin proceedings in a state court, and to compel the surety on a bankrupt's bail bond to pay over to the trustee in bankruptcy money deposited in his hands to indemnify him for his liability. Affirmed.

Statement by Mr. Justice Peckham:

The appellant herein was appointed a trustee in bankruptcy by the United States district court in Massachusetts on September 18, 1900, and his bond was approved on the 21st of that month. The bankrupt was duly adjudged such on August 15, 1900; and at the date of that adjudication there were pending in the superior court of Massachusetts, for Middlesex county, two suits,—one of E. W. Thayer against the bankrupt, in which a bail bond had been taken on November 14, 1899, and the other a suit of E. F. Flanders against the bankrupt, in which case a bail bond had also been taken on that day; and in order to protect the surety, Joseph P. Silsby, Jr., on the bail bond in each of the two cases, the bankrupt on the same day deposited in the hands of the surety the two sums of $148 in the Thayer suit and $125 in the Flanders suit. These sums were to be held to indemnify the surety in each case, respectively, if the bankrupt avoided the bail bond. After the adjudication in bankruptcy these suits proceeded to judgment in the state court, and the plaintiffs took out execution, which they are seeking to enforce *against the surety on the bail bond, but not against the bankrupt himself. [621]

At the first meeting of the creditors the plaintiff Thayer in the suit in the state court against the bankrupt appeared in the bankruptcy court and proved her claim for $150. Flanders, the plaintiff in the other suit in the state court, did not appear or prove his claim. After the appointment of the trustee, and without leave of the bankruptcy court, and without notice to or the knowledge of the trustee, the plaintiff in each of the two suits took judgment by default in the state court. Upon learning of the entry of the judgments the trustee notified the surety not to pay the money over, and then, in the name of the bankrupt, petitioned the state court to vacate the judgment and to order the execution returned, which the state court refused to do; and thereupon the trustee filed his petition in the district court of the United States for the district of Massachusetts against the plaintiffs in the two suits, their attorney, and the surety, setting up that the prosecution of the suits in the state court was contrary to the provisions of the bankruptcy act and a contempt of court, and praying that the plaintiffs and their attorney be enjoined from collecting the judgments, and that the surety be enjoined from paying the money in his hands, and that the parties plaintiffs in the judgments and their attorney be adjudged in contempt, etc. This motion was denied and the restraining order refused.

The petition was subsequently amended by leave of the court so as to ask that the plaintiffs and their attorney in the state suits be enjoined from collecting the judgments, or making any levy under the execution, or taking any further proceedings therein pending the further and final determination of the court in bankruptcy upon the petition of the trustee, and also that the surety, Joseph P. Silsby, Jr., be ordered to pay over to the trustee the funds deposited in his hands; also that the several plaintiffs in the state suits be ordered to appear before the referee in bankruptcy and prove their claims against his estate and establish their liens, if any, upon the funds paid over to the trustee by Joseph P. Silsby, Jr. This amended petition omitted the prayer that the plaintiffs in the suits in the state court might *be adjudged guilty of contempt, etc. [622] Upon the petition as amended a motion for a rehearing was made and granted, and the appellees appeared and objected that the court had no jurisdiction in the matter of the petition, and after argument the court so held and denied the petition for want of jurisdiction only, and allowed an appeal to this court.

NOTE.—On the right of a court of bankruptcy to enjoin proceedings in a state court—see note to Garner v. Second Nat. Bank, 16 C. C. A. 96.

In dismissing the petition the district judge certified that the following questions arose before him, namely:

"1. Do the provisions of the 2d clause of § 23 of the act of Congress known as the bankruptcy act of 1898 control and limit the jurisdiction of the several district courts of the United States, so that said courts cannot permanently enjoin a creditor of the bankrupt who has proved his debt in the bankruptcy court, from collecting a judgment recovered in the state court, and from making levy under an execution taken out on said judgment; and do they limit the jurisdiction of the said courts so that these courts may not require said creditor to submit the controversy to their judgment?

"2. Do the provisions of the 2d clause of § 23 of the act of Congress known as the bankruptcy act of 1898 control and limit the jurisdiction of the several district courts of the United States, so that said courts cannot permanently enjoin a creditor of the bankrupt who has not proved his debt in the bankruptcy court, from collecting a judgment recovered in the state court, and from making levy under execution taken out on said judgment; and do they limit the jurisdiction of the said courts so that these courts may not require said creditor to submit the controversy to their judgment?

"3. Do the provisions of the 2d clause of § 23 of the act of Congress known as the bankruptcy act of 1898 control and limit the jurisdiction of the several district courts of the United States over controversies between the trustee and a third person in the possession of property alleged to belong to the bankrupt, it being also alleged that said third person has no beneficial interest in the said property, but has the sole duty of paying or delivering it over in settlement of the debts of the bankrupt?

[623] "4. Can the district court of the United States entertain *jurisdiction of proceedings on petition by a trustee in bankruptcy to recover property alleged to belong to the bankrupt, but held under a claim of lien or security by the bankrupt's creditor, or by third parties for the benefit of said creditors?

"5. Can the district court for the district of Massachusetts take jurisdiction over this suit as it now stands on record?"

Mr. Harry J. Jaquith in propria persona submitted the cause for appellant:

A general appearance by a creditor gives, and gave, to the bankruptcy court full power to deal with the claim and its security.

Pennoyer v. Neff, 95 U. S. 714, 24 L. ed. 565; Re Seebold, 45 C. C. A. 117, 105 Fed. 910.

The creditor was a party and was before the court as a party; all creditors are parties.

Ex parte City Bank, 3 How. 292, 11 L. ed. 188 U. S.

603; Shawhan v. Wheritt, 7 How. 627, 12 L. ed. 847; Bear v. Chase, 40 C. C. A. 182, 99 Fed. 920; Carter v. Hobbs, 92 Fed. 594; Re Cobb, 96 Fed. 821; Keegan v. King, 96 Fed. 758; Re Mason, 99 Fed. 256; Re Lesser, 100 Fed. 433; Re Fredenberg, 2 Ben. 133, Fed. Cas. No. 5,075; Re Lake, 3 Biss. 204, Fed. Cas. No. 7,992; Davis v. Anderson, 6 Nat. Bankr. Reg. 145, Fed. Cas. No. 3,623; Re Davis, 2 Nat. Bankr. Reg. 391, Fed. Cas. No. 3,618; Lee v. Franklin Ave. German Sav. Inst. 3 Nat. Bankr. Reg. 218, Fed. Cas. No. 8,188.

So that, on notice, his rights to alleged security might be determined on a petition in equity ancillary to the bankruptcy proceedings.

White v. Ewing, 159 U. S. 36, 40 L. ed. 67, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1018.

The court may compel a creditor to come in and prove and set out his security, and such security may then be passed on by the court.

Bromley v. Smith, 2 Biss. 511, Fed. Cas. No. 1,922.

The fact of proof in bankruptcy defeats and annuls the suit and the attachment made therein.

Cook v. Coyle, 113 Mass. 252.

A judgment obtained contrary to a prohibition is null and void.

Pennoyer v. Neff, 95 U. S. 714, 24 L. ed. 565.

Federal courts will give relief against such a judgment.

Marine Ins. Co. v. Hodgson, 7 Cranch, 332, 3 L. ed. 362.

Where interests have been created for the purpose of preventing recovery, relief will be granted.

Foster's Fed. Pr. § 54.

Under the Massachusetts law, bail is discharged in civil actions if the defendant is released from his liability to arrest by operation of law; and it was not necessary to surrender the bankrupt in order to maintain the claim of the estate upon the funds in the hands of Silsby.

Ingersoll v. Strong, 9 Met. 447; Collamore v. Fernald, 3 Gray, 318; Carpenter v. Turrell, 100 Mass. 452; Long v. Dickerson, 15 Blatchf. 459, Fed. Cas. No. 8,480; Beers v. Houghton, 9 Pet. 329, 9 L. ed. 145.

Had the suits been pending they might have been stayed.

Hill v. Harding, 107 U. S. 631, 27 L. ed. 493, 2 Sup. Ct. Rep. 404; Boynton v. Ball, 121 U. S. 457, 30 L. ed. 985, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 981; Re Basch, 97 Fed. 761; St. Cyr v. Daignault, 103 Fed. 854; Re Neely, 108 Fed. 371.

The final judgment denied the jurisdiction of this court over controversies between the trustee and a third person in the possession of property alleged to belong to the bankrupt, it being also alleged that said third person has no beneficial interest in the said property, but has the sole duty of paying or delivering it over in settlement of the debts of the bankrupt.

Chapman v. Brewer, 114 U. S. 158, 29 L. ed. 83, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 799; Bryan v. Bern-

heimer, 181 U. S. 188, 45 L. ed. 814, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 557; Pirie v. Chicago Title & T. Co. 182 U. S. 438, 45 L. ed. 1171, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 906; Wall v. Cox, 41 C. C. A. 408, 101 Fed. 403; Hall v. Kincell, 42 C. C. A. 360, 102 Fed. 301.

Such judgment denied the jurisdiction of this court to entertain jurisdiction of proceedings on a petition by a trustee in bankruptcy to recover property alleged to belong to the bankrupt, but held under a claim of lien or security by the bankrupt's creditor, or by a third party for the benefit of said creditor.

Sharpe v. Doyle, 102 U. S. 686, 26 L. ed. 277; Feibelman v. Packard, 109 U. S. 421, 27 L. ed. 984, 3 Sup. Ct. Rep. 289; Re Metzler, 1 Ben. 356, Fed. Cas. No. 9,512.

Universally, after the law takes the bankrupt into its own hands his creditors are prohibited from suing.

Ogden v. Saunders, 12 Wheat. 213, 6 L. ed. 606.

All creditors are described as claimants, and their interests must necessarily be adverse to the estate. But there are not adverse claimants as defined in Bardes v. First Nat. Bank, 178 U. S. 532, 44 L. ed. 1180, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1000.

The power to bring in other parties is not incompatible with § 23b.

White v. Ewing, 159 U. S. 36, 40 L. ed. 67, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1018.

Creditors can be brought in on notice.

Ingersoll v. Strong, 9 Met. 447; Collamore v. Fernald, 3 Gray, 318.

Uniformity, economy, and despatch were clearly within the intent of the bankruptcy law.

Ex parte City Bank, 3 How. 314, 11 L. ed. 613.

The framers of the act only intended that suits against third parties, not creditors, strangers to the bankruptcy proceedings, should go to the state courts, but that everything pertaining to bankrupt and creditor, including all accountings and securities between them, should be exclusively heard and determined by the district court, unless that court ordered the question tried out in a pending suit.

This view seems to be supported by the prohibition upon trustees venturing into pending suits except by order of the court.

Price v. Price, 48 Fed. 823; Re Klein, 97 Fed. 31; Bear v. Chase, 40 C. C. A. 182, 99 Fed. 920.

And this is particularly true where the litigation in the state court is practically ended.

Traders Nat. Bank v. Campbell, 14 Wall. 87, 20 L. ed. 832; Norton v. Switzer, 93 U. S. 355, 23 L. ed. 903.

Mr. Clarence W. Rowley argued the cause and filed a brief for appellees:

None of the choses in action involved are within the jurisdiction of the bankruptcy court. All must be determined in the courts where, but for the bankruptcy, the bankrupt might have prosecuted them.

Bardes v. First Nat. Bank, 178 U. S. 524, 44 L. ed. 1170, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1000;

Mitchell v. McClure, 178 U. S. 539, 44 L. ed. 1182, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1000; Hicks v. Knost, 178 U. S. 541, 44 L. ed. 1183, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1006; Bryan v. Bernheimer, 181 U. S. 188, 45 L. ed. 814, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 557; Mueller v. Nugent, 184 U. S. 1, 46 L. ed. 405, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 269.

Mr. Justice Peckham, after making the foregoing statement of facts, delivered the opinion of the court.

This proceeding is governed by the principles decided in Bardes v. First Nat. Bank, 178 U. S. 524, 44 L. ed. 1175, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1000; Bryan v. Bernheimer, 181 U. S. 188, 45 L. ed. 814, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 557, and Mueller v. Nugent, 184 U. S. 1, 46 L. ed. 405, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 269.

The objection that it is not a suit within the meaning of the 23d section of the bankruptcy law is without force. The proceeding was a summary application to the court in bankruptcy to grant an order in a matter, the result of the granting of which would be to immediately take from the surety moneys which had been deposited with him before the commencement of the proceedings in bankruptcy, and thus compel him to come into the bankruptcy court for the litigation of questions as to his right to retain the money claimed by him. It would also enjoin the plaintiffs in the state suits from proceeding to collect their judgments from the surety in the bail bonds. To extend such a jurisdiction over an adverse claimant would be within the prohibition of § 23, a and b [30 Stat. at L. 552, chap. 541, U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 3431], whether such jurisdiction were exerted by an action strictly so-called or by a summary application to the court in bankruptcy. It is the exercise of jurisdiction which the section prohibits, and the particular method of procedure in the court is immaterial. The surety in whose hands the money was deposited to indemnify him for his liability on the bail bond was an adverse claimant within the meaning of that section of the act, and could not be proceeded *against in the bankruptcy court unless by [624] his consent, as provided for therein. It is not necessary, in order to be an adverse claimant, that the surety should claim to be the absolute owner of the property in his possession. It is sufficient if, as in the present case, the money was deposited with him to indemnify him for his liability upon the bail bond, and that liability had not been determined and satisfied. If the trustee desires to test the question of the right of the surety to retain the money, he must do so in accordance with the provisions of the section of the bankrupt law above referred to.

Bryan v. Bernheimer, 181 U. S. 188, 45 L. ed. 814, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 557, does not, so far as the question here involved is concerned, touch or limit the decision in Bardes v. First Nat. Bank, 178 U. S. 524, 44 L. ed. 1175, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1000.

In Mueller v. Nugent, 184 U. S. 1, 46 L. ed. 405, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 269, it was claimed that where property of a bankrupt came into the hands of a third party before the filing of the petition in bankruptcy, as the agent of the bankrupt, and to which the agent asserted no adverse claim, the bankruptcy court, nevertheless, had no power by summary proceedings to compel the surrender of the property to the trustee in bankruptcy duly appointed. In regard to this claim it was said by the court, through Mr. Chief Justice Fuller, as follows:

"In other words, the question reduces itself to this: Has the bankruptcy court the power to compel the bankrupt or his agent to deliver up money or other assets of the bankrupt, in his possession or that of some one for him, on petition and rule to show cause? Does a mere refusal by the bankrupt or his agent so to deliver up oblige the trustee to resort to a plenary suit in the circuit court or a state court, as the case may be? If it be so, the grant of jurisdiction to cause the estates of bankrupts to be collected, and to determine controversies relating thereto, would be seriously impaired, and, in many respects, rendered practically inefficient. The bankruptcy court would be helpless indeed if the bare refusal to turn over could conclusively operate to drive the trustee to an action to recover as for an indebtedness, or a conversion, or to proceedings in chancery, at the risk of the accompaniments of delay, complication, *and expense intended to be avoided by the simpler methods of the bankrupt law.

"The position now taken amounts to no more than to assert that a mere refusal to surrender constitutes an adverse holding in fact and therefore an adverse claim when the petition was filed, and to that we cannot give our assent.

"In this case, however, respondent asserted no right or title to the property before the referee, and the circumstances under which he held possession must be accepted as found by the referee and the district court.

"In the case before us, William T. Nugent held this money as the agent of his father, the bankrupt, and without any claim of adverse interest in himself. If it was competent to deal with Davidson, the assignee in the case of Bryan v. Bernheimer, by summary proceedings, William T. Nugent could be dealt with in the same way."

In other words, Nugent's Case simply holds that, where the agent held money belonging to the bankrupt, to which he made no claim, but simply refused to give up the property, which he acknowledged belonged to the bankrupt, the bankruptcy court had power, by summary proceedings, to order him to deliver such property to the trustee in bankruptcy.

The case before us is wholly different. The surety claims the right to hold the money as against everybody until his liability on the bail bond is satisfied, and that claim is adverse to any claim that the trustee may make upon him for the money which is to indemnify him as stated.

188 U. S.

There is no difference between the two plaintiffs in the state court on account of one having proved her claim in bankruptcy and the other having failed so to do. She did not waive her claim against the surety in the bail bond even by implication, but, on the contrary, stated that she intended to retain the same.

If the trustee has the right to obtain possession of the money from the surety, he must assert it in accordance with the provisions *of § 23 of the bankruptcy act, and not by this summary proceeding in bankruptcy. [626]

The plaintiffs in the suits in the state court had the right to proceed to judgment in that court and to collect their judgments against the surety on the bail bond, and the court in bankruptcy had no power to prevent such proceedings in suits over which the state court had full cognizance. Eyster v. Gaff, 91 U. S. 521, 23 L. ed. 403, cited in Bardes v. First Nat. Bank, 178 U. S. 524, 44 L. ed. 1175, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1000.

Our conclusion is that the District Court was without jurisdiction in the matter submitted to it in the petition of the trustee, and its decree dismissing such petition for want of jurisdiction is therefore affirmed.

AMERICAN ICE COMPANY and William G. Johnson, Assignee, Appts.,
v.
EASTERN TRUST & BANKING COMPANY.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 626-632.)

Mortgage—right of mortgagee to insurance moneys—insurance by mortgagor's assignee.

The proceeds of policies of insurance on mortgaged property, taken out by the mortgagor's assignee for the benefit of creditors, inure to the trustee in the mortgage for the benefit of the bondholders secured thereby, where it requires the mortgagor to insure, and provides that in case of loss the insurance money may be applied by the trustee toward the renewal of, or additions to, the property destroyed, or, at his option, be retained and invested as a sinking fund for the redemption of the bonds, or applied to the payment of the principal.

[No. 95.]

Argued December 2, 1902. Decided February 23, 1903.

APPEAL from the Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia to review a judgment which modified a judgment of foreclosure of the Supreme Court of the District by reducing the amount of the indebtedness found due by the trial court and secured by the mortgage, and affirmed the judgment as modified. Affirmed.

NOTE.—As to the right of a mortgagee to the benefit of insurance taken in the name of the mortgagor—see note to Chipman v. Carroll (Kan.) 25 L. R. A. 305.

See same case below, 17 App. D. C. 422.

Statement by Mr. Justice Peckham:

The appellee herein was the complainant in the court of original jurisdiction and commenced its suit in the supreme court of the District of Columbia to foreclose a [627] mortgage executed *by the American Ice Company, one of the appellants, to the appellee as trustee, etc. Judgment of foreclosure was entered, from which an appeal was taken to the court of appeals of the District, where it was modified by reducing the amount of the indebtedness found due by the trial court and secured by the mortgage, and as so modified the judgment was affirmed. 17 App. D. C. 428; also reported on former hearing in the court of appeals, 14 App. D. C. 304. Another phase of the controversy appears in 6 App. D. C. 375, and 169 U. S. 295, 42 L. ed. 752, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 347.

The facts are somewhat numerous, but for the purpose of presenting the question discussed in the opinion herein the following only are necessary to be noticed:

The American Ice Company was a Maine corporation, and in that state it made a mortgage to the appellee, which was also a Maine corporation, to secure the payment of bonds executed by the ice company to the amount of $40,000, payable in instalments of $5,000 each. The bonds were payable to the mortgagee or bearer, and all were duly sold and delivered to various persons for full value before maturity. The property mortgaged embraced real estate in Maine, and also certain real estate which the mortgagor claimed to own in the city of Washington, D. C., opposite square 270, and being within the limits of the bed of the Potomac river. On this property were erected a wharf and ice houses for storing and distributing the ice gathered in Maine and shipped to Washington. The mortgage contained the following provisions as to insurance:

"Article 7. The American Ice Company hereby expressly covenants and agrees to pay any and all taxes, assessments, and governmental charges assessed or laid upon the property herein conveyed or intended so to be, and also to keep said premises and property at all times insured in such insurance companies as may be approved by the trustee, in such amounts as shall reasonably protect all the insurable property, payable in case of loss to the trustee as its interest may appear. In case of loss the insurance money may be applied by the trustee toward the renewal of or additions to the property destroyed or injured, or, at the option of the trustee, the money may either be retained

[628]*and invested in such securities as it approves, as a sinking fund for the redemption of the bonds when due, or be applied to the payment of the principal of such of the aforesaid bonds as may be at the time due and unpaid and of the interest which may at that time have accrued upon the principal and be unpaid, without discrimination or preference; and ratably to the aggregate amount of said unpaid principal and accrued and unpaid interest, rendering the surplus, if any, to the American Ice Company, or to whomsoever may be lawfully and equitably entitled to receive the same."

The mortgagor company thereafter fell into financial difficulties, defaulted in the payment of its bonds and other indebtedness, and on October 13, 1893, it made an assignment to William G. Johnson, the other appellant, as assignee, for the benefit of its creditors. The assignee took possession of the real property mortgaged and situate in Washington, and in November, 1896, took out fire insurance policies to the extent of $3,000 on the buildings and improvements on the Washington property, the premiums being paid from the assigned estate. On February 11, 1896, the buildings and improvements were destroyed by fire and the insurance moneys were paid to the assignee, who set up in his answer to the bill of foreclosure that he had taken out the insurance upon his separate interest as owner of the equity of redemption for the benefit of all the creditors of the ice company, secured and unsecured; while the trustee claims the insurance moneys for the benefit of the bondholders.

The trial court decreed the foreclosure of the mortgage and sale of the mortgaged premises, and in the event that the proceeds arising therefrom should be insufficient to pay the bonded indebtedness, it further decreed that the assignee should pay to the trustee the insurance moneys, or so much as might be necessary to pay the deficit, and that the trustee should apply the same as directed.

Mr. William G. Johnson argued the cause and filed a brief for appellants:

The assignee, representing general creditors and being the owner in fee of the equity of redemption, had an insurable interest in the property, separate and distinct from that of the trustee under the mortgage; and it was that interest which the assignee undertook to insure.

Royal Ins. Co. v. Stinson, 103 U. S. 25, 26 L. ed. 473; United States v. American Tobacco Co. 166 U. S. 468, 41 L. ed. 1081, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 619; Wheeler v. Factors & T. Ins. Co. 101 U. S. 439, 25 L. ed. 1055; Wainer v. Milford Mut. F. Ins. Co. 153 Mass. 335, 11 L. R. A. 598, 26 N. E. 877.

At the time of the insurance and of the fire the assignee in this case was in possession of the property on which the insurance was effected, and of its rents and profits. That possession was adjudged rightful by this court.

Willis v. Eastern Trust & Bkg. Co. 169 U. S. 295, 42 L. ed. 752, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 347.

A covenant to insure, unless upon the express obligation of both parties, and not at the option of either, that the insurance be expended in repairs (in which case it is a covenant to repair by particular means), is not one running with the land, but lacks the essential elements of such a covenant.

Platt, Covenants, 183, 185, 186, 187, 188; Cushing v. Thompson, 34 Me. 496; Carpenter v. Providence Washington Ins. Co. 16 Pet. 495, 10 L. ed. 1044.

That covenants to insure merely are not covenants running with the land has been expressly decided by the court of appeals of New York.

Dunlop v. Avery, 89 N. Y. 592; Reid v. McCrum, 91 N. Y. 412.

Mr. B. F. Leighton argued the cause and filed a brief for appellee:

A covenant to insure runs with the land, and is not a mere personal obligation of the covenantor.

Thomas v. Vonkapff, 6 Gill & J. 372; Vernon v. Smith, 5 Barn. & Ald. 10; Re Sands Ale Brewing Co. 3 Biss. 175, Fed. Cas. No. 12,307.

A covenant to rebuild buildings destroyed or injured by fire, which were upon the property at the time of the covenant, is a covenant running with the land.

Spencer's Case, 1 Smith Lead. Cas. 116.

If the covenant in controversy was merely a covenant to insure, without more, it might be questionable whether it ran with the land or was a mere personal obligation binding the covenantor alone.

Dunlop v. Avery, 89 N. Y. 596; Reid v. McCrum, 91 N. Y. 412.

The assignee under an assignment for the benefit of creditors is the representative of the assignor, and not the representative of the creditors, and cannot, therefore, take to himself any of their rights. He succeeds to and enjoys the rights of the assignor, and none other, except that the property in his hands is not liable to execution. He is but the assignor himself, so far as the rights of the creditors are concerned.

Burrill, Assignm. 391.

Where there is an agreement between the mortgagor and the mortgagee that the mortgagor shall keep the premises insured for the benefit of the mortgagee, and the mortgagor takes out a policy of insurance in his own name, which is not assigned to the mortgagee or made payable to him in any way, the mortgagee has an equitable lien upon the proceeds of the policy; and this agreement may be shown by parol evidence.

Chipman v. Carroll, 53 Kan. 163, 25 L. R. A. 305, 35 Pac. 1109; Giddings v. SeEVERS, 24 Md. 372; Miller v. Aldrich, 31 Mich. 411; Cromwell v. Brooklyn F. Ins. Co. 44 N. Y. 46, 4 Am. Rep. 641; Nichols v. Baxter, 5 R. I. 491; Ellis v. Kreutzinger, 27 Mo. 311, 72 Am. Dec. 270; Lazarus v. Commonwealth Ins. Co. 2 Am. Lead. Cas. 834; Grange Mill Co. v. Western Assur. Co. 118 Ill. 396, 9 N. E. 274; Masury v. Southworth, 9 Ohio St. 348.

Had this insurance been effected by the ice company, there could be no question as to the right of the appellee to intercept the insurance money, and apply it, so far as necessary, in the discharge of the bonded debt. Has the assignee of the grantor in the deed of trust a better right to the insurance money?

188 U. S.

Wheeler v. Factors & T. Ins. Co. 101 U. S. 439, 25 L. ed. 1055.

*Mr. Justice Peckham, after making the [629] above statement of facts, delivered the opinion of the court:

The appellants have made several assignments of error which have been argued before us, but the only one we think it necessary to notice is that which relates to the disposition of the moneys received by the assignee on account of the insurance effected by him upon the property destroyed by fire.

The assignee claims to be entitled to pay these moneys for the benefit of all the creditors, unsecured as well as secured, while the appellee, the trustee in the mortgage, demands that the moneys should be paid to it for the purpose of reducing the deficit which may arise from the sale of the mortgaged premises, and the courts below have so decreed. The claim of the appellee is founded upon the language used in the mortgage, by which the ice company was to keep the "premises and property at all times insured . . . in such amounts as shall reasonably protect all the insurable property. . . . In case of loss the insurance money may be applied by the trustee toward the renewal of or additions to the property destroyed or injured, or, at the option of the trustee, the money may either be retained and invested in such securities as it approves, as a sinking fund for the redemption of the bonds when due, or to be applied to the payment of the principal" of such bonds, etc. This language, it is urged, takes the case out of the ordinary rule that a simple covenant to insure, contained in a mortgage, does not run with the land. The assignee appellant founds his claim upon the assertion that, as assignee, he was the owner of the equity of redemption, having an insurable interest in the premises as such, and that, in fact, he intended such insurance for the benefit of all creditors, and not as a fund for the security of the bondholders alone.

In Farmers' Loan & T. Co. v. Penn Plate Glass Co. 186 U. S. 434, 46 L. ed. 1234, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 842, we had occasion to examine the nature and effect of a covenant to insure contained in a mortgage, and we concluded that such a covenant does not run with the land, so that one taking a conveyance subject to the mortgage comes under a primary obligation to insure. In that case the mortgage was *foreclosed and the [630] property bid in at the judicial sale, and the grantee of the master took out insurance in his own name for the purpose of insuring his own interest in the premises which he had purchased, and he repudiated in terms any obligation to insure for the benefit of the mortgagee, and accordingly the policies were issued, and they stated they did not cover the mortgagee's interest in the premises.

Here there is in substance no difference between the mortgagor and its assignee for the benefit of creditors, so far as this question is concerned. The mortgagor had indeed failed to insure, as it had covenanted to do, but when it transferred the legal title of the property to its voluntary assignee, he stood in the shoes of his assignor, and when he took out insurance policies upon the property he in effect fulfilled the obligation which had rested upon the mortgagor to insure, and the insurance thus becomes by virtue of the covenant a security for the payment of the bonds secured by the mortgage. This does not make a case of a covenant to insure running with the land as against a subsequent purchaser of the property for value, but, as we have said, it is simply the case of a taking out of insurance by a voluntary assignee having no beneficial interest in the property, and when such assignee insures the premises under the circumstances herein stated, with such a covenant in a mortgage, the insurance moneys inure to the benefit of the bondholders secured by the mortgage.

625

It was conceded in the court below that, as a general proposition, a covenant to insure was a mere personal covenant, and did not attach to and run with the land, but it was held that the peculiar language of this mortgage took it out of that rule.

Mr. Chief Justice Alvey said in the court of appeals in this case:

"It is very clear that, by the terms of the covenant, it had relation to the land, and its principal object was to keep and maintain the buildings on the property in condition for carrying on the ice business. This was the great object of the insurance required, as means of security to the bondholders. Without this, the property, by fire, might be rendered of little value, and the bondholders be left without security.

[631] By means *of the insurance it was intended that the property should be maintained as security; and hence it was provided, primarily, that the insurance money might be expended in renewal of or adding to the buildings. In such cases it has been repeatedly held that the covenant does run with the land,—at least in an equitable sense; and where an insurance has been obtained, though by an assignee, and a fire has occurred, and the insurance money has been received, a court of equity has held that the insurance money should be applied for the benefit of those for whose protection the original covenant was made." [14 App. D. C. 331.]

The cases of Vernon v. Smith, 5 Barn. & Ald. 7; Thomas v. Vonkappf, 6 Gill & J. 372; Miller v. Aldrich, 31 Mich. 411; Ellis v. Kreutzinger, 27 Mo. 311, 72 Am. Dec. 270; Nichols v. Baxter, 5 R. I. 491; Masury v. Southworth, 9 Ohio St. 348, and Re Sands Ale Brewing Co. 3 Biss. 175, Fed. Cas. No. 12,307,—were cited by the chief justice in support of his contention.

In the case of Wheeler v. Factor's & T. Ins. Co. 101 U. S. 439, 25 L. ed. 1055, it was held that where a mortgagor is bound by his covenant to insure the mortgaged premises for the better security of the mortgagees, the latter have, to the extent of their interest in the property destroyed, an equitable lien upon the money due from the policy taken out by him, and that this equity exists, although the contract provides that, in case of the mortgagor's failure to procure and assign such insurance, the mortgagees may procure it at the mortgagor's expense.

So in this case, we practically have a fulfillment of the mortgagor's covenant to insure, because its voluntary assignee, standing in its shoes, did himself insure the premises, and such insurance inures to the benefit of the mortgagee, because the assignee is a voluntary one, and is but carrying out an obligation imposed originally upon his assignor. The peculiar language of the mortgage upon the subject of insurance takes it out of the general rule governing such covenants.

We think the case at bar is not covered by the case of Farmers' Loan & T. Co. v. Penn Plate Glass Co. 186 U. S. 434, 46 L. ed. 1234, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 842, and that the court below made the proper decree in relation to the insurance moneys.

We have examined the other assignments of error argued *before us, but are of opinion that they are clearly untenable and were properly disposed of by the court below.

Finding no error in the record, the judgment is affirmed.

BOSTON & MONTANA CONSOLIDATED
COPPER & SILVER MINING COM-PANY, Appt.,

v.

MONTANA ORE PURCHASING COM-
PANY et al.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 632-645.)

Courts—jurisdiction of circuit court—Federal question—not set up by allegations anticipating defense—disclaimer of anticipated defense—bill to quiet title—must allege prior suit at law—must aver possession.

1. The Federal question relied upon as conferring original jurisdiction on a circuit court of the United States must appear necessarily by plaintiff's statement of his own claim, and cannot arise from mere allegations in the bill of the defense which the defendants intend to set up, or which they rely upon.
2. A suit over the ownership of ore taken by defendants from a mining claim alleged to be the property of complainant by virtue of a patent from the United States is not brought within the jurisdiction of a circuit court of the United States by allegations in the bill that defendants intend to assert a defense based on certain other patents and the mining laws of the United States, on

NOTE.—As to Federal question as conferring jurisdiction on United States courts—see notes to Montana Ore-Purchasing Co. v. Boston & M. Consol. Copper & S. Min. Co. 35 C. C. A. 7; Bailey v. Mosher, 11 C. C. A. 308; and Re Buchanan, 39 L. ed. U. S. 884.

As to the necessity and sufficiency of allegations of possession in suits to quiet title—see note to Jackson v. Simmons, 39 C. C. A. 526.

the theory that such suit, being alleged to have been brought in equity to avoid a multiplicity of suits, is in effect one to quiet title, and that such averments are therefore necessarily set forth as part of the cause of action.

3. A bill to quiet title against a single adverse claimant must aver that complainant's title has been successfully tried at law at least once.
4. An averment of possession in the complainant is essential to the maintenance of a bill to quiet title in a Federal court, although under the state practice a person not in possession may maintain an action to quiet title.
5. Jurisdiction, if conferred on a circuit court of the United States by averments in the bill as to the defense which defendants intend to assert, is ousted by the filing of answers which disclaim any intention of relying on such defense.

[No. 103.]

Argued December 3, 1902. Decided February 23, 1903.

APPEAL from the Circuit Court of the United States for the District of Montana to review a judgment which dismissed for want of jurisdiction a bill which sought to enjoin the removal of ore from a mining claim alleged to be the property of the complainant under a patent from the United States. Affirmed.

Statement by Mr. Justice Peckham:

The appellant in this case (being the complainant below) has brought it to this court by an appeal from the judgment of the circuit court of the United States for the district of Montana dismissing its complaint and ordering judgment for the defendants on the ground that the court had no jurisdiction of the action. A decree having been entered in accordance with the direction of the court dismissing the bill, the circuit court has certified to this court the question of jurisdiction, and whether or not a Federal question is presented in complainant's amended bill and the answer of the defendant corporation.

[633] *The cause of action relates to the ownership of a certain quantity of copper ore taken and converted by the defendants from the mining ground alleged to be owned by the complainant. For the purpose of presenting the question of jurisdiction, the court below has certified to this court the amended bill and the answer of the defendants. The complainant in the bill alleges that it is the owner and entitled to possession of certain property therein described, known as and called the Pennsylvania lode mining claim, lot No. 172, situated in Summit Valley mining district, county of Silver Bow, Montana. A full description of the land is given in the bill. The complainant's title is next set out with much particularity and detail, from which it appears that the original source of its title is a United States patent covering the claim, dated April 9, 1886, issued to persons named therein, from whom the complainant derives title. It is then averred that on April 1, 1895, defendants wrongfully and unlawfully entered upon complainant's premises, and from that time on extracted from the mine large quantities of valuable ores, of the reasonable value of $500,000, and that they have continued to extract and mine ores from the premises belonging to the complainant, and are now mining and extracting ores therefrom and threatening to continue to do so unless enjoined by the court.

The land which the complainant claims to own is valuable almost exclusively for the copper, silver, and gold ores which are found there in large quantities, and it is these ores that the defendants have extracted and are threatening to continue to extract in the future.

It is averred that the complainant has no means of ascertaining the quantity or value of the ores which the defendants have extracted or may hereafter extract from such premises, and if the defendants are permitted to continue to extract such ores it will be altogether uncertain and indefinite as to what the amount or the value of such ores may be, and the complainant will be compelled to rely to a great extent on the defendants as to such amount and value; that unless the defendants are enjoined and restrained from taking the ores the complainant will be required to bring numerous actions for the determination *of the damages it has from time to time sustained by reason of such trespasses, which are continuing on the part of the defendants. Therefore the complainant brings this suit in order to avoid a multiplicity of suits in the premises; and by reason of the trespasses of the defendants and their threatened continuance the complainant has suffered and will suffer great and irreparable injury and damage, unless the defendants are enjoined from further trespass, as prayed for.

This is the complainant's cause of action, as set forth in the bill, regarding the trespass and the injury inflicted and the difficulty of proof thereof and the prevention of a multiplicity of suits.

The complainant then further averred in the bill, for the purpose, as therein stated, of showing the jurisdiction of the court to determine the matters set forth in such bill, that the determination of the controversy between the parties involved the construction of the mining laws of the United States; that the property of the complainant is a mining claim and has been patented as such under the provisions of the Revised Statutes of the United States relating to mines and mineral lands; that the defendants owned a portion of certain properties called the Rarus lode claim, lot No. 179; the Johnstown lode claim, lot No. 173; and the Little Ida lode claim, lot No. 126, which claims lie north of and partially adjoining and near to the Pennsylvania lode claim, owned by the complainant.

It is further stated that the various claims which are and will be made by the defendants as to their rights in complainant's mine by reason of their ownership of the other mines above mentioned are without foundation, yet, nevertheless, they will be urged as a defense to the cause of action set forth in the bill of complaint, and the claims of defendants are denied and disputed, as are also the facts upon which the defendants base their defense, and the law arising from the same, and complainant adds "that it disputes each and every one of the claims made by the defendants, relative to the construction of said several patents, and it (complainant) claims that all veins whose apexes lie within the Johnstown patent must be governed and regulated in extralateral rights, if any they have, [635] under the *Johnstown patent, and not under or by virtue of the Rarus patent." The complainant also averred "that the said defendants contend and claim that the complainant cannot under any circumstances obtain any relief for ores extracted within that portion of the premises owned by it, without first showing that the apices of the veins from which the ores were extracted are within the surface lines of the ground owned and claimed by the complainant, whereas your orator claims that prima facie it is the owner of all ores found within its boundaries extended downward into the earth, until it has been shown that some other person or company has some right thereto by reason of ownership of the apex of the vein within some other claim." The complainant further stated its right to enjoin defendant from mining ore beneath the ground of complainant, because no vein having its apex in the defendant's claim passes in its strike through the end lines thereof so as to confer extralateral rights.

And finally: "Wherefore, your orator shows to your honors that there is involved in the matters in controversy, between your orator and the said defendants, the numerous questions aforesaid, involving the construction of the statutes of the United States relative to locating, purchasing, and patenting of mineral lands and the construction of the statutes relative to the right of one claimant to follow veins down to and into the premises of another, under the circumstances and situation of the parties as hereinbefore set out, and also the construction of the said statutes in relation to patenting of claims and whether the vein can be patented to one person and the surface to another, and to the right of the Land Department to segregate the surface from the mineral in the ground, granting one to one person and the other to another, and as to whether said action is authorized under and by virtue of said statutes; and also as to whether, when an apex of a vein is divided upon the surface, part being within the premises granted in one patent and a part within another, as to what, if any, extralateral rights are granted under such circumstances to either party."

The answer of the defendants is also set forth in the certificate of the court below, in which the defendants deny that they [636] *wrongfully or unlawfully entered the premises of the complainant or that they took out any amount of ore belonging to the complainant from that mine, and deny that the defendants ever mined or extracted ores from premises belonging to the complainant, or threatened to do so; also deny the averments as to the value of the ore as set forth in the bill. Defendants also deny that the determination of the controversy between the parties involves a construction of the mining acts of the United States, or the construction of any statute of the United States whatever. They admit that the Rarus and the Johnstown lode claims are mineral claims, located under the laws of the United States, and that the same have been patented under those laws, and that the defendants own a portion of the lode called the Rarus lode claim. The defendants also assert that they are the owners of a certain parcel of ground within the Johnstown lode claim, and also the owners of that portion of the Pennsylvania lode claim thereafter described, and they claim the right to enter upon the premises of the complainant, namely, that portion of the Pennsylvania lode claim described in its amended bill of complaint, by reason of the fact that certain veins owned and claimed by the defendants and in their possession have their dip or apices within the Johnstown lode claim, lot No. 173, and that portion thereof owned by the defendants, and that the defendants assert the right to follow such veins on their downward course or dip, although the same so far depart from a perpendicular as to depart from the said Johnstown lode claim and from that portion thereof claimed by the defendants, and enter the premises owned and claimed by the complainant, namely, that portion of the Pennsylvania lode claim described in its amended bill of complaint. But the defendants deny that they claim the right to enter complainant's premises by reason of the fact that any veins owned or claimed by them or in their possession have their top or apices within the Rarus lode claim or in that portion thereof owned by the defendants, or by reason of the fact that the same have their top or apices within the Little Ida lode claim or any portion thereof, and deny that the defendants assert the right or any right to follow such veins on their downward course or dip, although the same so far depart *from a perpendicular as to de-[637] part from said Rarus lode claim, and to enter the premises claimed by the complainant; and deny that they assert or claim the right to enter the premises of the complainant by reason of the fact that any veins owned or claimed by the defendants have their top or apices [in said lode claim or any part thereof, but alleges that the defendants claim the right to enter the premises of the claimant by reason of the fact that certain veins have their top or apices]† within that portion of the Johnstown lode claim owned by the defendant, or that they assert the right to follow such veins on their downward course or dip, although the same so far depart from a perpendicular as to depart from the Johnstown lode claim and from the portions thereof owned by the defendants, and enter the premises of the complainant.

†The clause in brackets was, by an evident misprint, omitted from the answer as copied in the certificate of the court below, from which is here quoted the statement of the defendants' allegations. The insertion of the bracketed clause makes the statement correct as shown by the defendants' answer.

It was further averred in the answer "that in this action it makes no claim of any right under the Rarus patent to enter upon the veins within the ground claimed or owned by the complainant, but that it asserts its right to do so by reason of its ownership of a portion of the Johnstown lode claim, and the fact that the top or apices of the veins or lode in question are within said portion of the Johnstown lode claim." It also "denies that in this action it contends or claims that only the surface ground of the Johnstown claim was patented to the patentees named therein, or that all or any veins lying within the original location lines of the Rarus claim were patented to the claimant under the Rarus claim; . . . but defendant alleges that it contends and claims in this action, and in so far as this controversy between complainant and defendant is concerned, that its extralateral rights to the veins in question should be determined by its ownership of that parcel of ground now included within the Johnstown claim, and not by the Rarus, for the reason that said veins or lodes have their tops or apices within the said parcel of ground owned by defendant."

Various other denials were made, from which it appears that the only claim made by the defendants in this action is by virtue of their ownership of the Johnstown lode claim. The defendants by this answer, therefore, admit the averments in the bill that their rights must be governed and regulated in this action by reason of their ownership of the Johnstown patent, and not by virtue of the Rarus patent, and as to those rights the complainant claims that the course of the vein cannot be followed because of the nature of the ground.

Mr. Louis Marshall argued the cause, and, with Mr. John F. Forbis, filed a brief for appellant:

Federal courts will not strain to decline the exercise of jurisdiction, where a reasonable showing for assuming it has been made.

Nashville, C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Taylor, 86 Fed. 168.

A suit cannot properly be dismissed by a circuit court of the United States as not involving a controversy within the jurisdiction of the court, unless the facts as made to appear on the record create a legal certainty of that conclusion.

Barry v. Edmunds, 116 U. S. 550, 29 L. ed. 729, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 501; Deputron v. Young, 134 U. S. 241, 33 L. ed. 923, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 539.

Federal questions existing, it by no means follows that to confer jurisdiction it will be actually necessary for the court, when it comes to pass upon the case, to base its decision on those questions, or even to conclude that the appellant's position on the merits of those questions is sound.

Nashville, C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Taylor, 86 Fed. 168; Chicago L. Ins. Co. v. Needles, 113 U. S. 574, 28 L. ed. 1084, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 681; Southern P. R. Co. v. California, 118 U. S. 112, 30 L. ed. 104, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 993; Penn Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Austin, 168 U. S. 695, 42 L. ed. 630, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 223.

The fact that the case involves questions depending on general principles of law, in addition to the Federal questions, and may be eventually decided on the former, does not prevent the jurisdiction from attaching.

Osborn v. Bank of United States, 9 Wheat. 738, 6 L. ed. 204; New Orleans, M. & T. R. Co. v. Mississippi, 102 U. S. 140, 26 L. ed. 98; Nashville v. Cooper, 6 Wall. 253, 18 L. ed. 853; Little York Gold-Washing & Water Co. v. Keyes, 96 U. S. 203, 24 L. ed. 658.

This case does not come within the principle of the authorities which deny jurisdiction where it does not appear from the statement of the complainant's cause of action that a Federal question exists.

Walla Walla v. Walla Walla Water Co. 172 U. S. 1, 43 L. ed. 341, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 77; Cox v. Gilmer, 88 Fed. 343.

The attempted disclaimer by the appellees—that they make no claim of any rights under the Rarus patent in this action—is a sham, and in no view of the case can it operate as an ouster of jurisdiction.

1 Dan. Ch. Pl. & Pr. 6th Am. ed. 706; 1 Beach, Modern Eq. Pr. § 282; Bentley v. Cowman, 6 Gill & J. 152; Prescott v. Hutchinson, 13 Mass. 441; Oakham v. Hall, 112 Mass. 535.

Being designed to operate as a release, the disclaimer must be signed by the defendant himself, and his signature attested by some person competent to be a witness.

Dickerson v. Hodges, 43 N. J. Eq. 45, 10 Atl. 111; 6 Enc. Pl. & Pr. p. 728, title Disclaimer; Mardes v. Meyers, 8 Tex. Civ. App. 542, 28 S. W. 693.

A disclaimer contained in an answer, to be effective, must be absolute and unqualified.

De Uprey v. De Uprey, 27 Cal. 329, 87 Am. Dec. 81.

Where a disclaimer relates to one of several titles asserted by the party disclaiming, it merely operates as an estoppel against the assertion of the particular title thus disclaimed.

Tappan v. Boston Water Power Co. 157 Mass. 24, 16 L. R. A. 353, 31 N. E. 703.

Jurisdiction depends upon the state of things existing when an action is brought. The right to sue and to invoke jurisdiction is anterior to the defense.

Osborn v. Bank of United States, 9 Wheat. 824, 6 L. ed. 224; Sawyer v. Concordia, 4 Woods. 273, 12 Fed. 754; Mollan v. Torrance, 9 Wheat. 537, 6 L. ed. 154.

Where jurisdiction is given by the amount of plaintiff's demand, it is not ousted because there is a verdict or judgment for less, or because the demand is reduced below the limit by offsets.

McKnight v. Ramsey, 1 Cranch C. C. 40, Fed. Cas. No. 8,868; Hulsecamp v. Teel, 2 Dall. 358, Fed. Cas. No. 6,862; West v. Woods, 18 Fed. 665; Schunk v. Moline, M. & S. Co. 147 U. S. 500, 37 L. ed. 255, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 416.

So, also, jurisdiction is not lost by the complainant's change of residence subsequent to the filing of his bill or declaration.

Clarke v. Matthewson, 2 Sumn. 262, Fed. Cas. No. 2,857; Connolly v. Taylor, 2 Pet. 556, 7 L. ed. 518; Morgan v. Morgan, 2 Wheat. 297, 4 L. ed. 244; Ober v. Gallagher, 93 U. S. 199, 23 L. ed. 829; Stewart v. Dunham, 115 U. S. 61, 29 L. ed. 329, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1163; Phelps v. Oaks, 117 U. S. 236, 29 L. ed. 888, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 714.

So, where jurisdiction has been once given by the existence of diverse citizenship, it is not affected by subsequent change of parties.

Hardenbergh v. Ray, 151 U. S. 112, 38 L. ed. 93, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 305; Wetherby v. Stinson, 10 C. C. A. 243, 18 U. S. App. 714, 62 Fed. 173.

For purposes of jurisdiction of the Federal court, both in a case where jurisdiction is originally invoked on the ground that the determination of the suit depends upon some question of a Federal nature, and where the case is removed from the state court on that ground, the jurisdiction depends not upon the defenses interposed, but upon the case made by the declaration or bill of complaint.

Tennessee v. Union & P. Bank, 152 U. S. 454, 38 L. ed. 511, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 654.

Where a plaintiff complains of a trespass of a continuing nature, so that redress at law would require a multiplicity of actions, the remedy at law would not be so adequate as that afforded by a court of equity.

Holland v. Challen, 110 U. S. 15, 28 L. ed. 52, 3 Sup. Ct. Rep. 495; United States v. Wilson, 118 U. S. 89, 30 L. ed. 112, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 991; Frost v. Spitley, 121 U. S. 552, 30 L. ed. 1010, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1129.

Irrespective of the statutory provision of the Montana Code, the right to maintain an action of this character in order to prevent a multiplicity of suits falls under one of the well-recognized heads of equity jurisprudence, and has been recognized in many mining cases.

Erhardt v. Boaro, 113 U. S. 537, 28 L. ed. 1116, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 560; Waterloo Min. Co. v. Doe, 27 C. C. A. 50, 48 U. S. App. 411, 82 Fed. 45.

Statutory enactments to the effect that anyone, whether in actual possession or not, claiming title to real estate, may bring an action against any adverse claimant for the purpose of quieting his title, enlarge, but do not change the character of, the equitable rights of persons claiming title to real property; and a Federal court sitting in such a state, as a court of equity, has jurisdiction to give the relief accorded by the statute.

Holland v. Challen, 110 U. S. 15, 28 L. ed. 52, 3 Sup. Ct. Rep. 495; Reynolds v. First Nat. Bank, 112 U. S. 405, 28 L. ed. 733, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 213; Bardon v. Land & River

Improv. Co. 157 U. S. 327, 39 L. ed. 719, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 650; Clark v. Smith, 13 Pet. 195, 10 L. ed. 123.

The commission of a trespass on real estate, and of acts of waste upon it, do not constitute a possession which in itself would drive the owner to an action of ejectment, and prevent him from filing a bill quia timet.

Simmons Creek Coal Co. v. Doran, 142 U. S. 417, 35 L. ed. 1063, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 239.

Mr. John J. McHatton argued the cause, and, with Mr. John W. Cotter, filed a brief for appellees:

Actions brought on the equity side of the United States circuit court for the purpose of quieting title cannot be maintained unless the complainant is, at the time the action is brought, in the possession of the premises.

Cosmos Exploration Co. v. Gray Eagle Oil Co. 50 C. C. A. 79, 112 Fed. 4; United States Min. Co. v. Lawson, 115 Fed. 1005; California Oil & Gas Co. v. Miller, 96 Fed. 12.

So far as the complaint is concerned, in its statement of a cause of action it appears that any questions which might arise would be simply questions of fact; and this is true, even if the allegations contained in the complaint for the purpose of attempting to give the court jurisdiction were proper to be considered.

California Oil & Gas Co. v. Miller, 96 Fed. 12; Dewey Min. Co. v. Miller, 96 Fed. 1.

The controversy must be a real and substantial one; a mere claim in words is not enough.

Lampasas v. Bell, 180 U. S. 276, 45 L. ed. 527, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 368; Florida C. & P. R. Co. v. Bell, 176 U. S. 321, 44 L. ed. 486, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 399; McCain v. Des Moines, 174 U. S. 168, 43 L. ed. 936, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 644.

In a suit to quiet title to a mining claim, the fact that the defendant claims under a location does not raise a Federal question.

De Lamar's Nevada Gold Min. Co. v. Nesbitt, 177 U. S. 523, 44 L. ed. 872, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 715.

Trespass on a mining claim does not present or involve a Federal question.

Peabody Gold Min. Co. v. Gold Hill Min. Co. 97 Fed. 657; Argonaut Min. Co. v. Kennedy Min. & Mill. Co. 84 Fed. 2.

The complaint in its statement of a cause of action must present a Federal question.

Tennessee v. Union & P. Bank, 152 U. S. 454, 38 L. ed. 511, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 654; Postal Teleg. Cable Co. v. United States, 155 U. S. 482, sub nom. Postal Teleg. Cable Co. v. Alabama, 39 L. ed. 231, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 192; Oregon Short Line & U. N. R. Co. v. Skottow, 162 U. S. 495, 40 L. ed. 1050, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 869; Galveston, H. & S. A. R. Co. v. Texas, 170 U. S. 226, 42 L. ed. 1017, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 603; Florida C. & P. R. Co. v. Bell, 176 U. S. 321, 44 L. ed. 486, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 399.

A Federal question is not involved so as to give the circuit court jurisdiction, because in the course of the litigation it may become necessary to construe the Constitution or some law of the United States.

Wise v. Nixon, 78 Fed. 203; Little York Gold Washing & Water Co. v. Keyes, 96 U. S. 199, 24 L. ed. 656.

It must appear from plaintiff's statement of his cause of action.

Montana Ore-Purchasing Co. v. Boston & M. Consol. Copper & S. Min. Co. 35 C. C. A. 1, 93 Fed. 274; Florida C. & P. R. Co. v. Bell, 176 U. S. 321, 44 L. ed. 486, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 399.

Abstract questions of law are not to be considered unless it appears, from the statement of facts constituting the cause of action, that they are material and necessary to a decision of the case.

New York, L. E. & W. R. Co. v. Madison, 123 U. S. 524, 31 L. ed. 258, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 246.

A claim to land under a patent from the United States does not present a Federal question.

Florida C. & P. R. Co. v. Bell, 176 U. S. 321, 44 L. ed. 486, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 399.

A suit brought in support of an adverse claim to a mine is not a suit involving the construction of the Constitution or any law of the United States.

Bushnell v. Croke Min. & Smelting Co. 148 U. S. 682, 37 L. ed. 610, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 771; Shoshone Min. Co. v. Rutter, 177 U. S. 505, 44 L. ed. 864, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 726; Blackburn v. Portland Gold Min. Co. 175 U. S. 571, 44 L. ed. 276, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 222.

Plaintiff cannot anticipate the defense of the defendant, and, by statements contained in his pleadings for that purpose, present a Federal question.

Montana Ore-Purchasing Co. v. Boston & M. Consol. Copper & S. Min. Co. 35 C. C. A. 1, 93 Fed. 274; Excelsior Wooden Pipe Co. v. Pacific Bridge Co. 185 U. S. 282, 46 L. ed. 910, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 681; Florida C. & P. R. Co. v. Bell, 176 U. S. 321, 44 L. ed. 486, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 399. See also Third Street & Suburban R. Co. v. Lewis, 173 U. S. 457, 43 L. ed. 766, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 451; Colorado Cent. Consol. Min. Co. v. Turck, 150 U. S. 138, 37 L. ed. 1030, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 35; Eagan v. Hart, 165 U. S. 188, 41 L. ed. 680, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 300.

Where jurisdiction is shown by the complaint it may be taken away by the answer.

Robinson v. Anderson, 121 U. S. 522, 30 L. ed. 1021, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1011; Florida C. & P. R. Co. v. Bell, 176 U. S. 321, 44 L. ed. 486, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 399; Excelsior Wooden Pipe Co. v. Pacific Bridge Co. 185 U. S. 282, 46 L. ed. 910, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 681; Montana Ore-Purchasing Co. v. Boston & M. Consol. Copper & S. Min. Co. 35 C. C. A. 1, 93 Fed. 274; Third Street & Suburban R. Co. v. Lewis, 173 U. S. 457, 43 L. ed. 766, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 451; Colorado Cent. Consol. Min. Co. v. Turck, 150 U. S. 138, 37 L. ed. 1030, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 35.

Where the complaint does not show that a Federal question is involved and necessary to a decision of the case, it is equally well settled that a defense which may be interposed by pleading or evidence under a law of the United States will not confer jurisdiction.

Peabody Gold Min. Co. v. Gold Hill Min. Co. 49 C. C. A. 637, 111 Fed. 817; Pratt v. Paris Gaslight & Coke Co. 168 U. S. 255, 42 L. ed. 458, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 62.

Mr. Justice Peckham, after making the foregoing statement of facts, delivered the opinion of the court:

It is quite plain that the various averments contained in the complainant's bill for the purpose of showing jurisdiction in the circuit court are wholly unnecessary in order to make out complainant's cause of action for the conversion of ore by the defendants on premises belonging to complainant. To make out a prima facie case on the part of complainant, so far as its right to the ore in question is concerned, all that was necessary was to show the patent and the complainant's possession under it, and from such patent and possession the presumption would be that the complainant was the owner of all ores found within the boundaries contained in the patent extended downward into the earth, and the burden would then rest upon the defendants to show that, notwithstanding such presumption, they had the right to enter upon and take the ore from the ground within the limit described in the patent under which the complainant derives title. It could then prove facts to sustain its averments in regard to ascertaining the quantity and value of the ores which the defendants were extracting or might extract from the complainant's premises, and that it would be altogether uncertain and indefinite as to what amount of ores or the value thereof the defendants might extract in the future, and that the complainant would be compelled to rely upon the good faith and showing of the defendants as to the amount and value of the ores which they had theretofore extracted and might thereafter extract from the premises. Indeed, the complainant asserted in the bill, an extract from which is contained in the foregoing statement, that prima facie it is the owner of all ores found within its boundaries extended downwards into the earth, until the contrary has been shown. It would be wholly unnecessary and improper, in order to prove complainant's cause of action, to go into any matters of defense which the defendants might possibly set up, and then attempt to reply to such defense, and thus, if possible, to show that a Federal question might or probably would arise in the course of the trial of the case. To allege such defense and then make an answer to it before the defendant has the opportunity to itself plead or prove its own defense is inconsistent with any known rule of pleading so far as we are aware, and is improper.

The rule is a reasonable and just one that the complainant in the first instance shall be confined to a statement of its cause of action, leaving to the defendant to set up in his answer what his defense is, and, if anything more than a denial of complainant's cause of action, imposing upon the defendant the burden of proving such defense.

Conforming itself to that rule, the complainant would not, in the assertion or proof of its cause of action, bring up a single Federal question. The presentation of its cause of action would not show that it was one arising under the Constitution or laws of the United States.

The only way in which it might be claimed that a Federal question was presented would be in the complainant's statement of what the defense of defendants would be, and complainant's answer to such defense. Under these circumstances the case is brought within the rule laid down in Tennessee v. Union & Planters' Bank, 152 U. S. 454, 38 L. ed. 511, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 654. That case has been cited and approved many times since, among the latest being Arkansas v. Kansas & T. Coal Co. 183 U. S. 185, 46 L. ed. 144, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 47, where it was stated by Mr. Chief Justice Fuller, speaking for the court, at p. 188, L. ed. p. 146, Sup. Ct. Rep. p. 48, as follows:

"Hence it has been settled that a case cannot be removed from a state court into the circuit court of the United States on the sole ground that it is one arising under the Constitution, laws, or treaties of the United States, unless that appears by plaintiff's statement of his own claim; and if it does not so appear, the want of it cannot be supplied by any statement of the petition for removal or in the subsequent pleadings. And, moreover, that jurisdiction is not conferred by allegations that defendant intends to assert a defense based on the [640] Constitution *or a law or treaty of the United States, or under statutes of the United States or of a state, in conflict with the Constitution." See also Blackburn v. Portland Gold Min. Co. 175 U. S. 571, 44 L. ed. 276, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 222; Shoshone Min. Co. v. Rutler, 177 U. S. 505, 44 L. ed. 864, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 726.

The test of the right of removal is that the case must be one over which the circuit court might have exercised original jurisdiction under § 1 of the act of March 3, 1887, as corrected by the act of August 13, 1888 (24 Stat. at L. 552, chap. 373, U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 514; 25 Stat. at L. 433, chap. 866). The cases hold that to give the circuit court original jurisdiction the Federal question must appear necessarily in the statement of the plaintiff's cause of action, and not as mere allegations of the defense which the defendants intend to set up, or which they rely upon. Third Street & Suburban R. Co. v. Lewis, 173 U. S. 457, 43 L. ed. 766, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 541.

It is urged, however, on the part of the complainant, that its averments in regard to the jurisdiction of the court are necessary to be set forth as a part of its cause of action, and that they show that the appellees are questioning complainant's title and interfering with its enjoyment of its property right by asserting ownership to a portion of such claim of complainant based upon two government patents issued for the Rarus and Johnstown claims respectively, and although such assertion of ownership of the appellees is, as complainant avers, without legal foundation, yet, for reasons stated in the bill, the consideration of which necessitates an examination of Federal questions, the case is in effect one to quiet complainant's title or to prevent an interference with its rights and property, and complainant avers that the allegations of jurisdiction relate to its cause of action; that they state the controversy existing between the parties as to its subject-matter, not as anticipatory of the defense, but as establishing the complainant's right to have its title quieted.

But it is plain that the suit is not in truth a suit to quiet title. There is a cause of action alleged that is not founded upon any such theory, to prove which it is not necessary or proper to go into the defendants' title or to anticipate its defense to the cause of action alleged by the complainant. What is thereafter said is for the purpose of showing jurisdiction in the Federal *court, not over an equitable cause [641] of action in the nature of a bill to quiet title, but over a cause of action arising out of the laws of the United States; and the various mining laws of the United States are cited to show the truth of the assertion. It is also clear that jurisdiction in a Federal court cannot be predicated in this case upon an assertion that it is brought to prevent a multiplicity of suits. Even then the complainant's proof in the first instance would remain the same as already stated. The frequent trespasses, as alleged, of the defendants, by reason of which an equitable remedy by injunction is sought, might exist, and still it would not necessarily appear from the complainant's proof that the defendant's justification arose by reason of an alleged right under the Constitution or laws of the United States. That might appear in the defense, but would constitute no cause of action by complainant.

If, however, the bill is to be looked upon as one in the nature of a bill of peace or to quiet title, it is fatally defective in that aspect. There are two distinct kinds or classes of bills of peace, or bills to quiet title, the one brought for the purpose of establishing a general right between a single party and numerous persons claiming distinct and individual interests; the other for the purpose of quieting complainant's title to land against a single adverse claimant. In the second class the suit can be maintained by a party in possession against a single defendant ineffectually seeking to establish a legal title by repeated actions of ejectment, and in such case it is necessary to aver that the title of complainant has been established by at least one successful trial at law before equity will entertain jurisdiction. 3 Pom. Eq. Jur. 2d ed. § 1394, note 3, and 1 Pom. Eq. Jur. § 246.

This bill evidently would come under the second of these classes, and it is defective in not containing an averment that the complainant's title has been at least once successfully tried at law. On the contrary, it appears from the bill itself that an action at law has been commenced involving the same questions, but has not been tried.

[642] It is also objected that, as a bill of peace or to quiet title, it is defective, because there is no allegation that the complainant was in possession, which is necessary in such a bill. If not in *possession, an action of ejectment would lie. The contention that under the Code of Montana a person not in possession may maintain an action to quiet title cannot prevail in a Federal court. Whitehead v. Shattuck, 138 U. S. 146, 34 L. ed. 873, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 276.

The complainant fails, on both these grounds, to show that its bill is sufficient as one to quiet its title, and it therefore fails to show that the case is not covered by the Union & Planters' Bank, and other cases, above cited. If the bill do not contain facts sufficient to constitute it a bill to quiet title, all the averments as to defendants' claims as defenses, and complainant's answers thereto, are only material for the purpose of showing that the defense may disclose facts which will show a case arising out of the mining laws of the United States. But this would not constitute complainant's cause of action.

But assuming for this purpose (what is otherwise denied) that the bill is sufficient to confer jurisdiction, it is so only because of its averments as to the defense to be made by the defendants to the complainant's cause of action. When we come to examine their answer we find that defendants disclaim any right under the patent for the Rarus lode claim, and confine their alleged rights to such as exist by virtue of their ownership of the Johnstown lode claim only. Defendants' claim of right to follow the veins which they aver have their top or apices in the Johnstown patent is denied by complainant. It sets up in the bill that it denies and disputes the fact that the veins upon which defendants have mined in the claim of complainant, even if such veins had their apices in defendants' ground (which complainant does not admit), are yet such veins as can be followed on their dip beyond the lines of defendants' possessions into the ground of complainant, and complainant alleges that the veins are broken and intersected by faults in such a manner that the same cannot be traced or followed from the ground of defendants into that of the complainant, and therefore defendants have no right to enter upon the ground of complainant for the purpose of extracting ores therefrom by reason of their ownership of the apices of any veins within their ground. There is the further fact alleged that the veins, if any, which have [643] their *apices in defendants' claim, do not pass in their strike through the end lines of defendants' claim. This alleged inability to follow the veins, assuming that they apex in the defendants' Johnstown patent, and the allegation as to the veins not passing through end lines, are mere questions of fact, depending upon the proof as to the truth of those averments. This does not constitute a question arising out of the 188 U. S.

Constitution or laws of the United States. The answer, by its denials and disclaimers as to what it sets up by way of defense, takes away a defense which might show the case as arising under such Constitution or laws.

Complainant contends, however, that if a case of jurisdiction is made out by the bill, the court is not ousted thereof by whatever is set up in the answer. In this case the contention cannot be maintained. The only foundation for the alleged jurisdiction consists of the averments of complainant relative to the contention of the defendants as to their defense. Now, if it appear from the answer of defendants that no such claim as is necessary to give the court jurisdiction is in fact made, but, on the contrary, is disclaimed and denied, then the basis of jurisdiction fails, and the court cannot proceed. This is so held in Robinson v. Anderson, 121 U. S. 522, 524, 30 L. ed. 1021, 1022, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1012. In that case Mr. Chief Justice Waite, speaking for this court and delivering its opinion, said:

"Even if the complaint, standing by itself, made out a cause of jurisdiction, which we do not decide, it was taken away as soon as the answers were in, because if there was jurisdiction at all it was by reason of the averments in the complaint as to what the defenses against the title of the plaintiffs would be, and these were of no avail as soon as the answers were filed and it was made to appear that no such defenses were relied on." See also Crystal Springs Land & Water Co. v. Los Angeles, 82 Fed. 114, Affirmed in 177 U. S. 169, 44 L. ed. 720, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 573.

Jurisdiction in this class of cases must be based upon the fact that the case is one arising under the Constitution or laws of the United States. If it appear to be such in the plaintiff's pleading simply because of the allegations as to what the defenses are on the part of the defendant, if when the answer *come in it is seen that no such de- [644] fense in fact is set up or insisted upon, it is then seen that no such case exists as stated in the complaint, and no jurisdiction therefor exists to try questions which are not of a kind coming within the statute, and the court should then dismiss for want of jurisdiction.

The complainant also objected that the defendants did not properly or effectively disclaim or deny the allegations of the complainant's bill.

In relation to the evasive character of the answer, it was stated by Circuit Judge Gilbert in 35 C. C. A. 1, 93 Fed. 274, in regard to this case, as follows:

"It is objected that the denials of the answer do not fully and explicitly traverse the new averments of the amended bill, but that they are denials only that the defendant relies in 'this action' upon the alleged rights and claims, and that the defendant disclaims only for the purpose of this present suit, without waiving its right to assert such claims in some other suit or proceeding hereafter. No exception, however, was taken to the answer for insufficiency. It was accepted as responding to the allegations of the amended bill. We think it was properly so accepted. If, in view of some possible other action affecting other interests, the defendant has attempted to reserve the privilege to assert other rights under the Rarus patent, it is immaterial to the present controversy. It is only to the rights asserted by the complainant in this suit that the defendant must make answer. It is required to make its defense to the allegations of the bill, and to show cause why the relief prayed for should not be decreed. It has answered as to its rights to extract the ores in question. It says that it claims nothing by virtue of the Rarus patent, but that it relies solely upon the fact that the ores it has taken belong to a vein which has its apex in the Johnstown lode claim, and in its strike passes through the end lines of said claim, and in its downward course extends beneath the surface of the complainant's claim. Upon such a bill and such an answer all questions concerning the right of the defendant to mine the ores in controversy are determinable, and the decree, if against the defendant, would be as effective [645] to bar it from hereafter asserting *rights under the Rarus patent as would be a decree upon any other form of answer."

We concur in the views thus expressed, and the result of the whole case is that the complainant failed to show any jurisdiction in the Circuit Court to try this case, and the order of the Circuit Court dismissing complainant's bill and giving judgment for the defendant is therefore affirmed.

BOSTON & MONTANA CONSOLIDATED
COPPER & SILVER MINING COM-PANY, Plff. in Err.,

v.

MONTANA ORE PURCHASING COM-
PANY et al.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 645.)

Courts—jurisdiction of circuit court—Federal question—not set up by allegations anticipating defense.

This case is governed by the decision in Boston & Montana Consolidated Copper & Silver Mining Company v. Montana Ore Purchasing Company, ante, 626.

[No. 102.]

Argued December 3, 1902. Decided February 23, 1903.

IN ERROR to the Circuit Court of the United States for the District of Montana to review a judgment which dismissed for want of jurisdiction a complaint in an action to recover damages sustained by the wrongful taking of ore from a mining claim. Affirmed.

634

Mr. Louis Marshall argued the cause, and, with Mr. John F. Forbis, filed a brief for plaintiff in error.

Mr. John J. McHatton argued the cause, and, with Mr. John W. Cotter, filed a brief for defendants in error.

For contentions of counsel see their briefs as reported in Boston & M. Consol. Copper & S. Min. Co. v. Montana Ore Purchasing Co. ante, 626.

Mr. Justice Peckham delivered the opinion of the court:

This case arises upon demurrer to the complainant's complaint. The demurrer was sustained and the complaint dismissed, and judgment given for the defendants, and thereupon the circuit judge certified the question of jurisdiction to this court.

The action was brought to recover $500,000 damages sustained by the plaintiff in error by reason of the wrongful taking of ore of that value from the mining claim of the plaintiff in error. Substantially the same averments are made in the complaint as in the case which immediately precedes and the questions involved are the same, excepting that the former is a suit in equity and this is an action at law.

For the reasons stated in the opinion in No. 103 [Boston & M. Consol. Copper & Silver Min. Co. v. Montana Ore Purchasing Co. 188 U. S. 632, ante, 626, 23 Sup. Ct. Rep. 434], the judgment in this case is affirmed.

BOSTON & MONTANA CONSOLIDATED
COPPER & SILVER MINING COM-PANY, Appt.,

v.

CHILE GOLD MINING COMPANY et al.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 645-646.)

Courts—jurisdiction of circuit court—Federal question—not set up by allegations anticipating defense.

This case is governed by the decision in Boston & Montana Consolidated Copper & Silver Mining Company v. Montana Ore Purchasing Company, ante, 626.

[No. 104.]

Argued December 3, 1902. Decided February 23, 1903.

APPEAL from the Circuit Court of the United States for the District of Montana to review a judgment dismissing for want of jurisdiction a complaint in a suit to prevent interference with complainant's right of property in a mining claim. Affirmed.

Mr. Louis Marshall argued the cause, and, with Mr. John F. Forbis, filed a brief for appellant.

Mr. John J. McHatton argued the cause and, with Mr. John W. Cotter, filed a brief for appellees.

For contentions of counsel see their briefs

188 U. S.

as reported in Boston & M. Consol. Copper & S. Min. Co. v. Montana Ore Purchasing Co. ante, 626.

[646] *Mr. Justice Peckham delivered the opinion of the court:

This case involves the same questions as that of the Boston & M. Consol. Copper & Silver Min. Co. v. Montana Ore Purchasing Co. (No. 103 [188 U. S. 632, ante, 626, 23 Sup. Ct. Rep. 434]), the only point of difference between the two being that the Chile Gold Mining Company and the other defendants herein are sued as lessees of the Montana Ore Purchasing Company, they having, as such lessees, attempted to interfere with the complainant's right of property. The complaint was dismissed for want of jurisdiction.

For the reasons stated in the opinion in No. 103, this decree is also affirmed.

FRANCIS WINSLOW et al., Appts.,
v.

BALTIMORE & OHIO RAILROAD COMPANY.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 646-661.)

Covenant—to renew—satisfied by one renewal—trusts—power of one trustee to execute lease—ratification—specific performance—part performance—statute of frauds—injunction against dispossession to permit condemnation.

1. A covenant in a lease to renew at its expiration with the same covenants and privileges as contained in the original lease is satisfied by one renewal without the insertion of another covenant to renew.
2. A valid lease of real property containing a covenant to renew cannot be made by one of the trustees in whom the title to the property is vested, as such an act is of a nature to require the deliberate discretion and judgment of all the trustees.
3. Recognition by all the trustees of a lease for five years of a portion of the realty included in the trust estate, executed by one of their number, even assuming that it could cure the invalidity of such lease under the statute of frauds, must have been founded upon full knowledge of all the facts, in order to have that effect.
4. The continued possession of land by a lessee after the expiration of a five years' lease which contained a covenant to renew for a like period, and the payment and acceptance of rent therefor during the period covered by the renewal clause, are not such part performance as calls for the specific performance of a covenant to renew contained in a lease which purports to have been executed in compliance with the renewal covenant in the prior lease, but which is invalid under the statute of frauds because signed by only one of the trustees in whom the title to the property was vested.

5. The receipt of rent by the beneficiary in a trust, after the expiration of a lease containing a covenant to renew, in ignorance of the invalidity of such lease under the statute of frauds, is not such part performance as calls for the specific performance of such covenant,—especially where her action was unknown to the trustees, who had substantially refused to renew on the old basis, and took place while negotiations were pending between them and the lessee relative to the terms of a continued occupation of the land.
6. A railroad company which enters upon the use and occupation of real property under a lease, with a view to its purchase when that can properly be effected, and constructs a portion of its line thereon, is entitled to an injunction restraining its lessors for a reasonable time from proceeding to dispossess the company from the land, in order to enable it to condemn such land in proper proceedings for that purpose.

[No. 125.]

Argued December 17, 18, 1902. Decided February 23, 1903.

APPEAL from the Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia to review a decree which reversed the judgment of the Supreme Court of the District dismissing a bill in a suit to establish the validity of a lease and compel the specific performance of a contract to sell, and to enjoin further proceedings at law to obtain possession of the premises, and the further prosecution of an action to recover damages for its use and occupation, and directed that court to give judgment for complainant. Reversed and remanded for further proceedings.

See same case below, 18 App. D. C. 438.

Statement by Mr. Justice Peckham:

The court of appeals of the District of Columbia, reversing the judgment of the supreme court of the District (which dismissed the bill of the railroad company), directed that court to give judgment in favor of the company, and from the judgment of the court of appeals an appeal to this court has been taken by the defendants below.

The company brought this suit to obtain a judgment declaring the validity of an alleged lease to it for five years from the 1st day of August, 1897, and to compel the specific performance of an alleged contract to sell to it the same land mentioned in the lease and lying in the city of Washington, owned by the defendants as substituted trustees under the will of the late Catherine Pearson, deceased, and to enjoin the defendants from continuing proceedings at law which they had commenced to obtain possession of the premises, and also to enjoin them from the prosecution of an action to recover damages for the use and occupation of the land by the railroad company. The facts are as follows:

*Catherine Pearson in her lifetime owned [648] certain land, consisting of unimproved lots in the city of Washington, near the Balti-

NOTE.—As to when trustees cannot act separately—see note to Wilbur v. Aimey, 13 L. ed. U. S. 944.

As to when a court of equity will interfere to remove improper impediments and defects of law, or to restrain proceedings at law—see note to Davis v. Wakelee, 39 L. ed. U. S. 578. 188 U. S.

more & Ohio Railroad Company's depot, and lying on the line of its Metropolitan branch as subsequently constructed in that city. After the decease of Mrs. Pearson, and on June 30, 1868, her will was duly proved before the proper probate court in the District. In it she devised the premises to trustees for the sole and separate use of her daughter, Eliza W. Patterson—

"During the term of her natural life, and so that the same shall not be liable for the debts or subject to the control, contracts, or engagements of her present or any after-taken husband; to permit her by herself, or her special attorney appointed in writing, to be signed by her, to receive the annual income and profits of the same for her own sole and separate use, her receipt or that of her attorney so appointed as aforesaid alone to be an acquittance to the person or persons charged with the payment of such income or any part of the same, and to the extent only therein expressed to have been paid; and if she pleases to occupy, possess, and use for her own account, accommodation, and convenience and that of her family any part of the property, real and personal, so held for her separate use and benefit, she shall be allowed to do so; and if at any time the said Eliza Patterson shall in writing, to be signed by her in the presence of and to be attested by a subscribing witness, desire the said Carlisle P. Patterson, William H. Philip, and Walter S. Cox, or the survivors and survivor of them, to sell any part of the estate, real and personal, held by them for her separate use, for the purpose of changing the investment thereof, it shall be lawful for the said named trustees or the survivors or survivor of them to sell the same for such purpose only, and to transfer and convey the absolute estate in fee therein, to the purchaser thereof; to receive the proceeds of any and every such sale of the purchaser, who shall not be required to see to the application thereof; and to invest the same in such manner as the said Eliza W. Patterson may require; and such new investment shall be held by the said trustees for the same use, trusts, and [649] purposes, and with the *same powers and authority of sale and reinvestment, as is herein declared of and concerning the original trust, subject, and separate estate.

"And after the death of the said Eliza W. Patterson the said named trustees and their successors shall hold the said trust, subject, and separate estate—original and subsequently acquired by sale and reinvestment—for the use and benefit of any child, or children, of the said Eliza W. Patterson, and the issue of any child or children of the said Eliza who may die leaving issue in the lifetime of the said Eliza, and such issue shall take the share or portion of the said estate which their parent or parents would have taken had they survived the said Eliza. And if the said Eliza W. Patterson shall die without leaving a child or children, or issue of any child or children, living at the time of her death, the said trustees and their successors shall hold the said trust, subject, and separate estate for my right heirs. And if it shall happen that either of the said trustees shall die, or become incapable of acting, or shall refuse to act in the execution of said trust, then and in every such case the continuing trustees or trustee shall from time to time nominate some other person or persons to be approved by the said Eliza W. Patterson to be trustee or trustees in the place and stead of the person or persons so dying, or becoming incapable or refusing to act, and shall convey and settle the said trust, subject and separate estate in such manner that the same shall be legally vested in such continuing trustees or trustee, and such person or persons so named and appointed to that office for the same uses, trusts, and purposes, and with the same power and authority of administration, sale, and reinvestment as is hereinbefore declared of and concerning the said trusts, subject, and estate, and the said new trustee or trustees shall have the same power to act in the premises in conjunction with the continuing trustees or trustee, and as survivors of them, as if they had been originally named trustee or trustees in the premises in this my last will and testament.

"I do hereby nominate and appoint Carlisle P. Patterson, William H. Philip, and W. S. Cox to be the executors of this my last will and testament."

*In 1872 the trustees under Mrs. Pearson's [650] will leased to the railroad company the land for five years, the lease containing a privilege to the railroad company to purchase such land during those five years on payment of $12,592. It also contained an agreement to renew the lease with the same covenants and privileges for another term of five years, or until the lessors were prepared to convey the premises as agreed in the lease with a perfect title in fee simple.

From the time of the first lease in 1872, and under various leases thereafter, the company occupied the land, constructed part of its branch line thereon, and paid rent therefor up to 1888. On January 30 of that year a lease was made, which was signed by the trustees and by the president of the railroad company, though not by Mrs. Patterson. By the terms of that lease the premises were rented for five years from August 1, 1887, at the same rent and with the same covenants as to renewal and for the sale of the lands as contained in the first lease of 1872. The company continued in the occupation of the premises under this lease for the five years mentioned therein. Upon October 17, 1892, the company still being in occupation of the land, another instrument was executed in the form of a lease, signed by but one of the trustees, and purporting to lease the land for five years from August 1, 1892, at the same rental as the lease of 1888, and with the same covenants to sell at the same price ($12,592), and to renew the lease for five years, as contained in the lease of 1888. This lease was signed by Winslow, alone, he then being one of the substituted trustees, but Jay, another of the substituted trustees, did not sign it, and, so far as appears, never saw it. These two substituted trustees had been duly appointed prior to or in the year 1883. The former trustee, Judge Cox, had resigned in June, 1892, and it does not appear that his successor had then been appointed.

[651] The company retained possession of the property from August 1, 1892, up to August 1, 1897, and paid the amount of money mentioned in the paper of 1892, being at the same rate that had been paid since 1872, and as was provided in the lease of 1888. About the 1st of August, 1897, questions arose as to the terms of future occupation of the land. The trustees refused *to execute any further lease, denied any obligation to renew it for any term, and said they preferred to sell, but refused to do so on the old terms, the land having in the meantime largely appreciated in value. In September, 1897, Mr. Winslow, in a letter to the company, said they were prepared to convey the property with a perfect title, and that they also preferred to execute such conveyance to any renewal of the lease. The company, however, prepared a lease, which provided for again leasing the land to it on the same terms for a period of five years, commencing on August 1, 1897, and this lease also contained a provision for a renewal for another five years, or until the lessors could convey the premises in fee simple to the company. This lease was never signed. Negotiations continued in regard to the matter, the company insisting it had the right to a renewal of the lease by virtue of the instrument dated August 1, 1892, while the trustees denied that contention, and, though willing to sell, were not willing to do so at the price named in the former lease, as they said that the value of the land had increased from $12,592 to over $30,000. During these negotiations and disputes the company retained possession of the land, and on or about February 1, 1898 (the dispute and the negotiations between the trustees and the company being still unsettled), in accordance with the custom which it had followed during the running of the various instruments since 1872, of paying the rent semi-annually on the 1st days of February and August as it accrued, it sent the money that would have been due for rent (if a lease were then in existence), in the form of a money order payable to the order of Mr. Winslow, trustee of Eliza W. Patterson, and inclosed it in a letter addressed to Mr. Winslow, in care of Fisher & Co., agents, who sent it to Mrs. Patterson, as Mr. Winslow was then absent in Nicaragua as secretary of the Canal Commission. This money order was received by Mrs. Patterson, who thereupon wrote the following letter, under date of February 5, 1898, to one of the officers of the company:

Dear Sir:—

I returned to you a few days ago the draft which you sent me for the rent of my [652] property on First street, *Washington, by the railroad company of Balto. & Ohio of $377.77. The draft was made out to Mr. Francis Winslow, trustee, and I could not draw it as Mr. Winslow is in Nicaragua, and I could not send it so far away to him, fearing it might be lost. I therefore return it to you, with the request that you would sign it, as you always have done heretofore, Cox, Jay, & Winslow, trustees. Judge Cox & Mr. Jay are both here, so that they can sign it at once and I can have the money. By giving prompt attention to this small matter of business you will greatly oblige, Eliza W. Patterson.
188 U. S.

The statement in this letter, that Judge Cox could sign the draft or order, was evidently a mistake, as his resignation had been accepted by the court years prior to the date of the letter.

The company afterwards sent back the draft, and, under some arrangement between Mrs. Patterson and Fisher & Co., which it does not appear was known by the trustees, but which was consented to by the company, the same was indorsed "Francis Winslow, trustee, by Thomas J. Fisher & Co., attorneys," and on such indorsement the money on the voucher was obtained from the company and received by Mrs. Patterson.

On August 1, 1898, the company sent a draft or money order for $377.77, the amount of rent which would have been due if there had been a valid lease in existence, the draft being sent to Mr. Winslow, trustee, which he declined to negotiate, and insisted that the rights of the company had been terminated by his notice prior to and in September, 1897, and that since that time the company had been occupying the property as tenants by sufferance.

This voucher, and those which succeeded it, and which were forwarded to Mr. Winslow, as trustee, and made payable to his order, were retained by him until January, 1900, when they were returned to the company and a check given for the aggregate amount under an agreement that its acceptance should be without prejudice to the rights of the respective parties and their claims relating to the leasing of the land or *the renewal of the lease, or to any ques- [653] tion or matter connected therewith.

The dispute between the parties continued, as also did the negotiations in regard to a settlement thereof, until some time in March, 1900, when Mr. Winslow, Mr. Jay, and the American Security & Trust Company, the substituted trustees, took proceedings against the company before a justice of the peace to obtain possession of the premises, based upon a notice to quit, given under the statute. Judgment in favor of the trustees was rendered in that case by default, and an appeal by the company, as provided for by law, was prosecuted, and was undetermined at the time of the commencement of this suit. On August 15, 1900, the substituted trustees also commenced an action against the company for the use and occupation of the premises from August 1, 1897, to April 16, 1900, claiming $6,500, with interest from the last-named date. Soon thereafter the company commenced this suit asking for a judgment that the company was entitled to a lease from August 1, 1897, for five years, and also for a judgment for specific performance of the contract to sell, and obtained an injunction restraining the prosecution of both of the proceedings above mentioned.

The trial court held that there had been no valid contract for a sale, and that there was then no valid lease in existence such as was required to be proved before a court of equity would decree specific performance. The court expressed no opinion as to the effect of continued occupation after the expiration of any lease under the facts in the case with reference to the amount of the rental to be paid. That was a matter which it was held could be determined on the law side of the court. A decree was therefore entered dismissing the bill and dissolving the injunction which had been granted.

The court of appeals reversed the judgment of the trial court and remanded the case, and in its opinion it was stated as follows:

"In view of what has been said, we are of opinion that, under the provisions of the lease of 1892, executed by Francis Winslow, trustee, for and on behalf of the life tenant, Mrs. Eliza W. Patterson, the appellant was and is entitled to one *renewal of such lease for the term of five years from and after the 1st day of August, 1897, upon the terms and conditions of said lease as to the rents to be paid therefor, and that during the continuance of such term no suit for the dispossession of the appellant can be maintained. We are also of opinion that, for the time subsequent to the determination of said renewal lease for which the appellant shall require the use and occupation of said land, the appellant is entitled, and it is its duty, to acquire the right to such use and occupation, under the exercise of the right of eminent domain conferred upon it by the act of Congress, by the ascertainment of the value of such use and occupation, and payment to the owners of the land of the just compensation so to be ascertained. And the bill of complaint in this cause may be retained for the purpose of such ascertainment of value and just compensation. It follows that the decree of the supreme court of the District of Columbia, dissolving the injunction granted in this cause and dismissing the bill of complaint, must be reversed, with costs, and that the cause will be remanded to that court, with directions to vacate said decree, to restore the injunction and make the same perpetual, and for such further and other proceedings as may be just and proper, according to law and in conformity with this opinion; and it is so ordered." [18 App. D. C. 438.]

Mr. William G. Johnson argued the cause and filed a brief for appellants:

A covenant for a renewal does not amount to a perpetuity, but gives the right to but one renewal.

Hyde v. Skinner, 2 P. Wms. 196; Triton v. Foote, 2 Bro. C. C. 636; Moore v. Folger, 3 Ves. Jr. 232; Rulgers v. Hunter, 6 Johns. Ch. 215; Piggott v. Mason, 1 Paige, 412; Carr v. Ellison, 20 Wend. 178; Cunningham v. Pattee, 99 Mass. 248; Banker v. Braker, 9 Abb. N. C. 411; Syms v. New York, 105 N. Y. 153, 11 N. E. 369; Taylor, Land. & T. § 333.

The unauthorized inclusion in the lease of October 17, 1892, of the covenant for renewal, whatever might have been its effect had the lease been executed by all the trustees, was a mere nullity because signed by only one of the trustees, entirely apart from any question of power under the will.

Sinclair v. Jackson ex dem. Field, 8 Cow. 543; Ridgeley v. Johnson, 11 Barb. 527; Hill, Trustees, 3d Am. ed. 445, *p. 305; Latrobe v. Tierman, 2 Md. Ch. 474.

Even if the complainant were vested with the right to condemn the land under the exercise of the power of eminent domain, and that fact had been proved in the cause, it could not have availed him, because it is not made a ground of the relief sought, or even alluded to in the pleadings.

Kochler v. Black River Falls Iron Co. 2 Black, 715, 17 L. ed. 339; Grosholz v. Newman, 21 Wall. 481, 22 L. ed. 471; Foster v. Goddard, 1 Black, 506, 17 L. ed. 228; Harrison v. Nixon, 9 Pet. 483, 9 L. ed. 201; Eyre v. Potter, 15 How. 42, 14 L. ed. 592; Reynolds v. Stockton, 140 U. S. 254, 35 L. ed. 464, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 773; Munday v. Vail, 34 N. J. L. 418.

The power to sell, being a mere power for a limited purpose, must be executed in all respects in strict conformity with the terms of the will creating it.

Powles v. Jordan, 62 Md. 499; Richardson v. Crooker, 7 Gray, 190; Kissam v. Dierkes, 49 N. Y. 602; Alley v. Lawrence, 12 Gray, 373; Barber v. Cary, 11 N. Y. 397.

The gross inequity and lack of mutuality in the alleged agreement is a bar to its enforcement by a decree for specific performance.

Geiger v. Green, 4 Gill. 472; Rutland Marble Co. v. Ripley, 10 Wall. 339, 19 L. ed. 955; Brashier v. Gratz, 6 Wheat. 528, 5 L. ed. 322; Duval v. Myers, 2 Md. Ch. 401; Parkhurst v. Van Cortlandt, 1 Johns. Ch. 274.

Congress had the right to prescribe the route of the company and to confine it to the "public streets and alleys;" and neither the private owner, nor the company, nor both together, could abrogate the statute.

Pittsburgh & L. E. R. Co. v. Bruce, 102 Pa. 23.

Messrs. George E. Hamilton and M. J. Colbert argued the cause and filed a brief for appellee:

Winslow was clearly the agent of the other trustees and of Mrs. Patterson herself in the execution of the lease of 1892, and his act bound them all.

Tiffany & Bullard, Trusts & Trustees, pp. 539 et seq.; Ex parte Rigby, 19 Ves. Jr. 463; Sinclair v. Jackson ex dem. Field, 8 Cow. 543; Bowes v. Seeger, 8 Watts & S. 222; Abbot v. American Hard Rubber Co. 33 Barb. 579; Leggett v. Hunter, 19 N. Y. 445; Messeena v. Carr, L. R. 9 Eq. 260.

Actions unauthorized when performed by a single trustee in respect to the trust estate may be subsequently ratified and validated, either in writing or in pais, by his cotrustee.

Howard F. Ins. Co. v. Chase, 5 Wall. 512, 18 L. ed. 526; Blanchard v. Waite, 28 Me. 59, 48 Am. Dec. 474; Messena v. Carr, L. R. 9 Eq. 260.

The occupation of this land by the appellee with its metropolitan branch is not a question between the parties to this suit only, but it is a question in which the public has even a larger interest than either of the parties.

Joy v. St. Louis, 138 U. S. 47, 34 L. ed. 358, 11 Snp. Ct. Rep. 243.

Courts will give the charter such a construction as is necessary to effectuate all the powers, privileges, and immunities conferred by it, and to carry into full effect its purposes and objects. It is upon this principle that it is held that a charter authorizing the construction of a railroad from one point to another carries with it authority to take lands necessary for that purpose, although such authority is not expressly given.

1 Wood, Railroads, 2d ed. p. 14.

Although the power of eminent domain may not have been expressly delegated to a corporation, yet if the enterprise which it is organized to conduct appears, from its charter and the circumstances of the case, to be of a public nature, the power is deemed to have been granted by implication.

2 Beach, Priv. Corp. p. 654.

Mr. Justice Peckham, after making the foregoing statement of facts, delivered the opinion of the court:

It is quite plain that a lease containing a covenant to renew at its expiration with similar covenants, terms, and conditions contained in the original lease is fully carried out by one renewal without the insertion of another covenant to renew. Otherwise a perpetuity is provided for. Piggot v. Mason (1829) 1 Paige, 412; Carr v. Ellison (1838) 20 Wend. 178; Syms v. New York (1887) 105 N. Y. 153, 11 N. E. 369; Cunningham v. Pattee (1868) 99 Mass. 248; Taylor, Landl. & T. 8th ed. §§ 333, 334.

From the ordinary covenant to renew, a perpetuity will not be regarded as created. There must be some peculiar and plain language before it will be assumed that the parties intended to create it.

There is no question of the validity of the lease of 1888. It was for five years from the 1st of August of the year 1887, with a covenant of renewal, and that covenant would have been satisfied by giving a lease in 1892 for five years, up to August, 1897, without any covenant therein for a further renewal. In fact, however, the lease was not legally renewed in 1892, because the paper of that year was signed by one trustee only. In our opinion his signature did not make a valid lease. It required the signatures of all the trustees. A deed of land executed by one trustee does not convey his share as in the case of ordinary joint tenants. So, where a deed of land was executed by two out of three trustees, the burden is upon the purchaser to prove the third trustee was dead. 1 Perry, Tr. 2d ed. § 411; 2 Perry, Tr. §§ 499, 502; 2 Story, Eq. Jur. 12th ed. § 1280; Brennan v. Willson, 71 N. Y. 502-507.

The authorities cited by the counsel for the company, to the effect that one of several trustees may, when so authorized by his associates, act with regard to the execution of some portions of the trust, as their agent, and that when not previously so authorized a subsequent ratification of his act by his associates may bind them all, do not embrace the facts in this case. There is no evidence of any authority to one trustee to sign a lease. The granting of a lease was an important and material act in the way of carrying out the trust under the will, requiring an exercise of the judgment and discretion of all the trustees. It was therefore necessary for them all to act in order to make a valid instrument.

That one of several trustees can be entrusted by his associates with the transaction of the business of the trust may be, under certain circumstances, conceded, but those circumstances will not justify the doing of an act by one trustee on *his own re-[656] sponsibility which is of a nature to require the deliberate discretion and judgment of all the trustees. In the case of a lease of property, such as is presented herein, the signatures of all are necessary to the validity of the paper.

The case cited of Howard F. Ins. Co. v. Chase, 5 Wall. 509, 18 L. ed. 524, relates to an insurance effected by one of several trustees, and the question was whether the policy covered the individual interest of the person taking out the insurance or his interest as a trustee; if the former it was void because he had no interest as an individual, and the policy was therefore one in the nature of a wager. The court in the course of the opinion remarked:

"It is true that in the administration of the trust, where there is more than one trustee, all must concur, but the entire body can direct one of their number to transact business, which it may be inconvenient for the others to perform, and the acts of the one thus authorized are the acts of all, and binding on all. The trustee thus acting is to be considered the agent of all the trustees, and not as an individual trustee. If, within the scope of his agency, he procures an insurance, it is for the other trustees, as well as himself. If he does it without authority, still it is a valid contract, which the underwriter cannot dispute, if his cotrustees subsequently ratify it. In fact, so liberal is the rule on this subject, that where a part owner of property effects an insurance for himself and others, without previous authority, the act is sufficiently ratified, where suit is brought on the policy in their names."

The facts in this case do not bring it within the principle mentioned, and it is clear that to render the lease originally valid it must have been signed by all the trustees. Without it the instrument as a lease for five years was void under the statute of frauds. D. C. Comp. Stat. 231, § 4.

[657] It is contended that the act of one of the trustees in signing the lease was subsequently ratified by the other by a recognition of its existence by long continued silence, if not by an express ratification. But an express ratification would consist of the signature of the other trustee to the paper, and of that there is no pretense. A ratification of an invalid instrument of this nature by recognition, we do not understand. The instrument *was void under the statute of frauds, because of the lack of those signatures which could alone render it valid as a lease for five years. Recognition could not take the place of the absent signature. Whether the conduct of the trustees, or of Mrs. Patterson, amounted to such a part performance of an invalid contract as would take the place of the otherwise necessary signatures is another question. It is difficult to see how there could be any technical ratification of this instrument without a signing thereof by the other trustee.

But, assuming that something in the nature of a ratification might be based upon subsequent recognition, yet such recognition or ratification must be shown to have been founded upon a full knowledge of all the facts. There is no evidence of that kind in the case; none that the other trustee even knew of the existence either of the written paper of 1892 or that it contained a covenant to renew at all for any time. The possession by the company and the payment of rent were provided for by the covenant to renew contained in the lease of 1888, and hence there was a justification for that possession and for the payment of the money, which was entirely compatible with the non-existence of any written lease from 1892, or of any covenant to again renew for five years from August 1, 1897. This possession and payment cannot, therefore, be used as a basis for the presumption of knowledge on the part of the trustee of the existence of the so-called lease of 1892 or of the covenant contained therein.

Regarding the asserted part performance of the alleged contract of lease in 1892, or of the covenant contained in that lease, we think there was none such as to justify the contention that the covenant to renew in 1897 for five years was thereby so far rendered valid as to call for its recognition and enforcement. In this case there was reason, as we have said, without reference to any assumed part performance of, and aside from the alleged covenants in the paper of 1892, for the possession by the company and for the taking of the rent of the land by the trustees up to 1897. This reason was based upon the obligation which existed under the valid lease of 1888. The remaining in possession from 1892 to 1897 and the payment [658] of the money *need not, therefore, be referred to as a part performance of the invalid contract of lease and renewal contained in the paper of 1892. Without any reference to any paper of that character, possession and 640 payment of rent were proper, and amounted to nothing more than an acknowledgment of the obligations provided for in the before-mentioned lease of 1888.

Acts of part performance which will take a case out of the statute must be referable solely to the contract. Williams v. Morris, 95 U. S. 444, 457, 24 L. ed. 360, 362; Phillips v. Thompson, 1 Johns. Ch. 131; Byrne v. Romaine, 2 Edw. Ch. 445; Jervis v. Smith, Hoffm. Ch. 470; Lord v. Underdunk, 1 Sandf. Ch. 46; Wolfe v. Frost, 4 Sandf. Ch. 72.

And again, specific performance of a void contract will not be decreed because of part performance, unless fraud and injustice would be done if the contract were held inoperative. Purcell v. Miner, 4 Wall. 513, sub nom. Purcell v. Coleman, 18 L. ed. 435; Williams v. Morris, 95 U. S. 444, 24 L. ed. 360. Such would not be the result here.

Nor can the receipt of rent in February, 1898, by Mrs. Patterson, under the circumstances detailed in the foregoing statement of facts, amount to such part performance of the invalid covenant to renew as to authorize its enforcement. Neither trustee received the rent. The signing of the name of Mr. Winslow, one of the trustees, on the back of the draft from the company in February, 1898, was without the knowledge of or authority from such trustee, although the indorsement was made in perfect good faith by Fisher & Co., and the money was paid to and received by Mrs. Patterson. That signing was not a part performance of the contract of lease on the part of the trustees or either of them.

Mr. Winslow was at this time absent in Nicaragua. There is no proof in the case that Mrs. Patterson knew there was no valid covenant in existence for the granting of a further five-year lease from August 1, 1897. Her receipt of the money as beneficiary under the will of her mother would not bind the trustees to renew a lease under an invalid covenant to do so, or operate as a part performance of that invalid covenant. Especially would this be so where, as in this case, there had for months, or ever since August 1, 1897, been a substantial refusal *by the trustees to renew on the [659] old basis or to sell at the old price, and negotiations were still in progress between the trustees and the company relative to the terms of a continued occupation of the lands. The trustees and the company were alone the parties who could agree upon a lease, and while negotiations were pending on the subject, the receipt, unknown at the time to the trustees, of the money by Mrs. Patterson, as stated, could not be equivalent to a part performance by the trustees, or either of them, of an alleged covenant to renew contained in the paper of 1892, the validity of which was at the same time denied.

Subsequently when drafts were received by the trustees they were not cashed, and when they were finally paid it was under a specific agreement that the payment should not in any way affect the situation between the parties. Hence the receipt of these drafts constituted no part performance upon which to base the recognition of the covenant to renew from August 1, 1897, which was repudiated as invalid by the trustees and which was in fact invalid.

Upon the question of the alleged contract to sell, after carefully examining all the facts, we agree with the court of appeals in holding that the company was not entitled to a decree for the specific performance of that alleged contract, and, therefore, specific relief of that nature should be denied. Under the terms of the will it is plain the trustees had no general and absolute power of sale, and the conditions upon which it could be exercised did not exist.

Regarding the other relief, we are of opinion that the portion of the injunction prohibiting the further prosecution of the trustees' action to recover the rental value of the land occupied by the company from August 1, 1897, up to the time mentioned in the complaint in that action, should be dissolved.

As to that part of the injunction which prohibits the further prosecution of the proceedings to recover the possession of the land there is more to be said. We agree with the court of appeals upon the subject of ousting the company from such possession. That court held that the evidence showed the company entered upon the use [660] and occupation of the property *in controversy with a view to its purchase when it could properly be effected. It was understood by all the parties what the character of the use and occupation of the land by the company was intended to be. Subsequently to its obtaining possession of the land in 1872 the railroad company constructed what is known as its Metropolitan branch, part of a highway between Washington city, the adjoining states and the west. This highway is not a merely private enterprise, nor a matter of purely private concern. It is a public road, constructed for public purposes, under the sanction of the public authority, and over which the public have rights which cannot be permitted to be obstructed, much less destroyed, either by the company itself, to which the franchise has been granted as a public trust to construct and operate this road, or by antagonistic parties claiming the ownership of the land upon which it has been permitted to enter without previous payment therefor, or as the result of any private controversy between the railroad company and such parties. The company having entered by the license of the lessors, an action at law for the dispossession of the railroad company cannot be maintained if the company is willing to make compensation for its use and occupation of the land.

These views of the court of appeals we concur in, but we do not say that the company can take proceedings in this suit to condemn the land. The proceeding to condemn is otherwise provided for by law, and, although the appellants contend that the company has no power under the law to do so, we are of opinion that by virtue of the various acts passed relative to the company, 188 U. S.

it has such power in this city with reference to this land. The court ought to keep in force for a reasonable time, say six months, that portion of the injunction prohibiting the trustees from continuing their proceeding to dispossess the company from the land, in order to enable it to condemn such land in proper proceedings for that purpose, which cannot be taken in the present suit. If more time is needed, the trial court may, upon application, after notice, extend the time as to it may seem reasonably necessary. If no proceedings to condemn are taken within six months from the issuing of the *mandate from this court to [661] the court below, then the injunction should be wholly dissolved.

Our judgment, therefore, will be to reverse the judgment of the court of appeals of the District of Columbia, with directions to remand the case to the supreme court of the District, with directions to that court to refuse specific performance of the alleged contract to sell the land, and to deny enforcement of any alleged covenant to lease the same from August 1, 1897, and also to dissolve that portion of the injunction enjoining the trustees from prosecuting their suit to recover the rental value of the land from August 1, 1897, and to retain that portion which enjoins further action on the part of the trustees to oust the company from the land, for six months from the date of the mandate of this court, and for further time, if the supreme court of the District shall be of opinion that it is proper. If no proceedings are taken to condemn the land within six months, then the injunction shall be dissolved. When the condemnation proceedings are concluded, or if not taken within the time stated, then, at the end of that time, application may be made to the trial court, and such judgment then entered as shall be consistent with this opinion, and with such provision in regard to costs incurred, subsequent to the mandate from this court, as shall to that court seem proper.

Reversed and remanded, with directions to reverse the decree below and remand the case for further proceedings in conformity to this opinion.

*BOARD OF DIRECTORS OF THE CHI- (662) CAGO THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY, Plff. in Err.,

v.

PEOPLE OF THE STATE OF ILLINOIS
ex rel. SAMUEL B. RAYMOND, County Treasurer and ex officio Collector of Cook County, Illinois.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 662-681.)

Taxation—contract exemption—construction by state court followed when not obviously erroneous.

The decision of a state court that a charter

NOTE.—On the power to exempt from taxation—see notes to Hogg v. Mackay (Or.) 19 exemption from taxation of the property, of whatever kind and description, belonging or appertaining to a theological seminary, does not include property owned, rented, or held by it as an investment, but not used in immediate connection with the seminary, although the income thereof is used only for the purposes of the school, is not so obviously erroneous as to require reversal by the Supreme Court of the United States because the charter provides that the act "shall be construed liberally in all courts for the purposes therein expressed."
641

[Nos. 140 and 265.]

*Argued and Submitted January 20, 21, 1903.
Decided February 23, 1903.*

IN ERROR to the Supreme Court of the State of Illinois to review judgments

L. R. A. 77; and Whiting v. West Point (Va.) 15 L. R. A. 860.

On construction of exemptions from taxation—see notes to Catlin v. Trinity College (N. Y.) 3 L. R. A. 206; and Church of St. Monica v. New York (N. Y.) 7 L. R. A. 70.

As to taxation of property devoted to educational, literary, and scientific purposes—see note to Auditor General v. University of Michigan (Mich.) 10 L. R. A. 376.

On the effect of using property of a religious, charitable, or educational institution in secular business or for revenue, upon its right to exemption from taxation—see note to Book Agents of M. E. Church, South v. Hinton (Tex.) 19 L. R. A. 289.

Exemption of property of educational institutions from taxation, as affected by use for other than educational purposes.

This question depends for its solution upon the construction of the various statutes granting the exemption. Frequently the exemption is granted in such general terms and so absolutely that it may be claimed regardless of the use to which the property is devoted.

Thus, an exemption of real estate "so long as it belongs to an incorporated institution of learning" remains in force as long as the title remains in the institution, although the property is leased to third persons. The exemption does not depend on the use. University of the South v. Skidmore, 87 Tenn. 155.

And an exemption of all corporate property belonging to the institution applies to all property of the corporation which it may lawfully acquire and hold under the terms of its charter, and is not limited to property actually used and occupied by it. State v. Hamline University, 46 Minn. 316, 48 N. W. 1119.

And where all houses, lots, or revenues of a college, not exceeding a certain value per annum, are exempted from taxation, lands acquired by the college before the income reached the designated amount would not be taxable even to one to whom it had been leased by the college. Hardy v. Waltham, 7 Pick. 108.

The president's house, when used by him in the discharge of his official duties, has been regarded as exempt.

Thus the president's house owned by a college and used by him in the discharge of his duties connected with the institution is a part of the college plant, and as such exempt from taxation under Pa. act May 14, 1874, P. L. 153, although separated from the college campus by a public street. Ursinus College v. Collegeville, 17 Montg. Co. L. Rep. 61.

642 which affirmed judgments of the County Court of Cook County denying an exemption from taxation in favor of a theological seminary. Affirmed.

See same cases below, in Illinois Supreme Court, case No. 140, 189 Ill. 439, 59 N. E. 977, case No. 265, 193 Ill. 619, 61 N. E. 1022.

Statement by Mr. Justice Peckham:

These cases, between the same parties, come here by writs of error to the supreme court of Illinois, which held certain property of the plaintiff in error not exempt from taxation. 189 Ill. 439, 59 N. E. 977.

The case No. 140 involves taxes for the year 1899, and No. 265 for the year 1900.

The plaintiff in error claims exemption under its charter, passed in 1855, entitled "An Act to Incorporate the Chicago *Theo-[663]

And a dwelling house occupied by the president of the college and his family, built with funds expressly given for the purpose of erecting such a house for the president and his successors in office, situated on the college grounds and kept in order and repair at the expense of the college, and largely used for college functions, and for the convenience of the college and president for faculty and student conferences, is within a statutory exemption from taxation of property occupied by a college or an officer thereof for the purposes for which it was incorporated. Harvard College v. Cambridge, 175 Mass. 145, 48 L. R. A. 547, 55 N. E. 844.

In Amherst College v. Amherst, 173 Mass. 232, 53 N. E. 815, it appeared that premises belonging to a college were occupied as a residence by its president and his family; that such president paid rent to the college and water rates; established a tennis court thereon at his own expense, and for some years paid for the care of the grounds; that he paid the inside expenses of the house, and might he found to have exercised the same control over it that he did over another house which he previously had hired. The court held that it was error to hold as a matter of law that his occupation was for the purposes for which the college was incorporated, as the most that could be contended was that there was evidence warranting a finding of fact that the dominant purposes of the president's occupation were not private, but for such purposes.

A residence for teachers is generally held to be necessary to the efficiency of the institution, and is therefore exempt from taxation unless the exemption is a very limited one.

Thus, under a statute exempting colleges and the grounds attached to such institutions, necessary to their proper occupancy, use, and enjoyment, and not leased or otherwise used with a view to profit, houses erected near the college buildings, and used as places of residence for the professors without charge for rent, are exempt. Ramsey County v. Macalester College, 51 Minn. 437, 18 L. R. A. 278, 53 N. W. 704.

And a convent building used solely as a residence for the teachers in a school maintained as a charity, and which is part of the school property and is necessary for the efficient operation and management of the school, is included in a statutory exemption from taxation of such "institutions of learning, . . . with the grounds thereto annexed and necessary for occupancy and enjoyment of the same." White v. Smith, 189 Pa. 222, 43 L. R. A. 498, 42 Atl. 125.

188 U. S.

logical Seminary," a copy of which is set forth in the margin.†

The supreme court of the state held that

†Sec. 1. Be it enacted by the People of the state of Illinois, represented in the General Assembly, That Stephen Peet (and twenty-three other persons, named in the act), and their successors be, and they hereby are, created a body politic and corporate, to be styled "The Board of Directors of the Chicago Theological Seminary," and by that name and style to remain and have perpetual succession, with full power to sue and be sued, plead and be impleaded; to acquire, hold, and convey property, real and personal; to have and use a common seal; to alter and renew the same at pleasure; to make and alter a constitution and by-laws for the conducting and government of said institution, and fully to do whatever may be necessary to carry out the object of this act of incorporation.

Sec. 2. That the seminary shall be located in or near the city of Chicago. The object shall be to furnish instruction and the means of education to young men preparing for the gospel ministry, and the institution shall be equally open to all denominations of Christians for this purpose.

Sec. 3. That the board of directors shall consist of twenty-four members, nine of whom shall the provision granting the exemption from taxation in § 5 referred only to property used in connection with the seminary, and constitute a quorum for the transaction of business. The directors shall hereafter be elected in accordance with the provisions of the constitution under which they act, and shall hold their office until their successors are appointed.

Sec. 4. The board of directors shall have power to appoint an executive committee and such agents as they may deem necessary, and such officers, professors, and teachers as the government and instruction of the seminary may require, and prescribe their duties, to remove any of them for sufficient reasons, and prescribe and direct the course of studies to be pursued in the institution; also to confer such degrees as are consistent with the object of the institution.

Sec. 5. That the property, of whatever kind or description, belonging or appertaining to said seminary, shall be forever free and exempt from all taxation, for all purposes whatsoever.

Sec. 6. This act to take effect and be in force from and after its passage, and it shall be deemed a public act, and shall be construed liberally in all courts for the purposes therein expressed.

So, houses belonging to the college and within the college grounds are not deprived of exemption because occupied as places of residence by teachers employed in the institution. Northampton County v. Lafayette College, 128 Pa. 132, 18 Atl. 516.

And an exemption of all colleges and the lands whereupon they are erected will include houses erected on the college grounds for the residence of professors, and occupied by them free of rent. State v. Ross, 24 N. J. L. 498.

But under a statute exempting all lots of ground set apart for schoolhouses, academics, and colleges, with the buildings thereon occupied for those purposes, but declaring that the buildings not occupied for literary purposes may be taxed, houses erected on the college grounds and occupied by the professors as residences are taxable. Kendrick v. Farquhar, 8 Ohio, 196.

Houses occupied by college professors, for the use of which an allowance is made as part of the compensation for their services, the principal or dominant consideration in regard to such occupation having reference to the performance of their official duties, rather than to the private benefit which they receive in the way of homes for themselves and their families, are occupied by them for the purpose for which the college was incorporated, and are therefore exempt from taxation. Harvard College v. Cambridge, 175 Mass. 145, 48 L. R. A. 547, 55 N. E. 844.

But the occupancy of real property by an educational institution or its officers for the purposes for which it was incorporated, in order to exempt the property from taxation, under Mass. Pub. Stat. chap. 11, § 5, cl. 3, as amended by Mass. Stat. 1889, chap. 465, must have, or be supposed to have, a direct connection with such purposes. Phillips Academy v. Andover, 175 Mass. 118, 48 L. R. A. 550, 55 N. E. 841.

And premises occupied by professors, instructors, or employees in the college strictly as private residences, under an agreement by which the rent was to be paid by a deduction made monthly by the college from their salaries, are not so occupied for the purposes for which the college was incorporated as to be exempted from taxation. Williams College v. Williamstown, 167 Mass. 505, 46 N. E. 394.

188 U. S.

And premises used as the home of teachers whose duties are almost entirely performed in a school held in a church on adjoining premises belonging to a different owner are not exempt. St. James Educational Inst. v. Salem, 153 Mass. 185, 10 L. R. A. 573, 26 N. E. 436.

Real property substantially owned and enjoyed by a professor in a college is not within the exemption of college property from taxation, although the title remains in the college. Yale University v. New Haven, 71 Conn. 316, 43 L. R. A. 490, 42 Atl. 87.

In Pierce v. Cambridge, 2 Cush. 612, one of the professors of Harvard College, who had leased from the college for a residence for himself and family a house and lot owned by it, was held to be taxable on his interest therein, notwithstanding the statutory exemption from taxation of "such real estate belonging to such institutions as shall be actually occupied by them or by their officers for the purposes for which they are incorporated." But the court expressed the opinion that it would be otherwise if the building had been occupied by the professor by permission of the college, without having any estate therein or paying any rent therefor.

Professors and instructors in a college are officers thereof within the meaning of Mass. Stat. 1889, chap. 465, exempting from taxation real property occupied by a college or its officers for the purposes for which it was incorporated. Williams College v. Williamstown, 167 Mass. 505, 46 N. E. 394.

Even where the exemption is confined to property "exclusively" used for educational purposes, an incidental use of such property for residential purposes has sometimes been held to be within such exemption.

Thus, a theological school building where the students attend recitations and lectures is exempt from taxation as "used solely and exclusively for . . . schools," within the meaning of Colo. Const. art. 10, § 5, and 2 Mill's Ann. Stat. § 3768, although the entire building is used by the bishop of the diocese and his family as a residence, in accordance with one of the conditions attached to a part of the donation which was used for buying the premises. Cathedral of St. John v. Arapahoe County Treasurer, 29 Colo. 143, 68 Pac. 272.

did not include other property which might be owned, rented, or held by the seminary as an investment, although the income thereof was used solely for school purposes. Accordingly, property which was not so included, and which is involved in these actions, was taxed under the general taxing law of the state, enacted in 1872. *In enforcing the taxation of the outside property of plaintiff in error under that act, it is claimed that the obligation of the contract contained in the act of 1855, the charter of the plaintiff in error, was impaired.

[664] It is conceded that the charter of incorporation was duly accepted, and that, acting on the faith of its provision, the plaintiff in error has acquired by donation and purchase a part of the real estate on which the taxes in question were levied, and, in addition, has expended in the erection and purchase of buildings on the real estate owned by it an amount exceeding $200,000, and a large number of students have been and are being instructed by it in pursuance of its charter. The pieces of real estate upon which the taxes in these cases were levied were acquired by the plaintiff in error by gift or purchase, and were held by it to promote the objects for which it was incorporated, and the rentals received from such real estate are used for those purposes, although the property is not used in immediate connection with the seminary.

Mr. John J. Herrick argued the cause, and, with Mr. Davis Fales, filed a brief for plaintiff in error:

In the following cases, in which the jurisdiction of this court was invoked on the ground that the subsequent law and the

And the partial use of a college building by the teachers employed in the college is incidental to the purpose of such college, and such building is therefore within a constitutional exemption of all buildings and property used exclusively for colleges or other school purposes. State ex rel. Cunningham v. Orleans Bd. of Assessors, 52 La. Ann. 223, 26 So. 872. The court said, however: "We feel called on to state that our decision on this point is to be deemed strictly confined to the facts of this case as presented in the record. We are not inclined to strain college and school exemptions so as to embrace property substantially devoted to residences."

And the fact that teachers employed in the school occupy rooms in the building does not destroy the right to exemption. Blackman v. Houston, 39 La. Ann. 593, 2 So. 193.

But property used partly for school purposes and partly for purposes of residence by the owner and his family cannot claim the full exemption from taxation accorded by La. Const. 1879, art. 207, La. Const. 1898, art. 230, to property "used exclusively for colleges and other school purposes." Ferrell v. Penrose, 52 La. Ann. 1481, 27 So. 945.

And under an exemption of the buildings used exclusively for school purposes a building in which the owner resides with his family, who are all either teachers or pupils in the school, is not exempt, although the main use of the building is for school purposes. Red v. Johnson, 53 Tex. 238.

A building used at the same time for school purposes and as a family residence by the person having charge of the school is not exempt from taxation as used exclusively for school purposes, unless such occupancy is necessary in the discharge of his duties as an educator, or to promote the success of the school. Watson v. Cowles, 61 Neb. 216, 85 N. W. 35.

The residence of a practising attorney is not exempted from taxation, under Tex. Rev. Stat. 1895, art. 5065, as a building used exclusively for school purposes, because his wife conducts a school therein. Edmonds v. San Antonio, 14 Tex. Civ. App. 155, 36 S. W. 495.

Real property containing buildings, some of which are used solely for school purposes and others for residence and family purposes of those conducting the school, is not, as a whole, within a statutory exemption from taxation of property used exclusively for school purposes. San Antonio v. Seeley (Tex. Civ. App.) 57 S. W. 688.

So far as a Jesuit college building is used as a residence by priests of an adjoining Jesuit church who are not teachers in the college, the building is deprived of its exemption from taxation under a constitutional exemption of property used "exclusively" for schools and colleges. State ex rel. Cunningham v. Orleans, 52 La. Ann. 223, 26 So. 872.

Dormitories and dining halls furnished by Harvard College for the use of its students are devoted to college purposes, and are therefore exempt from taxation. Harvard College v. Cambridge, 175 Mass. 145, 48 L. R. A. 547, 55 N. E. 844.

Buildings used by a college exclusively as dormitories and dining halls for students are "exclusively occupied" as a college within the meaning of Conn. Gen. Stat. § 3820, providing for the exemption of buildings so occupied from taxation. Yale University v. New Haven, 71 Conn. 316, 43 L. R. A. 490, 42 Atl. 87.

Under an exemption of lands owned or leased by colleges, etc., the mere incidental renting of portions of buildings acquired for purposes of the school, such as dormitories and residences for teachers, etc., will not annul the exemption. Willard v. Pike, 59 Vt. 202, 9 Atl. 907.

But buildings belonging to an academy, which are rented by it to its professors and students for living apartments, are not within the exemption from taxation of "seminaries of learning," made by N. H. Pub. Stat. chap. 55, § 2. New London v. Colby Academy, 69 N. H. 443, 46 Atl. 743.

And the exemption of lands "for the use of the academy" will not include a building used as a boarding house and dormitory for students, under the charge of a superintendent who has possession of all the room not needed by them, and derives a revenue from it by using it as a hotel. Phillips Exeter Academy v. Exeter, 58 N. H. 306, 42 Am. Rep. 589.

School farms and gardeus are generally held to be exempt.

Thus, a farm and the farming stock owned by a college, and by it worked only to raise produce for a boarding house kept by the institution to supply board to students at its actual cost, is exempt from taxation under a statute exempting the property of such institutions and the real estate belonging to them, which is occupied by them or their officers for the purposes for which they were incorporated. Wesleyan Academy v. Wilbraham, 99 Mass. 599.

So, under an exemption of every incorporated academy or other seminary of learning, and the several lots whereon such buildings are used or situated, a farm containing nearly 300 acres, which is used in connection with the seminary, is exempt. People ex rel. Seminary of Our Lady of Angels v. Barber, 42 Hun, 28.

And the fact that a portion of the land is action of the state officers in levying a tax under it impaired the obligation of the contract of exemption, this court sustained the jurisdiction and enforced the obligation of the contract:

Northwestern University v. Illinois, 99 U. S. 309, 25 L. ed. 387; St. Anna's Asylum v. New Orleans, 105 U. S. 362, 26 L. ed. 1128; Piqua Branch of State Bank v. Knoop, 16 How. 378, 14 L. ed. 981; Home of the Friendless v. Rouse, 8 Wall. 430, 19 L. ed. 495; Washington University v. Rouse, 8 Wall. 439, 19 L. ed. 498.

The determination of the Federal question presented involves the decision of the question as to the proper construction of the exemption provision of the charter of plaintiff in error; and this court will, therefore, determine for itself, in the exercise of its appellate and revisory jurisdiction, the ques-used for a vegetable garden for the use of the pupils and teachers of the school does not remove the exemption. People ex rel. Academy of Sacred Heart v. New York Tax & A. Comrs. 6 Hun, 110; People ex rel. St. Johns College v. New York Tax Comrs. 10 Hun, 246; Cassiano v. Ursuline Academy, 64 Tex. 673; Re Application against Certain Lots (Minn.) March 22, 1881.

And lands within the same inclosure with the seminary buildings are exempt, although a part are used for a vegetable garden, etc., for the exclusive use of the institution, and not "otherwise used with a view to profit." Monticello Female Seminary v. People, 106 Ill. 398, 46 Am. Rep. 702.

Under an exemption of property actually used for the purpose for which the college was created, land is exempt which is used to raise vegetables, etc., for use in boarding students. State v. Fisk University, 87 Tenn. 238, 10 S. W. 284.

Land belonging to an educational institution, on which are some of its minor buildings and a hospital for contagious diseases, the remainder of which is used as a pleasure ground for the pupils and for a garden and for pasturage, the vegetable and dairy products being largely consumed in the institution, is within the statutory exemption from municipal school taxes of property occupied by educational institutions for the purposes for which they were established. Commisaires d'Ecoles de la Cote des Neiges v. Les Socurs de la Congregation de Notre Dame, Rap. Jud. Quebec, 12 C. S. 444.

To the contrary is St. Gabriel v. Notre Dame, 12 Can. S. C. 45, where the Canadian supreme court, following the dissenting opinion of Dorian, Ch. J., in Verdun v. Notre Dame, 1 Dor. Q. B. Rep. 164, held that land belonging to an educational institution, but situated in a different municipality and used by it as a farm, the products of which were consumed by such institution, was not within the exemption from municipal school taxes of all property occupied by such institution for the objects for which it was instituted, and not held for the purpose of deriving any income therefrom.

So, in Quebec v. Limlollou [1899] A. C. 288, land belonging to a seminary and worked by it as a farm in order to derive revenue therefrom was held not to be within an exemption from municipal taxation of property belonging to or occupied by educational institutions for the ends for which they were established, "and not possessed solely by them for the purpose of deriving a revenue therefrom," although such land tion of construction presented, irrespective of the decision made by the state supreme court.

Northwestern University v. Illinois, 99 U. S. 309, 25 L. ed. 387; Jefferson Branch Bank v. Skelly, 1 Black, 443, 17 L. ed. 177; Proprietors of Bridges v. Hoboken Land & Improv. Co. 1 Wall. 144, 17 L. ed. 576; Piqua Branch State Bank v. Knoop, 16 How. 369, 14 L. ed. 977; Delmas v. Merchants' Mut. Ins. Co. 14 Wall. 668, 20 L. ed. 760; Houston & T. C. R. Co. v. Texas, 177 U. S. 66, 44 L. ed. 673, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 545; Columbia Water Power Co. v. Columbia Electric Street R. Light & P. Co. 172 U. S. 475, 43 L. ed. 521, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 247.

The title of an act may properly be referred to, to ascertain the legislative intention.

Church of Holy Trinity v. United States, was not detached from other land belonging to the seminary used by it as a country resort for its students, and was itself occasionally used for recreation purposes.

The mere fact that the surplus products of the farm, which cannot be used in the school, are sold for cash and the proceeds applied to school purposes, will not remove the exemption. Mount Hermon Boys' School v. Gill, 145 Mass. 149, 13 N. E. 354.

But where the exemption is of property exclusively devoted to educational purposes, a farm connected with a college is not exempt, although agriculture is taught thereon if a portion of the products are each year sold for cash, the proceeds of which are applied to the purposes of the institution. St. Mary's College v. Crowl, 10 Kan. 448.

And land belonging to a university and used for pasturing cows and raising vegetables for the institution, or to afford the students the means of acquiring practical knowledge of gardening, cannot be deemed included under the constitutional exemption of property used exclusively for schools and colleges. State ex rel. Cunningham v. Orleans, 52 La. Ann. 223, 26 So. 872.

An unused tract, chiefly forest land, on one side of which a schoolhouse stands, is, as regards the excess over the land necessary for the use of the school, not so "set apart and exclusively used" for educational purposes as to be within a statutory exemption from taxation of land so used. Congregation of U. B. v. Forsyth County, 115 N. C. 489, 20 S. E. 626.

Vacant and unused land belonging to a college is not within a statutory exemption from taxation of grounds and buildings of literary institutions devoted solely to the appropriate objects of such institutions, and not leased or otherwise used with a view to pecuniary profit. Foy v. Coe College, 95 Iowa, 689, 64 N. W. 636.

The statutory exemptions are, in general, not broad enough to cover property rented or kept with a view of obtaining revenue therefrom.

Real estate held for sale to raise money for the institution is not exempt under a statutory exemption of such property as may be necessary for carrying out the design of the seminary while used exclusively for that purpose. County Comrs. v. Colorado Seminary, 12 Colo. 497.

Realty belonging to an educational association, the rents and profits of which are used exclusively for educational purposes, is not within a charter exemption from taxation of all the property held or appropriated by or for said association "for the exclusive purposes of 143 U. S. 457, 36 L. ed. 226, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 511; Smythe v. Fiske, 23 Wall. 374, 23 L. ed. 47; Emerson v. Hall, 13 Pet. 409, 10 L. ed. 223; Bell v. New York, 105 N. Y. 144, 11 N. E. 495; St. Vincent's College v. Schaefer, 104 Mo. 261, 16 S. W. 395.

There can be no room for question that the mention of the "Chicago Theological Seminary," in the title of the act, referred to the institution incorporated by the act, and not "to the property," the school buildings, etc.

Emerson v. Hall, 13 Pet. 409, 10 L. ed. 223; Bell v. New York, 105 N. Y. 139, 11 N.

E. 495; St. Vincent's College v. Schaefer, 104 Mo. 261, 16 S. W. 395.

It was natural and appropriate to use the words "said seminary" to designate the incorporated institution referred to in the title of the act as "The Chicago Theological Seminary," and again, in § 4, as "the seminary."

Marine Bank v. Biays, 4 Harr. & J. 338; St. Vincent's College v. Schaefer, 104 Mo. 261, 16 S. W. 395; Nobles County v. Hamline University, 46 Minn. 316, 48 N. W. 1119.

The precise word "located" is frequently used in charters and other statutes as apreligion or education." Stahl v. Kansas Educational Asso. 54 Kan. 542, 38 Pac. 796.

Property rented out is not "set apart and exclusively used" for educational purposes within the meaning of a statutory exemption from taxation of property so used, even though the rents may be so applied. Congregation of U. B. B. v. Forsyth County, 115 N. C. 489, 20 S. E. 626.

Real property owned by a theological seminary is not, unless its corpus as well as its income is used for educational purposes, within a charter exemption from taxation of "all personal estate, real estate not exceeding 100 acres in land belonging to the corporation, . . . so long as the same shall be used and the avails thereof expended solely for the purposes of education and instruction." Hartford v. Hartford Theological Seminary, 66 Conn. 475, 34 Atl. 483.

And land belonging to a theological seminary, partly vacant and in part yielding rents for its support, are not even within a charter exemption from taxation of "the property, of whatever kind or description, belonging or appertaining to said seminary." People ex rel. Kochersperger v. Chicago Theological Seminary, 174 Ill. 177, 51 N. E. 198; Chicago Theological Seminary v. People, 189 Ill. 439, 59 N. E. 977; Chicago Theological Seminary v. People, 193 Ill. 619, 61 N. E. 1022.

An exemption of all buildlugs used exclusively for literary purposes, and not leased or otherwise used with a view to profit, does not extend to a building a portion of which is rented for stores, etc., although the remainder is used for the purposes of a college, and the income derived from the rent of the stores is applied to the support of the college and payment of its debts. Cincinnati College v. State, 19 Ohio, 113.

An exemption of schoolhouses so long as the same are used for that purpose does not exempt a portion of a building owned by a person who conducts a school in the upper stories, and lets the lower floors for business purposes. Wyman v. St. Louis, 17 Mo. 336.

The exemption of college grounds will not include land and buildings rented to a third person to be used as a private school. State v. Ross, 24 N. J. L. 498.

A portion of a college campus, leased for nursery purposes in consideration of a cash rental and its permanent improvement, is not within a statutory exemption from taxation of such real property belonging to educational institutions as shall be "actually occupied for the purposes for which they were incorporated." Willamette University v. Knight, 35 Or. 33, 56 Pac. 124.

But a seminary does not waive its exemption by leasing the premises used by it as a boarding house during the usual summer vacation.

Temple Grove Seminary v. Cramer, 98 N. Y. 121, Affirming 26 Hun. 309, 10 Abb. N. C. 424.

And the statute may be so worded as to include all property held by a school, the income from which is devoted to school purposes.

Thus, real property which constitutes a part of the endowment is within a charter exemption of the college estate. Brown University v. Granger, 19 R. I. 704, 36 L. R. A. 847, 36 Atl. 720.

And an exemption from taxation of the property of a college "while so used for the promotion of science" exempts property so invested as to produce an income which is used for the purposes of the college. New Haven v. Sheffield Scientific School, 59 Conn. 163, 22 Atl. 156.

So, an exemption of "institutions of education, not used or employed for gain by any person or corporation, and the income of which is devoted solely to the cause of education," will include property held by such institutions for rent, the income of which is used for the work of such institution, there being no qualifying words which show or tend to show that only property used by the institution or connected with it is to be exempted. Kentucky Female Orphan School v. Louisville, 100 Ky. 470, 40 L. R. A. 119, 36 S. W. 921.

Under a Constitution permitting the legislature to exempt "such property as they may deem necessary for school purposes," the Supreme Court of the United States has held that lands and other property the annual profits of which, by way of rent or otherwise, are devoted to the business of the institution as a school, may be exempted. Northwestern University v. Illinois, 99 U. S. 309, 25 L. ed. 387.

Thereby overruling a decision of the Illinois supreme court that under such provision it is not competent to exempt property owned by educational corporations, which is not itself used directly in aid of the purposes for which the corporation was chartered, but which is held for profit merely, although the profit is to be devoted to the proper purposes of the corporation. Northwestern University v. People, 80 Ill. 336, 22 Am. Rep. 187, 86 Ill. 141.

A corporation organized to impart instruction to theological students has not ceased to devote its property to the uses for which it was created, so as to forfeit the exemption from taxation conferred by its charter, because it has become a department of a university, and occupies quarters provided by the latter institution, where, in exchange for such accommodations, it furnishes the university with a building, and retains its corporate existence, appoints the members of its faculty, prescribes their duties, and pays their salaries, and defrays the entire expenses of the school out of its own income. People ex rel. Kochersperger v. Baptist Theological Union, 171 Ill. 304, 49 N. E. 559.

plied to corporations. At common law it was an attribute of every corporation that it had a locality. Its locality was the place where it carried on its operations,—where it did business.

Ang. & A. Priv. Corp. § 103; Sangamon & M. R. Co. v. Morgan County, 14 Ill. 163, 56 Am. Dec. 497; Bristol v. Chicago & A. R. Co. 15 Ill. 436; First Nat. Bank v. Morgan, 132 U. S. 141, 33 L. ed. 282, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 37.

Giving to the word "belonging," in § 5, its primary and ordinary meaning of ownership, the words "said seminary," in the same section, could only refer to the corporation.

Gammon v. Gammon, 153 Ill. 41, 38 N. E. 890.

Similar general words, "belonging to," and "the college," "the institution," "the asylum," etc., have been held to refer to the corporation created by the act, and to render exempt all the property of the corporation.

Nobles County v. Hamline University, 46 Minn. 316, 48 N. W. 1119; St. Anna's Asylum v. New Orleans, 105 U. S. 362, 26 L. ed. 1128; St. Vincent's College v. Schaefer, 104 Mo. 261, 16 S. W. 395; University of the South v. Skidmore, 87 Tenn. 156, 9 S. W. 892; Humphries v. Little Sisters of the Poor, 29 Ohio St. 201.

An absurd or unreasonable meaning will not be attributed to the legislature, if the language admits of any other construction.

Lau Ow Bew v. United States, 144 U. S. 47, 36 L. ed. 340, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 517; People ex rel. Bussey v. Gaultier, 149 Ill. 39, 36 N. E. 576.

The rule of strict construction does not apply to exemptions in favor of charitable corporations, but such exemptions should be construed liberally, to promote the charitable objects for which the corporations were created.

Yale University v. New Haven, 71 Conn. 316, 43 L. R. A. 490, 42 Atl. 87; Phillips Academy v. Andover, 175 Mass. 118, 48 L. R. A. 550, 55 N. E. 841; Association for Benefit of Colored Orphans v. New York, 104 N. Y. 581, 12 N. E. 279; People v. Sayles, 50 N. Y. Supp. 8; State, Long Branch Firemen's Relief Asso., Prosecutor, v. Johnson, 62 N. J. L. 625, 43 Atl. 573; State, Sisters of Charity, Prosecutor, v. Chatham Twp. 52 N. J. L. 373, 9 L. R. A. 198, 20 Atl. 292; State v. Fisk University, 87 Tenn. 233, 10 S. W. 284; Methodist Episcopal Church, South, Book Agents, v. Hinton, 92 Tenn. 188, 19 L. R. A. 289, 21 S. W. 321.

Under similar statutory provisions, either abolishing the rule of strict construction as to all statutes, or providing that it shall not apply to particular statutes, the rule of liberal construction was held to apply in giving a construction to criminal and penal statutes.

Com. v. Davis, 12 Bush, 240; People v. Soto, 49 Cal. 67; Hankins v. People, 106 Ill. 628; Maxwell v. People, 158 Ill. 248, 41 N. E. 995; Peterson v. Currier, 62 Ill. App. 163.

188 U. S.

A similar charter provision has been referred to as requiring a liberal construction of a provision in the charter of Brown University, exempting its property from taxation.

Brown University v. Granger, 19 R. I. 704, 36 L. R. A. 847, 36 Atl. 720.

The rule of strict construction does not require that, if the language used "admits of two meanings," either one or the other of these two meanings "must be" adopted, or in any way change or override the other rules of construction, including the well-settled rule that, where a word admits of two meanings, the natural and ordinary meaning should be adopted, in the absence of other provisions showing a contrary intention.

Endlich, Interpretation of Statutes, §§ 337, 466; United States v. Winn, 3 Sumn. 209, Fed. Cas. No. 16,740; United States v. Hartwell, 6 Wall. 385, 18 L. ed. 830; Meadowcroft v. People, 163 Ill. 56, 35 L. R. A. 176, 45 N. E. 303.

It is proper to refer to other charters passed by the same legislature, as an aid in ascertaining the meaning it was intended the words used in the particular provision should have, and as illustrating the application of the rule.

Vane v. Newcombe, 132 U. S. 220, 33 L. ed. 310, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 60; 23 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, title Statutes, p. 311; Chase v. Lord, 77 N. Y. 1; Middleton v. Greeson, 106 Ind. 18, 5 N. E. 755; Levering v. Philadelphia, G. & N. R. Co. 8 Watts & S. 459; Reiche v. Smythe, 13 Wall. 162, 20 L. ed. 566.

In giving a construction to a statute, it should be construed so as best to promote and effectuate the policy and object of the act.

United States v. Hartwell, 6 Wall. 394, 18 L. ed. 832.

An exemption provision in the charter of a charitable corporation should be construed not narrowly, but in a fair and liberal sense, so as to promote the charitable objects for which the corporation was formed.

Home of the Friendless v. Rouse, 8 Wall. 430, 19 L. ed. 495; Washington University v. Rouse, 8 Wall. 439, 19 L. ed. 498.

The Constitution in force in Illinois at the date of the act—that of 1848—provided that "no private or local law which may be passed by the general assembly shall embrace more than one subject, and that shall be expressed in the title." Under this provision the title was a part of the act.

Cohn v. People, 149 Ill. 492, 23 L. R. A. 821, 37 N. E. 60.

The title may be resorted to as an aid in arriving at the legislative intention, in construing an act to which the rule of strict construction applies.

Coosaw Min. Co. v. South Carolina, 144 U. S. 550, 36 L. ed. 537, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 689; Knowlton v. Moore, 178 U. S. 41, 44 L. ed. 969, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 747.

Messrs. Edwin W. Sims, Frank L. Shepard, and William F. Struckmann, submitted the cause for defendant in error:

Where there are two grounds for the judgment of a state court, only one of which involves a Federal question, and the other is broad enough to maintain the judgment sought to be reviewed, this court will not look into the Federal question, but will dismiss the writ of error.

Bacon v. Texas, 163 U. S. 207, 41 L. ed. 132, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1023; Eustis v. Bolles, 150 U. S. 361, 37 L. ed. 1111, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 131; Beaupre v. Noyes, 138 U. S. 397, 34 L. ed. 991, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 296; Rutland R. Co. v. Central Vermont R. Co. 159 U. S. 630, 40 L. ed. 284, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 113; Gilks v. Stinchfield, 159 U. S. 658, 40 L. ed. 295, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 131; Seneca Nation of Indians v. Christy, 162 U. S. 283, 40 L. ed. 970, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 828.

The state court did not give effect to and enforce a new rule of exemption established by the revenue act of 1872. It was not necessary to determine whether the act of 1872 changed the rule of exemption; the state court did not pass on any such question.

Knox v. Exchange Bank, 12 Wall. 383, 20 L. ed. 415; Mississippi & M. R. Co. v. Roek, 4 Wall. 177, 18 L. ed. 381; St. Paul, M. & M. R. Co. v. Todd County, 142 U. S. 282, 35 L. ed. 1014, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 281; Mississippi & M. R. Co. v. McClure, 10 Wall. 511, 19 L. ed. 997.

All laws exempting property from taxation must be strictly construed. It is not to be presumed that the legislature intended to exempt property from taxation; that intention must appear affirmatively, and the exemption will be strictly construed.

Wilmington & W. R. Co. v. Alsbrook, 146 U. S. 279, 36 L. ed. 972, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 72; Delaware Railroad Tax, 18 Wall. 206, sub nom. Minot v. Philadelphia, W. & B. R. Co. 21 L. ed. 888; Farrington v. Tennessee, 95 U. S. 679, 24 L. ed. 558; Ohio L. Ins. & Trust Co. v. Debolt, 16 How. 416, 14 L. ed. 997; Vicksburg, S. & P. R. Co. v. Dennis, 116 U. S. 668, 29 L. ed. 771, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 625; Providence Bank v. Billings, 4 Pet. 514, 7 L. ed. 939; Charles River Bridge v. Warren Bridge, 11 Pet. 544, 9 L. ed. 823; Binghamton Bridge, 3 Wall. 51, sub nom. Chenango Bridge Co. v. Binghamton Bridge Co. 18 L. ed. 137; Northwestern University v. Illinois, 99 U. S. 309, 25 L. ed. 387; First M. E. Church v. Chicago, 26 Ill. 482; Montgomery v. Wyman, 130 Ill. 17, 22 N. E. 845; Presbyterian Theological Seminary v. People, 101 Ill. 578; Re Swigert, 123 Ill. 267, 14 N. E. 32.

The title of an act furnishes little aid in the construction of the provisions of the act itself, and can only be referred to when there is a doubt as to the meaning of the act itself; and when necessary to refer to the title, that fact of itself is sufficient to defeat the claim of exemption.

Hadden v. Barney, 5 Wall. 107, 18 L. ed. 518; Yazoo & M. Valley R. Co. v. Thomas, 132 U. S. 174, 33 L. ed. 302, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 68.

Mr. Justice Peckham, after making the foregoing statement of facts, delivered the opinion of the court:
648

The supreme court of Illinois, by its decision in this case, has but followed its prior decision upon the same question between these parties, reported in 174 Ill. 177, 51 N. E. 198, decided in 1898. It there held that the exemption was limited to property used in immediate connection with the seminary, and did not include such property as is involved in these cases, which was not property used in immediate connection with the seminary, but was other property separate and apart therefrom, and owned or rented or held by the seminary as an investment, the income from which was nevertheless used solely for school purposes.

The rule of construction followed by the supreme court of Illinois in construing this act exempting property from taxation is so well established by this and other courts as scarcely to need the citation of authorities. One or two, however, from this court may be given. Tucker v. Ferguson, 22 Wall. 527, 22 L. ed. 805; New Orleans City & Lake R. Co. v. New Orleans, 143 U. S. 192, 195, 26 L. ed. 121, 122, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 406; Bank of Commerce v. Tennessee Use of Memphis, 161 U. S. 134, 146, 40 L. ed. 645, 649, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 456.

The rule is that, in claims for exemption from taxation under legislative authority, the exemption must be plainly and unmistakably granted; it cannot exist by implication only; a doubt is fatal to the claim.

The reasoning of the supreme court of Illinois (174 Ill. 177, 51 N. E. 198), in refusing the exemption claimed, so far as relates to the property not connected with the seminary, is best stated in the language of the opinion of that court. After stating the rule of construction, as above mentioned, the court said (p. 181, N. E. p. 199):

"If, however, taking the express words of the act, and without extending their meaning by implication, they may be held to include all property belonging or appertaining to the 'seminary' mentioned in the 2d section, or to include all the property belonging or appertaining to the corporation, and there is reasonable ground for doubt which was intended by the legislature, that doubt must be resolved in favor of the state. In other words, if the language is capable of a broad or more restricted meaning, the latter must be adopted. The 2d section of the charter mentioning certain property to be located in or near the city of Chicago, and which is denominated 'the seminary,' we think the words in the 5th section, 'said seminary,' refer to that particular property, and to so hold seems to do no more than to give the language of the two sections their literal and ordinarily understood meaning. To say, as is contended by appellee, that 'said seminary' was intended to mean the corporation is to extend the meaning of those words by implication, which is not permissible.

"It is said that the only entity mentioned in the charter capable of owning property is the corporation, and therefore it could not have been intended that property belonging or appertaining to the seminary was meant by § 5. We think this position is based upon a too limited meaning of the words 'belonging or appertaining,' as here used. Of course, if the language of § 5 had been that the property, of whatever kind or description, owned by the said seminary shall be forever free from all taxation, etc., or if, as counsel seem to assume, the words 'belonging or appertaining' here necessarily meant ownership of the property, then there would be force in this argument of counsel. It is undoubtedly true that the word 'belonging' may mean ownership, and very often does. But that is not its only meaning. Wester's International Dictionary defines it: '2. That which is connected with a principal or greater thing; an appendage, an appurtenance.' He also defines the word 'pertain' as meaning 'to belong or pertain, whether by right of nature, appointment, or custom; to relate, as "things pertaining to life."' Manifestly, the purpose of § 5 was to exempt property owned by the corporation, but it does not follow [674] that the intention was to include in *that exemption all property owned by it used for purposes of the school."

We think there is force in this reasoning, and we are disposed to concur in the result arrived at.

It is contended by counsel for plaintiff in error that the words "said seminary," contained in § 5 of the charter, referred to the corporation created by the act, and not to the school buildings and grounds, and that, therefore, the exemption necessarily exempted from taxation all the property against which the judgments below were rendered.

Here are two different constructions of the exemption clause, each of which might be maintained with some plausibility. That view which limits the range of the exemption to property used in immediate connection with the seminary might seem to many to be the correct one, while in the opinion of others the broader claim of total exemption would be the best founded. The judges of the supreme court of Illinois have unanimously taken the former view, while counsel for the plaintiff in error very strongly and very ably has taken and maintained the other. We can ourselves see that a construction either way would not be clearly erroneous, or, at any rate, either construction would not be so obviously erroneous as to leave no doubt upon the question. In such cases we think the rule as to the construction of statutes of exemption from taxation should be applied, and as there may be room for reasonable doubt whether a total or only a partial exemption was meant, the partial exemption should alone be recognized. Great weight ought also to be attached to the decision of a state court regarding questions of taxation or exemption therefrom under the Constitution or laws of its own state. As is said in Wilson v. Standefer, 184 U. S. 399, 412, 46 L. ed. 612, 618, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 384, 389:

"Especial respect should be had to such decisions when the dispute arises out of general laws of a state, regulating its exercise of the taxing power, or relating to the state's disposition of its public lands. In such cases it is frequently necessary to recur to the history and situation of the country in order to ascertain the reason as well as the meaning of the laws, and knowledge of such particulars will most likely be found in the *tribunals whose special function is to [675] expound and interpret the state enactments."

We acknowledge and affirm the principle that this court in this class of cases must decide upon its own responsibility as to the existence and meaning of the contract, but in arriving at such meaning in a case like this, the decision of the state court is entitled to exercise marked influence upon the question this court is called upon to decide, and where it cannot be said that the decision is in itself unreasonable or in violation of the plain language of the statute, we ought, in cases engendering a fair doubt, to follow the state court in its interpretation of the statutes of its own state.

The case of Northwestern University v. Illinois, 99 U. S. 309, 25 L. ed. 387, is no authority for the construction contended for by the plaintiff in error. In that case the charter provided "that all property, of whatever kind or description, belonging to, or owned by the said corporation, shall be forever free from taxation for any and all purposes." The difference between the two provisions is intrinsic and material. What is lacking in the case at bar is present in the case cited, namely, a provision exempting all the property "owned by said corporation." In the case before us it is the property "belonging or appertaining to said seminary," and the word "belonging" is construed by the supreme court as not synonymous with "owned by," nor is the word "seminary" regarded in this connection as the equivalent of the word "corporation."

But the plaintiff in error contends that however correct the construction adopted by the state courts might be if founded upon general rules of construction pertaining to claims for exemption from taxation, it is plainly erroneous under the provision of § 6 of the charter, providing that the act "shall be deemed a public act, and shall be construed liberally in all courts for the purposes therein expressed."

To adopt the construction contended for by the plaintiff in error would call for a reversal of the rules otherwise prevailing in and governing claims for exemption from taxation. But it is nevertheless urged that if in any way the language of exemption can by a liberal construction be said to cover the whole *property owned by the corpora- [676] tion, such construction must be adopted by reason of the provisions contained in § 6. We think this is claiming entirely too much for the language of that section.

As is therein stated, the act must be construed liberally for the purposes therein expressed. What are those purposes? In this respect the word "purposes" in § 6 is synonymous with the word "object" in § 2, as we think, and we find that the object or purpose is stated in § 2, "to furnish instruction and the means of education to young men preparing for the gospel ministry, and the institution shall be equally open to all denominations of Christians for this purpose." It is for the accomplishment of this purpose or object that the act is to be liberally construed. If a question should arise regarding the meaning of the language "to furnish instruction or the means of education," and how far the words should be extended and what they should include, the words should be liberally construed as provided for in the 6th section, because to furnish instruction or the means of education is the expressed purpose or object of the act. So, in regard to the powers of the board of directors as provided for in the charter; those powers should be liberally construed for the furtherance of the object stated in the charter. To do so would not violate any well-settled rule of construction, and would nevertheless be sufficient in case of doubt to turn the decision in favor of a construction more liberal in its nature than might otherwise be properly adopted. But we do not think it was intended by the language of the 6th section to provide a complete overthrow of a canon of construction such as the one in question, which has obtained for so many years, and has been so universally and so strictly adopted and adhered to by the courts of the whole country. We again resort to the language of the opinion of the Illinois court for the presentation of its own reasons for the somewhat strict construction of the exemption clause adopted by it. After stating that it should not be presumed that the legislature intended to exempt property from taxation, but such intention must appear affirmatively, and it will be [677] strictly construed, and *that any ambiguities must operate against the parties who claim the exemption, the court (p. 181, N. E. p. 199) continued:

"That laws exempting property from taxation are generally subject to these rules of construction is not seriously questioned, but counsel for appellee say said rules do not apply here, because by § 6 of the charter it is provided that the act 'shall be construed liberally in all courts for the purposes therein expressed.' We do not think this language was intended to or could be held to change or qualify the general rules of construction applicable to the section under consideration. Here the very question to be determined is, What is the purpose expressed in that section? And to say that liberal rules of construction must, under § 6, be applied in favor of the contention that all property belonging or appertaining to the corporation is exempt would be to beg the whole question. In determining what purpose is expressed in the section, resort must necessarily be had to the general rules for considering such laws. When that purpose is ascertained, liberal rules of construction, if necessary, are to be resorted to, to give effect to such purpose. . . . We think this case turns upon whether or not the words 'said seminary,' used in the 5th clause, should be given the meaning of 'said corporation.' In our opinion the application of the rules of construction above referred to does not warrant such a construction."

This is not such an unnatural, strained, or unreasonable construction of the act as shows it to be erroneous, and while it might be otherwise construed so as to effect a total exemption, we are not prepared to hold that the state court so clearly erred as to call upon us to reverse its determination. We, therefore, adopt, though, we admit, with some hesitation, the views of the state court, which lead to an affirmance of the judgments.

Affirmed.

Mr. Justice White, with whom concur Mr. Justice Brown and Mr. Justice Holmes, dissenting:

The court, in stating the facts, refers to a previous opinion of *the supreme court of [678] the state of Illinois, announced in a case between the same parties, involving a question of law like unto that which arises on this record. In that case, however, the supreme court of Illinois but reversed and remanded for a new trial, and hence the judgment was not final and not susceptible of being brought to this court to test the issues involving the constitutional right under the contract. After the record in the previous case reached the trial court the case was not further pressed by the plaintiff for such length of time as to cause it, under the Illinois statute, to be in effect abandoned. The question here now for review is not, therefore, controlled by the thing adjudged arising from the previous judgment. The court does not now decide to the contrary, but the matter is referred to by me lest a misconception be caused by the mention made of the subject in the opinion of the court.

I do not dispute the elementary proposition that exemptions from taxation are stricti juris, that is, not to be extended by implication. This, however, does not imply that a contract exemption is to be disregarded, simply because it may be possible for a subtle mind to suggest a possible doubt as to the exemption, however conjectural may be the assumption on which the doubt is rested. Nor does the rule mean that, because it is deemed that a particular contract exemption was an unwise one for the public interest, therefore the meaning of the contract is to be disregarded by a court in order to relieve the public from the burdens arising from the obligations of the contract. The rule, as understood by me, is this only, that the language from which an exemption is claimed to arise is to receive a literal construction, and is not to be extended so as to embrace a right not within the clear meaning of the contract. I do not, moreover, dispute the principle that where the contract which is asserted to have been impaired arises from a state law, it is the duty of the court, in case of doubt as to the meaning of the contract, to adopt the construction given to it by the state court. This rule does not imply that because the state court has decided against the contract right, therefore there is doubt and, hence, the resulting duty to affirm the action of the state court. If such were the case, the power of this court to review the action of state courts concerning the alleged impairing of the obligations of a contract would be at an end wherever the contract took its origin in state law. The significance of the rule is this, that if, fairly considering the issue of contract arising from the state law and its alleged impairment, this court, in the exercise of its independent judgment, remains in doubt, the decision below construing the state law will be allowed to solve the doubt, and thus secure the affirmance of the judgment. The obligation on me as a member of the court is identical with that which rests on the court.

Coming to apply these rules to the case in hand, my mind has no doubt whatever as to the true meaning of the contract. Let me state what the contract is, in order to show why I do not doubt on the subject.

The 1st section of the act from which the contract arises creates a corporation for a religious and benevolent purpose, under the name of "The Board of Directors of the Chicago Theological Seminary." The 2d section provides as follows:

"That the seminary shall be located at or near the city of Chicago. The object shall be to furnish instruction and the means of education to young men preparing for the gospel ministry, and the institution shall be equally open to all denominations of Christians for this purpose."

The 3d section provides for the board of directors; the 4th relates to the powers of the board; and the 5th is as follows:

"That the property, of whatever kind or description, belonging or appertaining to said seminary, shall be forever free and exempt from all taxation for all purposes whatsoever."

The 6th section provides when the act shall take effect, and declares that it "shall be construed liberally in all courts for the purposes therein expressed." Does the exemption covered by the 5th section relate to the theological seminary, the corporation created by the act, or does it apply only to a building to be erected by the corporation? is the question at issue.

It is admitted that if the exemption applies to the theological seminary, the contract has been impaired and the judgment should be reversed. It is now decided that the exemption relates only to the seminary, that is, to the buildings, and, therefore, the judgment is affirmed. Now, giving to the words of exemption their natural meaning, and construing them strictly, there does not seem to me to be a doubt that they relate to the theological seminary incorporated by the act, and referred to as such in its 1st section. My mind does not enable me to see what else the words can mean. If it was intended merely to exempt a building or buildings, language could have been employed which would have aptly conveyed such meaning. Instead of doing this, the language used in the act—as I understand it—excludes such construction, since it declares that the exemption shall relate to the property "belonging or appertaining to said seminary;" the word "belonging" clearly referring to the corporation created by the act and on whom was conferred the power to own and possess property. Emphasis is added to this view when the scope of the exemption is borne in mind; since it embraces, not a mere building or its accessories, but the property of whatever kind or description, thus describing and referring to the power to own and acquire property of every kind and description, real or personal, conferred on the theological seminary by the act. It is further to be observed, as throwing light upon the subject, that in the 4th section, immediately preceding the grant of the exemption, the particular building, or place of learning, to be constructed by the theological seminary is twice referred to as the institution, thus showing that the legislative mind had immediately before it when the exemption was granted the distinction between the theological seminary as a corporate entity to which the exemption was granted, and the institution to be constructed and supported by the theological seminary. I cannot, moreover, conceive that the words of the statute, immediately following the section granting the exemption, commanding that the provisions of the contract "shall be liberally construed in all courts for the purposes therein expressed," should have what seems to me their plain meaning disregarded, by causing them to refer, not to the act as a whole, *but to some particular provision in it. I find nothing in the language which lends itself to such a view.

188 U. S.

I therefore dissent.

I am authorized to say that Mr. Justice Brown and Mr. Justice Holmes concur in this dissent.

INDIANA MANUFACTURING COMPANY, Appt.,
v.

ARMIN C. KOEHNE et al.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 681-691.)

Equity—suit to enjoin collection of illegal tax—cloud on title—adequate remedy at law—multiplicity of suits—irreparable injury—equitable jurisdiction of Federal courts.

1. An averment that an assessment upon the capital stock and franchises of a corporation constitutes a cloud upon title is not sufficient to sustain a bill in equity which seeks to enjoin the collection of such tax as illegal, where it contains no allegation that the corporation owns any real property.
2. The absence of an adequate remedy at law is not shown by an averment in a bill which seeks to enjoin the collection of a tax on property alleged to be exempt from taxation, that a portion of the tax is to be paid to the state of Indiana, which cannot be sued, where, under the general tax laws of that state, complainant might have had its objections to the assessment reviewed by a state board, and, if unsuccessful, might have paid the tax, and then, under Burns's (Ind.) Rev. Stat. 1894, §§ 7915, 7916, have filed a petition with the board of county commissioners to recover it back as "wrongfully" assessed, and, if still unsuccessful, might have appealed from the decision of such board to the courts.

NOTE.—As to injunction to restrain the collection of illegal taxes—see note to Odlin v. Woodruff (Fla.) 22 L. R. A. 699.

8. The prevention of multiplicity of suits cannot successfully be invoked to sustain a suit in equity to enjoin the collection of an illegal tax, where complainant's remedy under the state statutes was to have its objections to the assessment reviewed by a state board, and, if unsuccessful, to pay the tax and file a petition with the board of county commissioners to have it refunded, and, if still unsuccessful, to appeal from the decision of such board to the courts.
4. Irreparable injury cannot be inferred as the result of the enforcement of an illegal tax, so as to sustain a suit in equity to enjoin its collection, where there is a plain and adequate remedy at law to recover the amount of the tax wrongfully assessed.
5. A Federal court is not vested with jurisdiction of a suit in equity to enjoin the collection of a state tax because the case is one arising under the Constitution and laws of the United States, within the meaning of the judiciary act of August 13, 1888 (25 Stat. at L. 433, chap. 866) § 1, unless there is apparent some ground of equitable jurisdiction recognized by the Federal courts.

[No. 177.]

Argued October 24, 1902. Decided February 23, 1903.

A PPEAL from the Circuit Court of the United States for the District of Indiana to review a decree which dismissed a bill in a suit in equity to enjoin the collection of a state tax. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Chester Bradford argued the cause, and, with Mr. F. Winter, filed a brief for appellant:

United States courts have jurisdiction where Federal questions are involved.

Crescent City L. S. L. & S. H. Co. v. Butchers' Union L. S. L. & S. H. Co. 12 Fed. 225; Starin v. New York, 115 U. S. 248, 29 L. ed. 388, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 28.

Even in cases where the jurisdiction of a United States court depends only upon diverse citizenship of the parties, and no constitutional question is involved, its equitable jurisdiction cannot be ousted by the fact that a remedy at law may exist under state statutes.

McConihay v. Wright, 121 U. S. 201, 30 L. ed. 932, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 940.

Likewise, where other questions are involved, jurisdiction will be maintained.

Nashville v. Cooper, 6 Wall. 254, 18 L. ed. 853.

A suit in equity was not only a proper suit under the circumstances, but the only effective kind of suit which could be brought in the Federal court, to which complainant, with its Federal question, had the right to go.

Watson v. Sutherland, 5 Wall. 78, 18 L. ed. 582; Boyce v. Grundy, 3 Pet. 210, 7 L. ed. 655; Payne v. Hook, 7 Wall. 430, 19 L. ed. 262; 1 Gould & Tucker's Notes, p. 99; English v. Smock, 34 Ind. 124, 7 Am. Rep. 215; Clark v. Jeffersonville, M. & I. R. Co. 44 Ind. 261; Thatcher v. Humble, 67 Ind. 448; Bishop v. Moorman, 98 Ind. 4, 49 Am. Rep. 731; Denny v. Denny, 113 Ind. 26, 14 N. E. 59; Champ v. Kendrick, 130 Ind. 549, 30 N. E. 787; Allen v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. 114 U. S. 311, 29 L. ed. 200, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 924.

The collection of an illegal tax can be enjoined notwithstanding the statutory remedies for the refunding of such taxes when paid.

Hyland v. Brazil Block Coal Co. 128 Ind. 335, 26 N. E. 672.

Injunction is a proper remedy in the courts of Indiana against a void tax.

Stockman v. Robbins, 80 Ind. 195; Henry County v. Murphy, 100 Ind. 573; Jones v. Rushville Natural Gas Co. 135 Ind. 595, 35 N. E. 390; Senour v. Ruth, 140 Ind. 318, 39 N. E. 946; Senour v. Matchett, 140 Ind. 636, 40 N. E. 122; Hart v. Smith (Ind.) 53 L. R. A. 949, 64 N. E. 661.

It would seem that a plaintiff who has a right to go into the Federal courts because of diversity of citizenship, or because a Federal question is involved, should be allowed the remedy of injunction whenever, under the facts stated in his bill, it would be sustained in the state courts.

The Federal court had equitable cognizance.

Third Nat. Bank v. Stone, 174 U. S. 432, 43 L. ed. 1035, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 759; Louisville v. Third Nat. Bank, 174 U. S. 435, 43 L. ed. 1037, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 874; Smyth v. Ames, 169 U. S. 466, 42 L. ed. 819, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 418.

A suit may be maintained in equity to secure an injunction, where a part of the taxes in controversy would be paid to the state, and thus become irrecoverable if paid.

Foot v. Linck, 5 McLean, 616, Fed. Cas. No. 4,913. See also First Nat. Bank v. Douglas County, 3 Dill. 298, Fed. Cas. No. 4,809; Hersey v. Barron County, 37 Wis. 75; Marsh v. Clark County, 42 Wis. 502; Schettler v. Fort Howard, 43 Wis. 48; Goff v. Outagamie County, 43 Wis. 55; Salschieder v. Fort Howard, 45 Wis. 519.

Injunction will lie to restrain the collection of a tax on personal property, where the enforcement of the tax would lead to a multiplicity of suits, or where the law authorizing the tax is illegal, or where there is no means of recovering back from the state taxes illegally assessed.

City Nat. Bank v. Paducah, 2 Flipp. 61, Fed. Cas. No. 2,743; First Nat. Bank v. Douglas County, 3 Dill. 298, Fed. Cas. No. 4,809.

Mr. William L. Taylor argued the cause, and, with Messrs. Merrill Moores and Cassius C. Hadley, filed a brief for appellees:

The complainant has a plain, adequate legal remedy under the laws of the state of Indiana, and is not entitled to the interposition of a court of equity.

Senour v. Matchett, 140 Ind. 636, 40 N. E. 122; Ogden v. Walker, 59 Ind. 460; Adams Exp. Co. v. Ohio State Auditor, 165 U. S. 194, 41 L. ed. 683, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 305; Pittsburgh, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. West Virginia Bd. of Public Works, 172 U. S. 32, 43 L. ed. 354, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 90; Small v. Lawrenceburgh, 128 Ind. 231, 27 N. E. 500; Clement v. People, 177 Ill. 144, 52 N. E. 382; Kinley Mfg. Co. v. Koehersperger, 174 Ill. 379, 51 N. E. 648; Jones v. Rushville Natural Gas Co. 135 Ind. 595, 35 N. E. 390.

If the state board should affirm the assessment made by the county board, the appellant should pay the taxes assessed, and then file a petition with the board of commissioners for recovery of the amount illegally assessed. The taxes here enjoined are the state, county, and city taxes. The statutes of the state of Indiana provide a complete system for the refunding of taxes that have been illegally assessed and collected, even after they have been distributed to the municipalities for which they were collected.

Howard County v. Armstrong, 91 Ind. 528; Simonson v. West Harrison, 5 Ind. App. 466, 32 N. E. 585; Dill. Mun. Corp. 941; Pittsburgh, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. West Virginia Bd. of Public Works, 172 U. S. 32, 43 L. ed. 354, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 90.

The bill does not show that appellant is entitled to relief in a court of equity.

Dows v. Chicago, 11 Wall. 108, 20 L. ed. 65; Hannewinkle v. Georgetown, 15 Wall. 547, 21 L. ed. 231; State Railroad Tax Cases, 92 U. S. 575, sub nom. Taylor v. Seor, 23 L. ed. 669; Milwaukee v. Koeffler, 116 U. S. 219, 29 L. ed. 612, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 372; Shelton v. Platt, 139 U. S. 591, 35 L. ed. 273, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 646; Pacific Exp. Co. v. Seibert, 142 U. S. 339, 35 L. ed. 1035, 3 Inters. Com. Rep. 810, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 250; Pittsburgh, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. West Virginia Bd. of Public Works, 172 U. S. 32, 43 L. ed. 354, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 90; Cooley, Taxn. pp. 538, 543; Pacific Exp. Co. v. Seibert, 44 Fed. 310; DuBois v. Lake County, 10 Ind. App. 347, 37 N. E. 1056; Shultz v. Blackford County, 20 Ind. 178; State ex rel. Godfroy v. Miami County, 63 Ind. 497; Arkansas Bldg. & L. Asso. v. Madden, 175 U. S. 269, 44 L. ed. 159, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 119; Brewer v. Springfield, 97 Mass. 152; Hunnewell v. Charlestown, 106 Mass. 350; Van Cott v. Milwaukee County, 18 Wis. 247; Mooers v. Smedley, 6 Johns. Ch. 28; Wells, F. & Co. v. Dayton, 11 Nev. 161.

Mr. Justice Peckham delivered the opinion of the court:

The complainant herein has appealed from the decree of the circuit court of the United States for the district of Indiana, which dismissed its bill. It was a suit in equity to enjoin the collection of taxes. It appears that certain taxes had been assessed against the complainant, a corporation of Indiana, and process had issued for the collection thereof which included all the years from 1893 to 1898 (both years inclusive), and also for the year 1900; that such taxes, or the greater part of them, were (as averred) illegal, because they were, among other things, assessed pursuant to a law of the state of Indiana, upon the value of certain letters patent of the United States, for inventions owned by the corporation; that such state law was in violation of the Federal Constitution, and was therefore void; that the part of the taxes which complainant admitted to be legal it had paid, and notwithstanding such payment the tax officials were threatening to levy upon its property to collect the residue.

By reference to the general tax laws of Indiana of 1891 it will be seen that it is therein provided that each district assessor shall, commencing in April in each year, inquire of each person concerning his property, while as to corporations their officers are to deliver to the assessor a sworn statement of the property of such corporation in detail, and among the items to be reported is the "market value, or, if no market value, then the actual value, of the shares of stock" of the company. The statement made by the corporation to the assessor is by him delivered to the county auditor, who in turn delivers it to a board of review, which values and assesses the capital stock and all franchises and other property of the company. This board of review makes the original assessment. The corporation so assessed, or any taxpayer, may appeal from the assessment upon the corporation, to the state board of tax commissioners. * (Tax law of [683] 1891, § 125, as amended by the act of 1895, p. 79.) Upon such appeal the state board decides as to the assessment, and may, if it decides that the property is assessable, make such an assessment, increasing or reducing it, as it may decide proper, and the auditor then certifies such changes in valuation made by the state board to the several counties, and provision is made for the collection of the same by the proper officials. By the act of 1853 (Ind. Rev. Stat. ed. 1881, §§ 5813, 5814; Ind. Rev. Stat. ed. 1894, §§ 7915, 7916) provision is made that any person or corporation may appear before the board of commissioners of any county and establish by proper proof that such person or corporation has paid taxes which were wrongfully assessed against him or it, and it is thereby made the duty of the board to order the amount so proved to have been paid, to be refunded to the payer from the county treasury so far as the same was assessed and paid for county taxes. Where a portion of the amount so wrongfully assessed and paid shall have been paid for state purposes, and shall have been paid into the state treasury, it is made the duty of the board to certify to the auditor of the state the amount so proved to have been wrongfully paid, and the auditor is directed to audit the same as a claim against the treasury, and the treasurer of the state is directed to pay the same out of any moneys not otherwise appropriated.

The further steps to be taken in case the authorities refuse, upon such application, to pay over the taxes wrongfully assessed, are adverted to hereafter.

The bill states that defendant Koehne is the treasurer of Marion county, where these taxes were assessed, and he is by law also the treasurer of the city of Indianapolis, and as the treasurer of the county of Marion and the city of Indianapolis he collects for them all taxes, and makes distribution thereof, and also collects all taxes due the state from Marion county, and in fact he collected all taxes assessed for all purposes against appellant. There is no other treasurer of the city of Indianapolis, and the money for that city collected by tax remains in the hands of the county treasurer of the county of Marion until it is expended; the county treasurer thus retain-[684]ing all taxes *in his hands belonging both to the county of Marion and the city of Indianapolis until those taxes are properly expended.

Other averments were contained in the bill, but none material to the case as we view it, and upon all the facts complainant comes into a court of equity for the purpose of enjoining the collection of the alleged illegal portion of these taxes which had been imposed on the letters patent mentioned, and it was claimed by the complainants that, excluding the value of such patents, the shares had no value above the indebtedness of the corporation, and therefore it was wholly exempt, or exempt with the exception of a very small sum, from taxation, and that sum it had paid.

The foundation of this appeal to equity, as averred by complainant, was (1) on the ground that the assessment constitutes a cloud upon title; (2) that there is no adequate remedy at law; (3) that a multiplicity of suits is avoided; and (4) that it prevents irreparable injury to complainant.

It has long been the settled doctrine of the Federal courts that the mere illegality of a tax, or the mere fact that a law upon which the tax is founded is unconstitutional, does not entitle a party to relief by injunction against proceedings under the law, but it must appear that the party has no adequate remedy by the ordinary processes of the law, or that the case falls under some other recognized head of equity jurisdiction, such as multiplicity of suits, irreparable injury, etc. See Cruickshank v. Bidwell, 176 U. S. 73, 80, 44 L. ed. 377, 380, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 280, where many of the authorities upon this subject are collected in the opinion which was delivered by Mr. Chief Justice Fuller. See also Pittsburgh, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. West Virginia Bd. of Public Works, 172 U. S. 32, 43 L. ed. 354, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 90, where Mr. Justice Gray dealt with the subject quite fully. We must judge the case at bar under the rules laid down by the authorities cited.

We take the grounds in the order above stated.

654

(1.) In regard to the averment that the assessment constitutes a cloud upon title.

It is the ordinary case of an assessment upon the value of the capital stock of a corporation and its franchises. Our attention has not been called to any statute which makes the *assessment upon the shares a [685] lien upon the real estate of a corporation, and if it were such lien, there is no averment that the company owned any real estate; hence, no cloud upon its title is made apparent, even if there could be a cloud cast upon the real estate merely by reason of an ordinary assessment, such as is made in this case. There is nothing in the objection.

(2.) There is the averment that the complainant is without any adequate remedy at law, and one of the grounds for such averment is stated in the bill as follows:

"And your orator further shows unto your honors that the defendant Armin C. Koehne is the treasurer of Marion county, Indiana, whose duty it is as such treasurer, under the laws of the state of Indiana, to receive and collect taxes for the said state of Indiana, and also for Marion county in said state, and also for the city of Indianapolis within said county, and also for the school board of the city of Indianapolis, Indiana. That a large proportion of the amounts received and collected by the said defendant as treasurer, as aforesaid, are for and on account of and for the benefit of the state of Indiana, a sovereign state, and one of the United States, and that under the Constitution and laws no suit can be maintained against the state of Indiana. That it is a part of the duty of the said defendant Armin C. Koehne, as aforesaid, to pay over into the treasury of the state of Indiana a large portion of the amounts so received and collected by him as taxes, and, therefore, that if said amounts are so collected and received and paid over, they will become mixed with the moneys of the said state, and thus be beyond reach of any process of this or any court, and irrecoverable, and that great and irreparable injury will result to your orator if such unlawful collection and paying over as aforesaid be not prevented."

The averment that a portion of the tax is to be paid to the state of Indiana, and that the state cannot be sued, is answered by the remedy provided by the law of Indiana for such a case. Under that law the complainant was bound in the first place to appeal from the decision of the board of review, which included the letters patent, in the value of the shares of stock of the corporation. Such appeal would, by the provision of the *statute, be taken to the state [686] board of tax commissioners, and if that board affirmed the decision of the board of review the corporation could pay the tax and immediately file a petition with the board of county commissioners to recover it back under the act of 1853, above referred to. An appeal is given from the refusal of that board to repay the tax. 3 Ind. Rev. Stat. 1894, § 7917; Schultz v. Blackford County, 20 Ind. 178; State ex rel. Godfrey v. Miami 188 U. S.

County, 63 Ind. 497, 501. This appeal would be taken to the circuit court, and by the general law an appeal lies from that court to either the appellate court or the supreme court of the state, according to the amount involved.

The fact that a portion of the money raised by the tax might be for state purposes is not material under the provisions of the act of 1853, supra. The courts of Indiana have held that the filing of a petition with the board of commissioners under that act was in itself notice to the county, and if thereafter the money was paid over to the state or to the city, it was no defense; that when the board of commissioners received notice, the county became a trustee for the claimant, and in the event the money was awarded to him the county was bound to refund the same, and a payment by the county authorities after such notice, or the commencement of an action, to the state or town authorities, was at its own risk and peril. The taxpayer could not be required to pursue such funds into the hands of the parties to whom they were wrongfully distributed, and the fact that the taxes were voluntarily paid constituted no defense under the statute cited. DuBois v. Lake County, 10 Ind. App. 347, 37 N. E. 1056. It is also said in the above case that if the money had been paid over when the petition was filed, the statute provided that the commissioners should give the claimant a certificate to the state auditor for the repayment by the state treasurer, when taxes had been paid that were wrongfully assessed for state purposes. There was nothing, therefore, to prevent the complainant herein from paying the tax and immediately filing its petition with the board of county commissioners to have it refunded, and the payment to the state (if made) was immaterial and constituted no defense. The tax could be recovered back, notwithstanding the payment to the state.

[687] *It has been urged, however, that the act of 1853 was not broad enough, inasmuch as it required that the taxes should have been wrongfully assessed, and that mere illegality would not be sufficient in order to recover under the statute, citing Howard County v. Armstrong, 91 Ind. 528. That case simply held that where property was legally taxable, and the tax assessed was justly and equitably due, if through some irregularity or default it had not been legally assessed, it could not be said to have been "wrongfully" assessed within the meaning of the statute of 1853, and recoverable back under that statute; but that very case shows that if property which was not taxable was assessed and the money paid, such assessment was "wrongful" within the statute of 1853, being made upon property not liable to taxation, and therefore it could not be said that any tax so assessed was justly or equitably due.

In this case, if the complainant be right in its averment that the letters patent owned by it are property exempt from taxation by or under state authority, then such property is "wrongfully" assessed within that statute, and proceedings could be taken to recover back the tax so paid, upon complying with the provisions of the law of Indiana. Donch v. Lake County, 4 Ind. App. 374, 30 N. E. 204, decided in 1891, subsequently to the decision in 91 Ind. 528. DuBois v. Lake County, 4 Ind. App. 138, 30 N. E. 206, and again reported, reaffirming the same doctrine, in 10 Ind. App. 347, 37 N. E. 1056; Neusom v. Bartholomew County, 92 Ind. 229; Pulaski County v. Senn, 117 Ind. 410, 20 N. E. 276.
188 U. S.

Complainant could set forth in its petition to the county commissioners its claim under the Federal Constitution for the exemption of the letters patent owned by it from taxation, and it could make the same claim if the board refused to admit it, in its action in the circuit court and on an appeal from an adverse decision in that court to either the appellate court or the supreme court of the state, and if either court to which the appeal was taken and before which the question was raised decided it adversely to the complainant, a writ of error would lie from this court, and the subject could be reviewed and finally decided here. There is no doubt, therefore, of the adequacy of the remedy at law, provided the act of 1853 is in force.

*It is argued that the act of 1853 is re[688]pealed by the general tax act of 1891 under which these assessments were made.

There is no specific repeal of the statute contained in the general tax act, and repeals by implication are concededly not favored. It would have to appear that the two acts were inconsistent with each other, or that the act of 1891 was a complete system in itself, and was really meant to cover the cases, and the method of recovery which was to be pursued, in matters of wrongful taxation, and to exclude all remedy except such as that act provided. This, we think, cannot be maintained.

And again, the act is contained in the edition of the Revised Statutes of Indiana, of the revision of 1894, by Burns, and is reproduced therein as §§ 7915 and 7916, and it is not stated in that edition that there had been any claim that those sections, constituting the act of 1853, had ever been repealed, but, on the contrary, the act is treated as a valid and subsisting part of the Revised Statutes of the state. The sections are also cited in Donch v. Lake County, 4 Ind. App. 374, 30 N. E. 204, as §§ 5813 and 5814 of the edition of the Revised Statutes of 1891. See also DuBois v. Lake County, that they had since been repealed by the act of 1891. See also DuBois v. Lake County, 4 Ind. App. 138, 30 N. E. 206. True, the questions discussed in these cases arose prior to the passage of the general tax act of 1891, but these decisions were made subsequently to the passage of that act, and the sections were not referred to in any of those opinions as if they had been repealed by the general tax act, and were only applicable to cases happening before the passage of that act.

We see nothing in Hart v. Smith, recently decided by the supreme court of Indiana and reported in 64 N. E. 661, to support the claim of the repeal of the act of 1853. It was there held that, upon the mere matter of a valuation of the shares of the stock, the decision of the state board of tax commissioners was not reviewable by the court. Upon which counsel argues that, "if we could go before the county commissioners with a claim after the state board had passed upon it, then inevitably we could also go to the circuit court of Marion county, and thence to the appellate or supreme court of the state, according to the amount [689] involved. Therefore, if the supreme *court 'has no power to review' the decisions of the state board of tax commissioners, then the county commissioners have no power to begin a course of proceedings which must inevitably, at its conclusion, come to a tribunal which has declared that it 'has no power to review,'" and it is therefore urged that if the court has no power to review this determination of the tax commissioners, it is because the act of 1853 has been repealed. But the decision of the tax commissioners upon a mere question of judgment as to the value of shares of stock is a decision of a question of fact upon which the judgment of the board would be final, even if the act of 1853 were not repealed. In that very case, however, the court did review a decision of the board as to valuation when it appeared that, in arriving at such decision, the board included property, as part of the value of the shares, which the law did not permit to be taxed, and an assessment for valuation thus arrived at was held illegal, and as it could not be determined how much of the total assessment depended upon the valuation of the property not taxable, the court held the whole assessment illegal, and gave judgment accordingly. We are not convinced that the act of 1853 has been repealed, and, the remedy thereby provided being sufficient, we hold complainant had an adequate remedy at law.

(3.) The further ground of jurisdiction in equity, that it prevents a multiplicity of suits, cannot be sustained.

The remedy provided by the state of Indiana is in truth but one proceeding, and all the complainant had to do in order to avail itself of such remedy was to appear before the board of review when the assessment was first made and object to it, and, if its objections were overruled, then to appeal to the state board, and, if that board also overruled the objection, then to pay the tax. The proceeding thereafter is one suit, commenced by application to the board of county commissioners to recover the tax wrongfully assessed, and, if the claim were refused, then the party might go into the circuit court, and, if refused again, it had the further right of appeal, and, if still refused, it then had the right of review by writ of error from this court, if any Federal-question had been decided against it. The right to come into a Federal court and invoke its *equitable jurisdiction in order to avoid the [690] remedy thus provided by the state cannot, under these facts, be founded upon the alleged prevention of a multiplicity of suits. The claim on such ground is without foundation.

(4.) Nor is there any irreparable injury as averred.

There is a general averment that to enforce the tax by distraint and sale of complainant's property would result in irreparable injury, but there is no fact stated from which it could be inferred that irreparable injury would be likely to result from such enforcement, and where a plain and adequate remedy to recover the amount is given by statute no such irreparable injury can be inferred. Some averment of specific facts must be made from which the court can see that irreparable injury would be a natural and probable result. Nothing of the sort is shown here. Indeed, the averment of irreparable injury seems to be founded upon the other averment, that if the tax got into its treasury the state could not be sued to recover it back, and hence the necessity of appealing to equity. But the answer to that has already been given by referring to the act of 1853, which fully provides for such contingency.

The claim is also made that complainant had the right, under § 1 of the act of 1888 (25 Stat. at L. 433, chap. 866), amending the act of 1875, to resort to the Federal court on the ground that the case arose under the Constitution or laws of the United States, inasmuch as it was claimed that under such Constitution the letters patent were not taxable by or under state authority. But the right to resort to a Federal court as a court of equity must be founded upon some ground of equitable jurisdiction recognized by the Federal courts, and when, as here, no such ground appears, jurisdiction in equity cannot be maintained.

Whether the value of letters patent is in any way taxable by or under state authority, we have no occasion to now decide, because the question is not before us. We simply show a plain and adequate remedy at law, after paying the tax, to recover it back, in an action or proceeding where the question as to the exemption of this kind of property from taxation can be raised, *and [691] if not admitted by the state court, it can be reviewed here on writ of error.

We see no ground for interfering with the judgment of the court below, and it is therefore affirmed.

JAMES L. HYATT, as Chief of Police of the City of Albany, N. Y., Plff. in Err.,
v.

PEOPLE OF THE STATE OF NEW YORK on the Relation of CHARLES E. CORKRAN.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 691-719.)

Extradition—conclusiveness of governor's warrant—review on habeas corpus—fugitive from justice—necessity of presence in demanding state.

1. An extradition warrant issued by the governor of a state is but prima facie sufficient to hold the accused; and it is open to him to show on habeas corpus, by admissions or by other conclusive evidence, that the charge upon which his extradition is demanded assumes his absence from the demanding state at the time the crime was, if ever, committed.
2. A stipulation that a person sought to be extradited was not within the demanding state on the date specified in the indictment as the time of the commission of the crime charged is an admission that he was not within the state when the crime was, if ever, committed, where there is no claim of any error in the date named in the indictment.
3. One who was not within a state when the crime of larceny or false pretense was, if ever, committed therein, cannot be deemed a "fugitive from justice" within the meaning of U. S. Rev. Stat. § 5278 (U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 3597), providing for the interstate extradition of a fugitive from justice on demand of the executive of the state from which he has fled.
4. One who comes into a state on business for a single day, eight days after the alleged commission of a crime therein, and months before an indictment is found against him for such offense, does not, by his departure from the state after the conclusion of his business, become a "fugitive from justice" within the meaning of U. S. Rev. Stat. § 5278 (U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 3597), providing for the interstate extradition of a fugitive from justice on demand of the executive of the state from which he has fled.

[No. 492.]

Argued January 6, 7, 1903. Decided February 23, 1903.

IN ERROR to the Court of Appeals of the State of New York to review a judgment discharging on habeas corpus a person held under a warrant issued in extradition proceedings by the governor of that State. Affirmed.

See same case below, 172 N. Y. 176, 64 N. E. 825.

Statement by Mr. Justice Peckham:

This proceeding by habeas corpus was commenced by the relator, defendant in error, to obtain his discharge from imprisonment by the plaintiff in error, the chief of police in the city of Albany, state of New York, who held the relator by means of a warrant issued in extradition proceedings by the governor of New York. The justice of the supreme court of New York, to whom the petition for the writ was addressed, and also, upon appeal, the appellate division of the supreme court of New York, refused to grant the relator's discharge, but the court of appeals reversed their orders and discharged him. 172 N. Y. 176, 64 N. E. 825. A writ of error has been taken from this court to review the latter judgment.

*The relator stated in his petition for the writ that he was arrested and detained by virtue of a warrant by the governor of New York, granted on a requisition from the governor of Tennessee, reciting that relator had been indicted in that state for the crime of grand larceny and false pretenses, and that he was a fugitive from the justice of that state; that the warrant under which he was held showed that the crimes with which he was charged were committed in Tennessee, and the relator stated that nowhere did it

NOTE.—As to what papers are necessary to obtain the surrender of a fugitive from another state—see note to Ex parte Hart (C. C. App. 4th C.) 28 L. R. A. 801.

On the question who are fugitives subject to extradition—see note to State v. Hall (N. C.) 28 L. R. A. 289.

The necessity, for extradition purposes, of the actual presence of the accused in the demanding state.

A person cannot be a fugitive from justice, for the purpose of interstate extradition, unless he was in the demanding state when the crime was committed. Re Jackson, 2 Filpp. 183, Fed. Cas. No. 7,125; Ex parte McKean, 3 Hughes, 23, Fed. Cas. No. 8,848; Ex parte Smith, 3 McLean, 121, Fed. Cas. No. 12,968; State v. Jackson, 1 L. R. A. 370, 36 Fed. 258; United States v. Fowkes, 49 Fed. 50; Hartman v. Aveline, 63 Ind. 344, 30 Am. Rep. 217; Ex parte Knowles, 16 Ky. L. Rep. 263; Re Fetter, 23 N. J. L. 311, 57 Am. Dec. 382; Re Heyward, 1 Sandf. 701; Re Mitchell, 4 N. Y. Crim. Rep. 596.

And a merely constructive presence in the demanding state at the time of the alleged commission of the offense is not sufficient to render the accused a fugitive from justice. Jones 188 U. S.

v. Leonard, 50 Iowa, 106, 32 Am. Rep. 116; Wilcox v. Nolze, 34 Ohio St. 520; Re Mohr, 73 Ala. 503, 49 Am. Rep. 63; State v. Hall, 115 N. C. 811, 28 L. R. A. 289, 20 S. E. 729; Re Lyon, 24 Wash. L. Rep. 679.

But one who, after setting in motion the machinery which results in the crime, departs from the state before the consummation of the offense is a fugitive from justice. Re Cook, 49 Fed. 833; Re Sultan, 115 N. C. 57, 28 L. R. A. 294, 20 S. E. 375.

The effect of visits to the demanding state subsequent to the commission of the crime was considered in Ex parte Knowles, 17 Ky. L. Rep. 588, and the conclusion reached was that by again leaving the state the accused thereby became a fugitive from justice. And there are intimations to the same effect in Re Mohr, 73 Ala. 503, 49 Am. Rep. 63, supra, and State v. Hall, 115 N. C. 811, 28 L. R. A. 289, 20 S. E. 375, supra.

The Supreme Court of the United States takes the opposite view in HYATT V. PEOPLE ex rel. CORKRAN, saying that, if the accused was not in the demanding state when the crime was committed, "a subsequent going there and coming away is not a flight."

For other cases on the question who are fugitives subject to extradition see note to State v. Hall (N. C.) 28 L. R. A. 289.

appear in the papers that he was personally present within the state of Tennessee at the time the alleged crimes were stated to have been committed; that the governor had no jurisdiction to issue his warrant, in that it did not appear before him that the relator was a fugitive from the justice of the state of Tennessee, or had fled therefrom; that it did not appear that there was any evidence that relator was personally or continuously present in Tennessee when the crimes were alleged to have been committed; that it appeared on the face of the indictments accompanying the requisition that no crime under the laws of Tennessee was charged or had been committed. Upon this petition the writ was issued and served.

The return of the plaintiff in error, the chief of police, was to the effect that the relator was held by virtue of a warrant of the governor of New York, and a copy of it was annexed.

The governor's warrant reads as follows:

State of New York, }
Executive Chamber. }

The governor of the state of New York to the chief of police, Albany, N. Y., and the sheriffs, undersheriffs and other officers of and in the several cities and counties of this state authorized by subdivision 1 of section 827 of the Code of Criminal Procedure to execute this warrant:

[693] It having been represented to me by the governor of the state of Tennessee that Charles E. Corkran stands charged in that state with having committed therein, in the county of Davidson, the crimes of larceny and false pretenses, which the said governor certifies to be crimes, under the laws of the said state, and that the said Charles E. Corkran has fled therefrom *and taken refuge in the state of New York; and the said governor of the state of Tennessee having, pursuant to the Constitution and laws of the United States, demanded of me that I cause the said Charles E. Corkran to be arrested and delivered to Vernon Sharpe, who is duly authorized to receive him into his custody and convey him back to the said state of Tennessee; which said demand is accompanied by copies of indictment and other documents duly certified by the said governor of the state of Tennessee to be authentic and duly authenticated and charging the said Charles E. Corkran with having committed the said crimes and fled from the said state and taken refuge in the state of New York;

You are hereby required to arrest and secure the said Charles E. Corkran wherever he may be found within this state and thereafter and after compliance with the requirements of section 827 of the Code of Criminal Procedure to deliver him into the custody of the said Vernon Sharpe, to be taken back to the said state from which he fled, pursuant to the said requisition; and also to return this warrant and make return to the executive chamber within thirty days from the date hereof of all your proceedings had thereunder, and of the facts and circumstances relating thereto.

Given under my seal and the privy seal of the state, at the capitol in the city of Albany, this 13th day of March, in the year of our Lord one thousand nine hundred and two.

[L. S.]

B. B. Odell, Jr.

By the Governor: James G. Graham,
Secretary to the Governor.

No other paper was returned by the chief of police bearing upon his right to detain the relator. Upon the filing of the return the relator traversed it in an affidavit, in which he denied that he had committed either the crime of larceny or false pretenses, or any other crime, in the state of Tennessee. He denied that he was within the state of Tennessee at the times mentioned in the indictment upon which the requisition of the governor was issued; he alleged that he had read the indictments before the governor of the state of New York, upon which *the warrant of arrest was issued, and [694] that they charged him with the commission of the crime of larceny and false pretenses on the 20th and 30th days of April, the 8th day of May, and the 17th and the 24th days of June, 1901. The relator in his affidavit also asserted that he was not in the state of Tennessee at any time in the months of March, April, May, or June, 1901, or at any time for more than a year prior to the month of March, 1901, and he denied that he had fled from the state of Tennessee, or that he was a fugitive from the justice of that state. He further therein stated that he had heard read the papers accompanying the requisition of the governor of Tennessee to the governor of New York, and that those papers did not contain any evidence or proof that he had been in the state of Tennessee at any stated time since the 26th and 27th days of May, 1899, and they contained no evidence or proof that he was in the state of Tennessee on any day in any of the months set forth in the indictments when the crime or crimes were alleged to have been committed.

Upon the hearing the following paper, signed by the respective attorneys for the parties, was filed:

"It is conceded that the relator was not within the state of Tennessee between the 1st day of May, 1899, and the 1st day of July, 1901. It is also conceded that the relator was in the state of Tennessee on the 2d day of July, 1901."

There is also another stipulation in the record, signed by the attorneys, and reading as follows:

"The following additional facts are hereby conceded, and the same shall be incorporated in the appeal record herein, as a part thereof, and shall constitute a part of the record upon which the appellate division may hear and determine the appeal herein; i. e.,—

"It is hereby stipulated by and between the parties to the above entitled special proceeding that three indictments were attached to the requisition papers sent by the [695] governor of the state of Tennessee to the governor of the state of New York for the extradition of Charles E. Corkran; that each of the said indictments was found on the 26th day of February, 1902, and that the alleged crimes were charged in said indictments to "have been committed on the 1st day of May, 1901, on the 8th day of May, 1901, and on the 24th day of June, 1901, respectively."

Upon the hearing before the judge on March 17, 1902, the relator was sworn without objection, and testified that he had been living in the state of New York for the past fourteen months; that his residence when at home was in Lutherville, Maryland; that he was in the city of Nashville, in the state of Tennessee, on July 2, 1901, and (under objection as immaterial) had gone there on business connected with a lumber company in which he was a heavy stockholder; that he arrived in the city on July 2, in the morning, and left about half-past seven in the evening of the same day, and while there he notified the Union Bank & Trust Company (the subsequent prosecutor herein) that the resignation of the president of the lumber company had been demanded and would probably be accepted that day. After such notification, and on the same day, the resignation was obtained, and the Union Bank & Trust Company was notified thereof by the relator before leaving the city on the evening of that day; that he passed through the city of Nashville on the 16th or 17th of July thereafter on his way to Chattanooga, but did not stop at Nashville at that time, and had not been in the state of Tennessee since the 16th day of July, 1901, at the time he went to Chattanooga; that he had never lived in the state of Tennessee, and had not been in that state between the 26th or 27th of May, 1899, and the 2d day of July, 1901.

Upon this state of facts the judge, before whom the hearing was had, dismissed the writ and remanded the relator to the custody of the defendant Hyatt, as chief of police. This order was affirmed without any opinion by the appellate division of the supreme court, but, as stated, it was reversed by the court of appeals and the relator discharged.

Mr. J. Murray Downs argued the cause, and, with Mr. Robert G. Scherer, filed a brief for plaintiff in error:

The warrant of the governor is conclusive as to every fact stated in this case, because there is no denial of any of the facts stated in it.

Ex parte Dawson, 28 C. C. A. 354, 49 U. S. App. 674, 83 Fed. 307; People ex rel. Jourdan v. Donohue, 84 N. Y. 438.

The Constitution and laws of Congress provide for interstate rendition of fugitives, even in cases where the party charged was not actually present in the demanding state at the time the crime was committed.

Streep v. United States, 160 U. S. 128, 40 L. ed. 365, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 244; Roberts v. Reilly, 116 U. S. 80, 29 L. ed. 544, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 291; Re Cook, 49 Fed. 833, 146 U. S. 188.

S. 183, 36 L. ed. 934, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 40; Reg. v. Jacobi, 46 L. T. N. S. 595n.

The court should not indulge in a fine grammatical criticism of the preposition "from" in the Constitution, in order to defeat the manifest intention of the provision, and bring about a condition which would make the states asylums for fugitive criminals of other states.

Griffith v. Bogert, 18 How. 163, 15 L. ed. 310. See also 14 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 553.

Such is the character of human language that no word conveys to the mind, in all situations, one single definite idea; and nothing is more common than to use words in a figurative sense. Almost all compositions contain words which, taken in their rigorous sense, would convey a meaning different from that which is obviously intended.

McCullough v. Maryland, 4 Wheat. 414, 4 L. ed. 603.

The constitutional provision should be given a broad construction.

Kentucky v. Dennison, 24 How. 66, 16 L. ed. 717; Martin v. Hunter, 1 Wheat. 326, 4 L. ed. 102.

The uniform tendency of the decisions has been to place the doctrine of interstate rendition on the broadest possible basis.

Mahon v. Justice, 127 U. S. 715, 32 L. ed. 288, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1204; Lascelles v. Georgia, 148 U. S. 542, 37 L. ed. 551, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 687; Ex parte Reggel, 114 U. S. 642, 29 L. ed. 250, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1148; Gibbons v. Ogden, 9 Wheat. 188, 6 L. ed. 68.

The constitutional provision should not be weakened and made only half effective by a narrow construction of the phrase "from which."

Re Palliser, 136 U. S. 265, 34 L. ed. 517, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1034; 2 Story, Const. § 1809.

One offending against the laws of the United States may be sent to any part of the country.

Horner v. United States, 143 U. S. 207, 36 L. ed. 126, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 407; Re Palisier, 136 U. S. 257, 34 L. ed. 514, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1034.

And when the offense is against the state laws, the criminal should be surrendered.

The courts of the United States have steadily refused to inquire into the means by which a person is brought within the jurisdiction for trial and punishment.

Re Johnson, 167 U. S. 120, 42 L. ed. 103, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 735; Ker v. Illinois, 119 U. S. 436, 30 L. ed. 421, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 225; Lascelles v. Georgia, 148 U. S. 542, 37 L. ed. 551, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 687.

Tennessee is the state having jurisdiction of the crime.

Adams v. People, 1 N. Y. 173; State v. Grady, 34 Conn. 118; Com. v. White, 123 Mass. 430, 25 Am. Rep. 116; Com. v. Smith, 93 Mass. 243; Lindsey v. State, 38 Ohio St. 507; United States v. Davis, 2 Sumn. 482, Fed. Cas. No. 14,932; Reg. v. Garrett, 22 Eng. Law & Eq. 611; King v. Brisac, 4 East, 164; State v. Chapin, 17 Ark. 565, 65

Am. Dec. 452; State v. Morrow, 40 S. C. 221, 18 S. E. 853; Noyes v. State, 41 N. J. L. 418; Simpson v. State, 92 Ga. 41, 22 L. R. A. 248, 17 S. E. 984; Hatfield v. Com. 11 Ky. L. Rep. 468, 12 S. W. 309; Re Pal-liser, 136 U. S. 257, 34 L. ed. 514, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1034.

Mr. William S. Bryan, Jr., argued the cause, and, with Mr A. de R. Sappington, filed a brief for defendant in error:

Whether the decision of the governor of the asylum state shall be final on the question as to whether the person sought to be extradited was in fact a fugitive from the justice of the demanding state is a question proper to be determined by the courts of that state.

Cook v. Hart, 146 U. S. 193, 36 L. ed. 939, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 40.

In New York such inquiry is open to the courts of that state on habeas corpus.

People ex rel. Lawrence v. Brady, 56 N. Y. 182.

The view of the court of appeals of New York, that the recitals in the warrant of the governor are only prima facie, and are liable to be rebutted by proof on habeas corpus, is the prevailing view.

Re Tod, 12 S. D. 386, 47 L. R. A. 566, 81 N. W. 637; Re Cook, 49 Fed. 823; Ex parte Hart, 28 L. R. A. 801, 11 C. C. A. 165, 22 U. S. App. 22, 63 Fed. 260; Work v. Cor-rington, 34 Ohio St. 64, 32 Am. Rep. 345; Re Manchester, 5 Cal. 237; 15 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. 205.

The accused must have been physically present in the demanding state at the time when the assumed crime is alleged to have been committed.

Wilcox v. Nolze, 34 Ohio St. 520; Re Man-chester, 5 Cal. 237; Jones v. Leonard, 50 Iowa, 106, 32 Am. Rep. 116; Re Tod, 12 S. D. 386, 47 L. R. A. 566, 81 N. W. 637; Re Mohr, 73 Ala. 503, 49 Am. Rep. 63; Re Fetter, 23 N. J. L. 311, 57 Am. Dec. 382; Re Voorhees, 32 N. J. L. 150; Hartman v. Aveline, 63 Ind. 345, 30 Am. Rep. 217; Ex parte Knowles, 16 Ky. L. Rep. 263; Re Greenough, 31 Vt. 279; Kingsbury's Case, 106 Mass. 223; Re Heyward, 1 Sandf. 701; State v. Hall, 115 N. C. 811, 28 L. R. A. 289, 20 S. E. 729; 2 Moore, Extradition, § 581; Spear, Extradition, pp. 397, 499; 7 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 1st ed. p. 646, note 1; 12 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 603, note 3; Re Jackson, 2 Flipp. 183, Fed. Cas. No. 7,125; Ex parte Smith, 3 McLean, 121, Fed. Cas. No. 12,968; Ex parte McKean, 3 Hughes, 25, Fed. Cas. No. 8,848; United States v. Fowkes, 49 Fed. 52; Tennessee v. Jackson, 1 L. R. A. 370, 36 Fed. 258; Re White, 5 C. C. A. 29, 14 U. S. App. 84, 55 Fed. 54; Ex parte Reggel, 114 U. S. 651, 29 L. ed. 253, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1148; Roberts v. Reilly, 116 U. S. 97, 29 L. ed. 549, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 291.

The same interpretation of the constitutional provision was followed by the governor of Illinois in the attempt to extradite Mr. Storey, Editor of the Chicago Tribune, into Wisconsin.

3 Cent. L. J. 636.

And by the governor of Maryland in the case of Max Juhn, attempted to be ex-tradited into New York.

2 Moore, Extradition, § 585.

And by the governor of New York in the case of Mitchell, attempted to be extradited into New Jersey.

4 N. Y. Crim. Rep. 596.

Mr. Justice Peckham, after making the foregoing statement of facts, delivered the opinion of the court:

By clause 2 of § 2 of article 4 of the Constitution of the United States it is provided:

"A person charged in any state with treason, felony, or other crime, who shall flee from justice, and be found in another state, shall, on demand of the executive authority of the state from which he fled, be delivered up, to be removed to the state having jurisdiction of the crime."

It was held in Kentucky v. Dennison, 24 How. 66, 104, 16 L. ed. 717, 728, that this provision of the Constitution was not self-executing, and that it required the action of *Congress in that regard. Congress did act [709.] by passing the statute approved February 12, 1793 (1 Stat. at L. 302, chap. 7). The substance of that act is reproduced in § 5278 of the Revised Statutes (U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 3597), as follows:

"Sec. 5278. Whenever the executive authority of any state or territory demands any person as a fugitive from justice, of the executive authority of any state or territory to which such person has fled, and produces a copy of an indictment found, or an affidavit made before a magistrate of any state or territory, charging the person demanded with having committed treason, felony, or other crime, certified as authentic by the governor or chief magistrate of the state or territory from whence the person so charged has fled, it shall be the duty of the executive authority of the state or territory to which such person has fled to cause him to be arrested and secured, and to cause notice of the arrest to be given to the executive authority making such demand, or to the agent of such authority appointed to receive the fugitive, and to cause the fugitive to be delivered to such agent when he shall appear. If no such agent appears within six months from the time of the arrest, the prisoner may be discharged. All costs or expenses incurred in the apprehending, securing, and transmitting such fugitive to the state or territory making such demand shall be paid by such state or territory."

The proceedings in this case were under this section, and the warrant issued by the governor was sufficient prima facie to justify the arrest of the relator and his delivery to the agent of the state of Tennessee. Certain facts, however, must appear before the governor has the right to issue his warrant. As was said in Roberts v. Reilly, 116 U. S. 80, 95, 29 L. ed. 544, 549, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 291, 300, it must appear to the governor, before he can lawfully comply with the demand for extradition, that the person demanded is substantially charged with a crime against the laws of the state from [710] whose justice he is alleged to have fled, by an indictment or an affidavit, etc., and that the person demanded is a fugitive from the justice of the state the executive authority of which makes the demand. It was also stated in the same case that the question whether the person demanded was substantially charged *with a crime or not was a question of law and open upon the face of the papers to judicial inquiry upon application for a discharge under the writ of habeas corpus; that the question whether the person demanded was a fugitive from the justice of the state was a question of fact which the governor upon whom the demand was made must decide upon such evidence as he might deem satisfactory. How far his decision might be reviewed judicially in proceedings in habeas corpus, or whether it was conclusive or not, were, as stated, questions not settled by harmonious judicial decisions nor by any authoritative judgment of this court, and the opinion continues as follows:

"It is conceded that the determination of the fact by the executive of the state in issuing his warrant of arrest, upon a demand made on that ground, whether the writ contains a recital of an express finding to that effect or not, must be regarded as sufficient to justify the removal until the presumption in its favor is overthrown by contrary proof."

In People ex rel. Lawrence v. Brady, 56 N. Y. 182, it was held that the courts have jurisdiction to interfere by writ of habeas corpus, and to examine the grounds upon which an executive warrant for the apprehension of an alleged fugitive from justice from another state is issued, and, in case the papers are defective and insufficient, to discharge the prisoner.

In the case before us the New York court of appeals held that if upon the return to the writ of habeas corpus it is clearly shown that the relator is not a fugitive from justice, and there is no evidence from which a contrary view can be entertained, the court will discharge the person from imprisonment, but that mere evidence of an alibi, or evidence that the person demanded was not in the state as alleged, would not justify his discharge, where there was some evidence on the other side, as habeas corpus was not the proper proceeding to try the question of the guilt or innocence of the accused. And the court also held that the conceded facts showed the absence of the accused at the time when the crimes, if ever, were committed, and that the demand was in truth based upon the doctrine that a constructive presence of the accused in the [711] demanding state *at the time of the alleged commission of the crime was sufficient to authorize the demand for his surrender.

We are of opinion that the warrant of the governor is but prima facie sufficient to hold the accused, and that it is open to him to show by admissions, such as are herein produced, or by other conclusive evidence, that the charge upon which extradition is demanded assumes the absence of the accused person from the state at the time the crime 188 U. S. U. S., Book 47.

was, if ever, committed. This is in accordance with the authorities in the states cited in the opinion of Judge Cullen in the New York court of appeals, and is, as we think, founded upon correct principles. Robb v. Connolly, 111 U. S. 624, 28 L. ed. 542, 4 Sup. Ct. Rep. 544, recognizing authority of states to act by habeas corpus in extradition proceedings.

If upon a question of fact, made before the governor, which he ought to decide, there were evidence pro and con, the courts might not be justified in reviewing the decision of the governor upon such question. In a case like that, where there was some evidence sustaining the finding, the courts might regard the decision of the governor as conclusive. But here, as we have the testimony of the relator (uncontradicted) and the stipulation of counsel as to what the facts were, we have the right, and it is our duty on such proof and concession, to say whether a case was made out within the Federal statute, justifying the action of the governor. It is upon the statute that the inquiry must rest.

In the case before us it is conceded that the relator was not in the state at the various times when it is alleged in the indictments the crimes were committed, nor until eight days after the time when the last one is alleged to have been committed. That the prosecution on the trial of such an indictment need not prove with exactness the commission of the crime at the very time alleged in the indictment is immaterial. The indictments in this case named certain dates as the times when the crimes were committed, and where in a proceeding like this there is no proof, or offer of proof, to show that the crimes were in truth committed on some other day than those named in the indictments, and that the dates therein named were erroneously stated, it is sufficient for the party charged to show that he was not in the *state at the times named in the in-[712] dictments; and when those facts are proved so that there is no dispute in regard to them, and there is no claim of any error in the dates named in the indictments, the facts so proved are sufficient to show that the person was not in the state when the crimes were, if ever, committed.

The New York court of appeals has construed the stipulation as conceding these facts, and we think that its construction of the stipulation is the correct one.

It is, however, contended that a person may be guilty of a larceny or false pretense within a state without being personally present in the state at the time. Therefore the indictments found were sufficient justification for the requisition and for the action of the governor of New York thereon. This raises the question whether the relator could have been a fugitive from justice when it is conceded he was not in the state of Tennessee at the time of the commission of those acts for which he had been indicted, assuming that he committed them outside of the state.

The exercise of jurisdiction by a state to 661 make an act committed outside its borders a crime against the state is one thing, but to assert that the party committing such act comes under the Federal statute, and is to be delivered up as a fugitive from the justice of that state, is quite a different proposition.

The language of § 5278, Rev. Stat. (U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 3597), provides, as we think, that the act shall have been committed by an individual who was at the time of its commission personally present within the state which demands his surrender. It speaks of a demand by the executive authority of a state for the surrender of a person as a fugitive from justice, by the executive authority of a state to which such person has fled, and it provides that a copy of the indictment found, or affidavit made before a magistrate of any state, charging the person demanded with having committed treason, etc., certified as authentic by the governor or chief magistrate of the state or territory from whence the person so charged has fled, shall be produced, and it makes it the duty of the executive authority of the state to which such person has fled to cause [713] him to be arrested and secured. *Thus the person who is sought must be one who has fled from the demanding state, and he must have fled (not necessarily directly) to the state where he is found. It is difficult to see how a person can be said to have fled from the state in which he is charged to have committed some act amounting to a crime against that state, when in fact he was not within the state at the time the act is said to have been committed. How can a person flee from a place that he was not in? He could avoid a place that he had not been in; he could omit to go to it; but how can it be said with accuracy that he has fled from a place in which he had not been present? This is neither a narrow, nor, as we think, an incorrect, interpretation of the statute. It has been in existence since 1793, and we have found no case decided by this court wherein it has been held that the statute covered a case where the party was not in the state at the time when the act is alleged to have been committed. We think the plain meaning of the act requires such presence, and that it was not intended to include, as a fugitive from the justice of a state, one who had not been in the state at the time when, if ever, the offense was committed, and who had not, therefore, in fact, fled therefrom.

In Ex parte Reggel, 114 U. S. 642, 651, 29 L. ed. 250, 253, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1148, 1153, it was stated by Mr. Justice Harlan, in speaking for the court:

"The only question remaining to be considered relates to the alleged want of competent evidence before the governor of Utah at the time he issued the warrant of arrest to prove that the appellant was a fugitive from the justice of Pennsylvania. Undoubtedly the act of Congress did not impose upon the executive authority of the territory the duty of surrendering the appellant, unless it was made to appear, in some proper way, that he was a fugitive from justice. In other words, the appellant was entitled, under the act of Congress, to insist upon proof that he was within the demanding state at the time he is alleged to have committed the crime charged and subsequently withdrew from her jurisdiction, so that he could not be reached by her criminal process. The statute, it is to be observed, does not prescribe the character of such proof; but that the executive authority of the territory was not required, *by the [714] act of Congress, to cause the arrest of appellant, and his delivery to the agent appointed by the governor of Pennsylvania, without proof of the fact that he was a fugitive from justice, is, in our judgment, clear from the language of that act. Any other interpretation would lead to the conclusion that the mere requisition by the executive of the demanding state, accompanied by the copy of an indictment, or an affidavit before a magistrate, certified by him to be authentic, charging the accused with crime committed within her limits, imposes upon the executive of the state or territory where the accused is found the duty of surrendering him, although he may be satisfied, from incontestible proof, that the accused had, in fact, never been in the demanding state, and therefore could not be said to have fled from its justice. Upon the executive of the state in which the accused is found rests the responsibility of determining, in some legal mode, whether he is a fugitive from the justice of the demanding state. He does not fail in duty if he makes it a condition precedent to the surrender of the accused that it be shown to him, by competent proof, that the accused is, in fact, a fugitive from the justice of the demanding state."

To the same effect is Roberts v. Reilly, 116 U. S. 80, 29 L. ed. 544, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 291. In that case the issue was made about the presence of the party in the demanding state at the time the act was alleged to have been committed, and there was direct and positive proof before the governor of Georgia, upon whom the demand had been made, and there was no other evidence in the record which contradicted it. It was said (p. 97, L. ed. p. 549, Sup. Ct. Rep. p. 300):

"The appellant, in his affidavit, does not deny that he was in the state of New York about the date of the day laid in the indictment, when the offense is alleged to have been committed, and states, by way of inference only, that he was not in that state on that very day; and the fact that he has not been within the state since the finding of the indictment is irrelevant and immaterial."

It is clear that it was regarded by the court as essential that the person should have been in the state which demanded his surrender at the time of the commission of the offense alleged *in the affidavit or indictment, and that it was a fact jurisdictional [715] in its nature, without which he could not be proceeded against under the Federal statute.

Cook v. Hart, 146 U. S. 183, 36 L. ed. 934, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 40, decides nothing to the contrary. In that case the party was arrested in Illinois on account of a crime which, it was alleged, had been committed by him in Wisconsin. He sued out a writ of habeas corpus in Illinois to test the legality of his arrest under the circumstances appearing in the case. Upon the hearing the court decided the arrest to be legal, and the party arrested acquiesced in this disposition of the case, and made no attempt to obtain a review of the judgment in a superior court. It was not until after his arrival in Wisconsin, whither he was taken by virtue of the warrant issued by the governor of Illinois, and after his trial had begun in Wisconsin, that he made application to the circuit court of the United States in Wisconsin to be released upon habeas corpus, upon the ground he had originally urged, that he was not a fugitive from justice within the meaning of the Constitution and laws of the United States. The court decided against him, holding that he had been properly surrendered. This court said that, assuming that the question might be jurisdictional when raised before the executive or the courts of the surrendering state, that it was presented in a somewhat different aspect after the person had been delivered to the agent of the demanding state, and had actually entered the territory of that state and was held under the process of its courts. And it was said that the authorities tended to support the theory that the executive warrant has spent its force when the accused has been delivered to the demanding state; that it is too late for him to object even to jurisdictional defects in his surrender, and that he was rightfully held under the process of the demanding state. Whether the claim made by the party brought to Wisconsin that he was illegally arrested in Illinois was well founded or not, this court did not feel called upon to consider, or to review the propriety of the decision of the court below, and this on the ground that it was proper to wait until the state court had finally acted upon the case, and then to require the accused to sue out his writ of error from this court to *the highest state court where a decision could be had, instead of determining the question summarily on habeas corpus.

[716]

It is contended, however, that there are cases in this court which sustain the proposition maintained by the plaintiff in error herein, and Kentucky v. Dennison, 24 How. 66, 16 L. ed. 717, is referred to as authority. It is therein held that the words "treason, felony, or other crime," spoken of in the Constitution, included every offense forbidden and made punishable by the laws of the state where the offense is committed, and it is therefore argued that as an act committed outside its borders may, under certain circumstances, become a crime against the state, a person thus committing such an act comes within the meaning of the Constitution, and should be surrendered upon demand of the governor of the state whose law he is alleged to have violated.

On looking at that case it is seen that the facts were wholly different, and the court had no such case as the one before us in mind. The party against whom the demand was made had committed the crime, as alleged, within the state of Kentucky, and no question arose as to his liability to be returned to Kentucky for any act done by him outside its borders. The governor of Ohio, upon whom the demand was made, acting under the advice of his attorney general, refused to surrender the fugitive because the crime alleged was neither treason nor felony at common law, nor was it one which was regarded as a crime by the usages and laws of civilized nations, and the governor was advised that obviously a line must be somewhere drawn distinguishing offenses which did, from offenses which did not, fall within the scope of the power granted by the Constitution. It was in regard to this contention that this court held as stated. Mr. Chief Justice Tancy, delivering the opinion of the court, said (p. 99, L. ed. p. 726):
188 U. S.

"The words 'treason, felony, or other crime,' in their plain and obvious import, as well as in their legal and technical sense, embrace every act forbidden and made punishable by a law of the state. The word 'crime' of itself includes every offense, from the highest to the lowest in the grade of offenses, and includes what are called 'misdemeanors,' as well as treason and *felony. 4[717] Bl. Com. 5, 6, and note 3, Wendell's ed. But as the word 'crime' would have included treason and felony, without specially mentioning those offenses, it seems to be supposed that the natural and legal import of the word, by associating it with those offenses, must be restricted and confined to offenses already known to the common law and to the usage of nations, and regarded as offenses in every civilized community, and that they do not extend to acts made offenses by local statute, growing out of local circumstances, nor to offenses against ordinary police regulations. This is one of the grounds upon which the governor of Ohio refused to deliver Lago, under the advice of the attorney general of that state.

"But this inference is founded upon an obvious mistake as to the purposes for which the words 'treason and felony' were introduced. They were introduced for the purpose of guarding against any restriction of the word 'crime,' and to prevent this provision from being construed by the rules and usages of independent nations in compacts for delivering up fugitives from justice.

"This compact, ingrafted in the Constitution, included, and was intended to include, every offense made punishable by the law of the state in which it was committed, and that it gives the right to the executive authority of the state to demand the fugitive from the executive authority of the state in which he is found; that the right given to 'demand' implies that it is an absolute right; and it follows that there must be a correlative obligation to deliver, without any reference to the character of the crime charged, or to the policy or laws of the state to which the fugitive has fled."

The court, however, held that while it was the duty of the executive authority of Ohio under the circumstances to deliver the person demanded, and that such duty was merely ministerial and the governor had no right to exercise any discretionary power as to the nature or character of the crime charged in the indictment, yet it was also held that the Federal courts had no means to compel the governor to perform the moral obligation of the state under the compact in [718] the Constitution, *and that the courts could not coerce the state executive or other state officer as such to perform any duty by act of Congress. On that ground the motion for a mandamus to compel the governor of Ohio to issue his warrant was refused. Nothing in that case can be regarded as any authority for the proposition contended for here. The case assumed the presence of the party in the state at the time of the alleged commission of the crime. The question was whether upon such assumption the executive of the state upon whom the demand was made could examine as to the character of the crime and refuse to deliver up, in his discretion.

To the same effect is Ex parte Reggel, 114 U. S. 642, 29 L. ed. 250, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1148. In that case the objection was made in the court of original jurisdiction that there could be no valid requisition based upon an indictment for an offense less than a felony. It was held that such view was erroneous, and Kentucky v. Dennison, 24 How. 66, 16 L. ed. 717, was cited in support of that proposition, yet it was in this very case of Reggel that the remarks already quoted were made, that the person demanded was entitled to insist upon proof that he was within the demanding state at the time that he is charged to have committed the crime, and subsequently withdrew therefrom to another jurisdiction, so that he could not be reached by the criminal process of the state where the act was committed.

Many state courts before whom the question has come have held that a merely constructive presence in the demanding state at the time of the alleged commission of the offense was not sufficient to render the person a fugitive from justice; that he must have been personally present within the state at the time of the alleged commission of the act, or else he could not be regarded as a fugitive from justice. Spear and also Moore on Extradition are to the same effect. Those authorities and text writers are referred to in the margin.†

[719] *In the case of Re White, 5 C. C. A. 29, 14 U. S. App. 84, 55 Fed. 54, 58, in the United States circuit court of appeals for the second circuit, it was said by Lacombe, circuit judge, that it was proper to inquire upon habeas corpus whether the prisoner was in fact within the demanding state when the alleged crime was committed, for if he were not it could not be properly held that he had fled from it.

The subsequent presence for one day (under the circumstances stated above) of the relator in the state of Tennessee, eight days after the alleged commission of the act, did not, when he left the state, render him a fugitive from justice within the meaning of the statute. There is no evidence or claim that he then committed any act which brought him within the criminal law of the state of Tennessee, or that he was indicted for any act then committed. The proof is uncontradicted that he went there on business, transacted it, and came away. The complaint was not made, nor the indictments found, until months after that time. His departure from the state after the conclusion of his business cannot be regarded as a fleeing from justice within the meaning of the statute. He must have been there when the crime was committed, as alleged, and if not, a subsequent going there and coming away is not a flight.

We are of opinion that, as the relator showed without contradiction and upon conceded facts that he was not within the state of Tennessee at the times stated in the indictments found in the Tennessee court, nor at any time when the acts were, if ever, committed, he was not a fugitive from justice within the meaning of the Federal statute upon that subject, and upon these facts the warrant of the governor of the state of New York was improperly issued, and the judgment of the Court of Appeals of the state of New York discharging the relator from imprisonment by reason of such warrant must be affirmed.

*UNITED STATES, Appt.,

[720]

v.

OFFICERS AND CREW OF THE U. S. S. MANGROVE. (No. 24.)

OFFICERS AND ENLISTED MEN OF THE U. S. SHIPS NEW YORK, INDIANA, and WILMINGTON, Appts.,

v.

OFFICERS AND CREW OF THE U. S. S. MANGROVE. (No. 34.)†

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 720-726.)

Prize—distribution of prize money—vessels

†These cases are reported by the Official Reporter under the title of "The Mangrove Prize Money."

NOTE.—As to what vessels are entitled to share in the distribution of prize money—see note to United States v. Farragut, 22 L. ed. U. S. 879.

†Wilcox v. Nolze (1878) 34 Ohio St. 520, 524; Jones v. Leonard (1878) 50 Iowa, 106, 32 Am. Rep. 116; Re Mohr (1883) 73 Ala. 503, 514; Re Fetter (1852) 23 N. J. L. 311, 57 Am. Dec. 382; Hartman v. Aveline (1878) 63 Ind. 345, 30 Am. Rep. 217; Ex parte Knowles (1894) 16 Ky. L. Rep. 263; Kingsbury's Case (1870) 106 Mass. 223, 227; State v. Hall (1894) 115 N. C. 811, 28 L. R. A. 289, 20 S. E. 729; 2 Moore, Extradition, §§ 579, 581, 584; Spear, Extradition, 310 et seq.; Cooley, Const. Llm. 4th ed. 21, note 1; 3 Crim. Law Mag. 806 et seq., published 1882.

within signal distance—relative force of captor and prize.

1. A vessel of the United States navy was not "within signal distance" of another vessel making a capture, so as to be entitled to share in the distribution of the prize money under U. S. Rev. Stat. § 4632 (U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 3133), where the two vessels were from 12 to 15 miles apart, and the vessel making the capture was equipped with boat flags 3 feet by 4 in size, instead of the usual signal flags 8 feet by 11.
2. Naval vessels not within signal distance of a capture are not vessels "making the capture," within the meaning of U. S. Rev. Stat. § 4630 (U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 3132), and therefore cannot be taken into account in estimating the relative force of captor and prize, for the purpose of determining the proportion of the prize money to which the captor is entitled under that section, although their proximity may have induced the surrender of the prize to an inferior force.

[Nos. 24, 34.]

Argued January 7, 8, 9, 1903. Decided February 23, 1903.

A PPEALS from the District Court of the United States for the Southern District of Florida to review a decree distributing the proceeds of a vessel condemned as a prize of war. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Assistant Attorney General Hoyt argued the cause and filed a brief for the United States:

Those vessels whose presence and co-operation manifestly contributed to the result, because their support aided in intimidating the enemy and encouraging the friend, should be admitted to share.

The Sparkler, 1 Dodson Adm. 259; Story, Prize Courts; The Forsigheid, 3 C. Rob. 311; The Harmonie, 3 C. Rob. 319; Melanie, 2 Dodson Adm. 122.

In the development of the law in England, the terms "sight" and "signal distance" were considered as practically interchangeable.

Le Bon Aventure, 1 Acton, 211.

If there was any "chase" here in the ordinary sense, the Indiana certainly took part in it.

L'Amitie, 6 C. Rob. 261.

"Within signal distance" is not essentially a narrower and stricter term than "in sight."

The Anglia, Blatchf. Prize Cas. 566, Fed. Cas. No. 391; The Ella & Anna, 2 Sprague, 267, Fed. Cas. No. 4,368; The Cherokee, 2 Sprague, 235, Fed. Cas. No. 2,640.

Participation in the capture, and the consequent right to share, establish necessarily the effective superiority of the capturing force.

The Ironclad Atlanta, 3 Wall. 425, sub nom. The Weehawken v. The Atlanta, 18 L. ed. 253.

Mr. James H. Hayden argued the cause, and, with Mr. Joseph K. McCammon, filed a brief for the New York:

A vessel which has taken no potential part in a capture shall nevertheless be treated as a joint captor, if her presence at or near the scene of action was a contributing cause of the surrender of the prize.

The Ironclad Atlanta, 3 Wall. 425, sub nom. The Weehawken v. The Atlanta, 18 L. ed. 253.

Mr. William B. King argued the cause, and, with Mr. George A. King, filed a brief for the Indiana and Wilmington:

The Mangrove's evidence was all interested.

Re Santiago Bay, 36 Ct. Cl. 203.

Affirmative testimony must outweigh the negative.

Stitt v. Huidekoper, 17 Wall. 394, 21 L. ed. 647.

Messrs. Benjamin Micou and Hilary A. Herbert argued the cause, and, with Mr. Jefferson B. Browne, filed a brief for the Mangrove:

For the purpose of computing relative force the vessels making the capture are alone to be considered.

The Atlanta, 2 Sprague, 251, Fed. Cas. No. 619; The Cherokee, 2 Sprague, 235, Fed. Cas. No. 2,640.

Mr. Justice Holmes delivered the opinion of the court:

These are appeals from a decree of the United States district court distributing the proceeds of the Spanish steamer Panama, condemned by an earlier decree as prize of war. 176 U. S. 535, 44 L. ed. 577, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 480. The district court awarded the whole net proceeds to the officers and crew of the United States steamer Mangrove, on the ground that the Mangrove was the sole capturing vessel, that the prize was of superior or equal force, and that no other vessel was within signal distance. U. S. Rev. Stat. § 4630 (U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 3132), repealed by act of March 3, 1899 (30 Stat. at L. 1007, chap. 413, § 13, § 4632, U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 3133). The United States appeals, contending that the Mangrove alone was of force superior to the Panama, and also that the Indiana, Wilmington, and New York were within signal distance, and that the Indiana at least was a joint captor, and that therefore, by § 4630, U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 3132, one half the proceeds should go to the United States. The Indiana appeals, taking the ground that the Mangrove was the sole captor and of force inferior to the Panama, but that the Indiana was within signal distance and in such condition as to be able to render effective aid if required, and therefore entitled to share in the prize by § 4632, U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 3133. The New York and the Wilmington appeal on like ground.

The case turns upon findings of fact, and the question is whether it is clear that the district court and the experienced naval prize commissioner were wrong. The Grace Girdler, 7 Wall. 196, 204, sub nom. Lockwood v. The Grace Girdler, 19 L. ed. 113, 116. But of course we do not leave out of sight the fact that much additional evidence has been put in since the trial below. We take up first the case of the Indiana. Without discussing the details of the contradictory testimony, we will state the facts that seem to us proved.

At seven minutes after six in the evening of April 25, 1898, off Havana, the Panama, having been brought to by a shot across her bow and notice that she would be fired into if she did not stop, was boarded by Ensign Dayton from the Mangrove. At this moment the capture was complete. The Gro-tius, 9 Cranch, 368, 370, 3 L. ed. 762, 763. The Panama did not attempt, or, so far as appears, intend, resistance or escape. The captain was told that he was a prize, war having been declared between the United States and Spain, and he acquiesced. Thereafter the Panama proceeded, with Ensign Dayton on board, under orders from the Mangrove. Her colors were not hauled down, or a prize crew put aboard until later, but under the circumstances these facts seem to us controlled by others which we have mentioned. It may be added that the officers of the Mangrove seem to have considered it usual for prizes to fly their ensign until they were adjudicated by the prize court, which would *account for their not ordering the flag lowered. Thirty-eight minutes later, at forty-five minutes after six, the Indiana, which had been approaching from an opposite direction, fired a shot across the bow of the Panama and sent a prize crew aboard. (We should remark in passing that this crew was subject to the orders of Ensign Dayton, the prize master, and seems to have been put aboard at the request of the Mangrove, which had not men enough to spare.) The officer who fired the gun says that he estimated the range at 4,500 yards, and that the shot being accurate, the distance from the Panama was about 4,800 yards. This was the estimate formed by the expert on the spot, at the time, for purposes of immediate action, when it was necessary to be accurate. Whatever it was, it was verified by the result of the shot, so that really the only question is whether it is remembered correctly, which there is no reason to doubt. It seems to us to outweigh all other estimates formed after the event by witnesses who had no similar duty. At this time the Mangrove was abreast or a little astern of the Panama.

The previous situations of the ships were as follows: All the United States vessels concerned in this cause were on blockade off Havana. At 4:30 P. M. the Indiana signaled the Mangrove and gave her orders to proceed to Key West after receiving mail. The Mangrove started for Key West before 5. At five or ten minutes after 5, and until 5:48, when her speed slackened, the Indiana went ahead at full speed toward the flagship New York, in an almost opposite direction from that taken by the Mangrove. At a quarter past 5 she sighted a strange vessel, which turned out to be the Panama, to the northeast. At 5:52 the flagship signaled "What colors does strange vessel carry?" and was answered at 5:55 "Cannot see." At about 6 the Indiana was turned toward the Panama and went at full speed, and later at best speed possible until 6:45, when she fired the shot and stopped. The Indiana when she turned at 6 did not attempt to signal the Mangrove, and five minutes earlier could not see the colors of the Panama, although the Spanish flag was three times the size of the Mangrove's signal flag. It appears from the steam log of the Indiana that a few *days later she made 10. [723] 15 knots per hour for two consecutive hours. Taking the time during which the Indiana and Mangrove had been moving away from each other, and their probable speed, or, again, taking the distance at which the Indiana was from the Panama and Mangrove when she fired her shot, and the fact that she had been making for them at full speed for the greater part of forty-five minutes, while they, during a part of the same time, were sailing toward her at a rate of 8 knots, we think it probable, without going into nice calculations, that at 6 o'clock she must have been 12 or 15 miles away at the least, as was found by the district court. From 6, when she turned, to seven minutes past 6, when the Panama was taken, the Indiana cannot have got to full speed or gone far. The Panama had been stopped.

There is much testimony that the capture was seen from the Indiana, while the officers of the Mangrove say that the Indiana could not be seen by them. We do not attempt to determine precisely how much could be seen, or was seen, from the higher ship. That testimony must reconcile itself as best it may with the foregoing facts, which we deem not open to dispute. And on those facts we are of opinion that the Indiana was not within signal distance of the Mangrove when the capture took place. We agree with the counsel for the appellees that this view is confirmed by the log of the Indiana and by her claim as first filed, which indicates that at that time her rights were supposed to be founded on the shot fired by her, and the hauling down of the Panama's colors thereupon. It is unnecessary to advert to further confirmatory details.

We need not consider whether, in order to bring a claimant within signal distance, mutual communication must be possible, or whether it is enough if signals from the vessel making the capture could be seen by the claimant. Taking it the latter way, still the words "within signal distance" must be read in connection with the further words "under such circumstances and in such condition as to be able to render effective aid, if required." The whole sentence refers to the actual conditions of this particular case, not to an abstract objective criterion of ideal signal distance in general. See The Ella & Anna, 2 *Sprague, 267, 273, Fed. Cas. [724] No. 4,368. The Mangrove had no signal flags but boat flags, about 3 feet by 4, the usual signal flags being about 8 feet by 11. Under such circumstances we think it probably would be safe to assume 5 miles as an outside limit of signal distance in this instance, if the facts heretofore found by us rendered it necessary to be so nice. It is argued, to be sure, that gun signals would have been possible. As to this suggestion we deem it enough to say that we see no reason to believe that it was a practical working possibility under the circumstances, and therefore need not consider whether this statute would be satisfied by anything less than the possibility of reading the ordinary day signals, in the case at bar.

The claims of the New York and the Wilmington fall with that of the Indiana. If she was not within signal distance of the Mangrove they were not, and, as we are about to show, can make no claim on the ground that the Indiana was a joint captor and that they were within signal distance of her.

A part of the argument for the United States also is disposed of by what we have said. If none of the other vessels were within signal distance of the Mangrove, none of them were "vessels making the capture" within the meaning of § 4630, U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 3132. The phrase must be taken to be used in that section in the same sense in which it is used in § 4632, U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 3133, where it is opposed to vessels within signal distance, and is defined as meaning "vessels present at and rendering actual assistance in the capture." It cannot be contended that vessels too far away to share in the prize as being within signal distance can share under the more immediate title of vessels making the capture, on the ground of some more remote contribution to the result. Vessels within signal distance and able to render effective aid are let in, it is true, presumably because they are taken to contribute to the result, but a more remote contribution is excluded. See The Cherokee, 2 Sprague, 235, Fed. Cas. No. 2,640; The Atlanta, 2 Sprague, 251, Fed. Cas. No. 619, 3 Wall. 425, sub nom. The Weehawken v. The Atlanta, 18 L. ed. 253; The Ella & Anna, 2 Sprague, 267, Fed. Cas. No. 4,368, and note.

It follows that these vessels cannot be taken into account in estimating the relative force of captor and prize. Undoubtedly [725] *it is likely that the Panama must have known when it left New York that war and a blockade of Havana were probable, and when it was stopped by the Mangrove, whatever it saw or did not see, it may have conjectured that other vessels were not far off. But, as we have said, these less immediate influences are laid out of account by the act.

* We may admit, with regard to the question just discussed and that to which we now address ourselves, that it is impossible not to feel that the prize law had in mind a different kind of case from this. To catch a blockade runner or a vessel not even informed of the blockade, in either case a vessel not expecting to fight and having shrewd ground to believe that to do so would be to bring down upon herself an overwhelming force, is not the desperate venture which the statute was framed to encourage. But some rather weak cases must fall within any law which is couched in general words.
188 U. S.

There is no denying that the Panama was of force superior to the Mangrove. She was of 1,432 tons register, with a crew of seventy-one. She had substantially what was required by her contract as a mail steamship with the Spanish government, viz., 2 Hontoria 9 centimetre guns with 30 round of shot for each, 1 Maxim gun on the bridge, 2 signal guns, 20 Remington rifles, and 10 Mauser rifles, all with ammunition, also bayonets and swords. The Mangrove was a steel screw lighthouse tender of not more than 800 tons, with a crew of thirty men, and with 2 6-pound guns, and no small arms or eutlasses. The Panama also was the much faster boat of the two.

The Panama's armament was taken on board under contract with the Spanish government for her own defense, and was fit for hostile use. 176 U. S. 548, 549, 44 L. ed. 582, 583, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 480. We must assume that if the master had thought that there was a fair chance of success, he would have shown fight. The fact that he did not, and that he probably had made up his mind not to before he saw the Mangrove, and therefore was not ready for action at the moment, does not change the result. If we cannot take the blockading squadron or the battleship Indiana in account as part of the capturing force, we cannot *take them into [726] account as motives. If the master was a timid man, who would not have dared to fight under any circumstances, there would have been the same certainty of surrender to one who knew the whole situation, but the law would have looked only to the force, and would not have gone into psychology. It would not matter that, because of his timidity, the breech blocks of the guns were left stowed below. If he had the materials for resistance and the chance to use them, that is as far as the law would inquire. So here. As was said by Judge Sprague, we must "consider the means the vessels possessed, and not the use they made of them." The Atlanta, 2 Sprague, 251, 258, Fed. Cas. No. 619. The adventure of the Mangrove may not have been a brilliant event that will live in story, but it was sufficient to give its officers and crew the profit of the law. It is decided that the Panama was lawful prize, and the case does not fall within the class in which the United States takes half.

Decree affirmed.

HOME LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY OF NEW YORK, Plff. in Err.,
v.

A. A. FISHER, as Executor of the Estate of Alexander Suter Maclean, Deceased.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 726-730.)

Life insurance—warranties—appeal—harmless error.

1 Declarations of an insured to the medical examiner for the insurance company are not made warranties by the provision of the application that the applicant warrants that the statements in it "are true, full, and complete, . . . and are offered to the company, together with those contained in the declaration to the . . . medical examiner as a consideration for, and as the basis of, the contract."

2. A ruling in a suit on a policy of life insurance, sustaining demurrers to pleas of breach of warranty with respect to the insured's use of intoxicating liquors, is not prejudicial, even though erroneous, where the jury found for plaintiff under instructions that, if they found the insured's answers on that subject to be untrue, they should find for defendant.

[No. 121.]

Submitted December 17, 1902. Decided February 23, 1903.

IN ERROR to the Circuit Court of the United States for the Northern District of Florida to review a judgment for plaintiff in an action on a policy of life insurance. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. William A. Blount submitted the cause for plaintiff in error:

A reversal will be directed unless it appears beyond doubt that the error complained of did not and could not have prejudiced the rights of the party.

Vicksburg & M. R. Co. v. O'Brien, 119 U. S. 103, 30 L. ed. 300, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 118.

The very charges relied upon as curing the error in sustaining the demurrer to the pleas show that they were inconsistent with themselves, and so misleading as to confuse the jury and prevent their arriving at an intelligent verdict. This furnished in itself a substantive ground for reversal.

Bank of the Metropolis v. New England Bank, 6 How. 212, 12 L. ed. 409.

Messrs. John C. Avery and Richard R. McMahon submitted the cause for defendant in error. Mr. Benjamin C. Tunison was with them on the brief:

No judgment should be reversed in a court of error when it is clear that the error could not have prejudiced, and did not prejudice, the right of the party against whom the ruling was made.

Lancaster v. Collins, 115 U. S. 222, 29 L. ed. 373, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 33.

Defendant is not prejudiced by the sustaining of a demurrer to a plea or answer, if he has other pleas or answers under which he could introduce any evidence that would have been admissible under that demurred to.

Pollak v. Brush Electric Asso. 128 U. S. 446, 32 L. ed. 474, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 119; Hudmon v. Cuyas, 6 C. C. A. 381, 13 U. S. App. 443, 57 Fed. 355.

Defendant is not injured by sustaining a demurrer to a cross bill, where it appears that the court treated the allegations thereof as before it, applied the evidence, and held that they were not sustained.

Lloyd v. Preston, 146 U. S. 630, 36 L. ed. 1111, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 131.

The sustaining of a demurrer to a valid plea is not reversible error, when another plea is admitted which includes all the matter alleged in the first plea, and lets in all the proofs sought to be introduced under the first plea.

Hudmon v. Cuyas, 6 C. C. A. 381, 13 U. S. App. 443, 57 Fed. 355.

Where an answer has been stricken out, but the defendant has been permitted to put in his evidence as if it remained, even if the order striking out the answer is erroneous, it is harmless.

Nemaha County v. Frank, 120 U. S. 41, 30 L. ed. 584, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 395.

Striking out pleas to the declaration is not prejudicial, where evidence competent under them would be equally competent under other pleas.

Supreme Council C. K. of A. v. Fidelity & C. Co. 11 C. C. A. 96, 22 U. S. App. 439, 63 Fed. 48.

Mr. Justice Holmes delivered the opinion of the court:

This is an action on a policy of life insurance, brought in the United States circuit court. The policy was taken out by one Maclean, the plaintiff's testator, on his own life. By a statute of Florida, if the plaintiff recovered, reasonable attorneys' fees were to be found by the jury and added to the judgment. Evidence was offered as to the proper fee, and was objected to on the ground that the statute was contrary to the 14th Amendment. The evidence was admitted subject to exception, the plaintiff got a verdict and judgment, and the case was brought here by writ of error.

In view of the decision in Fidelity Mut. Life Asso. v. Mettler, 185 U. S. 308, 46 L. ed. 922, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 662, the assignment of error in the ruling just stated is not pressed. But although it was that on which the case came up and which gives us jurisdiction, other errors are assigned, which are relied upon and which we must consider. Horner v. United States (No. 2) 143 U. S. 570, 577, 36 L. ed. 266, 269, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 522.

The policy purports to be made "in consideration of the statements and agreements made in the application for this policy, which are hereby made a part of this contract." The application "warrants" that the statements in it "are true, full, and complete, . . . and are offered to the company, together with those contained in the declaration to the Home Life Insurance Company's medical examiner, as a consideration for, and as the basis of, the contract with said company." The application contained the following questions and answers: "Q. Do you drink wine, spirits, or malt liquors? A. Yes. Q. If so, which of these, and to what extent? A. Moderately. Q. Have you ever used them freely or to excess? A. No." The declaration to the medical examiner contained the following questions and answers: "Q. Do you drink wine, spirits, or *malt liquors, daily or habitually? A. No habit of drinking liquors. Q. If so, which of these, and to what extent daily? Note.—State the daily amount. General terms, such as temperately, 'moderately,' 'occasionally,' will not be accepted, and will necessitate correspondence." The second of these questions was not answered. The defendant, with superfluous multiplicity of pleas, set up that these answers were warranties, and again, that they were material representations, and that they were false.

Demurrers to the pleas of breach of warranty and some pleas of false representation were sustained, mainly, we presume, on the authority of Moulor v. American L. Ins. Co. 111 U. S. 335, 28 L. ed. 447, 4 Sup. Ct. Rep. 466. So far as the declarations to the medical examiner are concerned, it will be seen that the word "warrant" does not extend to them. Grammatically, the meaning of the sentence, as it stands, is that the applicant warrants the statements in the application, and warrants that they are offered to the company, together with those in the declaration to the medical examiner, as the basis of the contract. If the sentence is taken a little more intelligently, we should assume that the word "they" has dropped out between "and" and "are offered," and that "warrant" does not govern that part of the clause. However read, the meaning is the same. With regard to the answer in the application, denying that the applicant ever had used spirits, etc., to excess, the strong language of the policy, making the application "part of the contract," affords ground for argument, at least, that the authority cited does not apply, and that this answer was warranted by the assured. But it is not necessary to decide that question in view of the trial and the subsequent ruling of the court.

The case went to trial on the 17th, 21st, 26th, and 27th pleas. The 17th set up the last-mentioned answer, denying the use of spirits freely or to excess, and averred that it was material, induced the issuing of the policy, and was false in that the applicant had a habit of using spirits freely. The 21st was similar, except that the falsity alleged was that the applicant [729] used spirits to excess. *The 26th set up the answers to the medical examiner; averred that the applicant did have a habit of drinking spirits; that the answer was material, and induced the making of the policy. The 27th plea was non assumpsit. Thus it will be seen that the facts relied on in the pleas held bad were in issue before the jury. This being so, it is questionable whether the plaintiff in error could complain, unless it could point out a mistaken instruction with regard to them at the trial. Pollak v. Brush Electric Asso. 128 U. S. 446, 452, 453, 32 L. ed. 474, 477, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 119; Lloyd v. Preston, 146 U. S. 630, 644, 36 L. ed. 1111, 1118, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 131; Hudmon v. Cuyas, 6 C. C. A. 381, 13 U. S. App. 443, 57 Fed. 355, 358, 360. Clearly, if, under proper instructions, the jury found the facts not to be as charged, the plaintiff in error suffered no wrong. That was what happened in this case.

The jury were instructed that, if they found "either one to be true, that before Maclean made application he drank liquors 188 U. S.

either freely or to excess, or at the time that he made the application he had a habit of drinking liquor," they were to find for the defendant, the declaration to the medical examiner thus being put upon the same footing as the application. The jury found for the plaintiff. Therefore, they must be taken to have found categorically that no one of the supposed facts was true, or, in other words, that all of the above recited answers were correct. If so, it does not matter whether they were warranties or not. There is a suggestion, to be sure, that in the latter case the defendant would have had to prove only the "literal" falsity of the statement, whereas in the other, proof of its substantial falsity was required. Phoenix Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Raddin, 120 U. S. 183, 189, 30 L. ed. 644, 646, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 500. But the plain question of fact was put to the jury with no such niceties of discrimination. They found a plain answer, and the distinction comes too late now. It is said, also, that the charge in other parts did away with the requirement which we have quoted, and that, under the pleas of misrepresentation, the defendant had the burden of proving other facts. It does not appear to us that the requirement was done away with. On the contrary, it was reiterated. The burden of proving other facts was largely cut down by further instructions unnecessary to repeat, and *the burden [730] of proving them did the defendant no harm when the jury found as they did with regard to Maclean's drinking. The alleged warranty that he drank moderately was satisfied by the findings, apart from other answers to the point made with regard to that. We see no reason to assume that the defendant was taken by surprise by the rulings in its favor and put in less evidence than it would have put in had the demurrers been overruled.

We see no ground for reversing the judgment in the other instructions to the jury. Moreover, the other questions raised are made immaterial by what we have said.

Judgment affirmed.

LOUISA V. KIDD, as Executrix of the Will of H. B. Tulane, Deceased, Plff. in Err.,
v.

STATE OF ALABAMA.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 730-733.)

Constitutional law—equal protection of the laws—taxation of stock of foreign railroads—exemptions.

The equal protection of the laws is not denied by the provisions of Ala. Code 1886, § 453, cl. 13, and Code 1896, § 3911, cl. 14, for NOTE.—As to the validity of class legislation—see State v. Goodwill (W. Va.) 6 L. R. A. 621, and note; and State v. Loomis (Mo.) 21 L. R. A. 789, and note.

As to constitutional equality of privileges, immunities, and protection—see Louisville Safety Vault & T. Co. v. Louisville & N. R. Co. (Ky.) 14 L. R. A. 579, and note.

the taxation of railroad stock, because of the exemption of stock in domestic railroads and in others that list substantially all their property for taxation.

[No. 158.]

Submitted January 27, 1903. Decided February 23, 1903.

IN ERROR to the Supreme Court of the State of Alabama to review a judgment which affirmed a judgment of the Circuit Court of Elmore County in favor of the State in a suit for taxes on stock in foreign railroads. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. W. A. Gunter submitted the cause for plaintiff in error:

In the imposition of public burdens by way of taxation, and in other legislation by the state affecting the rights of citizens, there must be no discrimination as to persons or classes which is purely arbitrary, oppressive, or capricious, such as would be pure favoritism and a denial of the equal protection of the laws to the less favored persons or classes.

Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Ellis, 165 U. S. 150, 41 L. ed. 666, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 255; Magoun v. Illinois Trust & Sav. Bank, 170 U. S. 293, 42 L. ed. 1042, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 594; Nicol v. Ames, 173 U. S. 509, 43 L. ed. 786, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 522; Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Matthews, 174 U. S. 96, 43 L. ed. 909, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 609.

Classification must always rest upon some difference which bears a reasonable and just relation to the act in respect to which the classification is proposed, and can never be made arbitrarily and without any such basis.

Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Ellis, 165 U. S. 150, 41 L. ed. 666, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 255; State v. Loomis, 115 Mo. 307, 21 L. R. A. 789, 22 S. W. 350.

Shares in state banks and in national banks belong to the same class for taxation.

State Bank v. Montgomery County Bd. of Revenue, 91 Ala. 223, 8 So. 852.

It is equally clear that shares in railroads belong to the same class, though they are chartered by different states.

Mr. Francis G. Caffey submitted the cause for defendant in error. Mr. John C. Breckinridge was with him on the brief:

The state has the right to discriminate in forming classes for taxation, provided the basis of discrimination is reasonable in principle.

American Sugar Ref. Co. v. Louisiana, 179 U. S. 89, 45 L. ed. 102, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 43; Pacific Exp. Co. v. Seibert, 142 U. S. 339, 35 L. ed. 1035, 3 Inters. Com. Rep. 810, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 250; Williams v. Fears, 179 U. S. 270, 45 L. ed. 190, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 121; Magoun v. Illinois Trust & Sav. Bank, 170 U. S. 283, 42 L. ed. 1037, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 594; Bell's Gap R. Co. v. Pennsylvania, 134 U. S. 232, 33 L. ed. 892, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 533; Home Ins. Co. v. New York, 134 U. S. 594, 33 L. ed. 1025, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 593; Tullis v. Lake Erie & W. R. Co. 175 U. S. 348, 44 L. ed. 192, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 136.

There is no fixed test as to what basis of classification is reasonable. Each case must be considered for itself.

Bell's Gap R. Co. v. Pennsylvania, 134 U. S. 237, 33 L. ed. 895, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 533.

It is within the province of the state, as a part of its public policy, as an inducement to investment in shares of corporations organized or doing business and owning property within the state, to give an advantage to persons holding stock in such corporations.

Pacific Exp. Co. v. Seibert, 142 U. S. 352, 35 L. ed. 1039, 3 Inters. Com. Rep. 810, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 250; Bell's Gap R. Co. v. Pennsylvania, 134 U. S. 237, 33 L. ed. 895, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 533; Barbier v. Connolly, 113 U. S. 27, 28 L. ed. 923, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 357.

Corporate property of the railroad corporations here involved may not be taxed at all, and none of the stock in them be owned, in the states in which they do business and own property. If the laws of those states tax only shares of stock and such stock is taxed at the situs of its ownership, if the contention of plaintiff in error is upheld such shares would escape altogether any burden of taxation, either direct or indirect. The usual situs of taxation is the place of ownership.

Kirtland v. Holchkiss, 100 U. S. 491, 25 L. ed. 558; State v. Kidd, 125 Ala. 413, 28 So. 480.

Such a result would be contrary to the generally prevailing policy of restricting exemptions from taxation (Sturges v. Carter, 114 U. S. 521, 29 L. ed. 243, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1014); and the adoption of a law which renders this impossible, as does the Alabama statute, may be said on that ground, to be founded on a reasonable basis.

The contention that value is the sole basis of taxation, and that all classification must be so made that equal values shall be equally taxed, flies in the face of repeated decisions of this court.

Giozza v. Tiernan, 148 U. S. 657, 37 L. ed. 599, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 721; Davidson v. New Orleans, 96 U. S. 97, 24 L. ed. 616; Bell's Gap R. Co. v. Pennsylvania, 134 U. S. 232, 33 L. ed. 892, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 533; Pacific Exp. Co. v. Seibert, 142 U. S. 339, 35 L. ed. 1035, 3 Inters. Com. Rep. 810, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 250; Adams Exp. Co. v. Ohio State Auditor, 165 U. S. 194, 41 L. ed. 683, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 305; Magoun v. Illinois Trust & Sav. Bank, 170 U. S. 283, 42 L. ed. 1037, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 594; Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Indiana, 165 U. S. 304, 41 L. ed. 725, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 345.

It is the general policy of the state to tax values equally, and to avoid double taxation so far as practicable.

State v. Kidd, 125 Ala. 421, 28 So. 480; 1 Desty, Taxn. 199.

In accomplishing this, however, the state looks only to its own tax laws, and regulates them by its own theory of fairness, and does not consider the laws of other states.

State v. Kidd, 125 Ala. 413, 28 So. 480; Bradley v. Bauder, 36 Ohio St. 28, 38 Am. Rep. 547; Dwight v. Boston, 12 Allen, 316; Bemis v. Boston, 14 Allen, 366; Dyer v. Osborne, 11 R. I. 321, 23 Am. Rep. 460; 1 Desty, Taxn. 62, 63.

While this tax on stock is required in some instances, and authorized in others, to be paid directly by the corporation to avoid double taxation, if any part of the tax is paid by the shareholders the corporation is to that extent relieved.

State v. Kidd, 125 Ala. 413, 28 So. 480. See also First Nat. Bank v. Kentucky, 9 Wall. 360, 19 L. ed. 703.

The taxation on the excess in value of the capital stock above the tangible corporate property is not duplicate taxation, but a tax on the franchise.

Hamilton Mfg. Co. v. Massachusetts, 6 Wall. 632, 18 L. ed. 904; Cooley, Taxn. 2d ed. 230.

Notwithstanding there is a clear distinction between the shares in a corporation and its capital stock, yet for the purpose of taxation, so much are corporate property and stock identified that, in many states, it is held that to tax a corporation on its property and its stockholders on their shares in the same jurisdiction is double taxation.

State v. Kidd, 125 Ala. 432, 28 So. 480; Gordon v. Baltimore, 5 Gill. 231; Baltimore v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. 6 Gill. 288, 4 Am. Dec. 531; American Bank v. Mumford, 4 R. I. 478; Providence Inst. for Savings v. Gardiner, 4 R. I. 484; Cooley Taxn. 228, 229; Burroughs, Taxn. § 90; Farrington v. Tennessee, 95 U. S. 679, 24 L. ed. 558; Sturges v. Carter, 114 U. S. 511, 29 L. ed. 240, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1014.

Hence, in order that the state might carry out its policy of avoiding double taxation, and at the same time impose as nearly as practicable an equal burden of taxation according to values, it was necessary, in Alabama, where this view is held, to frame a statute such as the one here under discussion. Discrimination in classification is necessary in order to insure equality.

Bell's Gap R. Co. v. Pennsylvania, 134 U. S. 237, 33 L. ed. 895, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 533.

If stock of foreign corporations held by citizens should bear any share in the support of the state, this statute is the only mode in which the state can reach their shares for taxation.

First Nat. Bank v. Kentucky, 9 Wall. 361, 19 L. ed. 703.

The Alabama law does not in fact unjustly discriminate between owners of stock in foreign corporations which own and those which do not own property in the state; it taxes all, by either direct or indirect method, only according to its value.

Shehane v. Bailey, 110 Ala. 308, 20 So. 359; Cooley, Const. Lim. 6th ed. 196.

Under Ala. Code 1896, § 3911, only those foreign corporations which have some property in the state are taxable.

State v. Kidd, 125 Ala. 422, 28 So. 480.

Messrs. A. A. Wiley, Gordon MacDonald, and John D. McNeel also filed a brief for defendant in error:

Ala. Code 1886, § 451, should be construed to exempt from taxation the shares of stock in only those corporations that list all, or practically all, their property for taxation in this state.

Sturges v. Carter, 114 U. S. 511, 29 L. ed. 240, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1014.

This state knows that the property and franchises of corporations doing business in this state are taxed, and properly; but it knows nothing of the taxation of foreign corporations, and consequently cannot be affected by the action of any foreign state.

Dwight v. Boston, 12 Allen, 316.

There is an essential difference, so far as the purposes of taxation are concerned, between shares of stock in a corporation that pays taxes on its tangible property, and shares of stock in corporations that pay no tax on their corporate property.

Pacific Exp. Co. v. Seibert, 142 U. S. 339, 35 L. ed. 1035, 3 Inters. Com. Rep. 810, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 250.

It has been the policy of this government, not only to classify for purposes of taxation, but to exempt producers from the taxation of the methods employed by them to put their produce on the market.

American Sugar Ref. Co. v. Louisiana, 179 U. S. 89, 45 L. ed. 102, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 43.

And if there was an exemption here, it might well be sustained on the theory that the state favored investments in public utilities doing business within her borders, and thus contributing to her wealth. Such exemptions have been repeatedly sustained; they are not unreasonable.

Mobile & G. R. Co. v. Peebles, 47 Ala. 317; South & North Ala. R. Co. v. Morris, 65 Ala. 193; State Bank v. Montgomery County Bd. of Revenue, 91 Ala. 217, 8 So. 852.

There is nothing in the 14th Amendment to forbid the classification of property for the purposes of taxation. The rule of equality only requires the same means and methods to be applied impartially to all the constituents of each class, so that the law shall operate equally and uniformly upon all persons in similar circumstances.

Barbier v. Connolly, 113 U. S. 29, 28 L. ed. 924, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 357; Kentucky Railroad Tax Cases, 115 U. S. 321, sub nom. Cincinnati, N. O. & T. P. R. Co. v. Kentucky, 29 L. ed. 414, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 57; Bell's Gap R. Co. v. Pennsylvania, 134 U. S. 232, 33 L. ed. 892, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 533; Missouri P. R. Co. v. Mackey, 127 U. S. 205, 32 L. ed. 107, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1161; Missouri v. Lewis, 101 U. S. 22, sub nom. Bowman v. Lewis, 25 L. ed. 989; Pacific Exp. Co. v. Seibert, 142 U. S. 339, 35 L. ed. 1035, 3 Inters. Com. Rep. 810, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 250; Giozza v. Tiernan, 148 U. S. 657, 37 L. ed. 599, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 721.

Mr. Justice Holmes delivered the opinion of the court:

[731] This is an action for taxes brought by the state of Alabama against the executrix of the will of a citizen of Alabama. It appears on the record that the property in dispute is stock in *railroads incorporated in other states than Alabama, and that the objection was taken seasonably by plea and by requests for instructions to the jury that the tax was unconstitutional under the 14th Amendment, because no similar tax was levied on the stock of domestic railroads or of foreign railroads doing business in that state. Demurrers to the pleas were sustained, there was a verdict for the plaintiff, and judgment, which latter was affirmed by the supreme court of the state without discussion, on the authority of its decision at an earlier stage (State v. Kidd, 125 Ala. 413, 28 So. 418), and the case is brought here by writ of error.

The statutes levying the tax in question are the Code of 1886, § 453, cl. 13, and the Code of 1896, § 3911, cl. 14. They are general clauses, which need not be set forth, as their effect is not disputed under the construction given to them by the supreme court of the state. The exemption by the Code of 1886 of stock in domestic railroads, and in others that list substantially all their property for taxation (Sturges v. Carter, 114 U. S. 511, 522, 29 L. ed. 240, 244, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1014), is not denied, and while it is denied by the defendant in error that there is a similar exemption by the Code of 1896, for the purposes of decision we shall assume, without examination, that it is granted. State v. Kidd, 125 Ala. 413, 422, 28 So. 418. On this assumption the argument for the plaintiff in error is that if foreign stock is treated for purposes of taxation as present by fiction in the domicile, it must be treated as present also for purposes of protection; that the tax is a tax on values, and that net values of similar articles must be treated alike. It is said that you cannot look further back.

If the argument went further and denied the right to tax on fiction at all, and therefore denied the right to tax foreign stocks, it would seem to us to have more logical force, although we are far from implying that it would be unanswerable, or that it can be regarded as open. Very likely such taxes can be justified without the help of fiction. Sturges v. Carter, 114 U. S. 511, 29 L. ed. 240, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1014; Dwight v. Boston, 12 Allen, 316; Dyer v. Osborne, 11 R. I. 321, 23 Am. Rep. 460. But the argument does not go to that extent, and, limited as it is, the proposition that the plaintiff in error is denied the equal protection of the laws for the reason which we [732] have stated *strikes us as wholly without force. We see nothing to prevent a state from taxing stock in some domestic corporations and leaving stock in others untaxed on the ground that it taxes the property and franchises of the latter to an amount that imposes indirectly a proportional burden on the stock. When we come to corporations formed and having their property and business elsewhere, the state must tax the stock held within the state if it is to tax anything, and we now are assuming the right to tax stock in foreign corporations to be conceded. If it does tax that stock, it may take into account that the property and franchise of the corporation are untaxed, on the same ground that it might do the same thing with a domestic corporation. There is no rule that the state cannot look behind the present net values of different stocks. See American Sugar Ref. Co. v. Louisiana, 179 U. S. 89, 45 L. ed. 102, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 43.

We say that the state in taxing stock may take into account the fact that the property and franchises of the corporation are untaxed, whereas in other cases they are taxed; and we say untaxed, because they are not taxed by the state in question. The real grievance in a case like the present is that, more than probably, they are taxed elsewhere. But with that the state of Alabama is not concerned. No doubt it would be a great advantage to the country and to the individual states if principles of taxation could be agreed upon which did not conflict with each other, and a common scheme could be adopted by which taxation of substantially the same property in two jurisdictions could be avoided. But the Constitution of the United States does not go so far. Coe v. Errol, 116 U. S. 517, 524, 29 L. ed. 715, 718, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 475; Knoulton v. Moore, 178 U. S. 41, 44 L. ed. 969, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 747; Dyer v. Osborne, 11 R. I. 321, 23 Am. Rep. 460; Cooley, Taxn. 2d ed. 221n. One aspect of the problem was touched in the case of Blackstone v. Miller, at the present term, 188 U. S. 189, ante, 439, 23 Sup. Ct. Rep. 277. The state of Alabama is not bound to make its laws harmonize in principle with those of other states. If property is untaxed by its laws, then for the purpose of its laws the property is not taxed at all.

It is said that the state may not tax a man because by fiction his property is within the jurisdiction, and then discriminate against him upon the fact that it is without. The state does *nothing of the kind. [733] It adheres throughout to the fiction, if it be one, that the stock, the property of the plaintiff in error, is within the jurisdiction. There is no inconsistency in the state's recognizing at the same time that the property of the corporation, that which gives the plaintiff's stock its value, is taxed or untaxed, as the case may be. There is no inconsistency in recognizing that it is untaxed because it cannot be reached. Shares of stock may be within a state, and the property of the corporation outside it.

We need not repeat the commonplaces as to the large latitude allowed to the states for classification upon any reasonable basis. Pacific Exp. Co. v. Seibert, 142 U. S. 339, 351, 352, 35 L. ed. 1035, 1039, 3 Inters. Com. Rep. 810, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 250; Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Ellis, 165 U. S. 150, 155, 41 L. ed. 666, 668, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 255; Nicol v. Ames, 173 U. S. 509, 521, 43 L. ed. 786, 793, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 522; Atchison, 188 U. S.

T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Matthews, 174 U. S. 96, 43 L. ed. 909, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 609; American Sugar Ref. Co. v. Louisiana, 179 U. S. 89, 45 L. ed. 102, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 43. What is reasonable is a question of practical details, into which fiction cannot enter.

Practically, the law before us, in the broad aspect in which alone we are asked to consider it, seems to us to work out substantial justice and equality, if we leave on one side the probable taxation by other states, which does not affect the state of Alabama's rights.

Judgment affirmed.

Justices Harlan and White dissented.

NOTE.—No. 157. Kidd v. Alabama. This case was to abide the result of the foregoing.

Judgment affirmed.

[734]*FOURTH NATIONAL BANK OF ST. LOUIS, First National Bank of New York, and Ford Harvey, Appts.,
v.

MORTON ALBAUGH, Receiver of the First National Bank of Emporia; F. C. Newman, Administrator of the Estate of C. S. Cross, Deceased, and William Martindale.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 734-738.)

Appeal—limits of cross-examination—review of discretion of trial court—evidence—declarations—of trustee in assignment—admissibility as against third persons.

1. The discretion of the trial court in permitting the cross-examination of a witness to be extended beyond the limits of his direct examination will not be reviewed on appeal.
2. Evidence of the declarations of a witness, introduced, not merely to contradict his testimony on cross-examination, but as evidence of the facts which he declares, are not inadmissible because the party offering such evidence may, by extending the cross-examination of the witness to such facts, have made him his own witness.
3. Evidence of the declarations of the trustee in several assignments executed by a bank president, that the earlier assignment was made to secure the bank generally for his assignor's liability to it, is admissible as against those claiming under the subsequent assignments, which were made for the purpose of enabling the trustee "to pay himself for any paper" on which he was liable with such assignor.

[No. 159.]

Argued January 29, 30, 1903. Decided February 23, 1903.

APPEAL from the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Eighth Cir-

NOTE.—As to the scope of cross-examination—see note to Hobart v. Young (Vt.) 12 L. R. A. 693; and Rea v. Missouri, 21 L. ed. U. S. 707.

188 U. S.

cuit to review a decree which affirmed a decree of the Circuit Court for the District of Kansas in favor of defendant in a suit involving the application of the proceeds of assigned property. Affirmed.

See same case below, 46 C. C. A. 655, 107 Fed. 819.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. T. F. Garver argued the cause, and, with Messrs. Frank Hagerman, J. B. Larimer, and C. N. Sterry, filed a brief for appellants:

The action of the trial court in permitting the receiver to give evidence in chief by way of cross-examination was error.

Philadelphia & T. R. Co. v. Stimpson, 14 Pet. 448, 10 L. ed. 535; Houghton v. Jones, 1 Wall. 702, 17 L. ed. 503; Wills v. Russell, 100 U. S. 621, 25 L. ed. 607; Clary v. Hardeeville Brick Co. 100 Fed. 915; Mine & Smelter Supply Co. v. Parke & L. Co. 47 C. C. A. 34, 107 Fed. 884; Da Lee v. Blackburn, 11 Kan. 190; Sullivan v. New York, L. E. & W. R. Co. 175 Pa. 361, 34 Atl. 798; People ex rel. Phelps v. New York County Oyer & Terminer Ct. 83 N. Y. 436; Greenl. Ev. 15th ed. § 447.

Conceding that an abuse of discretion must be shown, to warrant the reversal of a case for the infraction of the rule by a trial court, such abuse of discretion is clearly established in the case at bar, under the facts in connection with the situation and knowledge of the parties.

Tourtelotte v. Brown, 1 Colo. App. 408, 29 Pac. 1310.

Martindale, in his testimony concerning this bill of sale of March 4th, should have been held to be the witness of the receiver, and not subject to impeachment by proof of contradictory statements.

1 Greenl. Ev. 15th ed. § 442; 1 Wharton, Ev. 3d ed. § 549; Best, Ev. 14th Am. ed. § 645; Becker v. Koch, 104 N. Y. 394, 58 Am. Rep. 515, 10 N. E. 701; Fairchild v. Bascomb, 35 Vt. 398; 10 Enc. Pl. & Pr. 316, 317; Ellicott v. Pearl, 10 Pet. 412, 9 L. ed. 475; Dravo v. Fabel, 132 U. S. 487, 33 L. ed. 421, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 170.

This evidence of the statement of Martin-dale was, as to appellants, mere hearsay.

The New Orleans, 106 U. S. 13, sub nom. Clark v. Weeks, 27 L. ed. 96, 1 Sup. Ct. Rep. 90; Winchester & P. Mfg. Co. v. Orcary, 116 U. S. 161, 29 L. ed. 591, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 369; Marchand v. Griffon, 140 U. S. 516, 35 L. ed. 527, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 834; W. B. Grimes Dry Goods Co. v. Malcolm, 164 U. S. 483, 41 L. ed. 524, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 158; Greenl. Ev. 15th ed. §§ 98-115.

Mr. Joseph R. Webster argued the cause, and, with Mr. J. Jay Buck, filed a brief for appellees:

The limit of cross-examination is largely, if not wholly, in the discretion of the trial judge.

Philadelphia & T. R. Co. v. Stimpson, 14 Pet. 448, 10 L. ed. 535; Johnston v. Jones, 1 Black, 210, 17 L. ed. 117; Hickory v. United States, 151 U. S. 303, 38 L. ed. 170, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 334; Wills v. Russell, 100 U. S. 621, 25 L. ed. 607.

The assertion of a right to subrogation placed appellants in privity with Martindale, under whom they claimed, and rendered his admissions competent evidence against them.

Bouvier, Law Dict. 1. v.; 1 Greenl. Ev. 16th ed. § 189.

Martindale was the sole witness by whom the facts could be proved. He was therefore a compulsory witness, and subject to impeachment.

1 Greenl. Ev. 16th ed. §§ 443, 444; Cowden v. Reynolds, 12 Serg. & R. 281; Stockton v. Demuth, 7 Watts, 39, 32 Am. Dec. 735; Brown v. Bellows, 4 Pick. 179; Williams v. Walker, 2 Rich. Eq. 291, 46 Am. Dec. 53; Whitaker v. Salisbury, 15 Pick. 534; People v. Case, 105 Mich. 92, 62 N. W. 1017; Whitman v. Morey, 63 N. H. 448, 2 Atl. 899; Shorey v. Hussey, 32 Me. 579; Thornton v. Thornton, 39 Vt. 122.

Mr. Justice Holmes delivered the opinion of the court:

This is a bill in equity brought to require the defendant Albaugh to apply a certain fund to payment of debts due to the Fourth National Bank of St. Louis from one Cross, of whose estate the defendant Newman is administrator, and from the defendant Martindale. By cross bill and intervening petitions the other appellants set up similar claims. The fund is the proceeds of property of Cross sold by agreement. The appellants claim under an alleged assignment of the property by Cross to Martindale as [735] trustee, dated July 15, 1898, and *another assignment to Martindale dated November 15, 1898. The former instrument contains the provision "the said Martindale . . . is to pay himself for any paper upon which he and I are mutually makers or indorsers." The debts due to the appellants were on paper of this description, and they claim the benefit of the security on this ground. The later assignment was given to Martindale, according to his testimony, also as security for similar liabilities. It needs no special mention.

The defendant Albaugh, as receiver of the First National Bank of Emporia, claims the fund under an earlier assignment to Martindale as trustee, dated March 4, 1898. Cross was president of this bank, and had been misusing its funds. Albaugh contends that this assignment was made for the purpose of securing the bank, and if that fact is established there will be nothing left for the appellants, assuming that otherwise they make out their case. Only Cross and Martindale were present when the assignment was delivered, and as Cross killed himself on November 16, 1888, Martindale alone could testify as to the delivery and purposes of the instrument. He was put on as a witness for the plaintiff, and on cross-examination testified to the delivery of the paper and by implication to the trust being in favor of the bank, but he limited it to a sum of $7,500, which amount he testified that Cross said he wanted to use in a particular manner. Exceptions were taken to the allowing the cross-examination to be extended to these facts. Subsequently other witnesses were allowed to testify, subject to exceptions, that at different times out of court Martindale had stated that the assignment of March 4 was made to secure the Emporia bank generally for Cross's liability to it. There was a decree for the defendant Albaugh in the circuit court, which was affirmed on appeal by the circuit court of appeals. 46 C. C. A. 655, 107 Fed. 819. An appeal then was allowed to this court.

The only error alleged which it is necessary to consider is the admission of the above evidence. Indeed, that is the only ground on which the appeal can be based. If that evidence was competent, and Martindale's declarations were believed, the receiver's case was proved. If it should have been excluded, *the decree would be hard to [736] support either on the other evidence to the same point, or on the suggestion that the appellants had not proved what the burden lay on them to prove.

So far as the cross-examination of Martindale goes, we see no occasion for revising the discretion of the court. Wills v. Russell, 100 U. S. 621, 626, 25 L. ed. 607, 608. Nor do we think the suggestion material that the defendant thereby made Martindale his own witness. The evidence of Martindale's declarations was put in, not merely to contradict what he said on the stand, but as evidence largely relied on to prove the facts which he declared.

It is said that as soon as the appellants' interest under the later assignment had vested, Martindale could do nothing to destroy it; that he could not release it, and that therefore he could not end it obliquely by a declaration. The conclusion does not follow from the premises, granting those premises for the purpose of argument, although they presuppose the rights of the appellants under the later instruments to be established. To destroy by release is one thing, to destroy in the sense of disproving or qualifying by proof is another. The latter is free to anyone who knows the facts. There is no doubt, of course, that Martindale had a right to testify to what he was shown to have declared, however bad it might be for the appellants. Therefore the only question is whether his declaration was some evidence as against them of facts which certainly might have been established by his oath.

If ever a declaration not made under oath is to be admitted against any other than the person making it, it should be admitted in this case. The declaration was obviously against interest. It was the only evidence in the nature of things that could be had, when Martindale haltingly denied the fact upon the stand. If we were to take it very nicely, it simply did away with a qualification engrafted by Martindale upon his testimony that the instrument was security for the bank, and made it easier to accept the principal fact without the qualification. The appellants say that they have a standing under the instrument independent of [737] Martindale. So no doubt they have for some purposes, if we follow the somewhat sweeping and indiscriminating notion of equity embodied in many decisions to be found. *Nevertheless, they claim in Martindale's right as against the estate of Cross or any prior assignee. The fact that equity gives them a right to have the security applied does not enlarge or change the character of the security, and that was, as we have quoted, to enable Martindale "to pay himself for any paper" on which he was liable with Cross. The appellants get their rights from and through Martindale. Their right is only to have Martindale's right enforced as it was on July 15 or November 15. Cunningham v. Macon & B. R. Co. 156 U. S. 400, 419, 39 L. ed. 471, 476, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 361. It even was argued on this ground that it appeared from other evidence that Martindale had no equity as against the Emporia bank, and that therefore the decree could be upheld. But, as we have said, the evidence objected to was too important not to have had an influence on the decision, and therefore we confine ourselves to the consideration of that.

It may be urged that, even if the appellants get their rights by subrogation (and it is to be noticed that the only claim made in their pleadings is to be subrogated to the rights of Martindale), still their rights are independent when the subrogation is complete. In reply we fall back upon the distinction between admissions and an attempt to release the rights. The distinction was recognized in England in the case of a suit by a naked trustee. If he undertook fraudulently to release the cause of action and his release was pleaded, the plea would be ordered off the files. Innell v. Newman, 4 Barn. & Ald. 419. See Payne v. Rogers, 1 Dougl. 407; Anonymous, 1 Salk. 260; Troeder v. Hyams, 153 Mass. 536, 538, 27 N. E. 775. But his admissions were evidence for the defendant. Bauerman v. Radenius, 7 T. R. 663; Craib v. D'Aeth, 7 T. R. 670 note b. The analogy by no means is perfect, but it is sufficient. In these days, when the whole tendency of decisions and legislation is to enlarge the admissibility of hearsay where hearsay must be admitted or a failure of justice occur, we are not inclined to narrow the lines. The interest of Martindale continued, the appellants claim through it, and we are of opinion that, under the circumstances, admissions by Martindale contrary to that interest properly were let in. Cases of admissions by a trustee having no interest in the suit may stand on different ground.

*The decree is objected to as granting affirmative relief to Albaugh against his defendant Newman. As the appellants are dismissed out of court, the error, if it was one, does not concern them.

Decree affirmed.

Mr. Justice Brewer and Mr. Justice Peckham dissented.

MEMORANDA

OF

CASES DISPOSED OF WITHOUT OPINIONS.

[739]*JOHN S. SWANN et al., Trustees, etc., Plaintiffs in Error, v. STATE OF WEST VIRGINIA. [No. 68.]

In Error to the Supreme Court of Appeals of the State of West Virginia.

Messrs. George E. Price and S. S. Green for plaintiffs in error.

Messrs. W. Mollohan, George W. McClintic, Alexander Dulin, and Murray Briggs, for defendant in error.

January 26, 1903. Decree affirmed with costs, on the authority of King v. Mullins, 171 U. S. 404, 43 L. ed. 214, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 925.

THEODORE READ, Plaintiff in Error, v. MISSISSIPPI COUNTY. [No. 153.]

In Error to the Supreme Court of the State of Arkansas.

Mr. Wm. H. Carroll for plaintiff in error. No counsel for defendant in error.

February 2, 1903. Judgment affirmed with costs, on the authority of Morley v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. 146 U. S. 162, 36 L. ed. 925, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 54.

WILLIAM E. HALE, Receiver, etc., Petitioner, v. JAMES A. HILLIKER. [No. 433.]

Petition for a Writ of Certiorari to the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit.

Messrs. M. H. Boutelle, W. E. Hale, and A. L. Pincoffs for petitioner.

Messrs. Charles E. Patterson and Alpheus Bulkeley for respondent.

January 19, 1903. Denied.

RICHARD A. BURGET, Petitioner, v. HORACE R. ROBINSON. [No. 443.]

[740] Petition for a Writ of Certiorari *to the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the First Circuit.

Messrs. Jno. W. Corcoran and P. A. Collins for petitioner.

Messrs. Stiles W. Burr and John W. Saxe for respondent.

January 19, 1903. Denied.

STANDARD SEWING MACHINE COMPANY, Petitioner, v. ARTHUR M. LESLIE. [No. 546.]

Petition for a Writ of Certiorari to the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit.

Messrs. Charles S. Holt and John Dane, Jr., for petitioner.

Messrs. Charles K. Offield and Charles C. Linthicum for respondent.

January 19, 1903. Denied.

188 U. S. U. S., Book 47.

HORACE M. DUPEE, Petitioner, v. CHICAGO HORSE SHOE COMPANY. [No. 548.]

Petition for a Writ of Certiorari to the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit.

Messrs. Wm. M. Jones and Jas. E. Munroe for petitioner.

Mr. LeRoy D. Thomas for respondent.

January 19, 1903. Denied.

WASHINGTON NATIONAL BUILDING & LOAN ASSOCIATION, Petitioner, v. BERTHA L. FISKE AND HUSBAND. [No. 549.]

Petition for a Writ of Certiorari to the Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia.

Messrs. George E. Hamilton, M. J. Colbert, J. H. Ralston and F. L. Siddons for petitioner.

Messrs. D. W. Baker, M. D. Rosenberg and Alexander Wolf for respondents.

January 26, 1903. Denied.

SIMON ROTHSCHILD, Petitioner, v. MEMPHIS & CHARLESTON RAILROAD COMPANY et al. [No. 553.]

Petition for a Writ of Certiorari to the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Sixth Circuit.

Mr. Heber J. May for petitioner.

Messrs. Francis Lynde Stetson, Fairfax Harrison, and F. P. Poston for respondents.

January 26, 1903. Denied.

*JAMES GALVIN, Petitioner v. CITY OF GRAND RAPIDS. [No. 571.]

Petition for a Writ of Certiorari to the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Sixth Circuit.

Mr. Timothy E. Tarsney for petitioner.

No counsel for respondent.

February 2, 1903. Denied.

C. M. PATTERSON, Petitioner, v. R. M. WADE. [No. 551.]

Petition for a Writ of Certiorari to the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit.

Mr. John H. Mitchell for petitioner.

Mr. Joseph Simon for respondent.

February 23, 1903. Denied.

ATLANTIC TRUST COMPANY, Petitioner, v. EDGAR C. CHAPMAN, Receiver, etc. [No. 557.]

Petition for a Writ of Certiorari to the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit.

Messrs. Stanley W. Dexter, E. B. Whitney and J. J. Scribner for petitioner.

Mr. Charles N. Fox for respondent.

February 23, 1903. Denied.

ROBERT B. WHALLEY, Master, etc., Petitioner, v. THOMAS TRAVERS et al. [No. 568.]

Petition for a Writ of Certiorari to the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit.

Mr. J. Parker Kirlin for petitioner.

Mr. W. C. Beecher for respondents.

February 23, 1903. Denied.

BUFFALO ELECTRIC CARRIAGE COMPANY, Petitioner, v. ELECTRIC STORAGE BATTERY COMPANY. [No. 576.]

Petition for a Writ of Certiorari to the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit.

[742] *Messrs. Thomas *A. Banning and Ephraim Banning* for petitioner.

Mr. John R. Bennett for respondent.

February 23, 1903. Denied.

FRANK J. HEARNE, Petitioner, v. GERMAN INSURANCE COMPANY et al. [No. 593.]

Petition for a Writ of Certiorari to the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit.

Messrs. Joseph K. McCammon and James H. Hayden for petitioner.

Messrs. Wm. S. Dalzell, Ernest L. Tustin, and J. H. Harrison for respondents.

February 23, 1903. Denied.

MUTUAL LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY OF NEW YORK, Petitioner v. ELIZA MAUD HILL et al. [No. 518.]

Petition for a Writ of Certiorari to the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit.

678

Messrs. John B. Allen, Julien T. Davies, Edward Lyman Short, and Frederic D. McKenney for petitioner.

Mr. S. Warburton for respondents.

February 23, 1903. Granted.

A. CHESEBROUGH et al., Owners, etc., Petitioners, v. MATTHEW BRIDGES. [No. 567.]

Petition for a Writ of Certiorari to the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit.

Mr. Milton Andros for petitioners.

Mr. A. H. Ricketts for respondent.

February 23, 1903. Granted.

UNITED STATES, Plaintiff in Error, v. S. P. SHOTTER COMPANY. [No. 146.]

In Error to the Circuit Court of the United States for the Southern District of Alabama.

Messrs. Attorney General, Solicitor General Richards, and M. C. Burch for *plain-[743] tiff in error.

Mr. John Ridout for defendant in error.

January 19, 1903. Dismissed on motion of Mr. Solicitor General Richards for the plaintiff in error.

W. F. WYMAN, Appellant, v. VIRGILE HERARD [No. 154.]

Appeal from the Supreme Court of the Territory of Oklahoma.

Mr. George Chandler for appellant.

Mr. John W. Shartel for appellee.

January 22, 1903. Dismissed with costs, pursuant to the 10th rule.

OLIVER AMES et al., Trustees, et al., Plaintiffs in Error, v. BOARD OF STREET COMMISSIONERS OF THE CITY OF BOSTON. [No. 243.]

In Error to the Supreme Judicial Court of the State of Massachusetts.

Mr. J. H. Benton, Jr. for plaintiffs in error.

Mr. Thos. M. Babson for defendant in error.

February 24, 1903. Dismissed, per stipulation.

188 U. S.

CASES

ARGUED AND DECIDED

IN THE

S U P R E M E C O U R T

OF THE

UNITED STATES

AT

OCTOBER TERM, 1902.

---

Vol. 189.

REFERENCE TABLE

OF SUCH CASES
DECIDED IN U. S. SUPREME COURT,
OCTOBER TERM, 1902,
AND REPORTED HEREIN.

---

VOLUME 189,

---

AS ALSO APPEAR IN OFFICIAL REPORTER'S EDITION.

Off. Rep. 189 U. S.	Title.	Here in.	Off. Rep. 189 U. S.	Title.	Here in.
1-2	Kennedy Mining & M. Co. v. Argonaut Min. Co.		72-73	Union & Planters' Bank v. Memphis
	Kennedy Mining & M. Co. v. Argonaut Min. Co.	685		Union & Planters' Bank v. Memphis	713
2-4	" "	686	73-74	" "	714
4-5	" "	687	74-76	" "	715
5-7	" "	688	76	Mexican C. R. Co. v. Duthie	715
7	" "	689	76-77	" "	716
8-9	Kokomo Fence Mach. Co. v. Kitselman	689	77-78	" "	717
9-11	" "	691	78-79	Jaquith v. Alden	717
11-13	" "	692	79-82	" "	718
13-16	" "	693	82-83	" "	719
16-19	" "	694	83	" "	720
19-21	" "	695	84	Key, Re	720
21-24	" "	696	84-85	" "	721
24-25	" "	697	86	The Japanese Immigrant Case ("Yamataya v. Fisher")	721
25	Hennessy v. Richardson Drug Co.	697	87	" "	722
32-33	" "	697	87-88	" "	723
33-35	" "	698	94-95	" "	723
35	{ Hennessy v. Moise Hennessy v. May	698	95-98	" "	724
35	Kirwan v. Murphy	698	98-100	" "	725
36-38	" "	699	100-102	" "	726
38-40	" "	700	103	Oregon & C. R. Co. v. United States	726
40-43	" "	701	103-104	" "	727
52-53	" "	704	104-106	" "	728
53-56	" "	705	106-109	" "	729
56	" "	706	109-112	" "	730
57-58	Brill v. Peckham Motor, Truck & Wheel Co.	706	112-114	" "	731
58-60	" "	707	114-116	" "	732
60-62	" "	707	116	" "	732
62-64	" "	708	116-119	" "	733
64-65	Tennessee v. Condon	709	119-121	De Cambra v. Rogers	734
65-67	" "	710	121-122	" "	735
67-70	" "	711	122-123	Eastern Bldg. & L. Co. v. Wil- liamson	735
70-71	" "	712	123-125	" "	736
71	{ Union & Planters' Bank v. Memphis	712	125-126	" "	739
	Union & Planters' Bank v. Memphis	712	126-129	" "	740
			129-130	" "	741
			131	Bell v. Commonwealth Title, Ins. & T. Co.	741
			131	" "	742

REFERENCE TABLE.

Off. Rep. 189 U. S.	Title.	Here in.	Off. Rep. 189 U. S.	Title.	Here in.
131-133	Bell v. Commonwealth Title Ins. & T. Co.	743	259-260	Glidden v. Harrington	802
133-134	" "	744	260-262	Wiser v. Lawler	802
135	Fidelity & D. Co. v. L. Bucki & Son Lumber Co.	744	262-263	" "	803
135-136	" "	745	263-265	" "	807
136-138	" "	749	265-268	" "	808
138-141	" "	750	268-271	" "	809
141-143	" "	751	271-273	" "	810
143	McClung v. Penny	751	273-274	" "	811
144-146	" "	753	274-276	Missouri P. R. Co. v. United States	811
146-147	" "	754	276	" "	812
148	Winebrenner v. Forney	754	282-283	" "	813
149-151	" "	755	283-285	" "	814
150-152	" "	756	285-288	" "	815
152-154	" "	757	288-290	" "	816
154-155	Sawyer v. Piper	757	290-291	" "	817
155-156	" "	758	292-293	Potter v. Hall	817
156-158	" "	759	293-295	" "	818
158-160	Osceola, The	760	295-297	" "	819
168-170	" "	762	297-300	" "	820
170-173	" "	763	300-301	" "	821
173-175	" "	764	301	Farmers' & M. Ins. Co. v. Dob- ney	821
175-177	" "	765	302-304	" "	825
177	San Jose Land & W. Co. v. San Jose Rancho Co.	765	304-306	" "	826
178-179	" "	766	306	Onondaga Nation v. Thatcher	826
179-181	" "	768	306-309	" "	827
181-184	" "	769	309-311	" "	828
184-185	" "	770	311	Shurtleff v. United States	828
185-187	Roanoke, The	770	311-313	" "	829
187	" "	771	313-316	" "	831
192-194	" "	772	316-318	" "	832
194-196	" "	773	318-319	" "	833
196-199	" "	774	319-320	Sexton v. California	833
199	" "	775	320-323	" "	834
199-200	{ United States v. Nix { Nix v. United States	775	323-325	" "	835
200-202	" "	776	325	Foster v. Pryor	835
202-205	" "	777	325-328	" "	836
205-206	" "	778	328-331	" "	837
207-208	Davis & F. Mfg. Co. v. Los Angeles	778	331-333	" "	838
208-209	" "	779	333-335	" "	839
216-218	" "	780	335	Finney v. Guy	839
218-220	" "	781	336-338	" "	840
220-221	" "	782	338	" "	841
221	Nashua Sav. Bank v. Anglo- American Land Mortg. & A. Co.	782	339-341	" "	843
222	" "	783	341-343	" "	844
227-229	" "	785	343-346	" "	845
229-231	" "	786	346	Thayer v. Spratt	845
231-232	" "	787	347-349	" "	846
233-234	Sena v. United States	787	349-350	" "	847
234	" "	788	350-352	" "	848
234-236	" "	789	352-354	" "	849
236-239	" "	790	354	Texas & P. R. Co. v. Carlin	849
239-241	" "	791	354-357	" "	850
241-242	" "	792	357-358	" "	851
242	Rankin v. Fidelity Ins. T. & S. D. Co.	792	358-360	" "	852
243-245	" "	793	360-363	" "	853
246-247	" "	794	363	" "	854
247-249	" "	795	363-365	The Conemaugh ("Union Steamboat Co. v. Erie & W. Transp. Co.")	854
249-252	" "	796	365-366	" "	855
252-254	" "	797	366-367	" "	856
255	Glidden v. Harrington	798	367-370	" "	857
256-257	" "	800	370-379	Zane v. Hamilton County	858
257-259	" "	801	379-382	" "	859
882			382-383	" "	860
			383-385	Detroit, F. W. & B. I. R. Co. v. Osborn	860
			385-386	" "	861

REFERENCE TABLE.

Off. Rep. 189 U. S.	Title.	Here in.	Off. Rep. 189 U. S.	Title.	Here in.
386-387	Detroit, F. W. & B. I. R. Co. v. Osborn	863	448	Southern P. R. Co. v. United States	898
387-390	"	864	448-451	"	899
390-391	"	865	451-452	"	900
391-393	United States v. Mission Rock Co.	865	453	The Paquete Habana ("United States v. Spanish Smack Paquete Habana
393-395	"	866		United States v. The Lola
403	"	868		United States v. The Poder De Dios
403-406	"	869		United States v. The An- tonio Y Paco
406-408	"	870		United States v. The En- gracia
408	Chattanooga Nat. Bldg. & L. Asso. v. Denson	870		United States v. The Sev- erita
408-411	"	871		United States v. The An- tonio Suarez
411-413	"	872		United States v. The Fern- andito
413-414	"	873		United States v. The Ori- ente
414-416	"	874		United States v. The Espana
416-417	"	875		United States v. The Cuatro De Settembre
417	Gordon v. Randle	875		United States v. The San- tiago Apostol")	901
417-419	"	876		"	903
419-420	"	877		"	904
420	Pullman Co. v. Adams	877		Texas & P. R. Co. v. Behymer	905
420-422	"	878		"	906
422	"	879		"	907
423	National Bank & Loan Co. v. Petrie	879	463-465	United States v. Sweet	907
423-425	"	880	465-468	"	908
425-426	"	881	468	United States v. Barnett	908
426	National Bank & Loan Co. v. Carr	881	468-471	"	909
426	"	882	471	Giles v. Harris	909
426	Brownfield v. South Carolina	882	471-473	"	910
427-429	"	883	473-474	"	911
429	Pardee v. Aldridge	883	474	"	912
429-431	"	885	474	"	913
431-433	"	886	474	"	914
433-434	"	887	474	"	915
434	Knoxville Water Co. v. Knox- ville	887	475	"	916
435-436	"	890	482-483	"	917
436-438	"	891	483-485	"	918
438	"	892	485-488	"	919
439	San Diego Land & T. Co. v. Jasper	892	488-491	"	921-926
439-440	"	893	491-493	Memorandum Cases
440-442	"	894	493-496
442-445	"	895	496-498
445-447	"	896	498-501
447	Southern P. R. Co. v. United States	896	501-503
			503-504
			505-517

THE DECISIONS

OF THE

Supreme Court of the United States

AT

OCTOBER TERM, 1902.

[1]*KENNEDY MINING & MILLING COMPANY, Plff. in Err.,
v.

ARGONAUT MINING COMPANY.
(No. 49)

KENNEDY MINING & MILLING COMPANY, Plff. in Err.,
v.

ARGONAUT MINING COMPANY.
(No. 58)

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 1-7.)

Error to state court—Federal question—mining claims—extralateral rights — estoppel.

1. A Federal question reviewable in the Supreme Court of the United States is involved in a decision of a state court in favor of plaintiff in a controversy over the ownership of ore, in which defendant claimed that under the act of May 10, 1872 (17 Stat. at L. 91, chap. 152, §§ 2, 3), title thereto passed to it through its patent, instead of to plaintiff, because the end lines of the latter's patent were not parallel, plaintiff contending that its title was acquired under the act of July 26, 1866 (14 Stat. at L. 251, chap. 262), which did not require parallelism of end lines.
2. One of two coterminous mining proprietors is estopped to assert that, because of the non-parallelism of the end lines of the other's claim, it did not carry extralateral rights defined by extending the common end line between the two surface locations, where such common line, described as crossing the lode, was established by the patent surveys as the result of an adverse proceeding in the Land

NOTE.—On writs of error from United States Supreme Court to state courts—see notes to Hamblin v. Western Land Co. 37 L. ed. U. S. 267; Kipley v. Illinois, 42 L. ed. U. S. 998; and Re Buchanan, 39 L. ed. U. S. 884.

On estoppel by agreement—see note to Keokuk & W. R. Co. v. Scotland County Ct. 38 L. ed. U. S. 458.

189 U. S.

Office, and a compromise agreement with respect thereto entered into by the immediate predecessors in title of such proprietors, who succeeded to the interests of their predecessors with a knowledge of the boundary line so determined.

[Nos. 49, 58.]

Argued May 1, 1902. Ordered for reargument before full bench October 27, 1902. Reargued December 10, 11, 1902. Decided March 9, 1903.

IN ERROR to the Supreme Court of the State of California to review a judgment which affirmed a judgment of the trial court in favor of plaintiff in an action to recover damages for the taking of ore by defendant from land alleged to belong to the plaintiff. Affirmed.

See same case below, 131 Cal. 15, 63 Pac. 148.

Statement by Mr. Chief Justice Fuller:

This was an action for damages for the value of ore alleged to have been taken by the Kennedy Mining & Milling Company from ground belonging to the Argonaut Mining Company, situated in Amador county, California. The Kennedy Mining & Milling Company denied taking any ore or gold-bearing rock which was the property of the Argonaut Mining Company, and averred that it was the owner of the vein or lode from which the rock was taken. The case was *submitted to the trial court on an [2] agreed statement of facts, and resulted in a judgment in plaintiff's favor, which judgment was affirmed by the supreme court of California. 131 Cal. 15, 63 Pac. 148. Writ of error was then allowed, and each party docketed the case in this court, but the record was only printed in No. 49.

The parties are coterminous mining proprietors upon the same vein or lode, the top or apex of which passes through the Pioneer location, belonging to the Argonaut company, into the Kennedy location, belonging to the Kennedy Mining & Milling Company.

A certain map of the Pioneer and Kennedy mining claims was made part of the findings of fact, but the supreme court of California made use of a diagram simplified from that exhibit, which is as follows:

and patented on another vein, which had its apex within the Silva ground. This Silva ground was patented to the Kennedy Mining & Milling Company, February 6, 1893, and the patent recited an entry made in October, 1892.

The patent contained this reservation: "That the premises hereby granted, with the exception of the surface, may be entered by the proprietor of any other vein,

The common boundary is the line A-B, crossing the lode at the point marked 1 on [3] this diagram. The line A-B-B' is "this end line produced indefinitely in the direction of the dip or downward course of the vein.

The Kennedy mine was entered, and payment made in November, 1871, and the patent was issued July 29, 1872.

The Pioneer was located under the law of 1866; on February 23, 1872, it was entered and paid for; and the patent was dated August 12, 1872.

During the pendency of the patent proceedings a conflict arose as to a segment of ground lying at the north end of the Pioneer, and at the south end of the Kennedy. This controversy was subsequently adjusted by an agreement between the then owners of the two properties. Both parties had sunk working shafts, the openings of which did not start at the apex, but each intersected the vein, and all the workings of both were on this vein. The vein on its downward course passed underneath the Silva mining claim belonging to the Kennedy Mining & Milling Company, located lode, or ledge, the top or apex of which lies outside of the boundary of said granted premises, should the same in its dip be found to penetrate, intersect, or extend into said premises, for the purpose of extracting and removing the ore from such other vein, lode, or ledge."

The ore in dispute, although taken from the Pioneer-Kennedy vein, was south of the Kennedy south end boundary, as shown by its patent, and the Kennedy Mining & Milling Company did not assert any right to it by virtue of its ownership of the Kennedy mine. The ore, though taken from beneath the surface of the Silva location, was taken from the discovery lode of the Pioneer location, which was the only lode that had its apex within that location. It entered the location near the middle point of the southern end line, and ran northerly through the "location in a direction practically parallel [4] to the side lines, through the center of the northern end line.

Plaintiff in error admitted the ownership by the Argonaut Mining Company of the Pioneer mine, and that the lode had its apex within its surface location, but denied that the quartz taken by it from that lode was within that location, on the ground that because of non-parallelism of the end lines of the Pioneer, it carried no extralateral rights; and that if the court could, as matter of law, construct for it parallel end lines, the southerly end line being the base line from which the location was projected, the parallel would be made by extending the northern end line in a direction parallel to the direction of the southerly end line.

The supreme court of California held that the Argonaut company was entitled to all the rights which would attach under the act of 1866, and to any additional rights which inured under the act of 1872; that the act of 1866 did not require parallel end lines, and the failure to so parallel them in the Pioneer location did not deprive that claim of extralateral rights; that the extralateral rights on lodes located under the act of 1866, where end lines were not parallel, were to be defined by drawing lines at right angles to the general course of the lode, at the extreme points of the lode within the location; that the contention of plaintiff in error, that because the description in the Pioneer patent commenced at the south end of the claim, and the south end line was first run, the inequalities arising through diverging end lines should be adjusted by drawing a produced line from 1 to 6 in the diagram, parallel to the produced south end line from 3 to 5 in the diagram, could not be sustained.

The ore bodies in controversy were south of the northern end line plane of the Pioneer as made by agreement the boundary line between it and the Kennedy mining claim, and also within the extralateral right planes constructed at right angles to the general course of the lode through the extreme points of the lode within the location.

The act of July 26, 1866 (14 Stat. at L. 251, chap. 262), provided that patentees thereunder should have "the right to follow [5] such vein *or lode with its dips, angles, and variations to any depth, although it may enter the land adjoining, which land adjoining shall be sold subject to this condition." [§ 2.]

The act of May 10, 1872 (17 Stat. at L. 91, chap. 152, §§ 2, 3), provided that the end lines of each claim should be parallel to each other, and that locators should have "the exclusive right of possession and enjoyment of all the surface included within the lines of their locations, and of all veins, lodes, and ledges throughout their entire depth, the top or apex of which lies inside of such surface lines extended downward vertically, although such veins, lodes, or ledges may so far depart from a perpendicular in their course downward as to extend outside the vertical side lines of said surface locations: Provided, That their right of possession to such outside parts of said veins or ledges shall be confined to such portions thereof as lie between vertical planes drawn downward as aforesaid, 189 U. S.

through the end lines of their locations, so continued in their own direction that such planes will intersect such exterior parts of said veins or ledges."

Mr. John Garber argued the cause, and, with Messrs. John M. Wright and Byron Waters, filed a brief for plaintiff in error:

The abandonment of a claim of title by one party does not confer title upon the other.

Walrath v. Champion Min. Co. 63 Fed. 552, 558; Walrath v. Champion Min. Co. 171 U. S. 293, 43 L. ed. 170, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 909.

The controversy prior to patent is of no weight whatever, as to any right arising under the patent, for one claim or the other.

Del Monte Min. & Mill. Co. v. New York & L. C. Min. Co. 66 Fed. 213; Doe v. Waterloo Min. Co. 54 Fed. 935.

The defendant was a stranger to the compromise.

Messrs. John M. Wright and Byron Waters also filed a brief in opposition to the motion to dismiss or affirm:

A case is presented, plainly within the jurisdiction of this court by writ of error to the supreme court of the state of California, when measured by every test that has been prescribed by the Constitution, by Congress, and by this court.

Matthews v. Zane, 4 Cranch. 382, 2 L. ed. 654; Cohen v. Virginia, 6 Wheat. 379, 5 L. ed. 285; Osborn v. Bank of United States, 9 Wheat. 821, 6 L. ed. 224; Ross v. Doe ex dem. Barland, 1 Pet. 662, 7 L. ed. 305; Kissell v. St. Louis Public Schools, 18 How. 19-28, 15 L. ed. 324-328; Starin v. New York, 115 U. S. 248, 29 L. ed. 388, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 28; De Lamar's Nevada Gold Min. Co. v. Nesbitt, 177 U. S. 528, 44 L. ed. 874, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 715.

Where, as in this case, the question necessarily involved is one of the construction to be placed upon a statute of the United States, no necessity exists that such Federal question should be affirmatively set out as such upon the record.

Kaukauna Water Power Co. v. Green Bay & M. Canal Co. 142 U. S. 254, 35 L. ed. 1004, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 173; Columbia Water Power Co. v. Columbia Electric Street R. Light & P. Co. 172 U. S. 488, 43 L. ed. 525, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 247.

Under the established practice of this court, there is ample "color" in support of our claim of the existence of a Federal question, which warrants consideration upon the merits after a hearing in regular order.

Millingar v. Hartuppee, 6 Wall. 258, 18 L. ed. 829; New Orleans v. New Orleans Waterworks Co. 142 U. S. 79-93, 35 L. ed. 943-948, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 142; Hamblin v. Western Land Co. 147 U. S. 532, 37 L. ed. 268, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 353; Douglas v. Wallace, 161 U. S. 348, 40 L. ed. 728, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 485.

Messrs. John M. Wright and John Garber argued the cause for plaintiff in error on reargument.

Mr. Curtis H. Lindley argued the cause, 687 and, with Messrs. Henry Eickhoff and W. J. McGee, filed a brief for defendant in error:

When two several mining companies agree upon a boundary line between the two companies, and subsequently other parties purchase the several interests of the two companies, with a knowledge of the boundary line so fixed, both parties are concluded by it, and are estopped from denying the line.

McGee v. Stone, 9 Cal. 600.

Messrs. Curtis H. Lindley and Henry Eickhoff also filed a brief in support of the motion to dismiss or affirm:

The mere allegation of ownership of the mine and vein, and the trespass thereon, although the necessary inference is that title was derived through some act of Congress, does not suggest a Federal question.

Shoshone Min. Co. v. Rutter, 177 U. S. 505, 507, 44 L. ed. 865, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 726.

The reception by the trial court of immaterial and incompetent evidence in no sense involves a Federal question of which this court will take cognizance.

Dower v. Richards, 151 U. S. 658, 667, 38 L. ed. 305, 308, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 452. Quoting from Mackay v. Dillon, 4 How. 421, 447, 11 L. ed. 1038, 1050.

Section 709 of the Revised Statutes points out the cases in which the judgment or decree of the highest court of a state in which a decision could be had may be reviewed by the Supreme Court of the United States.

McKenna v. Simpson, 129 U. S. 506, 510, 36 L. ed. 772, 773, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 365.

Mr. Chief Justice Fuller delivered the opinion of the court:

Plaintiff in error contended in the courts below that, by force of §§ 2 and 3 of the act of Congress of May 10, 1872, title to the ore in question passed to it through its patent to the Silva mine, and did not pass to the Pioneer through its patent, because the end lines of the latter were not parallel to each other.

The defendant in error contended that its title was not acquired under the act of 1872, but under the act of July 26, 1866, which did not require parallelism of end lines.

In these circumstances it is held by a majority of the court that a Federal question was so presented that we have jurisdiction.

[6] * It was stated in the agreed statement of facts that the Kennedy Mining Company on October 13, 1870, filed its application for patent in the United States land office at Sacramento, California, and that a diagram of the premises for which patent was applied for was posted in that land office October 15, 1870; that on January 13, 1871, the Pioneer Gold & Silver Mining Company, the immediate predecessor in title of the Argonaut company, filed its application for patent in the same land office, and a diagram of the ground it claimed, and for which patent was sought, was posted in the office of the register of the land office, and upon the claim; that there was a surface conflict as to area claimed by the respective applicants for patent, as shown by the proceedings in the land office, the conflict occurring on the northern end of the Pioneer mine as applied for, and the southern end of the Kennedy mine as applied for; that on said January 13, the register and receiver of the land office made and entered an order in respect of the adverse claim of the Pioneer, directing proceedings in the case of the Kennedy mining company to be suspended so far as affecting the piece or parcel of land described in the order; that on February 20, 1871, the Pioneer Gold & Silver Mining Company and the Kennedy Mining Company entered into a compromise agreement, in which each of the parties withdrew from their applications their claim to a certain portion of the surface ground in dispute; and which provided that "the dividing line between the claims of the respective companies shall be one drawn at right angles with the general course of the lode or lead, and surface ground thereto appurtenant, and at the point hereinbefore designated." The line thus agreed upon was the line from A to B in the foregoing diagram. Thereafter surveys for the patent for the Kennedy mine and for the Pioneer mine were duly made, and patent was issued to the Kennedy Mining Company, July 29, 1872, and to the Pioneer Gold & Silver Mining Company, August 12, 1872. The Argonaut company became the owner of the Pioneer mine, July 3, 1893, by a deed from the Pioneer Gold & Silver Mining Company, and the Kennedy Mining & Milling Company became the owner of the Kennedy mine by conveyance from the Kennedy Mining Company, *dated December [7] 25, 1886; and the Kennedy Mining & Milling Company became the owner of the Silva quartz mine, February 6, 1893, by a patent issued to it on that day, which recited that that company on February 13, 1892, duly entered and paid for the mining claim or premises known as the Silva quartz lode mining claim.

It thus appears that a common end line was established by the patent surveys, which described this line as crossing the lode, and that the Kennedy Mining & Milling Company purchased with the knowledge that this was a common boundary established as such by the patents many years prior to its purchase. The common boundary A B, crossing the lode, was fixed as the result of an adverse proceeding in the land office, and the agreement entered into with respect thereof was as set forth in the agreed statement of facts.

We think, then, that the Kennedy Mining & Milling Company is estopped from asserting any right to the ore body in dispute, which it was also agreed was extracted by the Kennedy Mining & Milling Company from the vein south of the vertical plane drawn through the line A B produced in the direction B', and which was the same vein which had its top or apex in the Kennedy quartz mine, and in the Pioneer quartz mine, and was continuous from the apex of both properties downward to the lowest depths. The boundary line agreed on fixed the rights of the parties in length on the lode, and so involved the extralateral right as between them.

The Argonaut Mining Company and the Kennedy Mining & Milling Company succeeded to the interests of the Pioneer company and the original Kennedy company, with a knowledge of the boundary line so determined, and both parties were concluded by it and the results following therefrom. Richmond Min. Co. v. Eureka Min. Co. 103 U. S. 839, 846, 26 L. ed. 557, 560.

Apart from the questions discussed by the supreme court of California, we are of opinion that the judgment must be affirmed on the foregoing ground.

Judgment affirmed.

Mr. Justice White and Mr. Justice McKenna dissented.

[8]*KOKOMO FENCE MACHINE COMPANY
v.

ALVA L. KITSELMAN and Davis M. Kitzelman.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 8-25.)

Patents—wire-fabric machines—pioneer invention—infringement — presumption of difference from grant of patent.

1. The Kitzelman patent, No. 356,322, for an improvement in wire-fabric machines cannot be regarded as embodying a pioneer invention of a field machine for weaving wire-fencing fabric, in view of prior patents for stationary machines for weaving such fabric and for field machines for making wire-and-picket fence, and of the rejection of the claim for a pioneer field machine by the Patent Office, with the acquiescence of the patentee, who thereupon withdrew such claim; and the claims of such patent must therefore be limited in their scope to the actual combination of essential parts as shown, and cannot be construed to cover other combinations of elements of different construction and arrangement.
2. There is a presumption, from the grant of separate letters patent for two improvements on a prior art, that there is a substantial difference between the inventions.
3. No infringement of either the Kitzelman patent, No. 356,322, the Davisson patent, No. 289,507, or the Connor patent, No. 357,067, for improvements in wire-fabric machines, or of the Pope patent, No. 505,607, for wire-fabric machines, results from the manufacture, under the Whitney patent, No. 502,025, of wire-fence machines which are substantially differentiated from those manufactured under the earlier patents, none of which embody pioneer invention.

[No. 148.]

NOTE.—On the construction of patents—see notes to Royer v. Coupe, 36 L. ed. U. S. 1073; and Dashiell v. Grosvenor, 40 L. ed. U. S. 1025.

On what constitutes infringement of patent—see notes to Royer v. Coupe, 36 L. ed. U. S. 1073; and Dashiell v. Grosvenor, 40 L. ed. U. S. 1025.

189 U. S.

Argued January 22, 1903. Decided March 23, 1903.

ON WRIT and Cross Writ of Certiorari to the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit to review a decree which reversed a decree of the Circuit Court for the District of Indiana dismissing a bill to restrain the infringement of certain patents. Reversed; decree of Circuit Court Affirmed.

See same case below, 47 C. C. A. 538, 108 Fed. 632.

Statement by Mr. Chief Justice Fuller:

This was a suit in the circuit court of the United States for the district of Indiana for infringement of claims 1, 2, 3, 9, 10, 11, 15, and 20 of letters patent No. 356,322, issued January 18, 1887, to Alva L. Kitzelman and Davis M. Kitzelman for an improvement in wire-fabric machines; of claims 1 and 2 of letters patent No. 289,507, issued December 4, 1883, to W. J. Davisson for an improved machine for making wire fabrics; of claims 2, 3, and 4 of letters patent No. 357,067, issued February 1, 1887, to Theodore M. Connor for improvement in machines for forming netted wire fabrics; and of claims 1 and 10 of letters patent No. 505,607, issued September 26, 1893, to John C. Pope, for wire-fabric machines.

Defendants denied patentable novelty of each of the patents, and also denied infringement, and alleged that they constructed their wire fabrics as licensees under and pursuant to letters patent No. 502,025, issued to W. D. Whitney December 24, 1895, for improvements in wire-fabric machines.

The cause was heard by District Judge Baker, who held *that the claims of the four [9] patents sued on were for specific constructions which defendants did not use, and that there was no infringement of either of the letters patent, and dismissed the bill. The case was carried to the United States circuit court of appeals for the seventh circuit, and that court, one of its members dissenting, reversed the decree, and held that the defendants had infringed the first, second, eleventh, and fifteenth claims of the patent issued to the Kitzelmans. 47 C. C. A. 538, 108 Fed. 632.

The writ of certiorari was granted on the petition of the Kokomo fence company, and afterwards the cross writ on the petition of the Kitzelmans. The machine company alleged error in the judgment of the court of appeals sustaining and finding infringement of the Kitzelman patent, and the Kitzelmans alleged error in that court in not sustaining and finding infringement of the Davisson, Connor, and Pope patents.

Mr. Thomas A. Banning argued the cause, and, with Messrs. Ephraim Banning and C. C. Shirley, filed a brief for the Kokomo Fence Machine Company:

Even if the Kitzelman patent be a pioneer patent, it cannot cover every combination of devices for producing the same thing.

Westinghouse v. Boyden Power Brake Co.

170 U. S. 569, 42 L. ed. 1148, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 707.

Where a party makes a claim for a mechanism broadly, and such claim is rejected upon references, and he acquiesces in the rejection and withdraws his claim in order to get his patent, he is thereafter forever precluded from putting a construction upon the claims allowed him which would make them mean the same thing, or substantially the same thing, as the claim which he has once presented and afterwards withdrawn.

Morgan Envelope Co. v. Albany Perforated Wrapping Paper Co. 152 U. S. 429, 38 L. ed. 502, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 627.

Where the defendants justify under a patent, the issuance of such patent to them raises a presumption in their favor.

Corning v. Burden, 15 How. 271, 14 L. ed. 691; Miller v. Eagle Mfg. Co. 151 U. S. 208, 38 L. ed. 131, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 310; Boyd v. Janesville Hay Tool Co. 158 U. S. 261, 39 L. ed. 973, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 837.

Mr. Robert H. Parkinson argued the cause and filed a brief for the Kitsehmans:

The claims of the patent are, if consistent with their terms, to be construed so as to protect the patentee in the substance of his invention, and a defendant who has appropriated the invention by disguising it under changes of form, or by substituting equivalents for some of its elements, cannot escape liability by reason of such disguises; nor can the patent be limited or defeated by showing how earlier machines built and operated upon a different plan might have been converted into the machine of the patent,—especially so where such conversion involves a rejection of the plan of construction and operation inherent in such old machines, and the adoption of a distinct plan borrowed from the complainant's patent.

Consolidated Safety Valve Co. v. Crosby Steam Gauge Valve Co. 113 U. S. 157, 28 L. ed. 939, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 513; Morley Sewing Mach. Co. v. Lancaster, 129 U. S. 263, 32 L. ed. 715, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 299; Royer v. Schultz Belting Co. 135 U. S. 319, 34 L. ed. 214, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 833; Ives v. Hamilton, 92 U. S. 426, 23 L. ed. 494; Blake v. Robertson, 94 U. S. 728, 24 L. ed. 245; Cochrane v. Deener, 94 U. S. 780, 24 L. ed. 139; Union Paper-Bag Mach. Co. v. Murphy, 97 U. S. 120, 24 L. ed. 935; Sessions v. Romadka, 145 U. S. 29, 36 L. ed. 609, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 799; Hoyt v. Horne, 145 U. S. 302, 36 L. ed. 713, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 922; Westinghouse v. Boyden Brake Co. 170 U. S. 571, 42 L. ed. 1148, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 707; Clough v. Gilbert & B. Mfg. Co. 106 U. S. 166, 27 L. ed. 134, 1 Sup. Ct. Rep. 188; Blake v. Robertson, 94 U. S. 728, 24 L. ed. 245; Hoyt v. Horne, 145 U. S. 302, 36 L. ed. 713, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 922; McCormick Harvesting Mach. Co. v. C. Aultman & Co. 16 C. C. A. 259, 37 U. S. App. 299, 69 Fed. 371; Keystone Mfg. Co. v. Adams, 151 U. S. 139, 38 L. ed. 103, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 295; Du Bois v. Kirk, 158 U. S. 58, 39 L. ed. 895, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 729; Hobbs v. Beach, 180 U. S. 383, 45 L. ed. 586, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 409; Busch v. Jones, 184 U. S. 598, 46 L. ed. 707, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 511.

By "known equivalent" the authorities do not mean solely a device which, in its peculiarities of structure, was known at the time, but include any which possesses a character known to be an equivalent for the character of the element for which it was substituted, or which performs a similar office in the patented combination.

1 Robinson, Patents, § 248.

The substitution, for elements of a combination claim, of subsequently patented improvements which serve the same purpose in that combination, does not escape such claim, even though the improvements are themselves the subject of valid patents, and are composed of a different number of parts, some of them endowed with additional capacity and having material advantages over the elements for which they have been substituted.

Clough v. Gilbert & B. Mfg. Co. 106 U. S. 166, 27 L. ed. 134, 1 Sup. Ct. Rep. 188; Clough v. Gilbert & B. Mfg. Co. 106 U. S. 178, 27 L. ed. 138, 1 Sup. Ct. Rep. 198; Wilcox & G. Sewing-Mach. Co. v. Merrow Mach. Co. 35 C. C. A. 269, 60 U. S. App. 451, 93 Fed. 206.

In substantially all the cases the defendant's machine, though found to infringe, was made under patents owned or controlled by the defendant; and in many of these cases the court recognized defendant's patent as adding materially to the value of the machine. These subordinate patents, in many cases, embrace the combinations held to infringe, and greatly improve them.

Hobbs v. Beach, 180 U. S. 383, 398, 45 L. ed. 586, 594, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 409; Du Bois v. Kirk, 158 U. S. 58, 63, 39 L. ed. 895, 898, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 729; Consolidated Safety Valve Co. v. Crosby Steam Gauge & Valve Co. 113 U. S. 157, 167, 28 L. ed. 939, 942, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 513; Morley Sewing Mach. Co. v. Lancaster, 129 U. S. 263, 265, 32 L. ed. 715, 716, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 299; Royer v. Schultz Belting Co. 135 U. S. 319, 34 L. ed. 214, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 833, 28 Fed. 851; Blake v. Robertson, 94 U. S. 728, 733, 24 L. ed. 247; Cochrane v. Deener, 94 U. S. 780, 782, 24 L. ed. 139, 140; Hoyt v. Horne, 145 U. S. 302, 309, 36 L. ed. 713, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 716; Union Paper-Bag Mach. Co. v. Murphy, 97 U. S. 120, 24 L. ed. 935; Clough v. Gilbert & B. Mfg. Co. 106 U. S. 166, 27 L. ed. 134, 1 Sup. Ct. Rep. 188; Keystone Mfg. Co. v. Adams, 151 U. S. 139, 145, 38 L. ed. 103, 104, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 295; McCormick Harvesting Mach. Co. v. C. Aultman & Co. 16 C. C. A. 259, 37 U. S. App. 292, 69 Fed. 371; Crown Cork & Seal Co. v. Aluminum Stopper Co. 48 C. C. A. 72, 108 Fed. 845.

Where defendant has offered expert evidence concerning alleged anticipations, patents not referred to in such expert evidence are not entitled to consideration.

Miller v. Smith, 5 Fed. 359, 363 (Clifford, C. J.); Waterman v. Shipman, 5 C. C. A. 371, 14 U. S. App. 312, 55 Fed. 982, 987.

Nor can patents issued after complainants' invention be considered.

Bates v. Coc, 98 U. S. 31, 33, 34, 25 L. ed.

68, 69; Kearney v. Lehigh Valley R. Co. 32 Fed. 320.

Defendants' machine contains all the elements expressed in the claims in suit, and the fact that such claims were allowed after canvassing the subject, as was done pending the application, indicates perhaps more clearly the ultimate conviction of the office that the patentee was entitled to all they embrace than if the application had been allowed in the exact terms in which it was originally submitted.

Reece Button-Hole Mach. Co. v. Globe Button-Hole Mach. Co. 10 C. C. A. 194, 21 U. S. App. 244, 61 Fed. 958; McCormick Harvesting Mach. Co. v. C. Aultman, M. & Co. 169 U. S. 606, 42 L. ed. 875, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 443.

In most of the cases where the courts have sustained patents after considering the question of novelty or patentability, the approaches in the prior art have been very much closer than those to be found in the present case.

Clough v. Gilbert & B. Mfg. Co. 106 U. S. 166, 27 L. ed. 134, 1 Sup. Ct. Rep. 188; Consolidated Safety Valve Co. v. Crosby Steam Gauge & Valve Co. 113 U. S. 157, 28 L. ed. 939, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 513; Re Barbed Wire Patent, 143 U. S. 275, sub nom. Washburn & M. Mfg. Co. v. Beats' Em All Barbed Wire Co. 36 L. ed. 154, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 443; Goodyear v. Day, 2 Wall. Jr. 283, Fed. Cas. No. 5,569; Western Electric Co. v. La Rue, 139 U. S. 601, 35 L. ed. 294, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 670; Topliff v. Topliff, 145 U. S. 156, 36 L. ed. 658, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 825; C. & A. Potts Co. v. Creager, 155 U. S. 597, 39 L. ed. 275, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 194; Krementz v. S. Cottle Co. 148 U. S. 556, 37 L. ed. 558, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 719; Wooster v. Blake, 8 Fed. 429; Atlantic Giant Powder Co. v. Parker, 16 Blatchf. 281, Fed. Cas. No. 625; Seymour v. Osborne, 11 Wall. 516, 20 L. ed. 33; Imhaeuser v. Buerk, 101 U. S. 647, 25 L. ed. 945; Parks v. Booth, 102 U. S. 96, 26 L. ed. 54; Du Bois v. Kirk, 158 U. S. 58, 39 L. ed. 895, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 729; Hobbs v. Beach, 180 U. S. 383, 45 L. ed. 586, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 409; Busch v. Jones, 184 U. S. 598, 46 L. ed. 707, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 511; Carnegie Steel Co. v. Cambria Iron Co. 185 U. S. 403, 46 L. ed. 968, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 698.

Mr. Chief Justice Fuller delivered the opinion of the court:

The circuit court was of opinion that neither of complainants' patents was a pioneer invention; that they were all merely improvements on the prior art, and to be construed in that light; that complainants could not be treated on the basis that they or their assignors were the first to make a portable machine for weaving wire fencing fabric in the field, which claim had been distinctly made by complainants, rejected by the Patent Office, and the claim thereupon withdrawn. In its judgment, complainants and defendants contended as to infringement on an equal field, the presumption of the validity of complainants' patents being met by the presumption of the validity of the patent to Whitney. And, taking up complainants' patents seriatim, the circuit court held that the differences between their machines and defendants' machine were not mere colorable invasions by the latter, and that the identity of means and of operation essential to infringement were lacking.

The circuit court of appeals concurred with the circuit court that the case turned upon the question whether the patents sued on embodied a pioneer invention; that if complainants' invention was not of a primary character, a substantial departure from the machines of the prior art, defendants' machine was so sufficiently differentiated that the claim of infringement could not be maintained; while, on the other hand, if complainants' patents "were the first to give to the world a workable, portable machine for weaving wire fences in the field,—a machine distinctly creating a new product,—and aptly embody in their specifications and claims the mechanical arrangements that bring about such a result, the decree below is erroneous."

The opinion was preceded by an extended statement of facts, which gave the specifications of the Davisson patent of December 4, 1883, and certain of the accompanying figures, together with the second and third claims, alleged to be infringed; also "the pertinent drawings and specifications of the Kitselman patent," and the claims alleged to be infringed, which were as follows:

"1. In a wire-fabric machine, a series of sectional twistors, each of which comprises a central section for carrying a warp wire, and having rotary movement imparted thereto, and the shifting sections for carrying the weft wire, and receiving rotary motion from the central section to form the twist, substantially as and for the purpose herein described.

"2. In a wire-fabric machine, the combination of a series of sectional twistors geared together for simultaneous rotation, and each comprising a central portion movable only on its axis and side portions capable of a compound movement,—that of rotation on their axes,—and of a shifting longitudinal movement, substantially as described, for the purpose set forth."

"9. In a wire-fabric machine, the series of sectional twistors, comprising the central and side sections, the central section of each twister being geared to the twister adjacent thereto for simultaneous operation, substantially as described, for the purpose set forth.

"*10. In a wire-fabric machine, the combination of a series of twistors geared directly together for simultaneous operation, and each comprising a central section and the side section, each side section carrying a spool or reel for the wire, substantially as described, for the purpose set forth.

"11. In a wire-fabric machine, a series of twistors connected for simultaneous operation, and each consisting of a central section and the side section, in combination with the spools carried by the side sections, the central section of each twister being provided with a longitudinal opening for the passage therethrough of the warp wire, substantially as described."

"15. In a wire-fabric machine, the combination of a series of rotary twisters geared directly together for simultaneous operation, each twister having a central section capable of rotary movement only, and two side sections which are capable of a shifting movement independently of the central section in opposite directions simultaneously, whereby the said shifting sections of one twister are adjusted to register with the central sections of twisters on opposite sides of the same, substantially as described, for the purpose set forth."

"20. In a wire-fabric machine, a series of sectional twisters, each comprising a central section, the central sections being geared together to be simultaneously rotated on their axes, and the shifting side sections adapted to align with the central sections to be rotated therewith, substantially as described, for the purpose set forth."

The drawings and specifications of the Connor and Pope patents were not set out because unnecessary in the view taken of the case. Both these patents were issued subsequently to the Kitselman patent.

The drawings and specifications of the patent to Whitney of December 24, 1895, were then given.

The statement further set forth "the essential drawings and specifications of letters patent No. 10,743, granted John Nesmith April 4, 1854, and referred to in the opinion as most adequately representing one branch of the prior art," namely, as stated by the court, loom machines by which wire netting was made in the factory, and then [12] transferred to the field; and *also figure 2 of the drawings of the Middaugh and Wilcox patent of December 23, 1884, that patent being regarded as "the best example of the second branch of the prior art," field machines which constructed the fence in situ.

The statement is given in full, with eleven pages of drawings, in the report of the case, 47 C. C. A. 538, 108 Fed. 632.

The Kitselman and Pope patents described portable machines. The Davisson and Connor patents described stationary machines. The Kitselman and Pope patents were intended to be operated by hand. And the Davisson and Connor patents were intended to be operated by power. But the essentials of the mechanism were not dependent upon the circumstance of their being embodied in either a stationary or a portable machine, or in a power or a hand machine. Complainants' leading expert testified that "the essentials of the invention described in the several claims here in suit are not dependent on their use in a stationary or portable machine, or in a power or hand machine, or upon their capacity to weave a fabric in which slats may or may not be used, or upon their capacity to weave a fabric of any special size of mesh."

In the specification of the Kitselman patent the inventor said: "The primary object I have in view in my invention is to provide a simple and easily operated machine of the class named which can be adapted for use in the open field or other place for the construction of fences, as well as a stationary or fixed machine for the manufacture of wire fabric." And also: "I may either construct a portable machine as shown in the accompanying drawings, to work in the open field or other place, or dispose the parts in a horizontal instead of a vertical position, and mount the same on suitable bearings and legs to provide a stationary machine for indoor use."

The Middaugh and Wilcox patent of December 23, 1884, was a patent for a "portable fence machine," described in the claims as "a portable machine for constructing wire-and-picket fences," and "a portable fencing machine." Longitudinal pairs of wires were intertwined with vertical slats inserted between the twists, the wires passing through tubes or spindles in the frame of the machine, which moved along the wires as the fence was formed.

*In the Kitselman specifications and draw-[13] ings, plans of picket and slat fencing and of the common form of wood fence held together by wires, as made by that machine, were shown. The Middaugh and Wilcox machine made wire-and-picket fence. The Kitselman machine made diamond mesh, and wire-and-picket, fence. But the diamond mesh fabric was old, as shown, not only in the Davisson patent, but in many others antedating those in suit, as, for instance, that of Nesmith of April 4, 1854.

The diamond mesh fabric had been woven while the machine was in a standing position. The Middaugh and Wilcox patent made wire-and-picket fence in the field. Kitselman converted the stationary into a portable machine by setting it on end and mounting it on a truck; and he converted the portable machine, as he himself says, by disposing the parts "in a horizontal instead of a vertical position," and mounting "the same on suitable bearings to provide a stationary machine for indoor use." The mechanism and operation were the same. Whatever its merits, it was not in itself primary invention to mount a machine for making diamond mesh fencing on a truck, and use it in the field, as the old machine had been used to make wire-and-picket fences. The getting up and walking was not new, though the machine may have gone at a better gait and made a better fence.

When Kitselman made his original application, his nineteenth claim read: "In a wire-fabric machine, the combination of a track, a carrying frame geared to the track and having the twisting devices and the reels, and pawl and ratchet mechanism for feeding the frame and its devices, substantially as described, for the purpose set forth." This claim was rejected by the Patent Office on reference to the Fultz patent of May 13, 1884, and the Watson patent of July 21, 1885.

Fultz's was a patent for "an upright machine for making or weaving fence composed of wire and pickets, and may be used, movably, along the line where the fence is to be made, or stationary."

Watson's was a patent for a wire-fence machine, the invention relating "to that class of fence machines in which the pickets and wires are bound together and the fence put up in one operation."

- [14] *Kitselman acquiesced in the rejection and withdrew his nineteenth original claim, and cannot now reasonably claim a construction which would protect his machine as a pioneer field machine.

The first, second, eleventh, and fifteenth claims of the Kitselman patent were held by the circuit court of appeals to be infringed. We repeat these claims as follows:

"1. In a wire-fabric machine, a series of sectional twisters, each of which comprises a central section for carrying a warp wire, and having rotary movement imparted thereto, and the shifting sections for carrying the weft wire, and receiving rotary motion from the central section to form the twist, substantially as and for the purpose herein described.

"2. In a wire-fabric machine, the combination of a series of sectional twisters geared together for simultaneous rotation, and each comprising a central portion movable only on its axis and side portions capable of a compound movement,—that of rotation on their axes,—and of a shifting longitudinal movement, substantially as described, for the purpose set forth."

"11. In a wire-fabric machine, a series of twisters connected for simultaneous operation and each consisting of a central section and the side section, in combination with the spools carried by the side sections, the central section of each twister being provided with a longitudinal opening for the passage therethrough of the warp wire, substantially as described."

"15. In a wire-fabric machine, the combination of a series of rotary twisters geared directly together for simultaneous operation, each twister having a central section capable of rotary movement only, and two side sections which are capable of a shifting movement independently of the central section in opposite directions simultaneously, whereby the said shifting sections of one twister are adjusted to register with the central sections of twisters on opposite sides of the same, substantially as described, for the purpose set forth."

It is obvious, as said by complainants' expert, "that the terms 'sectional twisters,' 'twisters,' and 'rotary twisters,' used in the several claims under consideration, refer to the same three-part twister devices."

- [15] *In Kitselman's original application, the first claim called for "a series of sectional twisters geared directly together;" the second, for "a series of sectional twisters capable of sliding movement with relation to each other and geared for simultaneous rotation;" the third, for "the series of sectional twisters comprising the central hub section and the two side sections disposed on opposite sides of the central section, the hub section being stationary, while the side sections are capable of shifting movement;" the fourth, for "the series of sectional twisters, each of which comprises a longitudinally immovable section and two sections which have longitudinal movement;" the fifth, for "the series of sectional twisters, each of which comprises the central portion carrying the warp-wires and the shifting side sections which carry the weft-wires."

The first and second claims were rejected, and thereupon erased, and others substituted, which were likewise rejected (the Nesmith patent of 1854 being cited), were withdrawn, and the numbers of original claims 3, 4, and 5 were changed to 1, 2, and 3. The latter were then rejected on reference to the Smith British printed publication of 1876, withdrawn, and claim 1 as it now stands submitted. That publication, which was a provisional specification, described a two-part twister, and added: "Or I divide the twisting wheels into three parts, my extra wire passing through the central division, and the two side segments travel to and fro to form the twist, leaving the central division in position with my supplementary wire therein maintained."

The two substituted claims above mentioned as rejected on reference to Nesmith, and withdrawn, read as follows:

"1. In a wire-fabric machine, a series of rotary twisters geared directly together for simultaneous rotation, and each having two sections which are capable of a sliding movement, substantially as described, for the purpose set forth.

"2. In a wire-fabric machine, the combination of a series of rotary twisters geared directly together, substantially as described, for the purpose set forth."

The Nesmith patent described a machine comprising two separate but simultaneously operating parts, termed in the *patent the[16] "feeder" and the "twister." It was a loom machine, so called, and adapted to produce the wire netting and wrap it about suitable rolls. The feeder was a complete device for supporting the warp wires, and supporting, rotating, and shifting the woof wires, provided with a take-up roll mounted on the front end of the "twister." It comprised a rectangular frame, together with operating mechanism supported thereon. At the front and rear were five gears in successive engagement, and means were provided for simultaneously rotating both series.

The specification stated that the border wires of the netting were placed on reels supported on the frame of the machine, and these passed through holes drilled in the center of the outside gears; and also showed that the gears, other than the outermost ones, were perforated for the passage of wires in case it was desired to make a narrower fabric. Each of the outside gears was formed with two opposite radial slots, extending inward from the margin sufficient to form recesses which received the ends of spool-carrying frames, each carrying a woof-wire spool, the front end of each frame being seated in the marginal slot of one of the gears, and the rear end in the corresponding slot of the corresponding gear. When all the gears on their spindles or hubs were so adjusted as to bring the slots into the same horizontal line any spool carrier might be transferred from its supporting gears to the gears next adjacent to those which supported its front and rear ends. When the spool carriers of the machine were arranged in pairs on the alternate gears the rotation of all the gears rotated each pair of spool carriers about a common axis, and when the two spool carriers on one pair of gears were shifted in opposite directions to the two pairs of gears on the opposite sides of the pair previously forming the support of the spool carriers a remating of the spool carriers was effected, and the next rotation of the gears rotated each newly formed pair of spool carriers about a common axis coincident with the axis of the supporting gears. As a means of transferring the spool carriers, the machine was provided with "shippers," together with means for sliding them vertically, one of the "shippers" being [17] adapted to transfer *the spool carriers in one direction and the other being adapted to transfer them in an opposite direction or back to their position. Each of the shippers consisted in a series of wedges supported in a suitable frame and having inclined faces adapted to impinge upon the side faces of the end portion of the spool-carrying frames, the corresponding faces of the wedges being oppositely inclined in order to impart to them the reverse movement.

There were in effect five rotating centers, each gear in the front series with the corresponding gear in the rear series acting as a single rotating part or center. The number of spool carriers was one less than the number of centers in use, the number of rotating centers being five and the number of spool carriers being four. In the rotation of the centers the two outermost centers would each support a single spool carrier, and the central rotating center would support two spool carriers. The rotation of the gears when the spools had the first arrangement would wrap the outer woof wires about the marginal warp wires and inter-twist the other two warp wires at the center of the machine; and the rotation of the gears after the spool carriers had been shifted to the second and fourth rotating centers intertwined the first and second wires in front of the second center and the third and fourth wires in front of the fourth center. The repetition of this operation formed the fabric.

The circuit court of appeals pointed out that in the Davisson patent the supplemental mechanism of Nesmith was dispensed with, and that the diamond mesh was made by a shifting of the reels instead of the wires.

In respect of the differences between Davisson and Kitselman, the court stated:

"The spindles of the Davisson machine were arranged vertically, had, with reference to the Davisson machine, a longitudinal movement, and were alternately forced forward and withdrawn from the plane of operation by means of a shifting device that was necessarily bulky and impracticable for field use. The Kitselman spindles were horizontally placed; had no *longitudinal or [18] lateral movement; and were confined permanently to the plane of their rotation. In the Davisson machine, as in the Kitselman, the spindle, with its reels, acts as the twisting agent, the spindle forming the rotator; but in the Davisson machine the spindle, where the warp wire emerges from its hollow center, stands well back from the reels, thus allowing the warp wire to go unsupported to the plane of operation; while in the Kitselman machine the spindle extends clear forward to the twisting zone, to which it carries, through its hollow center, the warp wire fully supported against side pulls. In the Davisson machine the spool carriers are transferred to their adjacent spindles by means of an apparatus previously described as involving a longitudinal and transverse motion. Kitselman effects the transfer of his spool carriers by shifting the one to the spindle above the spindle with which it has just operated, and the other to the spindle below; this shifting being brought about by a longitudinal motion only, thus eliminating the necessity of a transverse motion.

"In the Davisson invention a simple gear is set behind each spindle, but none of these gears engage each other, so that, when the spool carriers are shifted to adjacent spindles and cross-heads at each successive twist, they are revolved about a practically new center. Kitselman provided each twister at its central section with a spur gear of sufficient diameter to engage the gears of the adjacent twist-ers, and by this means imparted a simultaneous motion to the whole series of twist-ers. The gear arrangement of the Davisson machine tends to twist the opposing carriers out of alignment, subjects the central wire to certain deflection, and pulls the woof wires somewhat from their intended direction. In the Kitselman machine the pull, incident to the twisting operation, is constantly equalized, the central portions of the twist-ers offsetting each other in the plane in which the strain comes.

"These distinctions are, to a certain extent, subsidiary, but nevertheless important."

In view of what passed in the Patent Office, and the state of the art, we cannot regard the Kitselman patent as a pioneer patent, but think its claims must be limited [19] in their scope to the actual combination of essential parts as shown, and cannot be construed to cover other combinations of elements of different construction and arrangement.

Passing, then, to the question of infringement, we avail ourselves of the description of the Kitselman patent by defendants' expert as sufficiently comprehensive to enable us to indicate our views on that question. He says:

"The Kitselman machine has a frame made up of three vertical rigidly connected members forming respectively the front and rear walls of the frame and an intermediate wall somewhat nearer to the rear member than to the front. The front and intermediate members of the frame may each be made of two parallel bars, or may be each a single bar having a vertical slotted center; and the rear member may be either open or solid, as may be desired. . . . A series of rotatable horizontal hollow spindles are mounted in suitable bearings in the rear and intermediate members of the frame, and are provided with gears in successive engagement with each other, each gear being rigidly fastened on its spindle, so that the rotation of the gear must rotate the spindle. One of the gears of the series is provided with a bevel gear rigidly fastened to it, and this gear is in engagement with a beveled pinion mounted on a crank shaft, the crank shaft in turn being provided with a suitable crank and handle for its rotation and for the consequent rotation of all the gears of the series.

"Each of the rotatable spindles is formed with a flat forward extension in the form of a skeleton frame made up of two transverse members and two longitudinal members, the whole being formed in a single piece and being of such length that the transverse members of each flat extension lie respectively, one just in rear of the front member of the frame, and the other just in front of the intermediate member of the frame. These forward extensions, which are supported by and rotate with the shafts, have their respective axes coincident with the axes of the hollow shafts; and the two transverse members of each of the forward extensions are centrally bored, in line with the bore of the corresponding shaft, so that [20]warp wires may pass in *horizontal lines through the rotatable shafts and their forward extensions. The machine is provided with a series of spool carriers, each of which may carry a woof-wire spool; and each of these spool carriers is a single-piece casting of the same length as the forward extension on each of the shafts. Each such casting consists of a flat longitudinal member adapted to lie side by side with the flat longitudinal bars of any one of the forward extensions of the rotatable spindles, and two segmental heads or ends each adapted to lie with its flat side against the corresponding transverse member of any one of the forward extensions of the rotating spindle. The segmental heads of the spool-carrier castings are of such dimensions that when two of the castings are placed on opposite sides of any one of the forward extensions of the rotatable spindles, the two segments and the intermediate transverse member of the spindle extension between them form a complete circle at either end of the compound three-part structure made up of the spindle extension and the two spool-carrier castings. Each of the spool-carrier castings is adapted to receive and support a woof wire; and it is evident that if two of the castings, with their spools, be held at any time in fixed connection with one of the spindle extensions between them, the rotation of the spindle and its extension must rotate the spool-carrier castings and their spools. The segments at the ends of each spool-carrier casting are similar; but only one of them is perforated for the passage of the woof wire from the spool; and this segment is, in use, made the front end of the spool carrier. It is clear that the rotation of any given spindle and its extension, with two spool carriers lying on opposite sides of the extension and in connection therewith, must intertwist the woof wires from the two spools, at a point in front of the front end of the spindle extension; and it is further evident that if the machine is to make the diamond-mesh fabric, means must be provided for shifting the spool carriers to and fro between the adjacent spindle extensions or rotating centers which effect the rotation of the spool carriers.

"For the purpose of holding the spool-carrier frames temporarily in registration or engagement with the rotating spindle *ex-[21] tensions, and for the further purpose of shifting the spool carriers, in order to remate the woof wires, the machine is provided with two vertically reciprocating guides or shifters, one on either side of the vertical plane of the axes of the spindles and their extensions. Each of these guides is made up of two rigidly connected vertical bars, one just in rear of the front member of the frame, and the other just in front of the intermediate member of the frame, each of the bars being provided with a series of castings, extending inward toward the central plane of the machine, and each terminating at its inner end in a re-entrant segmental curve adapted to conform to the segmental margin of any one of the heads of the carrier frames or castings. These castings lie in the planes of the segmental heads of the carrier frame; and when the two guides or shifters on opposite sides of the machine are so adjusted that their castings are directly opposite each other, the curved edges of any two opposite castings are arcs of a common circle, and will practically inclose and hold in working relation, as a complete circle, the two segmental carrier frame heads lying between them, together with their interposed transverse member of the spindle extension. The consequence is that the carrier frames may be arranged in pairs on the alternate spindle extensions of the machine, and held in place by the curved edges of the castings on the guides or shifters, the two curved edges of any opposite pair of such castings forming a circular guide adapted to hold the three parts of the corresponding circle of the twister in proper relation to each other while they are rotated; and when the parts are thus arranged, the rotation of the spindle must evidently effect the rotation of the three-part twistors with their spools, and thereby intertwist the wires from the two spools carried by each spindle extension. Furthermore, the guides on the two opposite sides of the machine are connected by a walking-beam at the upper end of the frame, so that as one of them moves upward, the other must move downward to an equal extent; and a lever is provided for effecting this opposite reciprocation of the two guides or shifters. Before each such movement of the guides or shifters, the twist-ers are all rotated into such positions [22] that their flat central members * (the forward extensions of the spindles) are in the central vertical plane of the machine, the plane faces of the spool-carrier castings being likewise, of course, in vertical planes. When the parts are in this relation, the opposite vertical movement of the two guides or shifters must evidently carry the spool carriers at one side of the center of the machine downward, and those at the opposite side upward; and the shifters are given sufficient movement to transfer each spool carrier from one spindle to the one next above or below it. It will be understood that in the use of this machine, as in that of any of the others under consideration, only the alternate spindles are provided with spools during any given rotation of the parts, the intermediate spindles being empty. By means of the operation of the guides or shifters just described, the spool carriers, in the intervals between the periods of rotation, are transferred each time from the full spindles to the empty ones, and this transfer, as in all other machines, remates the wires and effects the formation of the diamond mesh."

Defendants' machine as described in the Whitney patent of December 24, 1895, consisted of a vertical upright bar or support; a series of horizontal tubes set rigidly therein; a series of intermeshing gears mounted and rotating on the tubes, and provided with two projecting studs at the opposite sides of their centers; a set of plates loosely journaled on the tubes, and connected to and rotating with the intermeshing gears, and provided with two projecting spring pins at opposite sides of their centers, a small distance from the forward projecting studs on the gears; a set of spool carriers, each mounted on a plate having inclined notches at the diagonal corners on one side, and inclined grooves at the opposite diagonal corners on the other side, so that when one side of the plate is inserted between a gear and its plate one of the studs may pass along a groove on one side, and a spring pin or stud pass into and catch against the notch on the opposite side, and thus retain and support the spool carrier, as long as the parts are rotated in the same direction; spools for the wool wires mounted in the spool carriers, and means for imparting rotation to the intermeshing gears. To transfer the spool [23] carriers the parts are rotated until the * carriers are between the stationary spindles, when the direction of rotation is reversed. This causes a pin and stud on the adjacent gear to enter the empty or unoccupied groove in the carrier plate, and to lift it out of connection with the gear plate with which it had been rotating, and to carry it around in its new relation as long as rotation is continued in that direction. To shift it again to bring it into relation with another gear and plate, the direction of rotation is again reversed.

Considering the complainants and Whitney as alike having improved on the prior art, the question is whether the specific improvements of the one actionably invaded the domain of the other. The presumption from the grant of the letters patent is that there was a substantial difference between the inventions.

The circuit court found these differences between the two machines: That in the Kitselman machine the spool carriers were shifted from one section to another by sliding them in a straight path; that all the spool carriers at one side of the spindles were attached together and moved from one section to another by means of a common bar; that the spindles were fastened to the pinions and rotated with them; that the spool carriers were shifted from one section to another by a hand lever provided for that purpose; that the spool carriers were required to be supported at both ends; that the spool carriers could readily be taken out, turned end for end, and reinstated in place again; that the hollow spindle could not be made stationary without destroying the capacity to operate; that the segmental ends of the side sections of the twist-ers made, with the lateral end pieces of the central sections, wheels at both ends of the twist-ers, resting in supports, permitting their rotation; and that the spool carriers could not be transferred except when the parts had been brought to a position of rest and the pinions were stationary.

That, on the other hand, in defendants' machine, the spool carriers rotated through a curvilinear path; that the spool carriers were each separate from, and moved independently of, the others; that the spindles were fastened to the frame and had the pinions loosely mounted on them, and not rotating with the spindles; that the spool carriers were shifted without any * lever by re-[24] versing the direction of the rotation of the crank; that they were only required to be supported at one end, and could not be taken out, turned end for end, and reinserted; that the spool carriers could be made rotative instead of stationary; that the ends of the central spindles and the spool carriers formed no wheels, and were received in no bearings; and that the spool carriers could only be transferred when they were rotated. Finally, that the spool carriers in the two machines were so different and mounted and operated in such different ways that they could not be interchanged or transferred from one to the other without reorganization.

We perceive no reason to decline acceptance of these findings of the circuit court, and agree with that court in the conclusion that the machines lack that identity of means and identity of operation which must be combined with identity of result to constitute infringement.

As we have before stated, the circuit court of appeals concurred with the circuit court that, unless the patents sued on embodied a pioneer invention, the defendants' machine was so differentiated from either of the others that the charge of infringement could not be maintained. The circuit court held all complainants' patents to be only improvements on the prior art, and dismissed the bill on the ground of non-infringement.

The circuit court of appeals held that the Kitselman patent was entitled to be treated as embodying primary invention, and to such liberal construction as brought defendants' machine within it. The decree of the circuit court was therefore reversed because, in the opinion of the circuit court of appeals, certain claims of the Kitselman patent were infringed.

For the reasons given in treating of the Kitselman patent we think that none of complainants' patents embodied primary invention, and we concur with both the courts below that, this being so, the differences in means and operation between defendants' machine and the others were such that there was no infringement.

It does not seem necessary for us to enumerate these differences in respect of the other three patents. This was well done in the circuit court, and the circuit court of [25] appeals accepted the view of that court as to the absence of infringement if primary invention did not exist. We are content with that conclusion.

Decree of the Circuit Court of Appeals reversed; decree of the Circuit Court affirmed, and mandate to that court accordingly.

JAMES HENNESSY, Maurice Hennessy, Armand Castellon, and Emanuel Castaigne, Appts.,

v.

RICHARDSON DRUG COMPANY.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 25-35.)

Jurisdiction of circuit court—diverse citizenship—citizens of foreign states—sufficiency of allegation.

Complainants' description of themselves, in a bill in a suit against a citizen of Nebraska, as "all of Cognac in France, and citizens of the Republic of France," is sufficient, without any averment of alienage, to bring the suit within the provisions of 25 Stat. at L. 433, chap. 866, conferring original jurisdiction upon circuit courts of the United States of all suits in which there is "a controversy between citizens of a state and foreign states, citizens, or subjects."

[No. 203.]

*Argued and submitted March 12, 1903.
Decided March 23, 1903.*

APPEAL from the Circuit Court of the United States for the District of Nebraska to review a decree which dismissed for want of jurisdiction a suit by citizens of the Republic of France against a citizen of the state of Nebraska to restrain the infringement of a trademark. Reversed and remanded for rehearing on the merits.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Adolph L. Pincoffs argued the cause, and, with Messrs. James L. Hopkins and Richard S. Horton, filed a brief for appellants:

All persons born in the allegiance of the King are natural-born subjects, and all persons born in the allegiance of the United States are natural-born citizens.

United States v. Wong Kim Ark, 169 U. S. 649, 662, 664, 42 L. ed. 890, 895, 896, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 456; United States v. Rhodes, 1 Abb. U. S. 28, Fed. Cas. No. 16,151.

The term "citizen," in our law, is precisely analogous to the term "subject," in the common law; and the change of phraseology has entirely resulted from the change of government. The sovereignty has been transposed from one man to the collective body of the people, and a subject of the King is now a citizen of the state.

United States v. Wong Kim Ark, 169 U. S. 649, 662, 664, 42 L. ed. 890, 895, 896, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 456; State v. Manuel, 20 N. C. 144 (4 Dev. & B. L. 20).

The word "or" may be changed to "and," in interpreting a statute, only where the word used would lead to absurd results and would be clearly contrary to the intention of the Legislature.

Endlich Interpretation of Statutes, § 305.

Mr. Charles F. Tuttle submitted the cause for appellee:

The jurisdictional facts as to the alienage of complainants and their alleged partnership are not properly pleaded.

Stuart v. Easton, 156 U. S. 46, 39 L. ed. 341, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 268.

Mr. Chief Justice Fuller delivered the opinion of the court:

This was a bill alleging that complainants were "all of Cognac *in France, and [33] citizens of the Republic of France," and that defendant was a citizen of Nebraska, and a resident of the judicial district thereof; that complainants owned and employed a certain trademark for Hennessy brandy (which they produced, bottled, and sold), of a value exceeding $2,000, which trademark had been properly registered in the Patent Office under the act of Congress of March 3, 1881 [21 Stat. at L. 502, chap. 138, U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 3401]; and that defendant was selling an imitation "Hennessy brandy," using facsimiles of complainants' trade name, devices, and labels. Injunction, profits, and damages were prayed for.

The case was brought to issue, heard on pleadings and proofs, and dismissed, it being held that the court had no jurisdiction, because "complainants' citizenship or alienage is not alleged, as required;" and also that the case was with defendant on the merits.

The decree stated, among other things: "And the court finds that neither the bill, nor the bill as amended, nor the evidence, shows the citizenship of complainants, or any of them, so as to confer jurisdiction upon this court. And the court further finds with and for the defendants and against the complainants on the evidence, and that the bill as amended is without equity. And, for both and all the reasons hereinbefore recited," the bill was dismissed.

NOTE.—As to sufficiency of averments of citizenship to show jurisdiction in Federal courts—see note to Shipp v. Williams, 10 C. C. A. 261. 189 U. S. U. S., Book 47.

The court then granted a certificate in these words: "It is certified that the question of jurisdiction referred to in the opinion was passed upon, but that the case was also determined upon its merits. The question of jurisdiction set forth in the opinion filed herein, together with the question of the merits of the case, is hereby certified to the Supreme Court, all of which are shown by the decree and the opinion."

An appeal was taken directly to this court under the first of the classes of cases enumerated in § 5 of the judiciary act of March 3, 1891 (26 Stat. at L. 827, chap. 517, U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 549), and we are shut up to the consideration of the question of jurisdiction alone. We do not understand that the amount in controversy was treated below as having any bearing in respect of that question. The act of March 3, 1881, provides for jurisdiction "without regard to the amount in controversy," and [34] the averment here was that the *value of the trademark exceeded $2,000. The point, however, was not relied on, and we confine ourselves to the question of jurisdiction as dependent on citizenship.

By the Constitution the judicial power of the United States extends to controversies between citizens of a state "and foreign states, citizens, or subjects." And by statute, circuit courts of the United States have original cognizance of all suits of a civil nature, at common law or in equity, in which there is "a controversy between citizens of a state and foreign states, citizens, or subjects." 25 Stat. at L. 433, chap. 866.

In Stuart v. Easton, 156 U. S. 46, 39 L. ed. 341, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 268, it was held that by the description of plaintiff as "a citizen of London, England," the fact that he was a subject of the British Crown was not made affirmatively to appear as required; but, in the case at bar, complainants described themselves as "all of Cognac in France, and citizens of the Republic of France," and this was sufficient.

No averment of alienage was necessary. It is true that by § 6 of the judiciary act of March 3, 1891, the judgments and decrees of the circuit courts of appeals were made final in cases, among others, in which the jurisdiction was dependent entirely on the opposite parties to the suit or controversy being citizens of different states, or "aliens and citizens of the United States." But the word "aliens" as there used embraces subjects or citizens of foreign countries, and not merely persons resident in this country, who owe allegiance to another. And the language of the Constitution and of the act determining the jurisdiction of the circuit courts is explicit.

In Chisholm v. Georgia, 2 Dall. 419, 456, 1 L. ed. 440, 456, Mr. Justice Wilson said that under the Constitution of the United States "there are citizens, but no subjects. 'Citizen of the United States.' 'Citizens of another state.' 'Citizens of different states.' 'A state or citizen thereof.' The term 'subject' occurs, indeed, once in the instrument; but to mark the contrast strongly, the epithet 'foreign' is prefixed."

The supreme court of North Carolina, in State v. Manuel, 20 N. C. (4 Dev. & B. L.) 20, 26 (quoted in United States v. Wong Kim Ark, 169 U. S. 649, 42 L. ed. 890, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 456), said: "The term 'citizen,' as understood in our law, is precisely analogous to the term 'subject' in the common *law, and the change of phrase has en- [35] tirely resulted from the change of government. The sovereignty has been transferred from one man to the collective body of the people; and he who before was a 'subject of the King' is now 'a citizen of the state.'"

In that view, the people of France are properly described as citizens of that Republic.

As complainants were citizens of a foreign state, and defendant was a citizen of Nebraska, as affirmatively appeared from the pleadings, no issue of fact arising in that regard, the circuit court had jurisdiction.

Decree reversed, and cause remanded for rehearing on the merits.

---

JAMES HENNESSY et al., Appts.,
v.

WALTER MOISE et al. (No. 204)

---

JAMES HENNESSY et al., Appts.,
v.

CARRIE MAY et al. (No. 205)

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 35.)

Mr. Chief Justice Fuller:

These cases must take the same course as that just decided, and the same decrees will be entered.

---

P. H. KIRWAN, as United States Surveyor General for the District of Minnesota, and Thomas H. Crowell, Appts.,
v.

SIMON J. MURPHY, George O. Robinson, Elisha A. Flinn, and Temple E. Dorr.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 35-56.)

Equitable jurisdiction—irreparable injury—multiplicity of suits—interference with executive administration.

---

NOTE.—On the scope of equitable jurisdiction—see notes to Fuller v. Detroit F. & M. Ins. Co. (C. C. N. D. Ill.) 1 L. R. A. 801; and Corinth v. Locke (Vt.) 11 L. R. A. 207.

On the jurisdiction of equity where remedy at law exists—see notes to Meldrum v. Meldrum (Colo.) 11 L. R. A. 65; Delaware, L. & W. R. Co. v. Central Stockyards & T. Co. (N. J. Eq.) 6 L. R. A. 855; and Tyler v. Savage, 36 L. ed. U. S. 83.

1. The prevention of irreparable injury and of a multiplicity of suits cannot be invoked as grounds for equitable relief against a threatened survey, under direction of the Land Department, of lands to which complainants assert title, but which the Department claims to be unsurveyed public lands of the United States, where such survey can be made without material injury to the soil or timber, and the persons directly interested in such survey are not made parties, are not numerous, and assert separate and independent rights.
2. The courts cannot interfere with the executive administration of the Land Department by enjoining, at the instance of persons claiming to be the owners of the land, a survey, under the direction of such Department, of certain lands lying between an alleged meander line and the actual waters of a lake, which are claimed by the Department to be unsurveyed public lands of the United States.

[No. 161.]

Argued January 30, February 2, 1903. Decided April 6, 1903.

A PPEAL from the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Eighth Circuit to review a decree which affirmed a decree of the Circuit Court for the District of Minnesota perpetually enjoining a survey, under the direction of the Land Department, of certain lands claimed by it to be unsurveyed public lands of the United States. Reversed and remanded to the Circuit Court, with directions to dismiss the bill.

See same case below, 48 C. C. A. 399, 109 Fed. 354.

Statement by Mr. Chief Justice Fuller:

Murphy and others filed their bill of complaint in the United States circuit court for the district of Minnesota against Kirwan, as United States surveyor general for that district, and Thomas H. Croswell, as deputy surveyor, to enjoin them from surveying, by direction of the Commissioner of the General Land Office, certain lands claimed by the Land Department to be unsurveyed public lands of the United States.

Complainants alleged that they owned lots 1, 2, and 3 of section 2; lots 1 and 2 of section 3; lots 1 and 8 and parts of lots 6 and 7 of section 4; and certain described parts of sections 9, 10, and 11, in township 57 north, range 17 west, 4th principal meridian, Minnesota, deriving title thereto through mesne conveyances and patents from the government; that the land was surveyed by Henry S. Howe in June, 1876, and records of the survey and field notes were approved by the surveyor general August 7, 1876, and a plat therefrom was by him duly made and submitted to the Commissioner of the General Land Office; that complaint was filed against the accuracy and good faith of the survey, which the Commissioner dismissed, and June 11, 1879, approved the survey and plat, which were duly filed and are the only survey and plat of the township ever made or adopted by the government, and according to them the government sold and disposed of all the land in the township; that the survey, field notes, and plat were incorrect, and did not accurately show the location and subdivisions of the land and water of the township, for that Cedar Island lake is smaller than delineated, and several of the complainants' fractional lots are larger, and others are smaller, than shown on the plat; that complainants purchased said lands for value as extending to the lake upon an estimate of the timber thereon, without knowledge *of [37] the inaccuracy or fraud of the survey; that the principal consideration inducing such purchase was that the land bordered on the lake and they owned other timber lands, the timber from which could be brought to market by floating through the lake and its outlet down the St. Louis river, then the only means of transport; that in 1892 five certain settlers, knowing complainants' rights and claims, petitioned for a survey of said lands, which the surveyor general recommended to the Commissioner of the General Land Office should be allowed, but the petition was disallowed, whereupon, on appeal to the Secretary of the Interior, such proceedings were thereafter had that in October, 1895, the Commissioner of the General Land Office directed the United States surveyor general of the district of Minnesota to make a resurvey, which order was ratified and confirmed in November, 1896; that the contract for the resurvey of said land had been let by the surveyor general to Croswell, and the survey was about to commence.

The bill averred that "by a new survey of said lands your orators will be put to great and vexatious litigation in making proof of their title in actions against parties who are wholly irresponsible; that a very large amount of the timber standing as aforesaid on the land of your orators and owned by them will be destroyed in the making of such proposed survey, and the remainder thereof exposed to damage by fire by reason of said resurvey, and your orators will be thereby irreparably injured."

The prayer was that the "surveyor general, his agents, attorneys, solicitors, and servants may be restrained by the order and injunction of this honorable court from entering into any contract for the survey of the lands herein described, or from surveying the same, or from taking any action for a survey of said lands or any part thereof, and that boundaries of said lands of your orators may be defined and set out in the decree and order of this honorable court, and that all necessary direction may be given them for that purpose and to establish the boundaries of said lands, and that your orators may be protected in the use and enjoyment of such lands so owned by them as aforesaid, extending to and including the shores of said Cedar Island *lake and to the center of said lake, and [38] that said defendant and his successors in office may be perpetually enjoined from letting said contract for the survey of said land or any part thereof, and from surveying the same or any part thereof, and that your orators may have such other and further relief as to this court may seem meet."

Argument was had on the application for a temporary injunction, and the matter taken under advisement, whereupon defendants filed their joint answer to the bill.

Defendants admitted the making of a contract of survey of the unsurveyed lands in these sections lying between Howe's purported meander line and Cedar Island lake; that in 1876 a contract was made with Howe for the survey of the township, and that he returned the field notes of a pretended survey, from which a plat was made and approved; but defendants averred that Howe surveyed only the exterior lines of the township, and in fact made no subdivision thereof, nor surveyed the lands within it; that his field notes were false, fraudulent, and fictitious, and the plat made therefrom was false and incorrect; they admitted that the survey and plat were approved by the Commissioner of the General Land Office after complaint to him of its inaccuracy, but not until after withdrawal of the charge of inaccuracy by the person making it. They admitted that an exhibit attached to the bill was a true copy of such approved plat; they denied that all of the lands were disposed of by the government, and alleged that about 1,200 acres in these sections were never disposed of and were still unsurveyed, lying between Cedar Island lake and the lots described, all of which unsurveyed land is the land referred to, and is, by the plat made from Howe's field notes, indicated as part of Cedar Island lake; they allege that no lots conveyed to the complainants were smaller than shown on the plats; that the true relative size of the lake to that shown in the plat was that shown on an exhibit attached, and that the land between the lake and the boundary line of the fractional lots was 1,200 acres of unsurveyed government land as referred to; defendants denied the good faith of complainants, and alleged complainants' full participation in the contest proceedings resulting in the decision and order for the [39]survey *of these lands, and that the Commissioner and the Secretary of the Interior had full jurisdiction to pass on the question, and to make the decision and order. The answer denied that the timber on complainants' land would be destroyed or damaged in making such survey, and denied every averment of the bill except as in the answer averred or denied.

The circuit court granted the preliminary injunction, and its order was affirmed by the circuit court of appeals for the eighth circuit. 28 C. C. A. 348, 49 U. S. App. 658, 83 Fed. 275. An appeal was taken to this court and dismissed. 170 U. S. 205, 42 L. ed. 1009, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 592.

The cause then went to final hearing, and the circuit court found the facts as follows:

"1. On or about April 26, 1876, a contract for the survey of all lands in township 57 north, of range 17 west, in St.

Louis county, Minnesota, was made by the government of the United States with one Henry S. Howe, as a deputy surveyor of the United States, and thereafter said Howe made and filed what purported to be field notes of a survey of said township, from which a purported official plat of said township was thereafter made and approved by the surveyor general of the United States for the district of Minnesota and by the Commissioner of the General Land Office, of which plat Exhibit A, attached to the bill of complainants, is a substantially correct copy.

"2. There is no evidence, nor any marks upon the ground, to indicate that any actual survey of said township 57 was ever made by said Howe, as required by his said contract, and by the rules and regulations of the General Land Office, or at all, beyond the running and due marking of the exterior boundary lines of said township, where the section, quarter, and other posts and markings established by him are and always have been clear, distinct, and readily found and traced. There is no evidence on the ground that section lines were ever run by him in or across said township, or section corner posts or quarter posts ever located or set by him, except a corner post at the northwest corner of section thirty-six (36) and a quarter post in the western line of said section thirty-six (36), and there is no evidence that witness trees were ever blazed or marked by him.

*"3. Cedar Island lake is a navigable,[40] deep, and permanent body of water, fed principally by springs, having an area of about nine hundred (900) acres, instead of about eighteen hundred (1,800) acres as described in the field notes of Howe and shown on said official plat of said township. Instead of the shores of said lake being low and swampy as stated in said field notes, the banks are generally high and sloping lands, suitable for agriculture, extending around the lake, and support a good growth of pine and other forest trees large enough for lumbering, such as will not grow in water. The condition was the same in 1876, and no material part of the land surrounding the lake is accretion. Southerly and westerly of said Cedar Island lake are five other deep, navigable, and permanent lakes in the same township, none of which are shown by the field notes of Howe's survey or upon said government official plat of said township, and all of which have, since the making of said official plat, been sold and patented by the government as land according to said plat.

"4. There is no evidence upon the ground that any meander line of said Cedar Island lake was ever surveyed by said Howe, or any meander posts placed by him about said lake, except one where the north line of said township encounters said lake. And the outlet of said lake is at a different place from that described in said field notes and shown upon said official plat. After the making of the said survey and plat and before its approval, complaints touching the accuracy thereof were made to the Commissioner of the General Land Office, but, on the withdrawal of such complaints, the said survey and plat were approved.

[41] "5. The land lying between the actual water line of said Cedar Island lake and the meander line of that lake, as delineated on said official plat of said township, comprises the land in controversy in this suit, and is the same land directed to be surveyed by the Commissioner of the General Land Office and referred to in the surveyor's contract, which is attached as Exhibit A to the answer in this suit, being therein described as 'the public lands situate in secs. 2, 3, 4, 9, 10, and 11, in township No. 57 N., R. 17 W., of the 4th principal meridian, lying *between the old meander boundary of Cedar Island lake, as given by the original field notes of Henry S. Howe, U. S. deputy surveyor, approved by the surveyor general of Minnesota, Aug. 19, 1876, and the shore line of said Cedar Island lake.'

"6. Prior to the commencement of this suit the United States has sold, and by its patents has conveyed to the purchaser, according to said official plat made from said Howe survey, all the land in said township 57, as the same appeared upon said plat; to which plat all of said patents expressly refer; it being then and still the only government plat of said township.

"7. The complainants are the grantees and owners by mesne conveyances from the patentees of the record title to the following-described fractional lots in said township, to wit: Lots one (1), two (2), and three (3), in section two (2); lots one (1) and two (2), in section three (3); lots one (1) and eight (8), and portions of lots three (3), five (5), and six (6), in section four (4); lots one (1), two (2), three (3), and four (4), in section nine (9); lots one (1), two (2), three (3), and four (4), in section ten (10); and lot three (3) in section eleven (11),—being the same lands which are more particularly described in complainants' bill; and each of which fractional lots appear and are represented on said official plat as bounded by and upon said Cedar Island lake.

"8. So far as appears, none of the patentees of said lands had any notice or knowledge of any fraud or misconduct on the part of said Howe in or about the making of said survey and field notes, and all were purchasers in good faith of said lands.

"9. Complainants purchased said fractional lots of land of the patentees or their grantees for the pine timber thereon, and the convenience of landing the same in the said Cedar Island lake, to be driven to the place of manufacture; and before such purchase, in the year 1883, caused said lands to be explored and examined by an experienced timber estimator, who, in making such examination, used, as is customary in such cases, a copy of said official plat of said township, which did not have upon it any statement of the acreage or amount of *land in any of the subdivisions; and who [42] reported to the complainants his estimate of the amount of pine timber on said lands, and the general character of said land, and the riparian character thereof as bounded upon said Cedar Island lake; but did not discover or report any fraud or error in the survey of said township, or any error or mistake in the said official plat. And the said complainants purchased, paid for, and took conveyances of said lands in good faith, and without any notice or knowledge of any such fraud, error, or mistake.

"10. The other permanent lakes in said township, not shown upon such official plat, but appearing thereon as land, and since sold and patented by the government as land according to such official plat, include areas equal to the area of said Cedar Island lake; and portions of such lakes were purchased by complainants as land with their other purchases in said township.

"11. The survey sought to be restrained in this suit was ordered by the Commissioner of the General Land Office, upon the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, in a proceeding instituted by certain settlers upon the land in controversy; of which proceedings the complainants had due notice, and in which they appeared." [103 Fed. 104.]

And the circuit court decreed:

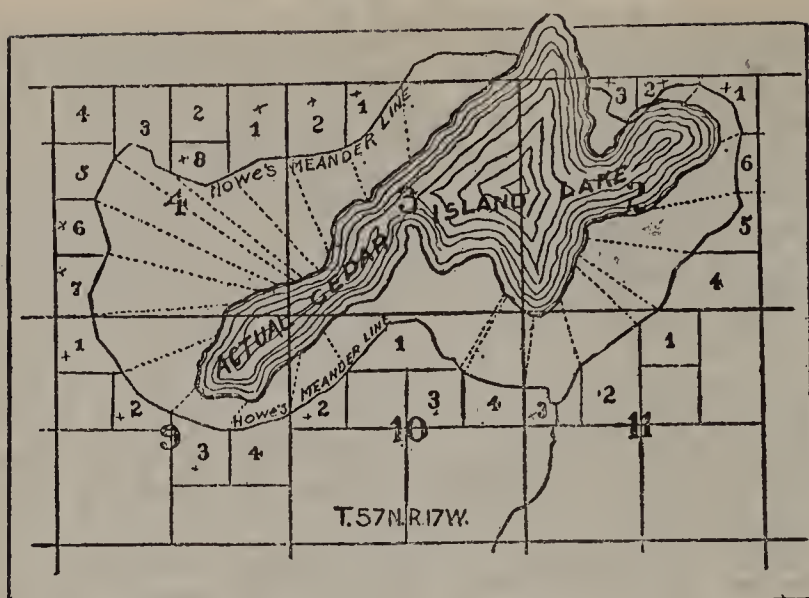

"That the complainants are the grantees and owners, by mesne conveyances from the patentees, of the title of record and, in fact, to the following-described fractional lots, situate in township fifty-seven (57) north, range seventeen (17) west, in the county of St. Louis, state of Minnesota, to wit:" [Here follows description of lots.] "being the same lands which are more particularly described in the complainants' bill of complaint herein; and that said above-described fractional lots extend to, and are bounded by and upon, the actual waters of Cedar Island lake.

"It is further ordered, adjudged, and decreed that the defendants have no jurisdiction or authority to meddle with said lands, or to make the survey complained of in the bill of complaint herein; and "It is further ordered, adjudged, and decreed that the injunction *heretofore issued [43] in this cause be, and the same is hereby, made perpetual; and that the said defendants and their successors, representatives, and assigns be, and they are hereby, severally and perpetually restrained and enjoined from surveying, or causing to be surveyed, the lands hereinbefore described, or any part thereof." And for costs.

Appeal was then taken to the circuit court of appeals and the decree affirmed. 48 C. C. A. 399, 109 Fed. 354. Thereupon the case was brought to this court.

The following drawing, taken from petitioners' brief, sufficiently illustrates the situation:

Assistant Attorney General Van Devanter argued the cause, and, with Mr. Joseph R. Webster, filed a brief for appellants:

Suits in equity shall not be sustained in either of the courts of the United States in any case where a plain, adequate, and complete remedy may be had at law.

New York Guaranty & Indemnity Co. v. Memphis Water Co. 107 U. S. 205, 27 L. ed. 484, 2 Sup. Ct. Rep. 279; Whitehead v. Shattuck, 138 U. S. 146, 34 L. ed. 873, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 276; Buzard v. Houston, 119 U. S. 351, 30 L. ed. 453, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 249.

The rule is jurisdictional to relief in equity, and enforced in repeated decisions. It is enforced by the court sua sponte, though not raised by the pleadings or briefs of counsel.

Hayward v. Andrews, 106 U. S. 672, 27 L. ed. 271, 1 Sup. Ct. Rep. 544; Parker v. Winnebiscoe Lake Cotton & Woolen Co. 2 Black, 545, 17 L. ed. 333; Fussell v. Gregg, 113 U. S. 551, 28 L. ed. 994, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 631; Smith v. Bourbon County, 127 U. S. 105, 111, 32 L. ed. 73, 77, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1043; Russell v. Clark, 7 Cranch, 69, 3 L. ed. 271; Dows v. Chicago, 11 Wall. 108, 20 L. ed. 65.

Facts must be distinctly averred which show that apprehension of irreparable injury is well founded.

Russell v. Clark, 7 Cranch, 69, 3 L. ed. 271; Cruikshank v. Bidwell, 176 U. S. 73, 44 L. ed. 377, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 280; Watson v. Sutherland, 5 Wall. 74, 18 L. ed. 580; Goodell v. Lassen, 69 Ill. 145; McHenry v. Jewett, 90 N. Y. 58; Branch Turnp. Co. v. Yuba County, 13 Cal. 190; Jerome v. Ross, 7 Johns. Ch. 315, 11 Am. Dec. 484; Spofford v. Bangor & B. R. Co. 66 Me. 51.

This suit cannot be maintained upon the ground of threatened trespass.

Citizens Couch Co. v. Camden Horse R. Co. 29 N. J. Eq. 299; Litchfield v. Richards, 9 Wall. 575, 19 L. ed. 681.

A bill of peace will not lie against independent trespassers.

Adams, Eq. 200, 6th Am. ed. 408.

The jurisdiction of equity to prevent a multiplicity of suits is not of itself and alone an independent source or ground of jurisdiction, and will not create a jurisdiction in equity, where there is not a prior existing cause of action.

Pom. Eq. Jur. §§ 181, 250.

The danger of judicial proceedings is not an injury justifying judicial proceedings. To entitle a party to maintain a bill of peace, it must be clear that there is a right claimed which affects many persons, and that a suitable number of parties in interest are before the court; for if the right is disputed between two persons only, not for themselves and all others in interest, but for themselves alone, the bill will be dismissed, for it cannot conclude any persons but the very defendants.

Story, Eq. § 856.

There is a defect of parties to the bill regarded as a bill of peace.

Litchfield v. Richards, 9 Wall. 575, 19 L. ed. 681.

A decree on such a bill could operate only in personam and inter partes, nowise affecting the rights of those not parties to the suit.

Craig v. Leitensdorfer, 123 U. S. 189, sub nom. Downs v. Hubbard, 31 L. ed. 114, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 85; Pope v. Melone, 2 A. K. Marsh. 239; Wolfe v. Burke, 56 N. Y. 115; Poyer v. Des Plaines, 123 Ill. 111, 13 N. E. 819.

A bill of peace is addressed to the sound discretion of the court, and will not be entertained unless it appears that there is a practical necessity for the court to prevent vexatious litigation.

Fellows v. Spaulding, 141 Mass. 89, 6 N. E. 548.

This bill discloses that the parties are not numerous; that if complainants have legal title, they also have complete legal remedy, and that the adverse rights asserted are separate and distinct, and not common. Such facts are fatal to the bill.

Hapgood v. Hewitt, 119 U. S. 227, 30 L.

ed. 370, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 193; Grand Chute v. Winegar, 15 Wall. 355, 21 L. ed. 170.

The suit necessarily involves questions of administration belonging to the executive department of government, with which the courts, either of law or equity, will not interfere.

Gaines v. Thompson, 7 Wall. 347, 19 L. ed. 62; Cox v. McGarrahan, 9 Wall. 298, 19 L. ed. 579; Brown v. Hitchcock, 173 U. S. 473, 43 L. ed. 772, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 485; Litchfield v. Richards, 9 Wall. 575, 19 L. ed. 681; Noble v. Union River Logging R. Co. 147 U. S. 165, 37 L. ed. 123, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 271; Crnickshank v. Bidwell, 176 U. S. 73, 44 L. ed. 377, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 280.

The officers of the Land Department are by law made a special tribunal for administration of the public lands, and their jurisdiction is exclusive, and will not be interfered with by the courts.

Litchfield v. Richards, 9 Wall. 575, 19 L. ed. 681.

Appellees participated in the proceedings before the Land Department leading up to the order for survey, and are thereby concluded as to all questions of fact and as to all further administrative proceedings of the Land Department.

Brown v. Hitchcock, 173 U. S. 473, 43 L. ed. 772, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 485; Quinby v. Conlan, 104 U. S. 420, 26 L. ed. 800; Steel v. St. Louis Smelting & Ref. Co. 106 U. S. 447, 27 L. ed. 226, 1 Sup. Ct. Rep. 389.

Messrs. M. H. Stanford and Benton Hanchett argued the cause and filed a brief for appellees:

With the issue of the patent, all jurisdiction and authority of the Land Department over the land terminates. After the issue of the patent, the matter becomes subject to inquiry only in the courts by judicial proceeding instituted to vacate the patent.

United States v. Stone, 2 Wall. 525, 17 L. ed. 765; Moore v. Robbins, 96 U. S. 530, 24 L. ed. 848; United States v. Schurz, 102 U. S. 378, 26 L. ed. 167; Bicknell v. Comstock, 113 U. S. 149, 28 L. ed. 962, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 399; Iron Silver Min. Co. v. Campbell, 135 U. S. 286, 34 L. ed. 155, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 765; Davis v. Weibbold, 139 U. S. 507, 35 L. ed. 238, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 628; Williams v. United States, 138 U. S. 514, 34 L. ed. 1026, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 454; Hardin v. Jordan, 140 U. S. 371, 35 L. ed. 428, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 808, 838; Noble v. Union River Logging R. Co. 147 U. S. 165, 37 L. ed. 123, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 271; Michigan Land & Lumber Co. v. Rust, 168 U. S. 589, 42 L. ed. 592, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 208.

Courts have power to protect the private rights of a party who has purchased in good faith from the government, against the interference or appropriation of corrective surveys made by the department subsequent to such disposition or sale.

Cragin v. Powell, 128 U. S. 691, 32 L. ed. 566, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 203; Mullan v. United States, 118 U. S. 271, 30 L. ed. 170, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1041; Moore v. Robbins, 96 U. S. 530, 24 L. ed. 848; United States v. Schurz, 102 U. S. 378, 26 L. ed. 167; Steel v. St.
189 U. S.

Louis Smelting & Ref. Co. 106 U. S. 447, 27 L. ed. 226, 1 Sup. Ct. Rep. 389; Davis v. Weibbold, 139 U. S. 507, 35 L. ed. 238, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 628.

The defendants, in making the survey ordered, propose to exercise an unlawful control over this land. They justify their action on the sole ground that they are subordinate officers of the Interior Department of the United States, and are acting under and by virtue of the authority and order of their superior officers. This alone is sufficient to justify the decree.

Caldwell v. Robinson, 59 Fed. 653; La Chapelle v. Bubb, 69 Fed. 481; Noble v. Union River Logging R. Co. 147 U. S. 165, 37 L. ed. 123, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 271; Pennoyer v. McConnaughy, 140 U. S. 1, 35 L. ed. 363, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 699; Osborn v. Bank of United States, 9 Wheat. 738, 6 L. ed. 204; Louisiana Bd. of Liquidation v. McComb, 92 U. S. 531, 23 L. ed. 623; Allen v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. 114 U. S. 311, 29 L. ed. 200, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 925, 962; Belknap v. Schild, 161 U. S. 10, 40 L. ed. 599, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 443; Davis v. Gray, 16 Wall. 203, 21 L. ed. 447; People ex rel. Negus v. Dwyer, 90 N. Y. 402; Morgan v. Binghamton, 102 N. Y. 500, 7 N. E. 424; Dainese v. Cooke, 91 U. S. 580, 23 L. ed. 251; United States v. Lee, 106 U. S. 244, 27 L. ed. 190, 1 Sup. Ct. Rep. 240; Scott v. Donald, 165 U. S. 107, 41 L. ed. 648, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 262.

The act sought to be enjoined in this suit is a ministerial act.

Noble v. Union River Logging R. Co. 147 U. S. 165, 37 L. ed. 123, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 271; Decatur v. Paulding, 14 Pet. 497, 10 L. ed. 559; Kendall v. Stokes, 3 How. 87, 11 L. ed. 506; Brashear v. Mason, 6 How. 92, 12 L. ed. 357; Rceside v. Walker, 11 How. 272, 13 L. ed. 693; Holloway v. Whiteley, 4 Wall. 522, 18 L. ed. 335; United States ex rel. Tucker v. Seaman, 17 How. 225, 15 L. ed. 226; United States ex rel. Goodrich v. Guthrie, 17 How. 284, 15 L. ed. 102; United States v. Edmunds, 5 Wall. 563, 18 L. ed. 692; Gaines v. Thompson, 7 Wall. 347, 19 L. ed. 62; Cox v. McGarrahan, 9 Wall. 298, 19 L. ed. 579; United States v. Schurz, 102 U. S. 378, 26 L. ed. 167; Butterworth v. United States, 112 U. S. 50, 28 L. ed. 656, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 25; United States ex rel. Dunlap v. Black, 128 U. S. 40, 32 L. ed. 354, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 12.

This suit is not brought against the defendants because they are officers and agents, but by reason of their acts as individuals. And the court is not ousted of its jurisdiction because they assert authority as such officers and agents. To make out their defense they must show that their authority is sufficient in law to protect them.

Mitchell v. Harmony, 13 How. 115, 14 L. ed. 75; Bates v. Clark, 95 U. S. 204, 24 L. ed. 471; Meigs v. M'Clung, 9 Cranch, 11, 3 L. ed. 639; United States v. Lee, 106 U. S. 210, 27 L. ed. 178, 1 Sup. Ct. Rep. 240; Wilcox v. Jackson ex dem. M'Connel, 13 Pet. 498, 10 L. ed. 264; Brown v. Huger, 21 How. 305, 16 L. ed. 125; Grisar v. Mc- Dowell, 6 Wall. 363, 18 L. ed. 863; Noble v. Union River Logging Co. 147 U. S. 165, 37 L. ed. 123, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 271; Beach, Inj. §§ 1373-4-9; Belknap v. Schild, 161 U. S. 10, 40 L. ed. 599, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 443; Stanley v. Schualby, 147 U. S. 508, 37 L. ed. 259, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 418; Cunningham v. Macon & B. R. Co. 109 U. S. 452, 27 L. ed. 994, 3 Sup. Ct. Rep. 292, 609; Virginia Coupon Cases, 114 U. S. 287, sub nom. Poindexter v. Greenhow, 29 L. ed. 192, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 903, 962.

This is a case which calls for the equitable interference of this court.

English v. Foxall, 2 Pet. 595, 7 L. ed. 531; Taylor v. Merchants' F. Ins. Co. 9 How. 390, 13 L. ed. 187; Texas v. Hardenberg, 10 Wall. 68, 19 L. ed. 839; Jones v. Van Doren, 130 U. S. 684, 32 L. ed. 1077, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 685; Landis v. Olds, 9 Minn. 90, Gil. 79; Gerdtsen v. Cockrell, 52 Minn. 509, 55 N. W. 58; Huyek v. Graham, 82 Mich. 353, 46 N. W. 781; Story, Eq. Pl. 42; 1 Garland & R. Federal Practice, 266.

Equity has jurisdiction to prevent a cloud from being cast on plaintiff's title by restraining the consummation of proceedings which would result in creating a cloud.

17 Enc. of Pl. & Prac. 288; Conkey v. Dike, 17 Minn. 457, Gil. 434; Huntington v. Central P. R. Co. 2 Sawy. 503, Fed. Cas. No. 6,911; Sneathen v. Sneathen, 104 Mo. 201, 16 S. W. 497; Chapman v. Brewer, 114 U. S. 158, 29 L. ed. 83, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 799; Lyon v. Alley, 130 U. S. 177, 32 L. ed. 899, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 480; Redmond v. Packenham, 66 Ill. 434; Frederick v. Ewrig, 82 Ill. 363; Rawson v. Fox, 65 Ill. 200; Morris Canal & Bkg. Co. v. Jersey City, 12 N. J. Eq. 227; King v. Townshend, 141 N. Y. 358, 36 N. E. 513.

Equity will always interfere to prevent clouds from being cast upon a title, and will interfere to restrain a defendant from proceeding in an illegal act which, if completed, will necessarily cast a cloud upon that title and naturally diminish its value.

De Witt v. Van Schoyk, 110 N. Y. 7, 17 N. E. 425; Conrad v. Smith, 32 Mich. 429.

Where there is no complete and adequate remedy at law, equity will assume jurisdiction of a bill to quiet title or prevent a cloud.

Lyon v. Alley, 130 U. S. 177, 32 L. ed. 899, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 480; Chapman v. Brewer, 114 U. S. 158, 29 L. ed. 83, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 799; Phelps v. Harris, 101 U. S. 370, 25 L. ed. 855.

Mr. S. D. Luckett also filed a brief for appellees:

The mere fact that an executive officer must to some extent construe the law and exercise judgment before proceeding to do a ministerial act does not prevent parties who may be injured by his proposed action from resorting to a court of equity to have such action enjoined, if in fact it is without warrant of law.

Roberts v. United States, 176 U. S. 221, 44 L. ed. 443, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 396; American School of Magnetic Healing v. Mc-

Annulty, 187 U. S. 94, ante, 90, 23 Sup. Ct. Rep. 33.

Mr. Chief Justice Fuller delivered the opinion of the court:

The bill prayed for injunction and the establishment of the boundaries of complainants' lands. The decree granted a perpetual injunction, and, describing the fractional lots, adjudged that they "extend to and are bounded by and upon the actual waters of Cedar Island lake." The deflection of the lines required by the decree is indicated on the diagram.

Sections 2395, 2396, and 2397 of the Revised Statutes (U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, pp. 1471, 1473), specify the manner of making surveys of public lands, and prescribe the rules by which the form and boundaries of the tracts are determined. In this case no survey was in fact made, no meander line was in fact run, and no body of water in fact *existed near the false meander line in-[53] dicated. The line purporting to delimit the lake was from one mile to a quarter of a mile from the lake, and ran over high agricultural land, covered with ancient trees, which could not have grown in water. The theory of the decree is that the government is estopped by the pretended survey and plat to deny that these lots were bounded by the lake.

The Land Department must necessarily consider and determine what are public lands, what lands have been surveyed, what are to be surveyed, what have been disposed of, what remain to be disposed of, and what are reserved. The Department has held that the land lying between the alleged meander line and the lake, some 1,200 acres, is government land, and has ordered it to be surveyed. Re Burns, 20 Land Dec. 28, 295, 23 Land Dec. 430. The execution of that order was restrained by the preliminary injunction herein, and that has been made perpetual by the decree.

We are confronted on the threshold with two objections to the maintenance of this bill; namely, the want of jurisdiction in equity, and the want of jurisdiction thus to interfere with executive administration.

Equity jurisdiction was invoked on the ground of lack of adequate remedy at law, in that irreparable injury in the destruction of timber and exposure to fire by the survey, and multiplicity of suits, were threatened.

In our opinion complainants failed to make out a case of liability to irreparable injury. The township was resurveyed by a county surveyor in 1893; defendant Croswell has made surveys in the township, locating the actual meanders of the lake; and he testified that this survey could be made by him "without any material injury to the soil or timber;" and that he would not "have to cut very much valuable timber." If complainants, as owners of the 859.38 acres contained in their fractional lots, became, through that ownership, owners of the 1,202 acres lying between those lots and the lake, the proposed survey would be but a fugitive and temporary trespass, lacking the elements of irreparable mischief, and of such long continuance as to become a nuisance.

[54] *And bills of peace will not lie where the legal remedy is otherwise adequate, and where the persons directly interested are not made parties, are not numerous, and assert separate and independent rights. Hale v. Allison, 188 U. S. 56, ante, 380, 23 Sup. Ct. Rep. 244; Cruikshank v. Bidwell, 176 U. S. 73, 44 L. ed. 377, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 280.

But, in the next place, was the circuit court justified in thus arresting the action of the Land Department in proceeding with a survey under the circumstances? In other words, Can the Land Department be stayed in the discharge of a duty, not ministerial, but involving the exercise of judgment and discretion, on the ground that its jurisdiction has been lost by estoppel? We do not think so, and hold that complainants' contention that they are entitled to bound upon the lake involves a legal right, which cannot be properly passed on until after the Department has acted.

Having participated in the proceedings before the Department, complainants, after survey was ordered, obtained this injunction against further administrative action, on the ground of absolute want of power, and not of error in its exercise.

The administration of the public lands is vested in the Land Department, and its power in that regard cannot be divested by the fraudulent action of a subordinate officer, outside of his authority, and in violation of the statute. Whiteside v. United States, '93 U. S. 247, 23 L. ed. 882; Moffat v. United States, 112 U. S. 24, 28 L. ed. 623, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 10; Hume v. United States, 132 U. S. 406, 414, 33 L. ed. 393, 396, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 134. The courts can neither correct nor make surveys. The power to do so is reposed in the political department of the government, and the Land Department, charged with the duty of surveying the public domain, must primarily determine what are public lands subject to survey and disposal under the public land laws. Possessed of the power, in general, its exercise of jurisdiction cannot be questioned by the courts before it has taken final action. Brown v. Hitchcock, 173 U. S. 473, 43 L. ed. 772, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 485.

In Litchfield v. The Register & Receiver, 9 Wall. 575, sub nom. Litchfield v. Richards, 19 L. ed. 681, Litchfield sought an injunction to restrain the register and receiver of the United States land office at Fort Dodge, Iowa, from entertaining and acting upon applications made to them to prove pre-emptions to certain lands which lay [55] within the *land district for which they were respectively register and receiver. The bill averred that complainant was the legal owner of the lands; that they were not public lands, and were in no manner subject to sale or pre-emption by the government or its officers. The bill was dismissed for want of jurisdiction in equity, and this 189 U. S.

court affirmed the decree. Mr. Justice Miller said: "The principle has been so repeatedly decided in this court, that the judiciary cannot interfere, either by mandamus or injunction, with executive officers such as the respondents here, in the discharge of their official duties, unless those duties are of a character purely ministerial, and involving no exercise of judgment or discretion, that it would seem to be useless to repeat it here." Gaines v. Thompson, 7 Wall. 347, 19 L. ed. 62; The Secretary v. McGarrahan, 9 Wall. 298, sub nom. Cox v. United States ex rel. McGarrahan, 19 L. ed. 579.

It was held that the fact that complainant asserted himself to be the owner of the tract of land, which the officers were treating as public lands did not take the case out of that rule, where it was the duty of these officers to determine, upon all the facts before them, whether the land was open to pre-emption or sale; and, further, that if the court could entertain jurisdiction, the persons asserting the right of pre-emption would be necessary parties to the suit.

Mr. Justice Miller further said: "After the land officers shall have disposed of the question, if any legal right of plaintiff has been invaded, he may seek redress in the courts. He insists that he now has the legal title. If the Land Department finally decides in his favor, he is not injured. If they give patents to the applicants for pre-emption, the courts can then, in an appropriate proceeding, determine who has the better title or right."

And: "It appears on its face, that the register and receiver have no real interest in the matter, but that persons not named are asserting before them the legal right to pre-empt these lands. These persons are the real parties whose interests are to be affected, and whose claim of right is adverse to plaintiff. If the court should hear the case, and enjoin perpetually the register and receiver from entertaining their applications, they have no further remedy. That is the initial point of establishing *their right, and in this mode a valuable [56] and recognized right may be wholly defeated and destroyed, without the possibility of a hearing on the part of the party interested. This is not a case in which the land officers represent these claimants. They have no such duty to perform."

The case has been frequently cited, and in, among others, Carriek v. Lamar, 116 U. S. 423, sub nom. United States ex rel. Carriek v. Lamar, 29 L. ed. 677, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 424,—an application to the supreme court of the District of Columbia for a mandamus to the Secretary of the Interior to order the survey of an island in the Mississippi river, opposite the city of St. Louis, by an alleged settler thereon, who averred that he had applied to the Department for a survey of the island, so that it might be brought into the market, and that, on the hearing of the application, the city contended that the island had been surveyed and set apart to it, under certain acts of Congress, which he denied, because, as he insisted, the island surveyed was then located above this island. The court refused to grant the writ, and its judgment was affirmed, this court holding that the question how far the title of the city to the island was affected by its being carried down river by the action of the current required consideration and judgment on the part of the Secretary.

Noble v. Union River Logging R. Co. 147 U. S. 165, 37 L. ed. 123, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 271, is not to the contrary, for that was a case where the executive department had confessedly finally acted, and then attempted to resume jurisdiction, and an injunction was sustained. But the government raised no point as to the form of the remedy; deprivation of a vested legal right of property, acquired before any suggestion that it could be taken away, was threatened; and it appeared that the only remedy was through equity interposition. Cruikshank v. Bidwell, 176 U. S. 73, 80, 44 L. ed. 377, 380, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 280. In this case, whether the lands lying between the alleged meander line and the lake were public lands or not was for the Land Department to determine in the first instance; and, if error was committed, this is not the way to correct it.

In our judgment the circuit court should not have taken jurisdiction, and therefore the—

Decree of the Circuit Court of Appeals is reversed; the decree of the Circuit Court is also reversed, and the cause remanded to that court, with a direction to dismiss the bill.

[57]*JOHN A. BRILL and J. G. Brill Company, Petitioners,

v.

PECKHAM MOTOR TRUCK & WHEEL
COMPANY et al.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 57-64.)

Appeal—dismissal of bill on appeal from preliminary injunction.

The circuit court of appeals in reversing an order of a circuit court granting upon ex parte affidavits a preliminary injunction in a suit for the infringement of a patent should not dismiss the bill, where complainants apparently had no opportunity, previous to the hearing in the lower court, to inspect the affidavits filed by defendants, and was granted no leave to rebut them.

[No. 181.]

Argued March 2, 3, 1903. Decided April 6, 1903.

NOTE.—As to the effect, in the circuit court of appeals, of previous adjudications as to the validity and construction of patents—see notes to National Cash Register Co. v. American Cash Register Co. 3 C. C. A. 565; Thompson-Houston Electric Co. v. Hoosick R. Co. 27 C. C. A. 427; and United States Freehold Land & Emigration Co. v. Gallegos, 32 C. C. A. 484.

ON WRIT of Certiorari to the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit to review a decree which reversed an order of the Circuit Court for the Southern District of New York granting a preliminary injunction in a suit for the infringement of a patent, and remanded the cause to that court, with instructions to dismiss the bill. Reversed, and remanded to the Circuit Court for final hearing.

See same case below, 47 C. C. A. 315, 108 Fed. 267, 49 C. C. A. 87, 110 Fed. 377.

Statement by Mr. Chief Justice Fuller:

This was a bill in equity filed in the circuit court of the United States for the southern district of New York by John A. Brill and the J. G. Brill Company against the Peckham Motor Truck & Wheel Company and others, praying for injunction and accounting for infringement of letters patent No. 478,218, for an improvement in car trucks, issued July 5, 1892.

The J. G. Brill Company was a manufacturer of street cars and trucks at Philadelphia, and the Peckham Motor Truck & Wheel Company was a manufacturer of trucks at Kingston, New York.

The bill was filed October 15, 1900, and a motion for preliminary injunction on behalf of complainants on claims 1 and 2 of the patent in suit was heard by Judge Lacombe on October 26, 1900, on affidavits previously served by complainants, including the record of an adjudication in the circuit court in the case of Brill v. Third Ave. R. Co. in which the opinion of Judge Shipman was filed July 9, 1900. 103 Fed. 289.

Defendants filed affidavits at the hearing, which had been sworn to October 25 and 26, and which complainants had apparently had no opportunity to inspect before the argument. These affidavits set up two patents (Manier, of August 27, 1889, *No. 409,993[58] and Peckham, of January 21, 1890, No. 419,876), which had also been before Judge Shipman in the prior case, and defendants contended, in view of these two patents, that the two claims in controversy must be limited in their scope, and that there had been no infringement of the claims as thus limited. Judge Lacombe held that, as there was no prior patent before him which had not been before Judge Shipman, and as the combination, which Judge Shipman described as the gist of the invention, was undoubtedly in defendants' structures, complainants were entitled to a restraining order under "well-settled rules of practice." 105 Fed. 626. The preliminary injunction was therefore granted. From this interlocutory order defendants took an appeal to the circuit court of appeals for the second circuit, and on a hearing there the order granting the preliminary injunction was reversed, and the cause remanded to the circuit court with instructions to dismiss the bill with costs. 47 C. C. A. 315, 108 Fed. 267. A petition was filed for a rehearing, and denied. 49 C. C. A. 87, 110 Fed. 377. This writ of certiorari was then granted. 183 U. S. 698, 46 L. ed. 395, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 946.

Messrs. Francis Rawle and Frederick P. Fish argued the cause, and, with Mr. Joseph L. Levy, filed a brief for petitioners:

The rule in the Mast-Foos Case will not be applied unless it appears that the entire merits are before the court of appeals, that the complainant has fully proved all the facts which are relevant in support of the bill of complaint, and that no fact alleged on behalf of the defendant is disputed.

Mast, F. & Co. v. Stover Mfg. Co. 177 U. S. 485, 44 L. ed. 856, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 708; Gardt v. Brown, 113 Ill. 475, 55 Am. Rep. 434; Green v. Mills, 30 L. R. A. 90, 16 C. C. A. 516, 25 U. S. App. 383, 69 Fed. 852; Knoxville v. Africa, 23 C. C. A. 252, 47 U. S. App. 74, 246, 77 Fed. 501; Electric Vehicle Co. v. Winton Motor-Carriage Co. 104 Fed. 814.

"Sufficient weight" was not given to the rule of comity by the court below.

Mast, F. & Co. v. Stover Mfg. Co. 177 U. S. 485, 44 L. ed. 856, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 708; Consolidated Fastener Co. v. Hays, 41 C. C. A. 142, 100 Fed. 984; Electric Mfg. Co. v. Edison Electric Light Co. 10 C. C. A. 106, 18 U. S. App. 637, 61 Fed. 834.

On appeal from an order granting a preliminary injunction, the circuit court of appeals will consider only whether the lower court exercised a reasonable discretion in granting an injunction.

Locut Filter Co. v. German-American Filter Co. 47 C. C. A. 94, 107 Fed. 949; Bissell Carpet-Sweeper Co. v. Goshen Sweeper Co. 19 C. C. A. 25, 43 U. S. App. 47, 72 Fed. 545; Stearns-Roger Mfg. Co. v. Brown, 52 C. C. A. 559, 114 Fed. 939; Southern P. Co. v. Earl, 27 C. C. A. 185, 48 U. S. App. 716, 82 Fed. 690.

The prior adjudication, not being the subject of the appeal, is entitled to the same weight in the circuit court of appeals which it should have had in the circuit court.

Consolidated Fastener Co. v. Littauer, 28 C. C. A. 133, 51 U. S. App. 653, 84 Fed. 164; Duplex Printing-Press Co. v. Campbell Printing Press & Mfg. Co. 13 C. C. A. 220, 37 U. S. App. 250, 69 Fed. 250; American Paper Pail & Box Co. v. National Folding Box & Paper Co. 2 C. C. A. 165, 1 U. S. App. 283, 51 Fed. 229; Heaton-Peninsular Button-Fastener Co. v. Elliott Button-Fastener Co. 58 Fed. 220.

Messrs. William A. Megrath and Charles H. Duell argued the cause and filed a brief for respondents:

The circuit court of appeals was justified in dismissing the bill of complaint.

Mast, F. & Co. v. Stover Mfg. Co. 177 U. S. 485, 44 L. ed. 856, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 708.

Mr. Henry P. Wells filed a brief in opposition to the petition for certiorari.

Mr. Chief Justice Fuller delivered the opinion of the court:

The circuit court for the southern district of New York, Shipman, J., presiding, in July, 1900, entered a decree in the case of Brill v. Third Ave. R. Co., adjudging the letters patent to George M. Brill of July 5, 1892, No. 478,218, for improvements in car trucks, as to claims 1, 2, 9, 10, 11, 12, 14, 189 U. S.

and 27 thereof, to be good and valid, and that defendant, as the purchaser of 181 trucks of the Bemis Car Box Company, had infringed the exclusive rights of complainant thereunder; and for injunction, accounting, and *recovery of damages. And a final[59] decree was entered in the cause October 1, 1900. This bill was filed October 15, 1900, in the same court, against another truck building company, and a motion for preliminary injunction was heard in that court before Lacombe, J., and sustained on the strength of the previous adjudication. The patent related to the construction of non-pivotal electric street railway trucks, and the invention was intended to remedy oscillation.

Judge Lacombe, in ordering the preliminary injunction, said:

"The only question presented is whether defendant's structure infringes. That involves the construction of the claims declared on, and, for the purposes of this motion, the construction already adopted by this court on final hearing in the Third Ave. Case, 103 Fed. 289, should be followed; for there is no prior patent, no prior use, proved here, which was not before Judge Shipman. It is true that in that case the defendant's device was a much closer copy than the one now under consideration, containing, as it did, the feature that the spiral springs came first into play, and the further feature of depending caps, in which the leaves of the elliptical springs play vertically. But the court most carefully indicates that the leading feature of the invention lies outside of these details; that the 'gist of the invention consists in combining with the frames of the truck and the spiral springs other springs, viz., elliptical springs, between the car body and the extensions of the independent frame,' the object being to break the rhythm of the springs, and thus do away with the galloping or rocking motion. The defendant here insists that there is no rhythm broken, indeed, that there is no rhythm to break,—and that the combination of the quotation does not do away with the galloping motion. On those points, however, this court should follow the earlier decision. There are additional rods, and also spirals, below the frame, which apparently in defendant's structure do their share in eliminating galloping; but the combination which Judge Shipman described as the gist of the invention is undoubtedly in defendant's structure, and, under well-settled rules of practice, complainant is entitled to a restraining order until final hearing."

*The rule of practice for one member of[60] a court to regard the prior decision of another, in cases of this kind, as to be followed until otherwise authoritatively adjudicated, seems to be justified in the orderly conduct of proceedings, and the circuit court of appeals did not hold that the circuit court had improvidently exercised its discretion in granting the preliminary injunction in accordance with its own prior decision and decree, which decree was not the subject of the appeal. But the court proceeded to dispose of the case upon its merits as one in which it was apparent complainant could not ultimately prevail, and relied on Mast, F. & Co. v. Stover Mfg. Co. 177 U. S. 485, 44 L. ed. 856, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 708, as authorizing the pursuit of that course.

It was contended there that the circuit court of appeals for the seventh circuit erred in refusing to follow the opinion of the circuit court of appeals for the eighth circuit in respect of the validity and scope of a patent, and in reversing the order of the circuit court, which, on the ground of comity, had done so, and we held that the obligation was not imperative, but that the circuit court of appeals for the seventh circuit was at liberty to exercise its own judgment.

In doing so the court of appeals directed the dismissal of the bill, before answer filed or proofs taken, on an appeal from an order granting a temporary injunction, and its action in that regard was a principal question discussed in this court.

It should be observed that in that case complainant was served with defendant's affidavits before the argument below, and was permitted to put in rebuttal affidavits. The merits of the case were fully before the court, and the patent in suit related to the use in a windmill of an old and simple mechanical device for the purpose of converting a rotary into a reciprocating motion. It was held that the case fell within the rule sometimes applied where there is no dispute upon the facts, and there appears to be no reasonable possibility that complainant may succeed. But this court took care to define the class of cases in which that might be done, and, speaking through Mr. Justice Brown, said:

"Does this doctrine apply to a case where a temporary injunction is granted pendente lite upon affidavits and immediately *upon the filing of a bill? We are of opinion that this must be determined from the circumstances of the particular case. If the showing made by the plaintiff be incomplete; if the order for the injunction be reversed, because injunction was not the proper remedy, or because, under the particular circumstances of the case, it should not have been granted; or if other relief be possible, notwithstanding the injunction be refused,—then, clearly, the case should be remanded for a full hearing upon pleadings and proofs. But if the bill be obviously devoid of equity upon its face, and such invalidity be incapable of remedy by amendment; or if the patent manifestly fail to disclose a patentable novelty in the invention,—we know of no reason why, to save a protracted litigation, the court may not order the bill to be dismissed. Ordinarily, if the case involve a question of fact, as of anticipation or infringement, we think the parties are entitled to put in their evidence in the manner prescribed by the rules of this court for taking testimony in equity causes. But if there be nothing in the affidavits tending to throw a doubt upon the existence or date of the anticipating devices, and giving them their proper effect, they establish the invalidity of the patent; or, if no question be made regarding the identity of the alleged infringing device, and it appear clear that such device is not an infringement, and no suggestion be made of further proofs upon the subject,—we think the court should not only overrule the order for the injunction, but dismiss the bill."

In the present case the notice of the motion for preliminary injunction was returnable October 19, and due service of complainant's affidavits was made; the hearing was adjourned to October 26 on defendants' application; and on that day defendants' affidavits were presented and the hearing proceeded, complainants not having been afforded previous opportunity to inspect these affidavits, and not being granted leave to rebut them.

The record does not show that leave was asked, but, if so, it would naturally be denied because, in the opinion of the circuit court, its previous decision necessarily required the granting of the preliminary injunction. In any view, the effect was that complainants, although they were prepared to go on with the *motion they had made, [62] were subjected on appeal to the same consequences as if the preliminary hearing had been a final one.

Complainants, if the case had been retained for final hearing, could have cross-examined defendants' ex parte witnesses as to the actual construction of defendants' various trucks containing the combination of spiral and elliptical springs of the patent in suit; the actual operation of defendants' devices; whether defendants' devices in fact infringed claims 1 and 2 of complainants' patent if limited; or claims 9, 10, 11, and 14 thereof; or whether the devices of the Peckham patent, No. 419,876, were in fact incapable of practicable use, or were ever in fact used; and could have introduced evidence on these subjects, as, also, on the question whether complainants' invention antedated the Peckham and Manier patents; to establish the utility and value and adoption and use of the combination of claims 1 and 2; and that defendants' trucks were not "radically different, both in construction and mode of operation, from that of the patent in suit," as alleged by defendants' counsel to have been shown by the experiments set up in defendants' affidavits.

Those experiments were performed by respondents and their experts between the filing of the bill and the hearing of the motion, some eleven days, and counsel say that "these experiments would seem to demonstrate conclusively that Peckham's elliptic springs do not perform the function claimed for the elliptic springs in the patent in suit. Indeed, as far as galloping goes, their introduction into the Peckham truck is demonstrated to be a positive disadvantage; and the only beneficial function they can perform,—the only reason for their continued use all these years,—is that stated by the respondents, i. e., to prevent the lateral swaying of the car body."

This is said in support of the contention, on which counsel lay great stress in this court, that respondents lessen oscillation by the use of an underlying tension spring, and use elliptical springs merely for bracing the car body.

[63] Counsel also say "that all of these matters in reference to the functions of the springs, and whether they operated according *to the theories of the petitioners or the belief of the respondents; and, incidentally, whether respondents' trucks did really embody the alleged invention of the patent in suit,—were susceptible of absolute, practical demonstration."

Clearly, complainants were entitled to test these experiments by cross-examination, and to introduce evidence on their part as to the operation of the springs.

If Judge Shipman's definition of claims 1 and 2 was correct, no question of infringement would arise, but the court of appeals held that his interpretation was incorrect, and on reference to Manier, No. 409,993, and Peckham, No. 419,876, that the claims, as they read and as Judge Shipman construed them, must be limited. Yet it is admitted by counsel that the date of the conception of the invention of the patent in suit was prior to the dates of both the patents of Manier and Peckham; but it is argued that the inventor was not sufficiently diligent in reducing his invention to practice. If the matter of delay were of importance, as assumed, it was open to the inventor to explain the reason of the delay, if any, and complainants were entitled to make proof of such explanation.

Again, in respect of "the actual operation of defendants' devices as compared with the devices of the patents in suit," and "the question whether defendants' devices do, in fact, infringe claims 1 and 2, if said claims are to be limited as held by the court below," respondents' counsel contend that this issue was tendered by respondents and decided by the circuit court of appeals, and that the case ought not to be "reopened" to permit petitioners to introduce additional proofs. The difficulty is, however, that the issue was only tendered on the preliminary application, and the hearing was not in itself a final hearing. If complainants in every case must understand that a motion for preliminary injunction requires the same showing as on final hearing, very few motions of that sort would be made.

We think the case comes within the exceptions pointed out in the Mast, Foos, & Company decision, and are impressed with the conviction that complainants have not had their day in court, and that it ought to [64] be accorded them. At *the same time we do not wish to go into the case so far as to indicate any opinion as to the proper construction of claims 1 and 2 or on the question of infringement. There should be a hearing below after the case is made ripe for it, unaffected by any intimations from us.

The situation, then, is this: The order for a preliminary injunction was reversed 189 U. S.

as part of the decree directing the dismissal of the bill, and not independently of the grounds on which that conclusion rested. But the court of appeals had the power to vacate the preliminary injunction, and had only this been done, an appeal to this court could not have been taken, nor would a certiorari ordinarily have been granted in such circumstances.

Considering the peculiar attitude in which the case is presented, we prefer not to discuss the question how far the appellate courts are justified in reversing orders of the circuit courts granting preliminary injunctions, when their discretion has not been improperly exercised, and the order will be—

Decree of the Circuit Court of Appeals reversed, and cause remanded to the Circuit Court with a direction to proceed to final hearing in due course; the latter court being left at liberty to deal with the preliminary injunction as it otherwise might but for this decree.

STATE OF TENNESSEE on the Relation of G. L. MALONEY et al., Plffs. in Err.,
v.

STEPHEN P. CONDON, T. T. McMillan,
James Rich, and H. C. Anderson.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 64-71.)

Error to state court—academic case.

A writ of error to review the judgment of a state court in an action for usurpation of public office, instituted under Shannon's (Tenn.) Code 1896, §§ 5165 et seq., on the relation of persons superseded therein by a legislative act challenged as unconstitutional, will be dismissed where the terms of office of all the parties to the suit, both relators and defendants, have expired.

[No. 209.]

Argued March 12, 13, 1903. Decided April 6, 1903.

IN ERROR to the Supreme Court of the State of Tennessee to review a judgment which affirmed decrees of the chancellor and the Court of Chancery Appeals dismissing a bill in an action for usurpation of office. Dismissed.

See same case below, 108 Tenn. 82, 65 S. W. 871.

Statement by Mr. Chief Justice Fuller:

*This was a bill filed in the chancery court [65] of Knox county, Tennessee, under the statute in that behalf, in the name of the state, "on the information of" T. A. Rambo and G. L. Maloney, G. H. Strong, S. L. England, Sam Vance, J. F. C. Harrell, and R. L. Peters against Stephen P. Condon, T. T. McMil-

NOTE.—On writs of error from United States Supreme Court to state courts—see notes to Hamblin v. Western Land Co. 37 L. ed. U. S. 267; Kipley v. Illinois, 42 L. ed. U. S. 998; and Re Buchanan, 39 L. ed. U. S. 884.

lan, and James Rich, and H. C. Anderson, representing "that at the January Term, 1898, G. H. Strong and T. A. Rambo were duly and legally elected by the county court of Knox county, Tennessee, members of the pike commission of Knox county for the term of four years, which would make their terms of office expire in January, 1902, and G. L. Maloney, who is the judge of Knox county, Tennessee, is by operation of the law, ex officio chairman of said commission. The said Sam Vance and J. F. C. Harrell were duly elected members of the said workhouse commission by the said county court of Knox county, Tennessee, at its January Term, 1901, which would make their terms of office expire in 1903. The said S. L. England and I. N. White were duly elected workhouse commissioners of Knox county, Tennessee, at its January Term, 1900, which would make their terms of office expire in 1902, and the said G. L. Maloney as judge of the county is ex officio chairman of the said commission. The said R. L. Peters was elected superintendent of the workhouse in January, 1898, which would make his term of office expire in January, 1902. All of said officers were duly and legally elected, and inducted into their respective offices, and assumed the duties thereof, and up to the time of the qualification of defendants, to wit, on March 2, 1901, continued to perform the duties and exercise the functions and receive the emoluments pertaining to said offices."

The bill then averred that, on February 8, 1901, an act of the general assembly of the state of Tennessee was approved by the governor, and went into effect, entitled: "An Act to Create a Board of Public Road Commissioners, to Regulate the Laying Out and Working of Public Roads in this State, in Counties Having a Population of Not Less than 70,000 and Not More than 90,000, under the Federal Census of the Year 1900, or any Subsequent Federal Census, and to [66] Provide a Method for the Management *and Control of County Workhouses in Counties Coming under the Provisions of this Act."

That, in pursuance of the act, the governor of Tennessee, on February 16, 1901, appointed Stephen P. Condon, James Rich, and T. T. McMillan as the board of public road commissioners; that Condon was appointed superintendent of public roads, and the other two associate members of the road commission; that the governor had issued to defendants commissions as such public road commissioners; and that they gave bond and qualified March 2, 1901, "and are now attempting to perform the duties of the said offices."

That defendants had in fact ousted the pike commissioners, the workhouse commissioners, and superintendent from their respective positions, and deprived them of their privileges and powers; and that H. C. Anderson had been elected by defendants manager of the workhouse.

Complainants further represented that the act of February 8, 1901, was in plain violation of the Constitution of the state of Tennessee; illegal, null, and void; and "not effective to deprive the said parties of the several offices aforesaid, to which they were regularly elected, or of the rights, powers, privileges, and emoluments thereof," and that defendants "are unlawfully holding and exercising said offices of public road commissioners and superintendent of roads and associate members, and that they are usurpers of said offices."

The prayer was (1) for process; (2) "that the said defendants may be enjoined from holding the said offices of public road commissioners, or superintendent of public roads, or associate members of said road commission, or manager of the workhouse, or from exercising any of the powers and rights which the said act of February 8, 1901, attempts to confer upon them, and that they may be enjoined from receiving any of the emoluments appertaining to the said offices under and by virtue of the said unconstitutional and void act, and that upon final hearing said injunction may be made perpetual;" (3) that the defendants be required to execute a bond to indemnify and hold harmless; (4) "that upon final hearing a decree may be rendered declaring that the said act of February 8, 1901, *is uncon-[67]stitutional, null, and void, and that the same confers no right upon the defendants, and that the defendants are not entitled to exercise any of the powers and privileges therein contained, or to enjoy any of the rights and emoluments therein given to them, and that they be required to surrender same and turn over all the powers, property, and privileges thereof to the rightful owners aforesaid;" (5) and for general relief.

On March 21, 1901, an application for injunction was denied, and on March 23d the bill was amended by striking out the third clause of the prayer. Defendants filed a demurrer March 29, 1901, which, on the next day, was sustained and the bill dismissed. The case was then carried to the court of chancery appeals, and it was there contended, on errors assigned, that the act of February 8, 1901, was invalid because in violation of the 14th Amendment to the Constitution of the United States, as well as of the state Constitution. The court of chancery appeals affirmed the judgment of the chancellor, August 29, 1901, and an appeal was prosecuted to the supreme court of the state, where it was again alleged, in the assignment of errors, that the act in question was in violation of the state Constitution and of the 14th Amendment. The supreme court held, on November 15, 1901, that the statute was not in violation of either, and affirmed the decrees of the chancellor and of the court of chancery appeals. 108 Tenn. 82, 65 S. W. 871. Thereupon a writ of error was sued out from this court, and the record was filed and the cause docketed December 10, 1901. No motion was made to advance the case, and it came on for argument and was argued March 12 and 13, 1903.

Mr. G. W. Pickle argued the cause, and, with Mr. J. W. Green and Messrs. Pickle & Turner, filed a brief for plaintiffs in error.

Mr. Joshua W. Caldwell argued the cause, and, with Mr. Charles T. Cates, Jr., filed a brief for defendants in error:

This action is essentially a personal or private one.

State ex rel. Johnson v. Campbell, 8 Lea, 76; Scott v. Johnson, 5 Heisk. 614.

When the relator seeks by information, not only to oust respondent, but also to establish his own right to the office, he must show both his interest in and title to the office.

High, Extr. Legal Rem. 3d Ed. § 360 citing State ex rel. Kempf v. Boal, 46 Mo. 528; Andrews v. State, 69 Miss. 740, 13 So. 853.

Ordinarily it would seem to be a sufficient objection that the case is one in which the court cannot give judgment of ouster, even should the relator succeed.

High, Extr. Legal Rem. 3d Ed. § 644.

The state is not in any real sense a party to a suit of this kind.

Miller v. New York, 12 Wall. 159, 20 L. ed. 259.

This suit must abate.

United States v. Boutwell, 17 Wall. 604, 21 L. ed. 721.

Mr. Chief Justice Fuller delivered the opinion of the court:

[68] "This was a proceeding under provisions of the Code of Tennessee, authorizing a bill in equity to be filed 'whenever any person unlawfully holds or exercises any public office or franchise within this state.' Shannon's (Tenn.) Code 1896, § 5165, cl. 1; § 5167.

By sections 5168 and 5179 it is provided that the suit may be brought "by the attorney general for the district or county, when directed so to do by the general assembly, or by the governor and attorney general of the state concurring" or "on the information of any person, upon such person giving security for the costs," when the attorney general for the district or county may institute the proceeding without direction. State ex rel. Johnson v. Campbell, 8 Lea, 74, 75.

Such was this suit, which was not brought by direction of the general assembly, or of the governor and attorney general of the state, but was instituted at the instance of persons superseded in public office by an act of the general assembly (approved by him) which they charged was unconstitutional. Acts 1901, chap. 8.

The question of constitutionality had been raised in an application for mandatory injunction to compel the county judge to approve the bonds of the persons appointed commissioners under the act, the writ had been awarded and obeyed, and the decree was affirmed and the act sustained by the supreme court at the same time that the decree in this case, subsequently brought, was affirmed. Condon v. Maloney, 108 Tenn. 82, 65 S. W. 871. But the supreme 189 U. S.

court also ruled in the prior case that as the writ had been obeyed it had spent its force, so that, even if they differed with the chancellor as to the use of the particular process,—an objection therein urged,—a reversal of his decree "could not undo what had been done," and to enter it "would be an idle ceremony."

In the circumstances this case assumed the aspect of a civil contest between individuals, and not of a prerogative writ to correct usurpation of office.

Sections 5175, 5176, 5177, and 5180 are as follows:

"5175. Whenever the action is brought against a person for usurping an office, in addition to the other allegations, the *name[69] of the person rightfully entitled to the office, with a statement of his right thereto, may be added, and the trial should, if practicable, determine the right of the contesting parties.

"5176. If judgment is rendered in favor of such claimant, the court may order the defendant to deliver to him, upon his qualifying as required by law, all books and papers belonging to the office in his (defendant's) custody, or under his control, and such claimant may thereupon proceed to exercise the functions of the office.

"5177. Such claimant, in this event, may also, at any time within one year thereafter, bring suit against the defendant, and recover the damages he has sustained by reason of the act of the defendant."

"5180. When a defendant, whether a natural person or a corporation, is adjudged guilty of usurping, unlawfully holding, or exercising any office or franchise, judgment shall be rendered that such defendant be excluded from the office or franchise, and that he pay the costs."

In State ex rel. Curry v. Wright, 5 Heisk. 612, it was held that the bond given in case of appeal in an action for usurpation of office need be only for costs, and the court, after referring to §§ 5176, 5177, and 5180 (by the prior numbers), said:

"These provisions are specific and clear that the matter in contest to be decided is the usurpation of the office or franchise; and the judgment, exclusion from that office or franchise; and the money judgment to be given is for costs, and the damages, if any have accrued, are provided for in another suit to be brought within a year after the judgment.

"The provision, 'that the suit will be conducted as other suits in equity,' only means that it shall be conducted as such a suit to the attainment of the results above indicated, but cannot be held to include an inquiry into the damages sustained."

The present case was argued March 12 and 13, and it appears on the face of the bill that the terms of office of all the relators, except the county judge, expired before that day. And this was true as to him, because we find, by reference to *articles 6 [70] and 7 of the Constitution of Tennessee, and State ex rel. Rambo v. Maloney, 92 Tenn.

62, 20 S. W. 419, that his then term of office as county judge terminated in 1902.

As to the defendants, the bill shows that defendant Anderson was merely a subordinate appointee of his codefendants, and that they had been appointed by the governor commissioners under the act of February 8, 1901. That act provided for the appointment of three commissioners, to "hold their offices until the next general election of county officers, when their successors shall be elected by the people, and every two (2) years thereafter said offices shall be filled by popular election." The next general election of county officers referred to was held, according to § 1154 of the Code, in August, 1902. So that these commissioners were appointed to serve until that date, and their temporary commissions then terminated.

We cannot assume that relators, who were originally elected by the county court, would hold over, and manifestly, the provisional title of defendants has determined. It follows that the relief as prayed cannot now be granted.

There are cases in quo warranto in which judgment of ouster has been entered, although the term of the person lawfully entitled had expired, and also where informations have been retained, when the statute provided for fine or damages; but here the proceeding cannot now be maintained as on behalf of the public; and, considered, as counsel insists it should be, as merely a contest between two sets of officials, and not between the state and its officials, the state courts would be at liberty to treat it as abated, and the mere matter of costs cannot be availed of to sustain jurisdiction. See Boring v. Griffith, 1 Heisk. 457, 461; State v. McConnell, 3 Lea, 332; Williamson County v. Perkins (Tenn. Ch. App.) 39 S. W. 347; State ex rel. Robinson v. Lindsay, 103 Tenn. 635, 53 S. W. 950.

Doubtless, the question of the validity of the act of 1901 is of importance, but it has been upheld by the highest judicial tribunal of the state of Tennessee as consistent with the state Constitution, and it affects only the citizens of that state.

If we were to hold that the act could be subjected to the test of the 14th Amendment, and that it could not stand that *test, we should do nothing more than reverse the decree below and remand the cause, and, as such a judgment would be ineffectual, we must decline to intimate any opinion on the subject.

"The duty of this court, as of every other judicial tribunal, is to decide actual controversies by a judgment which can be carried into effect, and not to give opinions upon moot questions or abstract propositions, or to declare principles or rules of law which cannot affect the matter in issue in the case before it. It necessarily follows that when, pending an appeal from the judgment of a lower court, and without any fault of the defendant, an event occurs which renders it impossible for this court, if it should decide the case in favor of the plaintiff, to grant him any effectual relief whatever, the court will not proceed to a formal judgment, but will dismiss the appeal." Mr. Justice Gray, Mills v. Green, 159 U. S. 651, 653, 40 L. ed. 293, 294, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 133.

We think this writ of error comes within the rule thus declared, and it is therefore dismissed without costs to either party.

UNION & PLANTERS' BANK OF MEMPHIS, Appt.,

v.

CITY OF MEMPHIS and John H. Alsup, Trustee. (No. 67)

UNION & PLANTERS' BANK OF MEMPHIS, Appt.,

v.

CITY OF MEMPHIS. (No. 221)

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 71-76.)

Jurisdiction of circuit court of appeals—effect of state judgment as res judicata—question of local law.

1. A decree of the circuit court of appeals affirming a judgment of a circuit court in a cause in which the latter's jurisdiction depended on the sole ground that the cause of action arose under the Federal Constitution will, on appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States, be reversed for the lack of jurisdiction in the circuit court of appeals to review the circuit court judgment.
2. A judgment of a state court sustaining the exemption claimed by a bank, under its charter, from municipal taxation on its capital stock, which, under the local law of the state, is only res judicata in respect to the identical taxes litigated in the suit, can be accorded no greater efficacy in the Federal courts.

[Nos. 67, 221.]

Submitted March 20, 1903. Decided April 13, 1903.

APPEAL from the Circuit Court of the United States for the Western District of Tennessee to review a judgment denying the claim of a bank to exemption from

NOTE.—On the jurisdiction of the circuit court of appeals—see notes to Lau Ow Bew v. United States, 1 C. C. A. 6; Salmon v. Mills, 13 C. C. A. 374; and United States Freehold Land & Emigration Co. v. Gallegos, 32 C. C. A. 475.

On conclusiveness of judgments generally—see notes to Sharon v. Terry (C. C. N. D. Cal.) 1 L. R. A. 572; Bollong v. Schuyler Nat. Bank (Neb.) 3 L. R. A. 142; Wiese v. San Francisco Musical Fund Soc. (Cal.) 7 L. R. A. 577; Morrill v. Morrill (Or.) 11 L. R. A. 155; Bank of United States v. Beverly, 11 L. ed. U. S. 76; The Johnson Steel Street R. Co. v. Wharton, 38 L. ed. U. S. 429; and Southern P. R. Co. v. United States, 42 L. ed. U. S. 355.

As to conclusiveness and effect of judgments as between Federal and state courts—see notes to Kansas City, Ft. S. & M. R. Co. v. Morgan, 21 C. C. A. 478; and Union & P. Bank v. Memphis, 49 C. C. A. 468.

municipal taxes under its charter. Affirmed.

Also an appeal from the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Sixth Circuit to review a decree which affirmed a decree of the Circuit Court for the Western District of Tennessee denying the claim of a bank to exemption from municipal taxes under its charter. Reversed, with directions to dismiss the appeal from, and writ of error to, the Circuit Court.

See case number 221 below, 49 C. C. A. 455, 111 Fed. 561.

Statement by Mr. Chief Justice Fuller:

The Union & Planters' Bank of Memphis was incorporated under a charter granted by the general assembly of the state of Tennessee in 1858, which contained the following provision: "That said company shall pay an annual tax of  $\frac{1}{2}$  of 1 per cent on each share of stock subscribed, which shall be in lieu of all other taxes." The corporation was located in the city of Memphis, Shelby county, Tennessee, and that city, pursuant to an act of the legislature of Tennessee, assessed an ad valorem tax for the year 1899, for municipal purposes, on the capital stock of the bank. The bank thereupon filed its bill in the circuit court of the United States for the western division of the western district of Tennessee, in which it was alleged that the law under which the assessment was made impaired the obligation of the contract created by the above-quoted clause of the charter. The bill further averred that in a former litigation between the bank and the city, wherein it was sought to enforce a municipal assessment of taxes on the capital stock of the bank for the years 1888, 1889, and 1890, it was adjudged by the supreme court of Tennessee that, by the provision aforesaid, the capital stock of the corporation was exempt from all general taxation. The record and judgment in that suit were set out in full, and pleaded as a final judicial determination of the bank's exemption from the payment of ad valorem taxes on its capital stock; and it was averred that the judgment so pleaded was based on the identical claim of exemption now asserted, and on identically the same facts and conditions under which this assessment was made.

The prayer was that the assessment be canceled, and complainant be declared to be exempt from the payment to the city of ad valorem taxes on its capital stock.

[73] *Defendants demurred, and the demurrer was sustained and the bill dismissed, November 6, 1900, whereupon complainant prayed and perfected an appeal to, and also took a writ of error from, the United States circuit court of appeals for the sixth circuit, and the case was docketed there on or about November 27, 1900.

On February 11, 1901, complainant prayed, and was granted an appeal from the decree of the circuit court directly to this court, the record was filed here, March 23, 1901, and the case is now No. 67.

The case in the circuit court of appeals 189 U. S. U. S., Book 47.

was heard June 10, 1901, and the decree below was affirmed October 21, 1901. 49 C. C. A. 455, 111 Fed. 561. Thereupon complainant, appellant in that court, prosecuted an appeal from its decree to this court, and the case was docketed here January 13, 1902, and is now No. 221.

Both cases were submitted, as one case, on printed briefs.

Mr. William H. Carroll submitted the cause for appellant. Mr. Tim E. Cooper was with him on the brief:

The mere fact that the demand in this case is for a tax for one year, and the demands in the adjudged cases were for taxes for other years, does not prevent the operation of the thing adjudged, if, in the prior cases, the question of exemption was necessarily presented and determined upon identically the same facts upon which the right of exemption is now claimed.

Bank of Kentucky v. Stone, 88 Fed. 383; New Orleans v. Citizens' Bank, 167 U. S. 371, 42 L. ed. 202, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 905.

The Tennessee cases hold that where a given matter becomes the subject of litigation in, and of adjudication by, a court of competent jurisdiction, that that matter is forever concluded between the parties and their privies, where the judgment is final.

Estill v. Taul, 2 Yerg. 467, 24 Am. Dec. 498; Gray v. Faris, 7 Yerg. 161; King v. Vaughn, 8 Yerg. 59, 29 Am. Dec. 104; Hodges v. Bauchman, 8 Yerg. 186; Elrod v. Lancaster, 2 Head, 574, 75 Am. Dec. 749; Warwick v. Underwood, 3 Head, 238, 75 Am. Dec. 767; Brewster v. Galloway, 4 Lea, 567; McClanahan v. Stovall, 6 Lea, 505; Roper v. Rowlett, 7 Lea, 321; Parkes v. Clift, 9 Lea, 524; Peak v. Ligon, 10 Yerg. 469; Westbrook v. Thompson, 104 Tenn. 363, 58 S. W. 223; Sale v. Eichberg, 105 Tenn. 333, 52 L. R. A. 894, 59 S. W. 1020.

Though the form and causes of action be different, a decision by a court of competent jurisdiction in respect to any essential fact or question in the one action is conclusive between the parties in all subsequent actions.

Southern P. R. Co. v. United States, 163 U. S. 5, 42 L. ed. 355, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 18; Forsyth v. Hammond, 166 U. S. 506, 41 L. ed. 1095, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 665.

Mr. Luke E. Wright submitted the cause for appellee. Mr. John H. Watkins was with him on the brief:

The precise point involved herein having been determined by both this court and the state court, there is no longer any Federal or other question as to the taxability of appellant's capital stock as contradistinguished from the shares of stock.

Shelby County v. Union & P. Bank, 161 U. S. 150, 40 L. ed. 652, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 558; Union & P. Bank v. Memphis, 101 Tenn. 168, 46 S. W. 557.

There is such a well-defined and unbroken line of decisions in Tennessee that judgments and decrees in tax cases are limited to the taxes actually involved that, as a local question, that proposition is no longer debatable.

State v. Bank of Commerce, 95 Tenn. 221, 31 S. W. 993; Union & P. Bank v. Memphis, 101 Tenn. 167, 46 S. W. 557; Buchanan v. Springer (Tenn. Ch. App.) 35 S. W. 774.

The local law as to the effect of tax judgments will be followed by this court in cases involving the construction of a state statute or a former state judgment.

Bergman v. Bly, 13 C. C. A. 319, 27 U. S. App. 650, 66 Fed. 43; Lavin v. Emigrant Industrial Sav. Bank, 18 Blatchf. 1, 1 Fed. 650; Shelby v. Guy, 11 Wheat. 367, 6 L. ed. 496; Green v. Neal, 6 Pet. 299, 8 L. ed. 402; Morley v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. 146 U. S. 166, 36 L. ed. 928, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 54; Fidelity Ins. & S. D. Co. v. Shenandoah Iron Co. 42 Fed. 376; Tioga R. Co. v. Blossburg & C. R. Co. 20 Wall. 137, 22 L. ed. 331; Union Nat. Bank v. Bank of Kansas City, 136 U. S. 235, 34 L. ed. 346, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1013; Leighton v. Young, 18 L. R. A. 266, 3 C. C. A. 176, 10 U. S. App. 298, 52 Fed. 439; Sanford v. Poe, 16 C. C. A. 305, 37 U. S. App. 378, 69 Fed. 546; Bauserman v. Blunt, 147 U. S. 647, 37 L. ed. 316, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 466; Thompson v. Searcy County, 6 C. C. A. 674, 12 U. S. App. 618, 57 Fed. 1030; Luther v. Borden, 7 How. 1, 12 L. ed. 581; Lavin v. Emigrant Industrial Sav. Bank, 18 Blatchf. 1, 1 Fed. 641; Christy v. Pridgeon, 4 Wall. 196, 18 L. ed. 322; Leffingwell v. Warren, 2 Black. 603, 17 L. ed. 262; Sioux City Terminal R. & Warehouse Co. v. Trust Co. of N. A. 27 C. C. A. 73, 49 U. S. App. 523, 82 Fed. 124; Hill v. Hite, 29 C. C. A. 549, 56 U. S. App. 403, 85 Fed. 268; Union P. R. Co. v. Reed, 25 C. C. A. 389, 49 U. S. App. 233, 80 Fed. 234; Rice v. Adler-Goldman Commission Co. 18 C. C. A. 15, 36 U. S. App. 266, 71 Fed. 151; Hodgdon v. Burleigh, 4 Fed. 121; Duden v. Maloy, 43 Fed. 407; Sutherland-Innes Co. v. Ewart, 30 C. C. A. 305, 58 U. S. App. 335, 86 Fed. 597.

The rule of decision in Tennessee upon the question of res judicata constitutes a property rule, as well as its decisions upon its statute laws, which rule of decision the Federal courts have repeatedly announced they will follow.

Franklin County Ct. v. Louisville & N. R. Co. 84 Ky. 65; Olcott v. Fond du Lac County, 16 Wall. 678, 21 L. ed. 382.

The present law, as announced by this court and the supreme court of Tennessee, is controlling in this case.

Lavin v. Emigrant Industrial Sav. Bank, 18 Blatchf. 1, 1 Fed. 650; Tomcs v. Barney, 35 Fed. 115; Bank of Kentucky v. Stone, 88 Fed. 397; Bauserman v. Blunt, 147 U. S. 647, 37 L. ed. 316, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 466; Morley v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. 146 U. S. 162, 36 L. ed. 925, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 54; Miller v. Swann, 150 U. S. 132, sub nom. Miller v. Anderson, 37 L. ed. 1028, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 52; Baltimore Traction Co. v. Baltimore Belt R. Co. 151 U. S. 137, 38 L. ed. 102, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 294; Marchant v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 153 U. S. 380, 38 L. ed. 751, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 894; Fallbrook Irrig.

Dist. v. Bradley, 164 U. S. 112, 41 L. ed. 369, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 56; First Nat. Bank v. Chehalis County, 166 U. S. 440, 41 L. ed. 1069, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 629; Wilson v. North Carolina, 169 U. S. 586, 42 L. ed. 865, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 435; Missouri P. R. Co. v. Nebraska, 164 U. S. 403, 41 L. ed. 489, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 130; Merchants' & Mfrs. Nat. Bank v. Pennsylvania, 167 U. S. 461, 42 L. ed. 236, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 829.

Mr. Chief Justice Fuller delivered the opinion of the court:

Diversity of citizenship did not exist, and the jurisdiction of the circuit court rested solely on the ground that the cause of action arose under the Constitution of the United States. The appeal lay directly to this court under § 5 of the judiciary act of March 3, 1891 (26 Stat. at L. 826, chap. 517, U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 547), and not to the circuit court of appeals. American Sugar Ref. Co. v. New Orleans, 181 U. S. 277, 45 L. ed. 859, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 646. Nevertheless, an appeal having been prosecuted to the latter court, and having there gone to decree, an appeal was allowed to this court because the judgment was not made final in that court by § 6 of the act. But the case being here, and the jurisdiction of the circuit court having *depended[74] on the sole ground that it arose under the Constitution, we are constrained to reverse the decree of the circuit court of appeals, not on the merits, but by reason of the want of jurisdiction in that court. If this were not so, the right to two appeals would exist in every similar case, notwithstanding, as we have repeatedly held, that such was not the intention of the act. Robinson v. Caldwell, 165 U. S. 359, 41 L. ed. 745, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 343; Loeb v. Columbia Trp. 179 U. S. 472, 45 L. ed. 280, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 174; American Sugar Ref. Co. v. New Orleans, 181 U. S. 277, 45 L. ed. 859, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 646.

In Pullman's Palace Car Co. v. Central Transp. Co. 171 U. S. 138, 43 L. ed. 108, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 808, an appeal was taken to this court and also to the circuit court of appeals, and a motion was made in each court to dismiss the appeal, whereupon, by reason of the circumstances, we granted a writ of certiorari, and brought up the record from the latter court before it had proceeded to decree. The question as to which was the correct route to reach this court became immaterial, and we disposed of the case on its merits. But in the present case the circuit court of appeals went to decree, and we are obliged to deal with the appeal therefrom, in doing which the jurisdiction of that court necessarily comes under review.

The questions on the merits are, however, presented for disposition on the direct appeal from the circuit court.

In Shelby County v. Union & Planters' Bank (1895) 161 U. S. 149, 40 L. ed. 650, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 558, it was decided that the capital stock of the bank was not exempt from ad valorem taxation by the provision of the charter in question, and was liable to be taxed as the state might determine. Bank of Commerce v. Tennessee use of Memphis, 161 U. S. 134, 40 L. ed. 645, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 456.

But the bank objects that, notwithstanding this court has thus held that the exemption asserted does not exist, it must, nevertheless, be recognized in this case as existing, because it was so determined by the judgment pleaded as res judicata. The judgment thus relied on as a bar to this assessment is reported in Memphis v. Union & Planters' Bank (1892) 91 Tenn. 546, 19 S. W. 758, which involved the assessment of municipal taxes for the years 1887 to 1891 inclusive, on the capital stock of the bank, and a privilege tax for the years 1889, 1890, [75] and 1891. *The supreme court of Tennessee there held, in deference to the supposed scope of the decisions of this court in Farrington v. Tennessee (1877) 95 U. S. 679, 24 L. ed. 558, and in Bank of Commerce v. Tennessee (1881) 104 U. S. 493, 26 L. ed. 810, that the bank was exempted by the charter from being assessed by the state, county, or municipality for any taxes except as specified.

In Union & Planters' Bank v. Memphis (1898) 101 Tenn. 154, 46 S. W. 557, the conclusion announced in Shelby County v. Union & Planters' Bank, 161 U. S. 149, 40 L. ed. 650, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 558, was followed, and it was held to be the settled rule in Tennessee that the plea of res judicata is only applicable to the taxes actually in litigation, and is not conclusive in respect to taxes assessed for other and subsequent years. State v. Bank of Commerce, 95 Tenn. 231, 31 S. W. 993.

As the judgment relied on as res judicata was not so regarded in Shelby County v. Union & Planters' Bank, it could not be properly so regarded in the present case; but, apart from that, it is enough that in Tennessee the doctrine of res judicata is not applicable to taxes for years other than those under consideration in the particular case, inasmuch as what effect a judgment of a state court shall have as res judicata is a question of state or local law, and the taxes involved in this suit are taxes for years other than those involved in the prior adjudication. Phoenix F. & M. Ins. Co. v. Tennessee, 161 U. S. 174, 40 L. ed. 660, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 471.

In New Orleans v. Citizens' Bank, 167 U. S. 371, 42 L. ed. 202, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 905, referred to by appellant's counsel, no claim was made that the judgment relied on would not have been res judicata in the state courts, and attention was particularly called to the fact that the rule in Louisiana was in accord with the conception of res judicata expounded in that case.

As the judgment pleaded had no force or effect in the Tennessee state courts other than as a bar to the identical taxes litigated in the suit, the courts of the United States can accord it no greater efficacy. Cooper v. Newell, 173 U. S. 555, 43 L. ed. 808, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 506; Metcalf v. 189 U. S.

Watertown, 153 U. S. 671, 38 L. ed. 861, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 947; Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Wiggins Ferry Co. 108 U. S. 18, 27 L. ed. 636, 1 Sup. Ct. Rep. 614, 617; Rev. Stat. § 905 (U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 677).

The litigation over the alleged exemption has been protracted, and many decisions have been rendered in this court and in the highest tribunal of Tennessee in respect of it. They are *reviewed by Lurton, J., in the [76] circuit court of appeals, 49 C. C. A. 455, 111 Fed. 561.

Decree of the Circuit Court in No. 67 affirmed.

Decree of the Circuit Court of Appeals in No. 221 reversed, with a direction to dismiss the appeal and writ of error.

MEXICAN CENTRAL RAILWAY COMPANY (Limited), Plff. in Err., v. J. M. DUTHIE.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 76-78.)

Pleading—amendment after verdict and judgment.

An amendment of plaintiff's petition, after verdict and judgment thereon, with no further proceedings taken, by inserting the words, "and is a citizen of said state and of the United States of America," after the allegation therein that "plaintiff resides in El Paso, in El Paso county, state of Texas," may be allowed by a circuit court of the United States, under U. S. Rev. Stat. § 964 (U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 697), giving the trial court the right at any time to permit either of the parties to amend any defect in process or pleadings, upon such conditions as it shall prescribe.

[No. 336.]

Submitted March 23, 1903. Decided April 13, 1903.

IN ERROR to the Circuit Court of the United States for the Western District of Texas wherein is certified the question of that court's jurisdiction to permit an amendment to the petition after verdict and judgment, and to retain the judgment after such amendment. Judgment affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Aldis B. Browne, Alexander Britton, and Eben Richards submitted the cause for plaintiff in error:

The verdict found upon pleadings which are substantially defective is itself defective, and judgment entered thereon is void.

Garland v. Davis, 4 How. 131, 11 L. ed. 907; Barnes v. Williams, 11 Wheat. 415, 6 L. ed. 508.

After the verdict and judgment entered thereon, the trial court should not have allowed plaintiff to amend his pleadings by inserting the necessary jurisdictional averments therein, without first setting aside the verdict and judgment and granting a new trial.

Smith v. Jackson ex dem. Allyn, 1 Paine, 486, Fed. Cas. No. 13,065; Robertson v. Ccase, 97 U. S. 646, 24 L. ed. 1057; Halsted v. Buster, 119 U. S. 341, 30 L. ed. 462, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 276; Chapman v. Barney, 129 U. S. 677, 32 L. ed. 800, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 426; Denny v. Pironi, 141 U. S. 121, 35 L. ed. 657, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 966; Cooper v. Newell, 155 U. S. 532, 39 L. ed. 249, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 355. See also Brown v. Keene, 8 Pet. 112, 8 L. ed. 885; Continental L. Ins. Co. v. Rhoads, 119 U. S. 237, 30 L. ed. 380, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 193; Menard v. Goggan, 121 U. S. 253, 30 L. ed. 914, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 873; Wolfe v. Hartford L. & Annuity Ins. Co. 148 U. S. 389, 37 L. ed. 493, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 602; Horne v. George H. Hammond Co. 155 U. S. 393, 39 L. ed. 197, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 167; Bargh v. Page, 4 McLean, 10, Fed. Cas. No. 980.

By the practice conformity act of June 1, 1872, U. S. Rev. Stat. § 914, the specific provisions of the state statutes in this respect are controlling.

Glenn v. Sumner, 132 U. S. 152, 33 L. ed. 301, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 41; Henderson v. Louisville & N. R. Co. 123 U. S. 61, 31 L. ed. 92, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 60; Phillips & C. Constr. Co. v. Seymour, 91 U. S. 646, 23 L. ed. 341; Atlantic & P. R. Co. v. Laird, 164 U. S. 393, 41 L. ed. 485, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 120; Mack v. Porter, 18 C. C. A. 527, 25 U. S. App. 595, 72 Fed. 236. See also People's Sav. Bank & Trust Co. v. Batchelder Egg Case Co. 2 C. C. A. 126, 4 U. S. App. 603, 51 Fed. 130; Post v. Wise Twp. 101 Fed. 204; Wolf v. Cook, 40 Fed. 432.

Amendments to pleadings under the Texas statute and practice are not allowable after verdict and judgment, except that, after arrest of judgment or new trial granted, the court may allow such amendment as if no trial had been had or judgment reached.

Petty v. Lang, 81 Tex. 238, 16 S. W. 999; Heflin v. Burns, 70 Tex. 347, 8 S. W. 48; Missouri P. R. Co. v. Howe, 4 Tex. App. Civ. Cas. (Willson) § 197, p. 296.

Mr. Leigh Clark submitted the cause for defendant in error:

Judgments are under the control of the court where entered, until the close of the term.

1 Black, Judgm. § 153.

Mere matters of procedure, such as the granting or refusing motions for new trial, and questions respecting amendments to the pleadings, are purely discretionary matters for the consideration of the trial court; and unless there has been gross abuse of that discretion they are not reviewable in this court on writ of error.

Mexican C. R. Co. v. Pinkney, 149 U. S. 201, 37 L. ed. 702, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 859; Chapman v. Barney, 129 U. S. 677, 32 L. ed. 800, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 426; Chirac v. Reinicker, 11 Wheat. 302, 6 L. ed. 479; Murphy v. Stewart, 2 How. 284, 11 L. ed. 269; Spencer v. Lapsley, 20 How. 264, 15 L. ed. 902.

And when such amendment is permitted, the court must, in its discretion, determine whether any submission which had been made ought to be vacated.

Bamberger v. Terry, 103 U. S. 40, 26 L. ed. 317.

Certain amendments will be permitted at any stage of the case, so as to bring in an essential party or to aver citizenship.

Fisher v. Rutherford, Baldw. 188, Fed. Cas. No. 4,823; Hilliard v. Brevoort, 4 McLean, 24, Fed. Cas. No. 6,505.

The trial court did not err in permitting the plaintiff to amend his original and first amended original petitions in said cause, after judgment rendered, at the same term of court.

The Tremole Patent, 23 Wall. 518, sub nom. Tremaine v. Hitchcock, 23 L. ed. 97; Maddox v. Thorn, 8 C. C. A. 574, 23 U. S. App. 189, 60 Fed. 217; Fitchburg R. Co. v. Nichols, 29 C. C. A. 464, 50 U. S. App. 280, 85 Fed. 869.

Where the laws of the state and those of the United States conflict, the laws of the latter govern.

Cooley, Const. L. p. 32; Phelps v. Oaks, 117 U. S. 236, 29 L. ed. 888, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 714; Southern P. Co. v. Denton, 146 U. S. 202, 36 L. ed. 943, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 44; Indianapolis & St. L. R. Co. v. Horst, 93 U. S. 291, 23 L. ed. 898.

Mr. Chief Justice Fuller delivered the opinion of the court:

Duthie brought suit for the recovery of damages for personal injuries in the circuit court of the United States for the western district of Texas against the Mexican Central Railway Company, Limited, and in his original complaint averred that he "resides in El Paso, in El Paso county, state of Texas, *in the western district of said [77] state," and that defendant was a citizen of the state of Massachusetts. The cause was tried before a jury, and resulted in a verdict and judgment thereon April 10, 1902. The record shows "that no further proceedings were had in said cause after the entry of said judgment until, to wit, the 17th day of April, 1902, on which day plaintiff filed his motion asking leave to amend his petition," to the effect "that leave be granted him to now amend his said original and first amended petition by inserting therein the following: 'And is a citizen of said state and of the United States of America,' after the allegation made in said pleading 'that plaintiff resides in El Paso, in El Paso county, state of Texas.'" In support of the motion plaintiff stated under oath "that he is now and was at the date of the filing of his original petition herein, and was on the 22d day of July, 1901, the date of his injuries, a bona fide citizen of the United States of America and of the state of Texas." The court granted leave to so amend, and defendant excepted. Thereupon defendant applied to the court to certify to this court the question of jurisdiction to amend, and to retain the judgment after such amendment, and a certificate was accordingly granted.

If the complaint or petition had remained as it was originally framed, and the case had then been carried to the circuit court of appeals, that court would have been constrained to reverse the judgment and remand the cause for a new trial, with leave to amend. Metcalf v. Watertown, 128 U. S. 586, 32 L. ed. 543, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 173; Horne v. George H. Hammond Co. 155 U. S. 393, 39 L. ed. 197, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 167.

But plaintiff, discovering the defect in the averment before the case had passed from the jurisdiction of the circuit court, applied and obtained leave to amend, and made the amendment. So that the only question is whether the circuit court had power to allow the amendment.

By § 954 of the Revised Statutes (U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 697) it was provided that the trial court might "at any time permit either of the parties to amend any defect in the process or pleadings, upon such conditions as it shall, in its discretion and by its rules, prescribe;" and since the trial court in the present case still had control of the record, it had jurisdiction to act, and [78] we may *add that we do not perceive that there was any abuse of discretion in permitting the amendment in the circumstances disclosed. Mexican C. R. Co. v. Pinkney, 149 U. S. 201, 37 L. ed. 702, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 859; The Tremolo Patent, 23 Wall. 518, sub nom. Tremaine v. Hitchcock, 23 L. ed. 97. If the statutes of Texas forbade such an amendment, the law of the United States must govern. Phelps v. Oaks, 117 U. S. 236, 29 L. ed. 888, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 714; Southern P. Co. v. Denton, 146 U. S. 202, 36 L. ed. 943, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 44.

The suggestion that defendant was cut off from trying the fact as to plaintiff's citizenship is without merit. The record does not disclose that defendant sought to contest plaintiff's affidavit, and for aught that appears the fact may have been conceded.

Judgment affirmed.

HENRY J. JAQUITH, Trustee, Appt.,
v.

G. EDWIN ALDEN.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 78-84.)

Bankruptcy—preferences by payments for goods sold after insolvency.

Payments by the vendees on a running account for goods which were sold and delivered after they had become insolvent, when received by the vendor in the regular course of business and without idea or intention on his part of obtaining a preference thereby, are not, though made within four months before the petition in bankruptcy was filed for such vendees, preferences within the meaning of the bankruptcy act of 1898, § 60 (30 Stat. at L. 562, chap. 541, U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 3445), which must be surrendered, under § 57g, before the vendor's claim for the balance due can be allowed.

[No. 516.]

Submitted January 12, 1903. Decided April 27, 1903.

189 U. S.

APPEAL from the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the First Circuit to review a judgment which affirmed a decree of the District Court for the District of Massachusetts reversing a judgment of a referee who had disallowed a claim in bankruptcy unless certain payments were surrendered as preferences, and allowing the claim. Affirmed.

See same case below, 118 Fed. 270.

Statement by Mr. Chief Justice Fuller:

F. N. Woodward et al. filed their petition in bankruptcy, and were adjudicated bankrupts November 26, 1901. They had become insolvent August 15, and on that day were not indebted to G. Edwin Alden, who afterwards, in ignorance of the insolvency, made sales to Woodward et al., and received payments from them therefor in the regular course of business,*and without any idea or [79] intention on the part of Alden of obtaining a preference thereby, the sales and payments being as follows:

Sales.
Aug. 17, 1901.	Rubber . . . . .	$289 46
28, " "	" . . . . .	657 89
Sept. 30, " "	" . . . . .	644 28
Oct. 18, " "	" . . . . .	535 99
Oct. 18, " "	Cartage . . . . .	50
31, " "	Asbestine . . . . .	10 40
Payments.
Sept. 4, 1901.	Payment of bill
Aug. 17 . . . . .		$289 46
Sept. 28, 1901.	Payment of bill
Aug. 28 . . . . .		657 89
Oct. 29, 1901.	Payment of bill
Sept. 30 . . . . .		644 28

The merchandise sold Woodward et al. was manufactured by them, and the result of the transactions was to increase their estate in value. Alden petitioned to be allowed to prove his claim of $546.89.

The referee disallowed the claim unless at least the amount of $633.88 was surrendered to the estate. The district judge reversed the judgment of the referee and allowed the claim, and the decree of the district court was affirmed by the circuit court of appeals (118 Fed. 270) on the authority of Dickson v. Wyman, 55 L. R. A. 349, 49 C. C. A. 574, 111 Fed. 726. Thereupon an appeal to this court was allowed and a certificate granted under § 25, b, 2.

Mr. Harry J. Jaquith submitted the cause in propria persona for appellant:

The record shows a preference under the bankruptcy act, which the appellee should surrender.

Pirie v. Chicago Title & T. Co. 182 U. S. 438, 45 L. ed. 1171, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 906.

A new credit paid for in full cannot be set off to reduce the preference.

Peterson v. Nash Bros. 55 L. R. A. 344, 50 C. C. A. 260, 112 Fed. 311; Kahn v. Cone Export & Commission Co. 53 C. C. A. 92, 115 Fed. 290; Kimball v. E. A. Rosenham Co. 52 C. C. A. 33, 114 Fed. 85; P. S. Morey Mercantile Co. v. Schiffer, 52 C. C. A. 249, 114 Fed. 447; Gans v. Ellison, 52 C. C. A. 366, 114 Fed. 734; McNair v. McIntyre, 51 C. C. A. 89, 113 Fed. 113.

Mr. Eugene M. Johnson submitted the cause for appellee. Messrs. Arthur T. Johnson and Alonzo R. Weed were with him on the brief:

The object of the bankruptcy act, so far as the creditors are concerned, is to secure equality of distribution among them of the property of the bankrupt; not among some of the creditors, but among all of them; which object could not be secured if there were no provisions against preferences.

Pirie v. Chicago Title & T. Co. 182 U. S. 438, 45 L. ed. 1171, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 906; Wilson v. City Bank, 17 Wall. 473, 21 L. ed. 723; Toof v. Martin, 13 Wall. 40, 20 L. ed. 481.

The plain object and policy of an insolvency law is to require a debtor, as soon as he has reason to believe himself insolvent and before he has frittered away his property, to put himself and his assets at once into the hands of the law, with the view to making an equal distribution of it among his creditors.

Fernald v. Gay, 12 Cush. 596.

From the moment of actual insolvency all creditors become entitled to share pro rata in the estate.

Re Knost, 1 N. B. N. 403.

A preference is an advantage secured by the creditor,—the obtaining by the creditor of more than his share of the estate which the bankrupt had upon the date of the occurrence of insolvency.

Re Hapgood, 2 Low. Dec. 200, Fed. Cas. No. 6,044.

The plain purpose of the provisions for the surrender of innocent preferences before proof, and the recovery of fraudulent preferences, is to restore, as far as practicable, the conditions as they existed at the time of actual insolvency.

Lowell, Bankruptcy, chap. 5.

Every payment made by an insolvent debtor to his creditor, within four months of the filing of the petition, is not necessarily a preference, unless, taking all the transactions between the parties into account, the payments, or some of them, enable the creditor to obtain a greater percentage of his debt than other creditors of the same class.

Dickson v. Wyman, 55 L. R. A. 349, 49 C. C. A. 574, 111 Fed. 726; Kimball v. E. A. Rosenham Co. 52 C. C. A. 33, 114 Fed. 85; P. S. Morey Mercantile Co. v. Schiffer, 52 C. C. A. 249, 114 Fed. 447; Gans v. Ellison, 52 C. C. A. 366, 114 Fed. 734; Swarts v. Fourth Nat. Bank, 54 C. C. A. 387, 117 Fed. 1; Swarts v. Siegel, 54 C. C. A. 399, 117 Fed. 13.

Mr. Chief Justice Fuller delivered the opinion of the court:

The facts found established that on August 15 the aggregate*of the property of the bankrupts was not, at a fair valuation, sufficient in amount to pay their debts, but that

Alden was ignorant of this, and, in good faith and in the regular course of business, sold material to the bankrupts, and received payment therefor several times between August 15 and November 26, when the petition was filed, on which day the amount of $546.89 for material delivered shortly before had not been paid. All the material so sold to them was manufactured by the bankrupts, and increased their estate in value.

The question is whether the payments made to Alden (or either of them) were preferences within § 60 of the bankruptcy act of 1898 [30 Stat. at L. 562, chap. 541, U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 3445], which must be surrendered, under § 57g, before his claim could be allowed.

Provisions of the act bearing on the subject are given below.†

*In Pirie v. Chicago Title & T. Co. 182 U. S. [81]

S. 438, 45 L. ed. 1171, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 906. the circuit court of appeals for the seventh circuit had affirmed an order of the district court for the northern district of Illinois, rejecting a claim of Carson, Pirie, & Company against the estate of Frank Brothers, bankrupts, and the case was then brought to this court on findings of fact and conclusions of law of the circuit court of appeals, made and filed "pursuant to the requirements of subdivision 3, rule 36 of General Orders in Bankruptcy." The first three of the findings were as follows:

"First. That on February 11, 1899, August Frank, Joseph Frank, and Louis Frank, trading as Frank Brothers, were duly adjudged bankrupts.

"Second. That for a long time prior thereto appellants carried on dealings with the said bankrupt firm, said dealings consisting of a sale by said appellants to said Frank Brothers of goods, wares, and merchandise amounting to the total sum of $4,403.77.

"Third. That said appellants, in the regular and ordinary *course of business, and [82] within four months prior to the adjudication in bankruptcy herein, did collect and receive from said bankrupts as partial payment of said account for such goods, wares, and merchandise so sold and delivered to †"Sec. 1a. The words and phrases used in this act and in proceedings pursuant hereto shall, unless the same be inconsistent with the context, be construed as follows: . . . (9) 'creditor' shall include anyone who owns a demand or claim provable in bankruptcy, and may include his duly authorized agent, attorney, or proxy; (10) 'date of bankruptcy,' or 'time of bankruptcy,' or 'commencement of proceedings,' or 'bankruptcy,' with reference to time, shall mean the date when the petition was filed; (11) 'debt' shall include any debt, demand, or claim provable in bankruptcy; . . . (15) a person shall be deemed insolvent within the provisions of this act whenever the aggregate of his property, exclusive of any property which he may have conveyed, transferred, concealed, or removed, or permitted to be concealed or removed, with intent to defraud, hinder, or delay his creditors, shall not, at a fair valuation, be sufficient in amount to pay his debts."

"Sec. 3a. Acts of bankruptcy by a person shall consist of his having (1) conveyed, transferred, concealed, or removed, or permitted to said Frank Brothers, the sum of $1,336.79, leaving a balance due, owing and unpaid, amounting to $3,093.98."

It was further found that, at the time this payment was made, Frank Brothers were hopelessly insolvent, to their knowledge; but that Carson, Pirie, & Company had no knowledge of such insolvency, nor had reasonable cause to believe that it existed; nor did they have reasonable cause to believe that the bankrupts, by the payment, intended thereby to give a preference; and that they had refused to surrender to the trustee the amount of the payment made to them by the bankrupts, as a condition of the allowance of their claim. Upon the facts the circuit court of appeals concluded, as matter of law, that the payment made "at the time and in the manner above shown" constituted a preference; and that, by reason of the failure and refusal of Carson, Pirie, & Company to surrender the preference, they were not entitled to prove their claim.

The judgment below was affirmed by this court, and it was held that a payment of money was a transfer of property, and when made on an antecedent debt by an insolvent was a preference within § 60a, although the creditor was ignorant of the insolvency, and had no reasonable cause to believe that a preference was intended. The estate of the insolvent, as it existed at the date of the insolvency, was diminished by the payment, and the creditor who received it was enabled to obtain a greater percentage of his debt than any other of the creditors of the same class.

In the present case all the rubber was sold and delivered after the bankrupts' property had actually become insufficient to pay their debts, and their estate was increased in value thereby to an amount in excess of the payments made. The account was a running account, and the effect of the payments was to keep it alive by the extension of new credits, with the net result of a gain to the estate of $546.89, and a loss to the seller of that amount, less such dividends as the estate might pay.* In these circumstances the[83] payments were no more preferences than if the purchases had been for cash, and, as parts of one continuous bona fide transaction, the law does not demand the segregation of the purchases into independent items so as to create distinct pre-existing debts, thereby putting the seller in the same class as creditors already so situated, and impressing payments with the character of the acquisition of a greater percentage of a total indebtedness thus made up.

We do not think the slight variation in the dates of sales and payments affords sufficient ground for the distinction put forward by counsel between the payments of September 4 and 28 and the payment of October 29 (which he concedes should be upheld) in their relation to the rubber furnished August 17 and 28 and September 30. All the material was sold and delivered after August 15, and neither of the items can properly be singled out as constituting outstanding indebtedness, payment of which operated as a preference.

The facts as found in Pirie v. Chicago Title & T. Co. were so entirely different from those existing here that this case is not controlled by that. In view of similar vital differences it has been held by the circuit court of appeals for the first circuit (Dickson v. Wyman, 55 L. R. A. 349, 49 C. C. A. 574, 111 Fed. 726), second circuit (Re Sagor, 9 Am. Bankr. Rep. 361), third circuit (Gaas v. Ellison, 52 C. C. A. 366, 114 Fed. 734), eighth circuit (Kimball v. Rosenham Co. 52 C. C. A. 33, 114 Fed. 85), that payments on a running account, where new sales succeed payments, and the net result is to increase the value of the estate, do not constitute preferential transfers under § 60a.

Judgment affirmed.

Mr. Justice White and Mr. Justice McKenna, not being able to concur in the rea-be concealed or removed, any part of his property with intent to hinder, delay, or defraud his creditors, or any of them; or (2) transferred, while insolvent, any portion of his property to one or more of his creditors with intent to prefer such creditors over his other creditors; or (3) suffered or permitted, while insolvent, any creditor to obtain a preference through legal proceedings, and not having, at least five days before a sale or final disposition of any property affected by such preference, vacated or discharged such preference; or (4) made a general assignment for the benefit of his creditors; or (5) admitted in writing his inability to pay his debts and his willingness to be adjudged a bankrupt on that ground."

"Sec. 60a. A person shall be deemed to have given a preference if, being insolvent, he has procured or suffered a judgment to be entered against himself in favor of any person, or made a transfer of any of his property, and the effect of the enforcement of such judgment or transfer will be to enable any one of his creditors to obtain a greater percentage of his debt than any other of such creditors of the same class.

"b. If a bankrupt shall have given a preference within four months before the filing of a petition, or after the filing of the petition and before the adjudication, and the person receiving it, or to be benefited thereby, or his agent acting therein, shall have had reasonable cause to believe that it was intended thereby to give a preference, it shall be voidable by the trustee, and he may recover the property, or its value from such person.

"c. If a creditor has been preferred, and afterwards, in good faith, gives the debtor further credit, without security of any kind, for property which becomes a part of the debtor's estates, the amount of such new credit remaining unpaid at the time of the adjudication in bankruptcy may be set off against the amount which would otherwise be recoverable from him."

"Sec. 57g. The claims of creditors who have received preferences shall not be allowed unless such creditors shall surrender their preferences."

"Sec. 68a. In all cases of mutual debts or mutual credits between the estate of a bankrupt and a creditor, the account shall be stated and one debt shall be set off against the other, and the balance only shall be allowed or paid."

sons by which the court, in the opinion just announced, distinguishes this case from that of Pirie v. Chicago Title & T. Co., and deeming the latter case controlling in this, dissent.

[84]**Re* JAMES S. BARTON KEY, Petitioner.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 84, 85.)

Mandamus—to review dismissal of appeal for want of jurisdiction.

A writ of mandamus will not lie to compel the court of appeals of the District of Columbia to reinstate an appeal from the supreme court of the District, in an action originally brought before a justice of the peace, where such appeal was dismissed by the court of appeals for want of jurisdiction, although the decree of dismissal cannot be reviewed on appeal or writ of error.

[No. 13, Original.]

Argued April 6, 1903. Decided April 27, 1903.

RULE entered on a petition for a writ of mandamus to compel the Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia to reinstate an appeal from the Supreme Court of that District. Discharged and petition dismissed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Frederic D. McKenney argued the cause, and, with Messrs. Henry Blair and John Spalding Flannery, filed a brief for petitioner:

Where the court below, from a mistaken view of the law as to its jurisdiction, dismisses a case properly cognizable by it, mandamus is the proper remedy to compel it to reinstate the case and proceed to final judgment. A writ of error or appeal does not lie, for the appellate court has nothing to review where the inferior court has not decided the case, but has refused to hear it.

Ex parte Russell, 13 Wall. 664, 20 L. ed. 632; Knickerbocker Ins. Co. v. Comstock, 16 Wall. 258, 21 L. ed. 493; Ex parte Parker, 120 U. S. 737, 30 L. ed. 818, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 767; 131 U. S. 221, 33 L. ed. 123, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 708; Re Atlantic City R. Co. 164 U. S. 635, 41 L. ed. 580, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 208; Re Hohorst, 150 U. S. 653, 37 L. ed. 1211, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 221; Re Connaway, 178 U. S. 421, 44 L. ed. 1134, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 951.

Mandamus lies to compel a court to grant an appeal where the relator is entitled thereto.

NOTE.—As to when mandamus is the proper remedy—see notes to United States ex rel. International Contracting Co. v. La Mont, 39 L. ed. U. S. 160; McCluney v. Silliman, 4 L. ed. U. S. 263; Fleming v. Guthrie (W. Va.) 3 L. R. A. 54; Burnsville Turnp. Co. v. State (Ind.) 3 L. R. A. 265; State ex rel. Charleston, C. & C. R. Co. v. Whitesides (S. C.) 3 L. R. A. 777; and Ex parte Hurn (Ala.) 13 L. R. A. 120.

On mandamus in aid of appeal—see note to Lewis v. Baltimore & L. R. Co. 10 C. C. A. 450.

Ex parte Jordan, 94 U. S. 248, 24 L. ed. 123; Ex parte Zellner, 9 Wall. 244, 19 L. ed. 665; Vigo's Case, 21 Wall. 648, 22 L. ed. 690; United States v. Gomez, 3 Wall. 752, 18 L. ed. 212; Ex parte South & North Ala. R. Co. 95 U. S. 221, 24 L. ed. 355.

The primary rule of statutory construction is, of course, to give effect to the intention of the legislature.

Rodgers v. United States, 185 U. S. 83, 46 L. ed. 816, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 582.

Where provisions of one section are irreconcilable with the provisions of another section, the last words stand, and others which cannot stand with them go to the ground.

Powers v. Barney, 5 Blatchf. 203, Fed. Cas. No. 11,361; State v. Hall, 5 S. C. N. S. 120; Elliott v. Lochrane, 1 Kan. 135; Ryan v. State, 5 Neb. 276; Gibbons v. Brittenum, 56 Miss. 232; Packer v. Sunbury & E. R. Co. 19 Pa. 211; Brown v. Philadelphia County, 21 Pa. 37; Southwark Bank v. Com. 26 Pa. 446; Bacon, Abridgment, tit. Statutes, D; Ex parte Ray, 45 Ala. 15; Harrington v. Rochester Trustees, 10 Wend. 547; Commercial Bank v. Chambers, 8 Smedes & M. 9; Quick v. White-Water Twp. 7 Ind. 570; Albertson v. State, 9 Neb. 429, 2 N. W. 742, 892; Sams v. King, 18 Fla. 557; Branagan v. Dulaney, 8 Colo. 408, 8 Pac. 669; Gee v. Thompson, 11 La. Ann. 657; Peet v. Nalle, 30 La. Ann. 949; Hamilton v. Buxton, 6 Ark. 24.

In the absence of an express repeal, the later expression of the legislature will operate as a repeal of the earlier expression, either where the two expressions are directly repugnant, or where the later expression covers the whole subject of the earlier one, and embraces new provisions which plainly show that it was intended as a substitute therefor.

United States v. Tynen, 11 Wall. 88, 20 L. ed. 153; Daviess v. Fairbairn, 3 How. 636, 11 L. ed. 760; Norris v. Crocker, 13 How. 429, 14 L. ed. 210; King v. Cornell, 106 U. S. 395, 27 L. ed. 60, 1 Sup. Ct. Rep. 312.

Mr. William C. Prentiss argued the cause and filed a brief for respondents:

The power of this court to issue writs of mandamus to inferior courts is only incidental to the exercise of its appellate jurisdiction.

Kendall v. United States, 12 Pet. 524, 9 L. ed. 1181; Ex parte Bradstreet, 7 Pet. 634, 8 L. ed. 810; Re Atlantic City R. Co. 164 U. S. 633, 41 L. ed. 579, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 208; Knickerbocker Ins. Co. v. Comstock, 16 Wall. 258, 21 L. ed. 493; Ex parte Russell, 13 Wall. 664, 20 L. ed. 632.

As no Federal question within the meaning of D. C. Code, § 223, is presented, and the amount involved is too small to come to this court by writ of error, mandamus will not lie.

Re Burdett, 127 U. S. 771, 32 L. ed. 321, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1394.

The last-clause rule is not sound or established by authority.

St. Clements v. St. Andrew, 6 Mod. 287; Atty. Gen. v. Chelsea Water Works, Fitzgibbons, 195; 1 Kent Com. 462; Farmers' Bank v. Hale, 59 N. Y. 59; Bishop, Written Laws. §§ 63-65; Sutherland, Stat. Constr. §§ 220-221; State ex rel. Atty. Gen. v. Heidorn, 74 Mo. 410; Sams v. King, 18 Fla. 557; State ex rel. Wilson v. Williams, 8 Ind. 191.
189 U. S.

Mr. Chief Justice Fuller delivered the opinion of the court:

William F. Roberts brought an action against J. S. Barton Key and James P. Scott in February, 1901, before a justice of the peace of the District of Columbia, and recovered judgment for $196.30; whereupon Key and Scott carried the case by appeal to the supreme court of the District of Columbia, giving an undertaking on appeal with the United States Fidelity & Guaranty Company as surety. The case was tried in the District supreme court, and resulted in a judgment in favor of Scott and against Key and the guaranty company. From this judgment Key alone prosecuted an appeal to the court of appeals of the District of Columbia, without summons and severance or any equivalent. Roberts moved to dismiss [85] on two *grounds: (1) The want of parties (Mason v. United States, 136 U. S. 581, 34 L. ed. 545, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1062; Hardee v. Wilson, 146 U. S. 179, 36 L. ed. 933, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 39); (2) that the court of appeals had no jurisdiction on appeal from the judgment of the court below in such cases.

The court of appeals had held in Groff v. Miller, 30 Wash. L. Rep. 434, that such an appeal could not be maintained, and accordingly dismissed the appeal in this case on the second ground. Id. 436. Key then applied to this court for leave to file a petition for mandamus requiring the court of appeals to reinstate the appeal and proceed to a hearing and determination of the same on the merits. Leave was granted, and due return has been made to a rule entered on the petition thereupon filed.

The case could not have been brought here on appeal or writ of error. Code District of Columbia, § 233. And no application for certiorari was made under § 234. Act of March 3, 1901 (31 Stat. at L. 1189, chap. 854).

The controversy in respect of appeals to the court of appeals from judgments in the supreme court of the District in cases appealed from justices of the peace, raised under §§ 82 and 226 of the act of 1901, was not only disposed of by the court of appeals in Groff v. Miller, but determined by the repeal of § 82 by the act of June 30, 1902. 32 Stat. at L. chap. 1329.

The writ of mandamus cannot be used to perform the office of an appeal or writ of error, and does not lie to review a final judgment or decree sustaining a plea to the jurisdiction, even if no appeal or writ of error is given by law. It is not granted in doubtful cases, or where there is another adequate remedy, and whether it shall go or not usually rests in the sound discretion of the court. If sometimes demandable ex debito 189 U. S.

justitiæ, it is certainly not on a record like this. American Constr. Co. v. Jacksonville, T. & K. W. R. Co. 148 U. S. 379, 37 L. ed. 489, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 758; Re Rice, 155 U. S. 403, 39 L. ed. 201, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 149; High, Extr. Legal Rem. 3d ed. § 9.

Tested by these well-settled principles, the rule must be discharged and the petition dismissed.

So ordered.

*KAORU YAMATAYA, Appt.,
v.

[86]

THOMAS M. FISHER, Immigrant and Chinese Inspector.†

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 86-102.)

Aliens—exclusion of paupers—effect of treaty with Japan—deportation after entry—review by habeas corpus.

1. Japanese subjects who are "paupers or persons likely to become a public charge," and are therefore forbidden to enter the United States by the Immigration act of March 3, 1891 (26 Stat. at L. 1085, chap. 551, U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 1294), are not given such right of entry by the provision of the treaty of March 21, 1895, with Japan, that the citizens or subjects of each of the two countries shall have "full liberty to enter, travel, or reside in any part of the territories of the other country,"—especially since such treaty expressly excepts from its operation any ordinance or regulation relating to "police and public security."
2. Aliens of the excluded class are not protected from deportation by the executive officers of the government, because they have effected an entry into the United States, in view of the power given the Secretary of the Treasury by the act of October 19, 1888, chap. 1210 (25 Stat. at L. 566, U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 1294), if satisfied that an immigrant has been allowed to land contrary to law, to cause his deportation at any time within a year after the landing, which power was again substantially conferred by the provision of the act of March 3, 1891, chap. 551, § 11, that an alien immigrant may be sent out of the country, "as provided by law," at any time within a year after his illegal entry into the United States.
3. Executive officers of the United States government were not invested, by the provisions

†This case is reported by the Official Reporter under the title of "The Japanese Immigrant Case."

NOTE.—On treaty guaranties to aliens—see note to Gandolfo v. Hartman (C. C. S. D. Cal.) 16 L. R. A. 277.

On the jurisdiction of the United States courts on habeas corpus—see Re Reinitz (C. C. S. D. N. Y.) 4 L. R. A. 236, and note. See also notes to State ex rel. Cochran v. Winters (Kan.) 10 L. R. A. 616; Re Huse, 25 C. C. A. 4; and Tinsley v. Anderson, 43 L. ed. U. S. 91.

As to questions reviewable by habeas corpus—see notes to State v. Jackson (D. C. E. D. Tenn.) 1 L. R. A. 373; Blon's Appeal (Conn.) 11 L. R. A. 694; United States v. Hamilton, 1 L. ed. U. S. 490; Ex parte Carll, 27 L. ed. U. S. 288; Oteiza y Cortes v. Jacobus, 34 L. ed. U. S. 464; and Pearce v. Texas, 39 L. ed. U. S. 164.

of the acts of October 19, 1888, chap. 1210, and March 3, 1891, chap. 551, for the deportation of aliens of excluded classes within a year after their illegal entry, with the power arbitrarily to deport an alien who has entered the country and has become subject in all respects to its jurisdiction and a part of its population, without giving him an opportunity to be heard upon the question involving his right to be and remain in the United States.

4. Federal courts will not intervene by habeas corpus to prevent the deportation by the executive officers of the government, under the authority of the acts of October 19, 1888, chap. 1210, and March 3, 1891, chap. 551, of an alien found to be one of the excluded class where such alien had notice, though not a formal one, of the investigation instituted for the purpose of ascertaining whether she was legally in the United States, and was not denied an opportunity to be heard, although she pleads a want of knowledge of the English language preventing her from understanding the nature and import of the questions propounded to her, and that the investigation made was a "pretended" one, and that she did not at the time know that it had reference to her deportation.

[No. 171.]

Argued February 24, 1903. Decided April 6, 1903.

ON APPEAL from the District Court of the United States for the District of Washington to review a decree dismissing a writ of habeas corpus to inquire into the detention of an alien immigrant under a warrant from the Secretary of the Treasury requiring her deportation. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Vere Goldthwaite argued the cause, and Messrs. Harold Preston and Walter A. Keene filed a brief for appellant:

The word "person," as used in the Constitution, includes aliens as well as citizens.

Re Ah Fong, 3 Sawy. 144, Fed. Cas. No. 102; Re Parrott, 6 Sawy. 349, 1 Fed. 481; Ho Ah Kow v. Nunan, 5 Sawy. 552, Fed. Cas. No. 6,546; Fong Yue Ting v. United States, 149 U. S. 698, 37 L. ed. 905, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1016.

No principle is more firmly imbedded in our jurisprudence than the one which asserts that before a person can be deprived of any of his rights he must be given his day in court.

Holden v. Hardy, 169 U. S. 366, 42 L. ed. 780, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 383; Iowa C. R. Co. v. Iowa, 160 U. S. 389, 40 L. ed. 467, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 344; Hovey v. Elliott, 167 U. S. 409, 42 L. ed. 215, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 841; McVeigh v. United States, 11 Wall. 259, 20 L. ed. 80; Charles v. Marion, 98 Fed. 166; Greene v. Briggs, 1 Curt. C. C. 311, Fed. Cas. No. 5,764; Scott v. Toledo, 1 L. R. A. 688, 36 Fed. 385; Railroad Tax Cases, 8 Sawy. 238, 13 Fed. 722; Meyers v. Shields, 61 Fed. 713; Stuart v. Palmer, 74 N. Y. 183, 30 Am. Rep. 289; 2 Kent Com. 13; Hagar v. Reclamation Dist. No. 108, 111 U. S. 708, 28 L. ed. 572, 4 Sup. Ct. Rep. 663.

Appellant has, so far as any questions involved in this appeal are concerned, the same rights as an American citizen.

Yick Wo v. Hopkins, 118 U. S. 369, 30 L. ed. 226, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1064.

Assistant Attorney General Hoyt argued the cause and filed a brief for appellee:

An alien landing surreptitiously may, within a year, be arrested and deported by the Secretary of the Treasury without judicial proceedings before a court.

United States v. Yamasaka, 40 C. C. A. 454, 100 Fed. 404.

The ministerial officer has been clothed with the authority to determine and act, and this court has in numerous cases decided that the executive determination is final.

Nishimura Ekin v. United States, 142 U. S. 651, 35 L. ed. 1146, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 336; Fong Yue Ting v. United States, 149 U. S. 698, 37 L. ed. 905, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1016; Lem Moon Sing v. United States, 158 U. S. 538, 39 L. ed. 1082, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 967; Wong Wing v. United States, 163 U. S. 228, 41 L. ed. 140, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 977; Pok Yung Yo v. United States, 185 U. S. 296, 46 L. ed. 917, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 686.

The presumption is that the result is proper.

Lee Lung v. Patterson, 186 U. S. 168, 46 L. ed. 1108, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 795.

Mr. Justice Harlan delivered the opinion of the court:

*This case presents some questions arising [87] under the act of Congress relating to the exclusion of certain classes of alien immigrants.

On the 11th day of July, 1901, appellant, a subject of Japan, landed at the port of Seattle, Washington; and on or about July 15th, 1901, the appellee, an immigrant inspector of the United States, having instituted an investigation into the circumstances of her entering the United States, decided that she came here in violation of law, in that she was a pauper and a person likely to become a public charge,—aliens of that class being excluded altogether from this country by the act of March 3d, 1891 (26 Stat. at L. 1085, chap. 551, U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 1294).

The evidence obtained by the inspector was transmitted to the Secretary of the Treasury, who, under date of July 23d, 1901, issued a warrant addressed to the immigrant inspector at Seattle, reciting that the appellant had come into the United States contrary to the provisions of the above act of 1891, and ordering that she be taken into custody and returned to Japan at the expense of the vessel importing her.

The inspector being about to execute this warrant, an application was presented in behalf of the appellant to the district court of the United States for the district of Washington, northern division, for a writ of habeas corpus. The application alleged that the imprisonment of the petitioner was unlawful, and that she did not come here in violation of the act of 1891, or of any other law of the United States relating to the exclusion of aliens.

The writ having been issued, a return was made by the inspector, stating that he had found upon due investigation and the admissions of the appellant that she was a pauper and a person likely to become a public charge, and had "surreptitiously, clandestinely, unlawfully, and without any authority come into the United States;" that, "in pursuance of said testimony, admissions of the petitioner, Kaoru Yamataya, evidence, facts, and circumstances," he had decided that she had no right to be within the territory of the United States, and was a proper person for deportation; all which he reported to the proper officers of the government, who confirmed his decision, *and thereupon the Secretary of the Treasury issued his warrant, requiring the deportation of the appellant. That warrant was produced and made part of the return.

The return of the inspector was traversed, the traverse admitting that the inspector had investigated the case of the petitioner, and had made a finding that she had illegally come into this country, but alleging that the investigation was a "pretended" and an inadequate one; that she did not understand the English language, and did not know at the time that such investigation was with a view to her deportation from the country; and that the investigation was carried on without her having the assistance of counsel or friends, or an opportunity to show that she was not a pauper or likely to become a public charge. The traverse alleged that the petitioner was not in the United States in violation of law.

A demurrer to the traverse was sustained, the writ of habeas corpus was dismissed, and the appellant was remanded to the custody of the inspector. From that order the present appeal was prosecuted.

It will conduce to a clear understanding of the questions to be determined if we recall certain legislation of Congress relating to the exclusion of aliens from the United States, and to the treaty of 1894 between Japan and the United States.

By the deficiency appropriation act of October 19th, 1888, chap. 1210, it was provided that the act of February 23d, 1887, chap. 226, amendatory of the act prohibiting the importation and immigration of foreigners and aliens under contract or agreement to perform labor in the United States, its territories, and the District of Columbia (24 Stat. at L. 414, U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 1290), be so amended "as to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury, in case he shall be satisfied that an immigrant has been allowed to land contrary to the prohibition of that law, to cause such immigrant, within the period of one year after landing or entry, to be taken into custody and returned to the country from whence he came, at the expense of the owner of the importing vessel, or, if he entered from an adjoining country, at the expense of the person previously contracting for the services." 25 Stat. at L. 566 (U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 1294).

By the 1st section of the act of Congress of March 3d, 1891, chap. 551, amendatory of 189 U. S.

of the various acts relating to immigration and importation of aliens under contract or agreement to perform labor, it was provided: "That the following classes of aliens shall be excluded from admission into the United States, in accordance with the existing acts regulating immigration, other than those concerning Chinese laborers: All idiots, insane persons, paupers, or persons likely to become a public charge, persons suffering from a loathsome or a dangerous contagious disease, persons who have been convicted of a felony or other infamous crime or misdemeanor involving moral turpitude, polygamists, and also any person whose ticket or passage is paid for with the money of another or who is assisted by others to come, unless it is affirmatively and satisfactorily shown, on *special inquiry,[95] that such person does not belong to one of the foregoing excluded classes, or to the class of contract laborers excluded by the act of February twenty-sixth, eighteen hundred and eighty-five [23 Stat. at L. 332, chap. 164, U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 1290]. . . ." 26 Stat. at L. 1084 (U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 1294).

By the 8th section of that act it was provided: "That upon the arrival by water at any place within the United States of any alien immigrants it shall be the duty of the commanding officer and the agents of the steam or sailing vessel by which they came to report the name, nationality, last residence, and destination of every such alien, before any of them are landed, to the proper inspection officers, who shall thereupon go or send competent assistants on board such vessel and there inspect all such aliens, or the inspection officers may order a temporary removal of such aliens for examination at a designated time and place, and then and there detain them until a thorough inspection is made. . . . The inspection officers and their assistants shall have power to administer oaths, and to take and consider testimony touching the right of any such aliens to enter the United States, all of which shall be entered of record. During such inspection, after temporary removal, the superintendent shall cause such aliens to be properly housed, fed, and cared for, and also, in his discretion, such as are delayed in proceeding to their destination after inspection. All decisions made by the inspection officers or their assistants touching the right of any alien to land, when adverse to such right, shall be final unless appeal be taken to the superintendent of immigration, whose action shall be subject to review by the Secretary of the Treasury. It shall be the duty of the aforesaid officers and agents of such vessel to adopt due precautions to prevent the landing of any alien immigrant at any place or time other than that designated by the inspection officers, and any such officer or agent or person in charge of such vessel who shall, either knowingly or negligently, land or permit to land any alien immigrant at any place or time other than that designated by the inspection officers, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and punished by a fine not exceeding one thousand dollars, or by imprisonment for a term not exceeding one year, or by both such fine and imprisonment." 26 Stat. at L. 1085 (U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 1298).

- [96] *By the 10th section it is provided that "all aliens who may unlawfully come to the United States shall, if practicable, be immediately sent back on the vessel by which they were brought in."

The 11th section of the same act provided: "That any alien who shall come into the United States in violation of law may be returned as by law provided, at any time within one year thereafter, at the expense of the person or persons, vessel, transportation company, or corporation bringing such alien into the United States, and, if that cannot be done, then at the expense of the United States; and any alien who becomes a public charge within one year after his arrival in the United States, from causes existing prior to his landing therein, shall be deemed to have come in violation of law, and shall be returned as aforesaid." 26 Stat. at L. 1086 (U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 1299).

In the sundry civil appropriation act of August 18th, 1894, chap. 301, was the following provision: "In every case where an alien is excluded from admission into the United States under any law or treaty now existing or hereafter made, the decision of the appropriate immigration or customs officers, if adverse to the admission of such alien, shall be final, unless reversed on appeal to the Secretary of the Treasury." 28 Stat. at L. 372, 390 (U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 1303).

Then came the treaty between the United States and the Empire of Japan, concluded November 23d, 1894, and proclaimed March 21st, 1895, and which, by its terms, was to go into operation July 17th, 1899. By the 1st article of that treaty it was provided: "The citizens or subjects of each of the two high contracting parties shall have full liberty to enter, travel, or reside in any part of the territories of the other contracting party, and shall enjoy full and perfect protection for their persons and property." 29 Stat. at L. 848. But by the 2d article it was declared: "It is, however, understood that the stipulations contained in this and the preceding article do not in any way affect the laws, ordinances, and regulations with regard to trade, the immigration of laborers, police and public security, which are in force or which may hereafter be enacted in either of the two countries." 29 Stat. at L. 849.

1. From the above acts of Congress it appears that among *the aliens forbidden to enter the United States are those, of whatever country, who are "paupers or persons likely to become a public charge." We are of opinion that aliens of that class have not been given by the treaty with Japan full liberty to enter or reside in the United States: for that instrument expressly excepts from its operation any ordinance or regulation relating to "police and public security." A statute excluding paupers or persons likely to become a public charge is manifestly one of police and public security. Aside from that specific exception, we should not be inclined to hold, that the provision in the treaty with Japan, that the citizens or subjects of each of the two countries should have "full liberty to enter, travel, or reside in any part of the territories of the other contracting party," has any reference to that class, in either country, who, from their habits or condition, are ordinarily or properly the object of police regulations designed to protect the general public against contact with dangerous or improper persons.

2. The constitutionality of the legislation in question, in its general aspects, is no longer open to discussion in this court. That Congress may exclude aliens of a particular race from the United States; prescribe the terms and conditions upon which certain classes of aliens may come to this country; establish regulations for sending out of the country such aliens as come here in violation of law; and commit the enforcement of such provisions, conditions, and regulations exclusively to executive officers, without judicial intervention,—are principles firmly established by the decisions of this court. Nishimura Ekiu v. United States, 142 U. S. 651, 35 L. ed. 1146, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 336; Fong Yue Ting v. United States, 149 U. S. 698, 37 L. ed. 905, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1016; Lem Moon Sing v. United States, 158 U. S. 538, 39 L. ed. 1082, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 967; Wong Wing v. United States, 163 U. S. 228, 41 L. ed. 140, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 977; Fok Yung Yo v. United States, 185 U. S. 296, 305, 46 L. ed. 917, 921, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 686, 690.

In Nishimura Ekiu's Case the court said: "The supervision of the admission of aliens into the United States may be intrusted by Congress either to the Department of State, having the general management of foreign relations, or to the Department of the Treasury, charged with the enforcement of the laws regulating foreign commerce; and Congress has often passed *acts forbidding the [98] immigration of particular classes of foreigners, and has committed the execution of these acts to the Secretary of the Treasury, to collectors of customs, and to inspectors acting under their authority." After observing that Congress, if it saw fit, could authorize the courts to investigate and ascertain the facts on which depended the right of the alien to land, this court proceeded: "But, on the other hand, the final determination of those facts may be intrusted by Congress to executive officers; and in such a case, as in all others in which a statute gives a discretionary power to an officer, to be exercised by him upon his own opinion of certain facts, he is made the sole and exclusive judge of the existence of those facts, and no other tribunal, unless expressly authorized by law to do so, is at liberty to re-examine or controvert the sufficiency of the evidence on which he acted. Martin v. Mott, 12 Wheat. 19, 31, 6 L. ed. 537, 541; 189 U. S.

Philadelphia & T. R. Co. v. Stimpson, 14 Pet. 448, 458, 10 L. ed. 535, 540; Benson v. McMahon, 127 U. S. 457, 32 L. ed. 234, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1240; Re Oteiza y Cortes, 136 U. S. 330, sub nom. Oteiza y Cortes v. Jacobus, 34 L. ed. 464, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1031. It is not within the province of the judiciary to order that foreigners who have never been naturalized, nor acquired any domicile or residence within the United States, nor even been admitted into the country pursuant to law, shall be permitted to enter, in opposition to the constitutional and lawful measures of the legislative and executive branches of the national government. As to such persons, the decisions of executive or administrative officers, acting within powers expressly conferred by Congress, are due process of law. Den ex dem. Murray v. Hoboken Land & Improv. Co. 18 How. 272, 15 L. ed. 372; Hilton v. Merritt, 110 U. S. 97, 28 L. ed. 83, 3 Sup. Ct. Rep. 548."

In Lem Moon Sing's Case it was said: "The power of Congress to exclude aliens altogether from the United States, or to prescribe the terms and conditions upon which they may come to this country, and to have its declared policy in that regard enforced exclusively through executive officers, without judicial intervention, is settled by our previous adjudications." And in Fok Yung Yo's Case, the latest one in this court, it was said: "Congressional action has placed the final determination of the right of admission [99] in executive officers, without judicial *intervention, and this has been for many years the recognized and declared policy of the country."

What was the extent of the authority of the executive officers of the government over the petitioner after she landed? As has been seen, the Secretary of the Treasury, under the above act of October 19th, 1888, chap. 1210, was authorized, within one year after an alien of the excluded class entered the country, to cause him to be taken into custody and returned to the country whence he came. Substantially the same power was conferred by the act of March 3d, 1891, chap. 551, by the 11th section of which it is provided that the alien immigrant may be sent out of the country, "as provided by law," at any time within the year after his illegally coming into the United States. Taking all its enactments together, it is clear that Congress did not intend that the mere admission of an alien, or his mere entering the country, should place him at all times thereafter entirely beyond the control or authority of the executive officers of the government. On the contrary, if the Secretary of the Treasury became satisfied that the immigrant had been allowed to land contrary to the prohibition of that law, then he could at any time within a year after the landing cause the immigrant to be taken into custody and deported. The immigrant must be taken to have entered subject to the condition that he might be sent out of the country by order of the proper executive officer if, within a year, he was found to have been wrongfully admitted into, or had illegally entered, the United States. These were substantially the views expressed by the circuit court of appeals for the ninth circuit in United States v. Yamasaka, 40 C. C. A. 454, 100 Fed. 404.

It is contended, however, that in respect of an alien who has already landed it is consistent with the acts of Congress that he may be deported without previous notice of any purpose to deport him, and without any opportunity on his part to show by competent evidence before the executive officers charged with the execution of the acts of Congress, that he is not here in violation of law; that the deportation of an alien without provision for such a notice and for an opportunity to be heard *was inconsistent [100] with the due process of law required by the 5th Amendment of the Constitution.

Leaving on one side the question whether an alien can rightfully invoke the due process clause of the Constitution who has entered the country clandestinely, and who has been here for too brief a period to have become, in any real sense, a part of our population, before his right to remain is disputed, we have to say that the rigid construction of the acts of Congress suggested by the appellant are not justified. Those acts do not necessarily exclude opportunity to the immigrant to be heard, when such opportunity is of right. It was held in Den ex dem. Murray v. Hoboken Land & Improv. Co. 18 How. 272, 280, 281, 283, 15 L. ed. 372, 376, 377, that "though 'due process of law' generally implies and includes actor, reus, judex, regular allegations, opportunity to answer and a trial according to some settled course of judicial proceedings, . . . yet this is not universally true;" and "that though, generally, both public and private wrongs are redressed through judicial action, there are more summary extra-judicial remedies for both." Hence, it was decided in that case to be consistent with due process of law for Congress to provide summary means to compel revenue officers—and, in case of default, their sureties—to pay such balances of the public money as might be in their hands. Now, it has been settled that the power to exclude or expel aliens belonged to the political department of the government, and that the order of an executive officer invested with the power to determine finally the facts upon which an alien's right to enter this country, or remain in it, depended, was "due process of law, and no other tribunal, unless expressly authorized to do so, was at liberty to re-examine the evidence on which he acted, or to controvert its sufficiency." Nishimura Ekiu v. United States, 142 U. S. 651, 659, 35 L. ed. 1146, 1149, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 336; Fong Yue Ting v. United States, 149 U. S. 698, 713, 37 L. ed. 905, 913, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1016; Lem Moon Sing v. United States, 158 U. S. 538, 547, 39 L. ed. 1082, 1085, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 967. But this court has never held, nor must we now be understood as holding, that administrative officers, when executing the provisions of a statute involving the liberty of persons, may disregard the fundamental principles that inhere in "due process of law" as understood at the time of the adoption of the Constitution. *One of these principles is that no person shall be deprived of his liberty without opportunity, at some time, to be heard, before such officers, in respect of the matters upon which that liberty depends,—not necessarily an opportunity upon a regular, set occasion, and according to the forms of judicial procedure, but one that will secure the prompt, vigorous action contemplated by Congress, and at the same time be appropriate to the nature of the case upon which such officers are required to act. Therefore, it is not competent for the Secretary of the Treasury or any executive officer, at any time within the year limited by the statute, arbitrarily to cause an alien who has entered the country, and has become subject in all respects to its jurisdiction, and a part of its population, although alleged to be illegally here, to be taken into custody and deported without giving him all opportunity to be heard upon the questions involving his right to be and remain in the United States. No such arbitrary power can exist where the principles involved in due process of law are recognized.

This is the reasonable construction of the acts of Congress here in question, and they need not be otherwise interpreted. In the case of all acts of Congress, such interpretation ought to be adopted as, without doing violence to the import of the words used, will bring them into harmony with the Constitution. An act of Congress must be taken to be constitutional unless the contrary plainly and palpably appears. The words here used do not require an interpretation that would invest executive or administrative officers with the absolute, arbitrary power implied in the contention of the appellant. Besides, the record now before us shows that the appellant had notice, although not a formal one, of the investigation instituted for the purpose of ascertaining whether she was illegally in this country. The traverse to the return made by the immigration inspector shows upon its face that she was before that officer pending the investigation of her right to be in the United States, and made answers to questions propounded to her. It is true that she pleads a want of knowledge of our language; that she did not understand the nature and import of the questions propounded to her; that the investigation made was a "pre-[102]tended" *one; and that she did not, at the time, know that the investigation had reference to her being deported from the country. These considerations cannot justify the intervention of the courts. They could have been presented to the officer having primary control of such a case, as well as upon an appeal to the Secretary of the Treasury, who had power to order another investigation if that course was demanded by law or by the ends of justice. It is not to be assumed that either would have refused a second or fuller investigation, if a proper application and showing for one had been made by or for the appellant. Whether further investigation should have been ordered was for the officers charged with the execution of the statutes to determine. Their action in that regard is not subject to judicial review. Suffice it to say, it does not appear that appellant was denied an opportunity to be heard. And as no appeal was taken to the Secretary from the decision of the immigration inspector, that decision was final and conclusive. If the appellant's want of knowledge of the English language put her at some disadvantage in the investigation conducted by that officer, that was her misfortune, and constitutes no reason, under the acts of Congress, or under any rule of law, for the intervention of the court by habeas corpus. We perceive no ground for such intervention,—none for the contention that due process of law was denied to appellant.

The judgment is affirmed.

Mr. Justice Brewer and Mr. Justice Peckham dissented.

*OREGON & CALIFORNIA RAILROAD[103]
COMPANY, Appl.,
v.
UNITED STATES.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 103-116.)

Railroad land grants — withdrawal of indemnity lands in advance of selection — occupancy in good faith.

1. The Secretary of the Interior was not authorized, upon the mere acceptance of the map of definite location, to withdraw from the operation of the settlement laws any lands within the indemnity limits of the grant made to the California & Oregon Railroad Company by the act of July 25, 1866, chap. 242 (14 Stat. at L. 239), which provided for the selection of lands within such limits in lieu of any within the place limits which should be found to have been granted, sold, reserved, occupied by homestead settlers, pre-empted, or otherwise disposed of, and empowered the Secretary of the Interior, upon the filing of the map of the survey, to withdraw from sale "public lands herein granted on each side of said railroad, so far as located and within the limits before specified."
2. No interest in any specific sections of land within the indemnity limits of the grant made by the act of July 25, 1866, chap. 242, to the California & Oregon Railroad Company, could be acquired by that company in advance of their actual and approved selection to supply deficiencies in the place limits.
3. The selection of lands within the indemnity limits of the grant made by the act of July 25, 1866, chap. 242, to the California & Oregon Railroad Company to supply deficiencies in the place limits, cannot defeat or destroy the rights of a settler under that act arising from a previous bona fide occupancy with the intention of perfecting title under the homestead laws as soon as the land should be surveyed.

NOTE—As to land grants to railroads—see note to Kansas P. R. Co. v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. 28 L. ed. U. S. 794.

4. The rights of one who has settled in good faith on an odd-numbered section within the indemnity limits of the grant by the act of July 25, 1866, chap. 242, to the California & Oregon Railroad Company prior to their selection by that company to supply deficiencies in the place limits, cannot be affected by the fact, subsequently appearing, that all the odd-numbered sections within such indemnity limits were needed to supply deficiencies in the place limits.

[No. 186.]

Argued March 4, 1903. Decided April 6, 1903.

APPEAL from the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit to review a decree which affirmed a decree of the Circuit Court for the District of Oregon canceling a patent issued to the Oregon & California Railroad Company. Affirmed.

See same case below, 48 C. C. A. 520, 109 Fed. 514.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Maxwell Evarts argued the cause and filed a brief for appellant:

The mere occupancy of public land creates no right therein as against the United States, and the land still remains part of the public domain and subject to disposal by the government.

The Yosemite Valley Case, 15 Wall. 77, sub nom. Hutchings v. Low, 21 L. ed. 82; Lansdale v. Daniels, 100 U. S. 113, 25 L. ed. 587; Sparks v. Pierce, 115 U. S. 408, 29 L. ed. 428, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 102.

Relative rights of a railroad under its land grant and an individual are determined, and determined only, by the question as to which one first filed record evidence of a claim.

Tarpey v. Madsen, 178 U. S. 215, 44 L. ed. 1042, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 849.

The fact and date of occupancy are unimportant in determining conflicting claims of an individual and a railroad company to lands within a railroad grant.

Ibid.; Northern P. R. Co. v. Colburn, 164 U. S. 383, 41 L. ed. 479, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 98; Whitney v. Taylor, 158 U. S. 85, 39 L. ed. 906, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 796; Burton v. Traver, 130 U. S. 232, 32 L. ed. 920, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 509.

Under the ordinary principles of equity the right of the railroad to the patent for this land, being first in point of time, whether as to its record title or as to its original inception, should be held to be superior to the right thereto of the individual occupants.

Shepley v. Cowan, 91 U. S. 330, 23 L. ed. 424.

As between an occupant of the public lands and a railroad claiming indemnity lands under a grant from the government, that one is to be preferred who first obtains record evidence of his claim.

United States v. Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. 189 U. S.

141 U. S. 358, 35 L. ed. 766, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 13.

The relative rights of two railroads claiming the same land within the indemnity limits of their respective grants are determined by the question as to which has first acquired the record evidence of its claim.

St. Paul & S. C. R. Co. v. Winona & St. P. R. Co. 112 U. S. 720, 28 L. ed. 872, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 334.

Indemnity lands are appropriated to the grant without selection, when they are insufficient to supply the deficiencies in the place limits.

St. Paul & P. R. Co. v. Northern P. R. Co. 139 U. S. 1, 35 L. ed. 77, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 389.

The bill should be dismissed upon the ground that the United States cannot bring suit to cancel this patent, for the reason that the outcome of the suit would simply be to benefit one of two claimants to the land, and would not subserve any interest of the government.

United States v. Beebe, 127 U. S. 338, 32 L. ed. 121, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1083; United States v. San Jacinto Tin Co. 125 U. S. 273, 31 L. ed. 747, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 850.

Mr. Charles W. Russell argued the cause and filed a brief for appellee:

Lands within the indemnity limits remained open to homestead and pre-emption without regard to whether a sufficient amount would be left for the company or not.

Southern P. R. Co. v. Bell, 183 U. S. 689, 46 L. ed. 390, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 232.

Settlement before definite location, where no declaratory statement could be filed, takes land out of the place grant if stated, after definite location, in the declaratory statement as occurring prior to such definite location.

Tarpey v. Madsen, 178 U. S. 215, 44 L. ed. 1042, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 849.

Settlement of unsurveyed place lands in 1881, prior to definite location in 1884, there being a survey and application to file in 1893, long after definite location, gave the settler the land.

Nelson v. Northern P. R. Co. 188 U. S. 108, ante, 406, 23 Sup. Ct. Rep. 302.

Mr. Justice Harlan delivered the opinion of the court:

By the act of Congress of March 3d, 1887, chap. 376, it was provided *that if, at the completion of the adjustments of land grants thereby directed to be made, or sooner, it appeared that lands had been from any cause erroneously certified or patented to or for any company claiming by, through, or under grant from the United States to aid in the construction of a railroad, it should be the duty of the Secretary of the Interior to thereupon demand from such company a relinquishment or reconveyance to the United States of all such lands, whether within granted or indemnity limits; and, if the company did not reconvey within ninety days after demand made, it should thereupon be the duty of the Attorney General to commence and prosecute in the proper courts the necessary proceedings to cancel the patents, certification, or other evidence of title theretofore issued for the lands, and to restore the title thereof to the United States. 24 Stat. at L. 556 (U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 1595).

In United States v. Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. 141 U. S. 360, 380, 382, 35 L. ed. 766, 773, 774, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 13, 21, which was an action brought by the United States after the passage of the above statute to have certain patents for land canceled, this court, after observing that as to some of the lands the United States appeared to have a direct interest in them, said: "As to others, it is under an obligation to claimants under the homestead and pre-emption laws to undo the wrong alleged to have been done by its officers, in violation of law, by removing the cloud cast upon its title by the patents in question, and thereby enable it to properly administer these lands, and to give clear title to those whose rights, under those laws, may be superior to those of the railway company. A suit, therefore, to obtain a decree annulling the patents in question, so far as it is proper to do so, was required by the duty the government owed, as well to the public as to the individuals who acquired rights which the patents, if allowed to stand, may defeat or embarrass." Reference was made in that case to United States v. San Jacinto Tin Co. 125 U. S. 273, 286, 31 L. ed. 747, 752, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 850, in which it was held that the United States could sue to set aside a patent improperly issued, where it appeared that there was an obligation on the part of the United States to the public, or to any individual, or where it had any interest of its own; also, to United States v. Beebe, 127 U. S. 338, 342, 32 L. ed. 121, 123, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1083, in [105] which it was *held that patents procured by fraud could be canceled at the suit of the United States, where that was necessary to be done in order that it might fulfil its obligations to others. The court then observed: "These principles equally apply where patents have been issued by mistake, and they are specially applicable where, as in the present case, a multiplicity of suits, each one depending upon the same facts and upon the same questions of law, can be avoided, and where a comprehensive decree, covering all contested rights, would accomplish the substantial ends of justice." See also United States v. Oregon & C. R. Co. 176 U. S. 28, 44 L. ed. 358, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 261.

In this state of the law, the present suit was brought by the United States against the Oregon & California Railroad Company in order to obtain a decree canceling certain patents for lands which, it was alleged, had been illegally, and by mistake, issued in the name of the United States to that company, which succeeded to the rights of the Oregon Central Railroad Company.

The case was heard upon a stipulation as to evidence, from which the following facts appear:

By the act of Congress of July 25th, 1866, [106]

chap. 242, 14 Stat. at L. 239, the California & Oregon Railroad Company, and such company organized under the laws of Oregon as the legislature of the latter state designated, were authorized to locate, construct, and maintain a railroad and telegraph line between Portland, Oregon, and the Central Pacific Railroad Company in California.

For the purpose of aiding in the construction of that line, Congress granted to those companies, their successors and assigns, every alternate odd-numbered section of public lands, not mineral, to the amount of twenty sections per mile (ten on each side) of the railroad line. But the act provided that when any of the alternate sections or parts of sections should be found "to have been granted, sold, reserved, occupied by homestead settlers, pre-empted, or otherwise disposed of, other lands, designated as aforesaid, shall be selected by said companies in lieu thereof, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, in alternate sections designated by odd numbers, as aforesaid, nearest *to, and not more than 10 miles beyond the limits of, said first-named alternate sections; and as soon as the said companies, or either of them, shall file in the office of the Secretary of the Interior a map of the survey of said railroad, or any portion thereof, not less than 60 continuous miles from either terminus, the Secretary of the Interior shall withdraw from sale public lands herein granted on each side of said railroad, so far as located and within the limits before specified. . . . Settlers under the provisions of the homestead act who comply with the terms and requirements of said act shall be entitled, within the limits of said grant, to patents for an amount not exceeding 80 acres of the land so reserved by the United States, anything in this act to the contrary notwithstanding."

The Oregon Central Railroad Company was designated by the Oregon legislature as the company organized under the laws of Oregon, entitled to receive the granted lands in Oregon, and the benefits and privileges of the above act of 1866.

Prior to October, 1869, that company definitely fixed on the ground and surveyed the first section of the railroad in Oregon. That section extended from Portland to Jefferson, and comprised not less than 60 continuous miles from the northern terminus of the road; and on October 25th, 1869, the company filed in the office of the Secretary of the Interior, and on January 29th, 1870, the Secretary duly accepted and approved, a map of the survey and definite location of that section.

During the year 1869 and the months of January and February, 1870, the company definitely fixed on the ground and surveyed the second section of its road, which section comprised not less than 124 continuous miles from Jefferson; and on March 26th, 1870, filed in the office of the Secretary, and on March 29th, 1870, that officer accepted and approved, a map of the survey and definite location of that section.

On the 7th of April, 1870, the Commissioner of the General Land Office, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, withdrew all the odd-numbered sections of land lying within 30 miles on each side of the railroad (as shown on the map of survey and definite location, filed with the Secretary on March 26th, 1870) from sale or [107] location, pre-emption or homestead entry; and that withdrawal remained continuously thereafter in force, except so far as, if at all, it was affected by an order of the Secretary made August 15th, 1887, revoking the order of April 7th, 1870, as to the odd-numbered sections lying within the indemnity limits of the grant made in 1866, and declaring the odd-numbered sections lying within such indemnity limits to be restored to the public domain, subject to pre-emption and homestead entry, as well as to the provisions of the above grant. The lands so withdrawn April 7th, 1870, were within the jurisdiction of the district local land office at Roseburg, and notice of such withdrawal was received at that office on April 25th, 1870.

During the years 1868 and 1869, and prior to December the 25th, 1869, the Oregon Central Railroad Company constructed and fully equipped the first 20 miles of the railroad contemplated by the act of 1866, commencing at Portland and extending along the line shown upon the map filed in the office of the Secretary of the Interior on October the 29th, 1869. And in the years 1869 and 1870, and prior to September the 1st, 1870, the above two companies fully equipped the second 20 miles of the railroad, commencing at the end of the first constructed 20 miles and extending along the line shown on the map to a point distant 40 miles from the commencement of the railroad at Portland,—a portion of the second 20 miles having been constructed by the Oregon Central Railroad Company, the remainder by the defendant.

The whole line of railroad contemplated by the act of 1866, commencing at the end of the second constructed 20 miles, was constructed by the defendant company during the years 1870, 1871, and 1872; and prior to December the 4th, 1872, the entire line from Portland to Roseburg was continuously operated for all the purposes contemplated by Congress.

Commissioners were appointed by the President to examine the railroad as constructed from Portland to Roseburg. That duty was performed, and they reported to the President, under oath, that the railroad between those points had been completed and equipped in all respects as required, and was ready for the service contemplated by [108] the act of 1866. Those reports were *duly accepted and approved by the President. The report as to the seventh, eighth, and ninth sections, including the last 78 miles of the road from Portland to Roseburg, was made on July 10th, 1878, and the next day was accepted and approved.

The remaining part of the road in Oregon, extending from Roseburg to the southern boundary of that state, was constructed, 189 U. S. U. S., Book 47.

fully equipped, and made ready by the defendant company during the years 1878 to 1889, inclusive, and all prior to the year 1900. It was duly examined by commissioners, who reported thereon, and their reports were accepted and approved.

All the lands described in the bill of complaint are distant more than 20 miles from, but lie within 30 miles on one side of, the road extending from Jefferson to Roseburg, shown on the map filed March 26th, 1870; and they were all included and embraced by the withdrawal made by the Secretary on the 7th of April, 1870.

No part or portion of the lands described in the bill of complaint are mineral lands, nor are they included by any exception or reservation from the indemnity land grant in Oregon, made by the act of 1866, except so far as, if at all, they were excepted or reserved therefrom by reason of the settlements and facts hereinafter to be referred to.

On August 16th, 1892, all the lands described in the bill were free and clear for selection by the defendant company as part and parcel of the indemnity lands granted by the act of Congress, except so far as, if at all, they were excepted or reserved by those settlements and facts.

On the 16th of August, 1892, and the 19th of October, 1892, the defendant company filed with the register and receiver of the United States land office at Roseburg its several lists selecting the lands in question as indemnity lands in lieu of lands of equal area, parts of odd-numbered sections within the primary limits of the grant made in 1866 and otherwise disposed of by the United States prior to the passage of that act. Those lists were accompanied by the fees, costs, and charges required by law, and in all respects conformed to the directions, rules, regulations, and requirements of the Secretary of the Interior and of the Commissioner *of [109] the General Land Office. They were severally approved and certified by the register and receiver, and the defendant company had not then, nor has it subsequently, selected or received lands in lieu of those therein described as the basis of selections by it made, other than the lands so selected by said lists.

In the following years the following persons, each being a duly qualified entryman under the homestead laws of the United States, settled upon the lands respectively claimed for them in this suit, to wit: 1869, Louis [Charles] Heller; 1878, J. R. Peters; 1878, John Sapp; 1882, George C. Peck; 1883, Uriah W. Wren; 1885, Baxter W. Jenkins; 1885, Charles E. Barton; 1888, Joseph A. Cox; 1889, Charles W. Seeley; 1889, John W. Carey; 1890, F. W. Huddleston; 1890, Alfred R. Young; 1890, Abraham M. Peck. Each person made his settlement with the intention of making a homestead entry of the lands, whenever that could be done under the acts of Congress. After the date of settlement each settler continuously resided and made improvements upon his land in the way of a dwelling house, barn, outhouses, fencing, clearing, and planting of trees. And on October 27th, 1892, within ninety days after the official plat of the survey of the lands was filed in the United States land office at Roseburg, each settler, in good faith, filed a formal application in the land office for a homestead entry of and for the lands upon which he settled and improved and upon which he continuously resided after the date of his first occupancy.

On the 20th of February, 1893, the Commissioner of the Land Office and the Secretary of the Interior having approved the selections made by the railroad company, a patent was issued, conveying to it all the lands in dispute. But when the company's lists were approved, neither the Commissioner nor the Secretary had any knowledge of the adverse claims of the above settlers to the lands upon which they respectively resided, and which the United States now claims for them.

[110] On the 27th day of October, 1893, the land grant made by the act of 1866 being still unadjusted, the Commissioner of the Land Office demanded of the railroad company a reconveyance of the lands covered by the patent of 1893, upon the ground *that the patent to it had been erroneously issued. The company refused to reconvey, and claims to be the owner of such lands. Hence the present suit to have that patent canceled.

The circuit court, upon final hearing, found the equities of the case to be with the United States, and a decree was entered, canceling the patent issued to the Oregon & California Railroad Company. That decree was affirmed by the circuit court of appeals.

1. Some of the questions referred to in argument as bearing upon the issues presented by the record have been determined by decisions of this court rendered since this litigation commenced.

In Hewitt v. Schultz, 180 U. S. 139, 45 L. ed. 463, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 309, which related to the grant of lands made to the Northern Pacific Railroad Company by the act of July 2d, 1864, chap. 217 (13 Stat. at L. 365), this court accepted the construction of that act as adopted and adhered to by the Land Department, and held that the Secretary of the Interior had no power, simply upon the definite location of the Northern Pacific Railroad, to withdraw from the operation of the pre-emption and homestead laws lands within the indemnity limits of the road as defined by Congress. Northern P. R. Co. v. Miller, 7 Land Dec. 100, 125; Northern P. R. Co. v. Davis, 19 Land Dec. 87, 90. In the present case, the line of the railroad, opposite to which are the lands here in dispute, was definitely located in 1870, while (with the exception of one tract, about which the railroad company makes no question) the lands in dispute were not settled upon until after that year. We have seen that, upon acceptance of the map of definite location, the Secretary of the Interior, according to the stipulated facts, made an order (which was duly received at the local land office) withdrawing all the odd-numbered sections within 30 miles on each side of the road shown on the map of survey and definite location, from sale or location, pre-emption or homestead entry. That withdrawal included the odd-numbered sections in the indemnity limits, within which the lands in dispute were situated. We hold on the authority of Hewitt v. Schultz that it was beyond the power of the Secretary to make such an order in respect of lands within the indemnity *limits [111] of the grant made by the act of 1866. The reasoning in that case, touching this proposition, applies to the case now before us. In 1887 the Secretary, as if to remove the apparent obstacle placed in the way of pre-emption and homestead settlers created by the order of 1870, made an order revoking the previous one of withdrawal so far as it related to indemnity limits, and declaring the odd-numbered sections lying within the entire indemnity limits of the grant restored to the public domain and subject to pre-emption and homestead entry, as well as to the provisions of the act of 1866. We need not discuss here the question of the power of the Secretary of the Interior to revoke an order of withdrawal once legally made and notice thereof given at the local land office. It is sufficient to say that the railroad company did not, by the order of 1870, relating to lands within the indemnity limits, acquire an interest in any particular odd-numbered sections within those limits; nor did that order prevent the bona fide occupancy by settlers of odd-numbered sections within such limits up to the time of the approval of selections made by the railroad company of lieu lands to supply any deficit in the place limits.

In Nelson v. Northern P. R. Co., decided at the present term of the court [188 U. S. 108, ante, 406, 23 Sup. Ct. Rep. 302], it was held that the act of 1864, making a land grant to the Northern Pacific Railroad Company, and the act of May 14th, 1880, chap. 89, for the relief of settlers on the public lands, recognized the right at any time prior to definite location to settle upon the unsurveyed public lands embraced by the grant of 1864, notwithstanding there was, at the time, in existence an order of withdrawal, based only upon a map of general route not issued pursuant to any express direction of Congress; provided such settlement was accompanied by residence on the land, in good faith, with the intention on the part of the settler to avail himself of the benefits of the homestead law as soon as the lands were surveyed. This decision rested mainly on the ground that Congress intended by the act of 1864 to protect the rights of bona fide settlers acquired before the railroad company had, by an accepted map of definite location, obtained a vested interest in particular odd-numbered sections granted.

*These principles are applicable to the [112] present case if, as contended by the United States, the railroad company did not acquire, and could not have acquired, an interest in specific sections of lands within the indemnity limits before their actual and approved selection, under the direction of the Secretary, prior to the date of occupancy by the respective settlers.

2. We have seen, from the stipulated facts, that it was not until 1892 that the railroad company made its selection of lands within the indemnity limits, to supply deficiencies in its place or granted limits. But this occurred after each one of the entrymen whose rights the government is now seeking to protect had made his settlement with the intention to follow it up by a bona fide entry under the homestead laws. In other words, the lands were "occupied by homestead settlers" (to use the words of the granting act of 1866) at the time they were selected by the railroad company. Now, it has long been settled that while a railroad company, after its definite location, acquires an interest in the odd-numbered sections within its place or granted limits,—which interest relates back to the date of the granting act,—the rule is otherwise as to lands within indemnity limits. As to lands of the latter class, the company acquires no interest in any specific sections until a selection is made with the approval of the Land Department; and then its right relates to the date of the selection. And nothing stands in the way of a disposition of indemnity lands, prior to selection, as Congress may choose to make. In Ryan v. Central P. R. Co., 99 U. S. 382, 25 L. ed. 305, which was a contest as to lands within the indemnity limits, this court said: "It was within the secondary or indemnity territory where that deficiency was to be supplied. The railroad company had not and could not have any claim to it until specially selected, as it was, for that purpose." And the reason given was that "when the road was located and the maps were made, the right of the company to the odd sections first named became ipso facto fixed and absolute. With respect to the 'lien lands,' as they are called, the right was only a float, and attached to no specific tracts until the selection was actually made in the manner prescribed." In St. Paul & S. C. R. Co. v. Winona & St. P. R. Co., 112 U. S. 720, 731, 28 L. ed. 872, 876, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 334, 340, [113]*the court, referring to this principle, said: "The reason of this is that, as no vested right can attach to the lands in place—the odd-numbered sections within 6 miles on each side of the road—until these sections are ascertained and identified by a legal location of the line of the road, so, in regard to the lands to be selected within a still larger limit, their identification cannot be known until the selection is made. It may be a long time after the line of the road is located before it is ascertained how many sections or parts of sections within the primary limits have been lost by sale or preemption. It may be still longer before a selection is made to supply this loss." After observing that twenty years expired in that case after the location of the road before any selection of lien lands was made, the court added: "Was there a vested right in this company, during all this time, to have, not only these lands, but all the other odd sections within the 20-mile limits on each side of the line of the road, await its pleasure? Had the settlers in that populous region no right to buy of the government because the company might choose to take them, or might, after all this delay, find out that they were necessary to make up deficiencies in other quarters? How long were such lands to be withheld from market, and withdrawn from taxation, or forbidden to cultivation?" To the same effect are the following cases: Grinnell v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 103 U. S. 739, 26 L. ed. 456; Cedar Rapids & M. River R. Co. v. Herring, 110 U. S. 27, 28 L. ed. 56, 3 Sup. Ct. Rep. 485; Kansas P. R. Co. v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co., 112 U. S. 414, 421, 28 L. ed. 794, 797, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 208; Sioux City & St. P. R. Co. v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co., 117 U. S. 406, 408, 29 L. ed. 928, 929, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 790; Barney v. Winona & St. P. R. Co., 117 U. S. 228, 232, 29 L. ed. 858, 860, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 654; Wisconsin C. R. Co. v. Price County, 133 U. S. 496, 508, 513, 33 L. ed. 687, 693, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 311; Nelson v. Northern P. R. Co., 188 U. S. 108, ante, 302, 23 Sup. Ct. Rep. 302. Having regard to the adjudged cases, it is to be taken as established that, unless otherwise expressly declared by Congress, no right of the railroad company attaches or can attach to specific lands within indemnity limits until there is a selection under the direction, or with the approval, of the Secretary.

189 U. S.

3. But it is contended that, as the selection by the company (except as to the tract which was occupied in 1869, before any *se-[114] selection by the company of lien lands) was prior to the application by the respective settlers for entry under the homestead laws, its right to the lands in question was superior to that asserted by the settlers. This view is completely met by the fact that the settler, by prior occupancy in good faith, could avail himself of the homestead acts whenever, by an official survey, the way is opened by the government for him to do so, and by the fact that, within ninety days after these lands were surveyed, he filed in the proper office his application to enter them under the homestead laws of the United States. He moved with due diligence to protect and perfect the right acquired by his occupancy of the land with the intention to avail himself of the benefit of those laws. That right was not to be affected or impaired by the fact that the lands were not surveyed at the date of occupancy. Nelson v. Northern P. R. Co., 188 U. S. 108, ante, 406, 23 Sup. Ct. Rep. 302; Ard v. Brandon, 156 U. S. 537, 543, 39 L. ed. 524, 526, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 406, 409; Tarpey v. Madsen, 178 U. S. 215, 219, 44 L. ed. 1042, 1044, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 849, 850. In the Ard Case the court said: "The law deals tenderly with one who, in good faith, goes upon the public lands with a view of making a home thereon. If he does all that the statute prescribes as the condition of acquiring rights, the law protects him in those rights, and does not make their continued existence depend alone upon the question whether or no he takes an appeal from an adverse decision of the officers charged with the duty of acting upon the application." In the Tarpey Case it was said that "the right of one who has actually occupied [public lands], with an intent to make a homestead or pre-emption entry, cannot be defeated by the mere lack of a place in which to make a record of his intent;" that if a settler was in possession before definite location, "with a view of entering it as a homestead or pre-emption claim, and was simply deprived of his ability to make his entry or declaratory statement by the lack of a local land office, he could, undoubtedly, when such office was established, have made his entry or declaratory statement in such way as to protect his rights." So, if the condition of the lands, being unsurveyed, prevents the making, by a bona fide occupant, of a proper application of record to enter them under the homestead laws, his rights will not be lost, if, after the lands [115] are surveyed, *he applied in due time to enter the lands under those laws. And such has been held to be the object and effect of the act of May 14th, 1880, chap. 89, 21 Stat. at L. 140 (U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 1392). We could not otherwise adjudge in this case without holding that the mere selection of the lands by the railroad company displaced or destroyed the rights of a bona fide settler arising from previous occupancy with the intention of making the required homestead entry whenever he was permitted to do so. We cannot so hold. We adjudge that the rights which bona fide occupancy gave to the settler under the act of 1866 are not defeated by a mere selection afterwards of the lands by the railroad company,—the settler having, after the lands were surveyed, promptly taken the necessary steps to protect his rights under the homestead laws. And in such case, the entry made under those laws relates back to the date of settlement on the lands. It was so substantially held in Nelson v. Northern P. R. Co. 188 U. S. 108, ante, 406, 23 Sup. Ct. Rep. 302.

4. It is also said that all the lands within the indemnity limits were required to supply the deficit in place limits arising from the disposition, prior to definite location, by sale and otherwise, of lands within the granted limits. But the extent to which lien lands could be required to supply such deficit in place lands could not be properly or legally determined until there was an adjustment of the grant of lands in respect of place limits. In any event, no such adjustment having taken place prior to the date of the settler's bona fide occupancy, his rights, based upon such occupancy, would not be affected by the fact, subsequently appearing, in whatever way, that all the odd-numbered sections within the indemnity limits were needed to supply deficiencies in place limits. At the time the settler went upon the land, in good faith, to make it his home and to perfect his title under the homestead laws, there was nothing of record that stood in the way of his right to occupy the lands and to remain thereon until he could perfect his title by formal entry under the homestead laws.

Other points were made in the argument of the case, but they need not be specially noticed, as what we have said requires, *in [116] dependently of those points, an affirmance of the decree of the Circuit Court and the Circuit Court of Appeals.

The decree is affirmed.

Mr. Justice Brewer and Mr. Justice McKenna took no part in the decision of this case.

OREGON & CALIFORNIA RAILROAD,
Appt.,
v.

UNITED STATES.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 116-119.)

Railroad land grants—land within indemnity limits—occupancy in advance of selection—effect of delay to make survey.

Delay upon the part of the Commissioner of the Land Office in making the survey called for with all "convenient speed" by the act of May 4, 1870, chap. 69 (16 Stat. at L. 94), granting land in aid of railroad construction, cannot defeat the rights of a settler attaching under that act in virtue of his bona fide occupancy of lands within the indemnity limits of such grant in advance of their selection to supply a deficiency in the place limits, with the intention of perfecting his title under the homestead laws as soon as the lands should be surveyed.

[No. 187.]

Argued March 4, 1903. Decided April 6, 1903.

A PPEAL from the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit to review a decree of the Circuit Court for the District of Oregon canceling a patent issued to the Oregon & California Railroad Company. Affirmed.

See same case below, 48 C. C. A. 520, 109 Fed. 514.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Maxwell Evarts argued the cause and filed a brief for appellant.

Mr. Charles W. Russell argued the cause and filed a brief for appellee.

For contentions of counsel see their briefs as reported in Oregon & C. R. Co. v. United States, ante, 726.

Mr. Justice Harlan delivered the opinion of the court:

The controlling question in this case is whether the United States, in 1893, erroneously issued to the Oregon & California Railroad Company, which succeeded to the rights of the Oregon Central Railroad Company, a patent for certain lands in Oregon.

NOTE.—As to land grants to railroads—see note to Kansas P. R. Co. v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. 28 L. ed. U. S. 794.

[117] These lands are without the place and within the indemnity *limits of the grant made by the act of Congress of May 4th, 1870, chap. 69, granting lands to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from Portland to Astoria and McMinnville, in the state of Oregon. 16 Stat. at L. 94. The provisions of this act were substantially the same as those of the act of July 25th, 1866 (14 Stat. at L. 239, chap. 242), referred to in Oregon & C. R. Co. v. United States, case No. 186, just decided [189 U. S. 103, ante, 726, 23 Sup. Ct. Rep. 615], except that the act of 1870 contains a provision not found in the act of 1866, to wit: "That the Commissioner of the General Land Office shall cause the lands along the line of the said railroad to be surveyed with all convenient speed."

The line of the proposed road was definitely fixed, and a plat thereof filed in the office of the Secretary of the Interior.

On the 16th day of February, 1872, the first 20 miles of the contemplated railroad were completed from Portland to a point near Forest Grove, in Oregon, and on the 23d of June, 1876, the road to the Yamhill river, near McMinnville, was completed, but it has never been constructed to Astoria, Oregon.

The final plat and survey of the township, in which the lands in dispute are situated, was not filed and approved until July 27th, 1893; and on that day the company's list of selections of lands, which included the lands in question, was duly approved.

Prior to the year 1893, to wit, on the 12th day of January, 1891, Joseph H. Elison, a duly qualified entryman under the laws of the United States, settled upon the lands in dispute with the intention in good faith of "homesteading the same," and since that date he has continuously resided upon, cultivated, and improved them; and within ninety days from the date of the filing of the township plat of survey he made application for "filing a homestead" covering these lands.

The selections by the company having been approved by the Land Department, a patent was issued to the Oregon & California Railroad Company on October 15th, 1895. But it was issued without any knowledge at the time on the part of the Secretary or the General Land Office of the adverse claim of Elison, arising from his occupancy of the land.

[118] For the reasons stated in the opinion just delivered in case *No. 186, we hold that, in virtue of Elison's bona fide settlement upon the lands in dispute in 1891, with the intention, whenever the way was open by a survey, to enter the lands under the homestead laws, his rights were superior to those acquired, or that could have been acquired, by the railroad company under any selection by it of indemnity lands, made after the date of such settlement. The company's selection did not displace or defeat the right which the settler acquired by his settlement, made 189 U. S.

previously in good faith, with the intention to avail himself of the benefits of the homestead laws within due time after the lands were surveyed.

The railroad company rests its claim to have a superior right to these lands on the ground, in part, of long delay by the Commissioner of the Land Office in having them surveyed, although it frequently requested the survey to be made. There is nothing of substance in this contention. The statute, it is true, required the lands to be surveyed with all "convenient speed." But the question as to the precise time the lands should be surveyed was exclusively for the Land Office to determine; and it was to be determined with reference to all the facts and circumstances connected with the surveying of the public lands under the direction of the Land Department. We cannot say from the record that the Land Office, in the matter of the surveying of the particular lands here in dispute, did not act with convenient speed. Besides, the railroad company accepted the grant of Congress subject to the possibility of delay in the surveying, as well as to the power of the Land Office to determine when the lands should be surveyed. The action or nonaction of the Land Department in such a matter cannot be controlled by the judiciary, unless, perhaps, in a case in which it appeared, beyond question, that its refusal to order the survey was merely arbitrary and without any real excuse. It may be that in such a case the Commissioner could be compelled by judicial process to discharge the duty imposed upon him by statute. But upon that point we need not express a decided opinion, for no such case is presented by the record before us. The allegation in the defendant's plea is simply that the Commissioner neglected to perform his duty in the matter of the surveying. But the *facts con-[119] stituting such alleged neglect are not stated. Besides, we may observe that since the right of the settler attached in virtue of his bona fide occupancy of these lands before the railroad company made its selection, that right could not be displaced by reason of any delay or negligence upon the part of the Commissioner to cause a survey of the lands. The act contains no provision that requires a contrary view. The court must determine the rights of the settler according to the facts as they existed at the time his occupancy in good faith began. The statute does not otherwise declare. In that view, as already suggested, the settler's right was superior to any right acquired by the company, after the date of his occupancy, in virtue of its selection of these lands to supply a deficiency in the place limits.

Upon the authority of the case just decided, the decree of the Circuit Court of Appeals must be affirmed.

And it is so ordered.

Mr. Justice Brewer and Mr. Justice McKenna took no part in the decision of this case.

MANUEL S. DE CAMBRA, Plff. in Err.,
v.
HANNAH ROGERS and Frank J. Rogers.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 119 122.)

Decisions of Land Department—conclusiveness on courts.

1. A decision of the Land Department upon questions of fact is conclusive on the courts.
2. Courts will not entertain an inquiry as to the extent of the investigation by the Secretary of the Interior and his knowledge of the points involved in his decision of a contest in the Land Department, nor as to the methods by which he reached his determination.

[No. 170.]

Argued and submitted February 24, 1903.
Decided March 16, 1903.

IN ERROR to the Supreme Court of the State of California to review a judgment of the Superior Court of Alameda County in favor of plaintiffs in an action in ejectment. Affirmed.

See same case below, 132 Cal. 502, 60 Pac. 863, 64 Pac. 894.

Statement by Mr. Justice Brewer:

[120] On April 28, 1897, Hannah Rogers and Frank J. Rogers, holders of the legal title to a tract of land in Alameda county, commenced in the superior court of that county an action in ejectment against Manuel S. De Cambra and others. The defendants answered with a general denial, and, as authorized by the practice in California, De Cambra filed a cross-complaint in equity, alleging that the plaintiffs had obtained the legal title wrongfully and held it in trust for him, and prayed a decree quieting his title to the land. A demurrer to this cross-complaint was sustained, and upon a trial of the action a judgment was rendered in favor of the plaintiffs, which judgment was affirmed by the supreme court of California (132 Cal. 502, 60 Pac. 863, 64 Pac. 894), and thereupon this writ of error was sued out.

Mr. J. C. Bates submitted the cause for plaintiff in error.

Mr. Franklin H. Mackey argued the cause and filed a brief for defendants in error.

Mr. Justice Brewer delivered the opinion of the court:

The only question presented arises on the demurrer to the cross-complaint. That cross-complaint averred that in 1867 De Cambra purchased from one Hewett Steele the premises in controversy, with other adjoining lands, all of which were inclosed with fences and well-known exterior bounddaries; that he entered into actual possession thereof, and has ever since continuously resided thereon; that in 1871 he sold an undivided half interest in the tract to Enos J. Rogers, the husband of Hannah and the father of Frank J. Rogers; that at that time the land was supposed to be a portion of a Mexican grant, and was within its exterior boundaries; that on August 10, 1878, the final official survey disclosed that there were more than 3 leagues of land within the exterior boundaries of said grant, and thereupon a part thereof, including the land in controversy, was restored by the United States to the public domain; that De Cambra and Rogers, who were brothers-in-law, agreed upon a division of the land excluded from the grant and restored to the public domain, De Cambra to take one portion, and that the tract in controversy, and Rogers the other; that thereupon they went to the local land office to file their applications for entry; that De Cambra, being unable to read or write, and understanding the English language very imperfectly, trusted to Rogers to prepare the pre-emption papers; that Rogers knowingly and fraudulently prepared the papers so as to make De Cambra an applicant for land upon which there was no dwelling house or other improvement, and only a small part of which was in his possession, and three fourths of which was thoroughly worthless, Rogers himself filing a pre-emption claim for the land which it had been agreed should be entered by De Cambra, the land which was his homestead and upon which his improvements had been made; that De Cambra did not discover this until December 29, 1883; that thereupon he made the proper application at the land office for this land; that a contest ensued, which was finally decided by the Secretary of the Interior in favor of Rogers, and the land patented to the plaintiffs, his widow and son. The cross-complaint further averred that although the decision apparently rendered by the Secretary of the Interior was signed by him, yet in fact for want of time and opportunity the Secretary had not read or heard read the evidence in the contested case, and simply signed his name to a report prepared by one of the clerks in the department.

This cross-complaint states no question of law decided in these contest proceedings in the Land Department adversely to De Cambra. Indeed, the grounds of the decision are not disclosed. There is no copy of the testimony given on the contest. It appears that De Cambra offered testimony showing his qualifications, settlement, occupation, etc., and it is stated that some evidence was given in support of the Rogers application. It is alleged that the land officers came to their conclusion "by the misconstruction of the evidence submitted to them and the misapplication of the law to the evidence, and in violation of the just and equitable rights and claims of Manuel S. De Cambra." For all that appears, the officers may have found the facts to be just the contrary to the averments in the cross-complaint; and if they misapplied any rule of law to the testimony we are not advised [122] of the rule they misapplied, or *how they misapplied it. As it appears affirmatively that, before the contest, De Cambra was informed of the nature of the wrongs he alleges were perpetrated upon him by Rogers, it may be presumed that evidence was offered by both parties upon that question, and that it was decided adversely to his contention. Under those circumstances, nothing is shown except an ordinary contest between two applicants for pre-emption, in which the land officers upon the testimony decided in favor of one and against the other. But it is well settled that the decision of the Land Department upon questions of fact is conclusive in the courts. Burfenning v. Chicago, St. P. M. & O. R. Co. 163 U. S. 321, 323, 41 L. ed. 175, 176, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1018, and cases cited; Johnson v. Drew, 171 U. S. 93, 99, 43 L. ed. 88, 90, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 800; Gardner v. Bonestell, 180 U. S. 362, 45 L. ed. 574, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 399.

NOTE—On the conclusiveness and effect of the decisions of Land Department—see notes to Hartman v. Warren, 22 C. C. A. 38; and Carson City Gold & S. Min. Co. v. North Star Min. Co., 28 C. C. A. 314.

It is hardly necessary to say that when a decision has been made by the Secretary of the Interior, courts will not entertain an inquiry as to the extent of his investigation and knowledge of the points decided, or as to the methods by which he reached his determination.

These are the only Federal questions presented, and their decision was unquestionably correct.

The judgment of the Supreme Court of California is affirmed.

EASTERN BUILDING & LOAN ASSOCIATION OF SYRACUSE, New York, Plff.
in Err.,

v.

BRIGHT WILLIAMSON.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 122-130.)

Constitutional law—full faith and credit—judicial construction—building and loan associations—contract to mature stock in specified time—ultra vires—when available as defense.

1. The decision of a state court with reference to the effect which the charter and by-laws of a foreign building and loan association and the statutes of the state of its incorporation, together with the decisions of the courts of that state thereon, have upon the absolute promise of such association to mature its shares in a specified time, can involve no denial of the full faith and credit which, by U. S. Const. art. 4, § 1, must be given by the courts of each state to the public acts, records and judicial proceedings of other states.

NOTE.—As to full faith and credit to be given to state records and judicial proceedings—see Lindley v. O'Reilly (N. J. L.) 1 L. R. A. 79, and note; Cumington v. Belchertown (Mass.) 4 L. R. A. 131, and note; Rand v. Hanson (Mass.) 12 L. R. A. 574 and note. And see notes to Wiese v. San Francisco Musical Fund Soc. (Cal.) 7 L. R. A. 578; Darby v. Mayer, 6 189 U. S.

2. An absolute promise by a building and loan association to mature its shares in a specified time is not changed to a conditional one dependent upon the success of the enterprise, by the shareholder's agreement, as expressed in the certificate of stock, to pay a specified monthly instalment on each share until it matures or is withdrawn, and the provision of the by-laws, accepted by him, that such instalments shall be paid until each share is fully paid.
3. The defense that an absolute promise, contained in a certificate of stock issued by a building and loan association incorporated under the laws of the state of New York, to mature its shares in a specified time, was ultra vires the corporation, is not available in an action on such promise by a shareholder who has in good faith fully performed his part of the contract.
4. The undertaking of a building and loan association to mature certain shares of its stock in a specified time is not affected by the fact that the holder of such shares obtained a loan from the association on the security of his shares after the by-laws of the corporation had been amended to provide that its stock should mature and be payable when the dues paid thereon, with the apportioned profits, equaled the par value thereof.

[No. 152.]

Argued January 28, 1903. Decided March 23, 1903.

IN ERROR to the Supreme Court of the State of South Carolina to review a judgment which affirmed a judgment of the Circuit Court of Darlington County in favor of plaintiff in an action to recover the face value of shares of stock in a building and loan association. Affirmed.

See same case below, 62 S. C. 390, 38 S. E. 616.

Statement by Mr. Justice Brewer:

This action was commenced on January 12, 1898, in the circuit court of Darlington county, South Carolina, by Bright Williamson against the Eastern Building & Loan Association of Syracuse, New York, to recover the face value of twenty-five shares of stock in the defendant association, less a sum theretofore borrowed by the plaintiff from the association. Judgment in his favor for the full amount claimed was rendered in the trial, affirmed by the supreme court of the state (62 S. C. 390, 38 S. E. 616), and thence brought here on this writ of error.

The case is similar to that of the same plaintiff in error v. Ebaugh, 185 U. S. 114, 46 L. ed. 830, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 566. Here, as there, the stock certificates contained an absolute promise to pay "the sum of one hundred dollars for each of said shares at the end of seventy-eight months from the date hereof." Here, as there, circulars were shown to the plaintiff to induce his subscription, one of which contained this statement:

L. ed. U. S. 367; and Mills v. Duryee, 3 L. ed. U. S. 411.

As to estoppel of corporation to set up plea of ultra vires—see notes to Miller v. American Mut. Acci. Ins. Co. (Tenn.) 20 L. R. A. 765; and Central Transp. Co. v. Pullman's Palace Car Co. 35 L. ed. U. S. 55.

For the investor.

This association issues three classes of certificates, designated as instalment, paid-up, and fully paid. All of which are guaranteed to mature in six and one half years.

Ample secured by first mortgages on real estate.

Paid-up stock doubles in six and one half years.

Fully paid certificates guaranteed.

Quarterly dividends, 7 per cent per annum.

For the borrower.

This association has no auction sales.

[124] *No bidding for loans.

And a definite time for repaying a loan.

Another, the following:

"Only association giving investor and borrower definite maturity contract in seventy-eight months. Only association issuing definite contracts."

The defendant pleaded that there was no absolute promise to pay at the end of seventy-eight months, but only an estimate of the time at which the stock would mature; that an absolute promise to pay at the end of seventy-eight months was inconsistent with the nature of the corporation as a mutual company, and against the provisions of its charter and by-laws, and also illegal by the laws of New York, under which the company was incorporated.

On the trial before a jury, defendant, in support of its answer, introduced the charter and by-laws of the company, the statutes of New York under which it was incorporated, certain decisions of the courts of that state, and the testimony of the assistant secretary and actuary of the defendant that the shares of stock had not, in fact, matured; also the deposition of its general attorney, who, after affirming his familiarity with the law of that state regarding building and loan associations, of which, as he said, he had made a special study, testified that, under the defendant's articles of incorporation and by-laws, and the laws and decisions of New York, the heretofore-referred-to clause in the certificate of stock "is not to be construed or held as a guaranty period of maturity, but, on the other hand, an estimated period," and that the association is not required to pay the face value of the certificates until "the amount paid by the plaintiff on his shares of stock, augmented by the earnings apportioned and credited thereto, equal the par value." Upon this testimony, the defendant asked the court to charge the jury that full faith and credit must be given to the laws of New York as construed by its courts, and that by reason thereof, "under the terms of the contract of membership, and the contract of loan, by-laws, and charter, the transaction between the plaintiff and defendant does not terminate merely upon making a fixed number of payments, [125] but only when the dues paid in by*him, with the profits apportioned to his shares, make them equal their par value of $100 per share." Other instructions of a similar nature, or looking to the same result, were also asked, but all were refused.

Mr. William Hepburn Russell argued the cause, and, with Messrs. William Beverly Winslow and D. A. Pierce, filed a brief for plaintiff in error:

Defendant in error, as a borrowing or advanced member of the Eastern Building & Loan Association, whose stock has been redeemed and the certificates pledged as collateral to the association, is, by the statute law of New York under which the association is incorporated, expressly prohibited from withdrawing the stock until its maturity.

Bedford v. Eastern Bldg. & L. Asso. 181 U. S. 227, 228-231, 237-239, 45 L. ed. 834, 835, 843, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 597; Thomp. Bldg. Assos. 2d ed. § 134.

Payment of a share until its full par value has been attained by payments made and dividends credited constitutes "maturity" and makes the share "fully paid" under the building and loan association plan.

Thomp. Bldg. Asso. 2d ed. § 4, p. 9. See also § 134; Endlich, Bldg. Asso. 2d ed. §§ 117, 118, 461, 463; 3 New International Enc. 1902, p. 584, title Bldg. & Loan Asso.; Racer v. International Bldg. & L. Asso. (Ind. App.) 63 N. E. 772; Dexter, Co-operative Bldg. & L. Assos. chap. 3, p. 17.

Mutual corporations cannot guarantee profits to stockholders.

1 Morawetz, Priv. Corp. 2d ed. §§ 436, 457; 1 Thomp. Corp. §§ 2152, 2236; 1 Cook, Corp. 4th ed. § 277; Taft v. Hartford, P. & F. R. Co. 8 R. I. 310, 5 Am. Rep. 575; Boardman v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. 84 N. Y. 173; Taylor, Priv. Corp. 5th ed. § 565; Jermain v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. 91 N. Y. 483; Burrall v. Bushwick R. Co. 75 N. Y. 211; Plimpton v. Bigelow, 93 N. Y. 592.

A corporation cannot enter into or bind itself by a contract which is expressly prohibited by its charter or by statute; and in the application of this principle it is immaterial that the contract, except for prohibition would be lawful.

Bath Gaslight Co. v. Claffy, 151 N. Y. 24, 36 L. R. A. 664, 45 N. E. 390.

A building and loan association cannot, by contract not expressly authorized by its charter and by-laws and the laws under which it is incorporated, discriminate between its members, and bind itself to pay to its members definite profits at a definite time without regard to the actual earnings of the corporation.

King v. International Bldg. Loan & Invest. Union, 170 Ill. 135, 48 N. E. 677; Bertche v. Equitable Loan & Invest. Asso. 147 Mo. 343, 48 S. W. 954; Schell v. Equitable Loan & Invest. Asso. 150 Mo. 103, 51 S. W. 406; Province v. Interstate Bldg. & L. Asso. (Tenn.) 58 S. W. 265.

The settled rule of law is that, no matter how unqualified may be the contract of an association with its members to pay them profits, it can only do so if profits have been earned.

1 Cook, Corp. 4th ed. §§ 271, 277; 1 Morawetz, Priv. Corp. 2d ed. §§ 435, 436, 444, 457; Lockhart v. Van Alstyne, 31 Mich. 76, 18 Am. Rep. 156.

The articles of association, which showed the scheme of the organization and defined the obligations of the association and the rights of members, are binding upon each member thereof. They establish the relation between the association and the stockholder, and constitute a contract between them.

Engelhardt v. Fifth Ward Permanent Dime Sav. & L. Asso. 148 N. Y. 285, 35 L. R. A. 289, 42 N. E. 710.

A subscriber for shares must at his peril, not only ascertain the contents of the subscription paper which he signs, but also the provisions of the charter of the company or its articles of association, and the general laws. Every subscription for shares must necessarily refer to these and incorporate their provisions.

1 Morawetz, Priv. Corp. 2d ed. § 96; 2 Cook, Corp. 4th ed. § 493; Taylor, Priv. Corp. 5th ed. § 512; Bedford v. Eastern Bldg. & L. Asso. 181 U. S. 227, 240, 45 L. ed. 834, 844, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 597.

The contract to pay, unless profits have been earned which will permit the payment, is absolutely void.

1 Cook, Corp. 4th ed. § 277; King v. International Bldg. Loan & Invest. Union, 170 Ill. 135, 48 N. E. 677; Bedford v. Eastern Bldg. & L. Asso. 181 U. S. 227, 45 L. ed. 834, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 597; Bennett v. Eastern Bldg. & L. Asso. 177 Pa. 233, 34 L. R. A. 595, 35 Atl. 684; Campbell v. Eastern Bldg. & L. Asso. 98 Va. 729, 37 S. E. 350; Eastern Bldg. & L. Asso. v. Snyder, 98 Va. 710, 37 S. E. 298; Miller v. Eastern Bldg. & L. Asso. (Tenn. Ch. App.) 53 S. W. 231; Daley v. People's Bldg., Loan & Sav. Asso. 172 Mass. 533, 52 N. E. 1090; Opinion, per Holmes, J.

The supreme court of South Carolina was required to give to the statutes of New York and the articles of association and by-laws of the Eastern Building & Loan Association, made in pursuance of those statutes, the same faith, credit and effect given to them by the courts of New York in construing like contracts.

Cooley, Const. L. 2d ed. § 203; Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Wiggins Ferry Co. 119 U. S. 615, 622, 623, 30 L. ed. 519, 522, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 398.

The decisions of the courts of New York establishing the meaning, construction, and effect of such laws were given in evidence and proved, and admitted as undisputed facts in the courts of South Carolina. It is upon these laws and decisions proved as facts, that this case must be decided.

O'Malley v. People's Bldg., Loan & Sav. Asso. 92 Hun, 572, 36 N. Y. Supp. 1016; Engelhardt v. Fifth Ward Permanent Dime Sav. & L. Asso. 148 N. Y. 281, 35 L. R. A. 189 U. S.

289, 42 N. E. 710; People v. Lowe, 117 N. Y. 175, 22 N. E. 1016; Concordia Sav. & Aid Asso. v. Read, 93 N. Y. 474.

The full faith and credit to which the public acts, records, and proceedings are entitled in other states is the same faith and credit to which they are entitled in the state whose acts, records, and judicial proceedings they are.

Cooley, Const. L. 2d ed. p. 203; Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Wiggins Ferry Co. 119 U. S. 615, 622, 623, 30 L. ed. 519, 522, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 398.

The "full faith and credit" to be given to the statute of a foreign jurisdiction forming a part of a contract, and properly proved as such, is to apply such statute in accordance with its terms and its settled construction in the jurisdiction of its enactment.

Fitzsimons v. Guanahani Co. 16 S. C. 195; Thornton v. Dean, 19 S. C. 583, 45 Am. Rep. 796; Pegram v. Williams, 4 Rich. L. 219; Belcher v. Orphan House, 2 McCord L. 23; M'Candlish v. Cruger, 2 Bay, 377; Touro v. Cassin, 1 Nott. & M'C. 173, 9 Am. Dec. 680.

Full faith and credit can only be given to the laws of New York by giving to them the same effect, in connection with the contract of membership, that has been given them by the courts of New York.

Glenn v. Garth, 147 U. S. 360, 37 L. ed. 203, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 350; Canada Southern R. Co. v. Gebhard, 109 U. S. 527, 537, 27 L. ed. 1020, 1024, 3 Sup. Ct. Rep. 363; Chase v. Curtis, 113 U. S. 452, 458, 28 L. ed. 1038, 1040, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 554; Whitman v. National Bank, 176 U. S. 559, 564, 565, 44 L. ed. 587, 591, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 477; Carpenter v. Strange, 141 U. S. 87, 103, 35 L. ed. 640, 646, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 960.

Whenever a court of one state is required to ascertain what effect a public act of another state has in that state, the law of such other state must be proved as a fact.

Lloyd v. Matthews, 155 U. S. 222, 227, 39 L. ed. 128, 130, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 70.

And when so proved, as in the case at bar, then, not only the validity, but the construction and effect, of the law, must be determined by the state court in accordance with the Constitution and judicial decisions of the state by whose legislature it was enacted.

Ibid.; Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Wiggins Ferry Co. 119 U. S. 615, 30 L. ed. 519, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 398.

State statutes establishing rules of property can be given full faith and credit only by giving them the same construction, interpretation, and effect which they have in the state of their enactment.

Walker v. Marks, 17 Wall. 648, 651, 21 L. ed. 744, 745; Randall v. Brigham, 7 Wall. 523, 19 L. ed. 285; Allen v. Massey, 17 Wall. 351, 21 L. ed. 542; Ohio v. Frank, 103 U. S. 697, 26 L. ed. 531; Green v. Neal, 6 Pet. 291, 299, 8 L. ed. 402, 405; Bucher v. Cheshire R. Co. 125 U. S. 582, 31 L. ed. 798, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 974; Hartford F. Ins. Co. v.

Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 175 U. S. 100, 44 L. ed. 89, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 33.

The construction of a state statute by the courts of the state of its enactment forms a part of the statute, and will be followed, no Federal question being involved, even though this court does not agree with such construction.

Forsyth v. Hammond, 166 U. S. 518, 41 L. ed. 1100, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 665; Board of Liquidation of City Debt v. Louisiana, 179 U. S. 622, 45 L. ed. 347, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 263; Jaffray v. McGehee, 107 U. S. 361, 365, 27 L. ed. 495, 2 Sup. Ct. Rep. 367; Brashear v. West, 7 Pet. 608, 8 L. ed. 801; May v. Tenney, 148 U. S. 60, 64, 37 L. ed. 368, 370, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 491; Louisiana v. Pilsbury, 105 U. S. 278, 294, 26 L. ed. 1090, 1095; South Branch Lumber Co. v. Ott, 142 U. S. 622, 628, 35 L. ed. 1136, 1138, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 318.

Where the same statute has been enacted in different states, and the courts of such states differ in their construction of it, this court will follow the different constructions in cases coming from the different states, even though the statute thus becomes a different law in one state from what it is in the other.

Union Nat. Bank v. Bank of Kansas City, 136 U. S. 223, 235, 34 L. ed. 341, 345, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1013.

So, this court will change its construction in obedience to later decisions of a state court of last resort changing the construction of a statute of such state, when no vested rights or contract obligations will be affected thereby.

Leffingwell v. Warren, 2 Black, 599, 17 L. ed. 261; Wade v. Travis County, 174 U. S. 499, 508, 43 L. ed. 1060, 1064, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 715; Bauserman v. Blunt, 147 U. S. 647, 37 L. ed. 316, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 466; Moore v. Citizens' Nat. Bank, 104 U. S. 625, 26 L. ed. 870.

So, the construction as to the powers of a corporation, placed by the highest court of a state upon a state statute chartering it, is conclusive in this court.

Smith v. Kernochen, 7 How. 198, 12 L. ed. 666.

And in like manner, the construction by the state courts of a clause regulating the liability of stockholders, in a state statute authorizing the formation of corporations, will be followed by this court.

Flash v. Conn., 109 U. S. 371, 27 L. ed. 966, 3 Sup. Ct. Rep. 263.

It is also settled that the laws which subsist at the time and place of the making of a contract and where it is to be performed enter into and form a part of it, as if they were expressly referred to or incorporated in its terms. This principle embraces alike those which affect its validity, construction, discharge, and enforcement.

Mr. Justice Swayne in Von Hoffman v. Quincy, 4 Wall. 535, 550, 18 L. ed. 403.

The decision and judgment of the supreme court of South Carolina denied to plaintiff in error "the equal protection of the laws," within the true meaning and intent of the 14th Amendment.

Alleyer v. Louisiana, 165 U. S. 578, 41 L. ed. 832, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 427; Holden v. Hardy, 169 U. S. 366, 391, 42 L. ed. 780, 790, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 383; Brannon, "The 14th Amendment," 97, 98; Barbier v. Connolly, 113 U. S. 27, 28 L. ed. 923, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 357; Blake v. McClung, 172 U. S. 239, 247, 43 L. ed. 432, 435, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 165, 176 U. S. 59, 63, 65, 68, 44 L. ed. 371, 372, 373, 374, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 307; Sully v. American Nat. Bank, 178 U. S. 289, 303, 44 L. ed. 1072, 1078, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 935; Belfast Sav. Bank v. Stowe, 34 C. C. A. 229, 63 U. S. App. 14, 92 Fed. 102.

Williamson, by reason of his contract of membership, acquired vested contract rights which cannot be impaired, and may be enforced by him under the laws of New York.

Bedford v. Eastern Bldg. & L. Asso. 181 U. S. 227, 240, 45 L. ed. 834, 844, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 597.

Therefore the association had corresponding rights as against him, and the state of South Carolina cannot, by judicial decision, discriminate in his favor, and at the same time deny validity to the laws of New York forming a part of the contract itself. This violates alike the "full faith and credit" clause of the Federal Constitution, and the "equal protection of the laws" clause of the 14th Amendment.

Sully v. American Nat. Bank, 178 U. S. 289, 303, 44 L. ed. 1072, 1078, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 935.

It is for this court to say, and it is its duty under the Constitution to determine, whether in the decision in the case at bar the supreme court of South Carolina gave to the laws of New York, and the contract made under those laws, the same effect that such laws and contracts have had in the courts of New York.

Green v. Van Buskirk, 5 Wall. 307, 311, 314, 18 L. ed. 599, 600, 601; Christmas v. Russell, 5 Wall. 290, 302, 18 L. ed. 475, 478; Mills v. Duryce, 7 Cranch, 481, 483, 484, 3 L. ed. 411, 413; Carpenter v. Strange, 141 U. S. 87, 103, 35 L. ed. 640, 646, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 960; Dupasseur v. Rocherseau, 21 Wall. 130, 138, 22 L. ed. 588, 592; Huntington v. Attrill, 146 U. S. 657, 666, 36 L. ed. 1123, 1127, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 224; Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Wiggins Ferry Co. 119 U. S. 615, 622, 624, 30 L. ed. 519, 522, 523, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 398; Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Sturm, 174 U. S. 710, 43 L. ed. 1144, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 797.

The amended articles of incorporation, under which the defendant in error became a borrowing or advanced member in April, 1895, are binding upon the defendant in error in this case, and limit and qualify the terms and conditions of the stock certificate, upon which alone he bases his right to recover.

Pepe v. City & Suburban Permanent Bldg. Soc. [1893] 2 Ch. 311, 3 Rep. 472; Davies v. Second Chatham Permanent Benefit Bldg. Soc. 61 L. T. N. S. 680; Supreme Lodge, K.

of P. v. Knight, 117 Ind. 489, 3 L. R. A. 409, 20 N. E. 479; Pain v. Société St. Jean Baptiste, 172 Mass. 319, 52 N. E. 502; Supreme Commandery K. of G. R. v. Ainsworth, 71 Ala. 445, 46 Am. Rep. 332; Smith v. Galloway [1898] 1 Q. B. 71.

Mr. H. E. Young argued the cause and filed a brief for defendant in error:

It does not raise a Federal question when the court of a state refuses to follow the law of another state.

Terry v. Davy, 46 C. C. A. 141, 107 Fed. 51; Glenn v. Garth, 147 U. S. 367, 37 L. ed. 205, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 350.

All that a nation can be justly required to do is to open its own tribunals to foreigners in the same manner and to the same extent as they are open to its own subjects, and to give them the same redress as to rights and wrongs as it deems fit to acknowledge in its own municipal code for natives and residents.

Story, Conf. L. § 556.

The law never sustains the defense of ultra vires out of regard for the corporation. It does so only when the most persuasive considerations of public policy are involved.

International Bldg. & L. Asso. v. Bratton, 24 Ind. App. 654, 56 N. E. 105; Smith v. Miami County, 6 Ind. App. 153, 33 N. E. 243; Wright v. Hughes, 119 Ind. 324, 21 N. E. 907; Whitney Arms Co. v. Barlow, 63 N. Y. 62, 20 Am. Rep. 504.

An arrangement for the repayment of loans and withdrawal of members, different from the terms prescribed therefor in the statute or charter, when wholly or partially executed, cannot, whether it be ultra vires or not, be rescinded or questioned by either party.

7 Thomp. Corp. § 8756.

Unless expressly declared retroactive laws are not such.

1 Thomp. Corp. § 1010; Knights Templars' & M. Life Indemnity Co. v. Jarman, 44 C. C. A. 93, 104 Fed. 643.

Nor can they, even if declared retroactive, disturb vested rights.

1 Thomp. Corp. §§ 1019, 8757.

Even where the charter gives the right to alter, amend, and repeal its by-laws, it cannot do this so as to impair rights vested under it.

Ibid. Citing Kent v. Quicksilver Min. Co. 78 N. Y. 159; Knights Templars' & M. Life Indemnity Co. v. Jarman, 44 C. C. A. 93, 104 Fed. 643; St. Luke's Church v. Matthews, 4 Desauss. Eq. 585, 6 Am. Dec. 619; Palmetto Lodge No. 5, I. O. O. F. v. Hubbell, 2 Strobb. L. 463, 49 Am. Dec. 604; Columbia Bldg & L. Asso. v. Bollinger, 12 Rich. Eq. 136, 78 Am. Dec. 463; 4 Am. & Eng. Enc. of Law 2d ed. p. 1019, notes; Supreme Council, A. L. of H. v. Getz, 50 C. C. A. 153, 112 Fed. 119.

The court of appeals of New York, though on different grounds, has decided exactly as the supreme court of South Carolina.

189 U. S.

Vought v. Eastern Bldg. & L. Asso. 172 N. Y. 508, 65 N. E. 496.

Mr. Justice Brewer delivered the opinion of the court:

The Federal question presented arises on the contention that the South Carolina courts did not give "full faith and credit . . . to the public acts, records, and judicial proceedings" of the state of New York, as required by § 1, art. 4, of the Constitution of the United States.

Courts of one state do not take judicial notice of the laws of another state, whether written or unwritten. They must be proved as facts. Talbot v. Seaman, 1 Cranch, 1, 38, 2 L. ed. 15, 27; Livingston v. Maryland Ins. Co. 6 Cranch, 274, 3 L. ed. 222; Emmis v. Smith, 14 How. 400, 426, 14 L. ed. 472, 484; Pierce v. Indseth, 106 U. S. 546, 551, 27 L. ed. 254, 256, 1 Sup. Ct. Rep. 418; Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Wiggins Ferry Co. 119 U. S. 615, 622, 30 L. ed. 519, 522, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 398; Lloyd v. Matthews, 155 U. S. 222, 39 L. ed. 128, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 70; Eastern Bldg. & L. Asso. v. Ebaugh, 185 U. S. 114, 121, 46 L. ed. 830, 833, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 566; Nashua Sav. Bank v. Anglo-American Land, M. & A. Co. 189 U. S. 221, post, 782, 23 Sup. Ct. Rep. 517.

The law of New York was so proved in this case, and the contention is that it was not rightly construed by the South Carolina courts; that the law of New York which entered into and formed a part of the contract sued on was not given by those courts the same force and effect that it had in New York, and that hence the rights secured by the Constitution of the United States to the plaintiff in error were denied. If it appeared that the South Carolina courts, without questioning the validity, simply construed a statute of New York, no Federal question would be presented. Glenn v. Garth, 147 U. S. 360, 37 L. ed. 203, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 350; *Lloyd v. *Matthews*, [126] 155 U. S. 222, 39 L. ed. 128, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 70; Banholzer v. New York L. Ins. Co. 178 U. S. 402, 44 L. ed. 1124, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 972; Johnson v. New York L. Ins. Co. 187 U. S. 491, ante, 273, 23 Sup. Ct. Rep. 194.

But it is contended that the construction of the New York statutes as applicable to this contract was shown by the decisions of the courts of that state and the opinion of one learned in its laws; that there was no contradictory testimony, and, therefore, it was the duty of the South Carolina courts to find as a fact that such was the true construction.

The promise to pay $100 at the end of seventy-eight months is plain and unambiguous. It is a positive promise to pay at a fixed time. The circulars presented by the company to the plaintiff as an inducement for his subscription only emphasize the certainty of the promise. So, if the inquiry were limited to the mere language of the promise and the representations which led up to it, but one decision was possible. It is said that the promise made in the certificate is expressly based upon "full compliance with the terms, conditions, and by-laws printed on the front and back of this certificate;" that one of the conditions expressed on the face of the certificate is: "The shareholder agrees to pay, or cause to be paid, a monthly instalment of 75 cents on each share named in this contract, the same to be paid on or before the last Saturday of each month until such share matures or is withdrawn;" that it contained this further stipulation: "Payable in the manner and upon the conditions set forth in said terms, conditions, and by-laws hereto attached," and that these matters thus referred to had the effect of changing the absolute promise to a conditional one. All these were received in evidence, and when so received it became a matter of judicial construction to determine whether they had such effect, and that was a question which, nothing else being shown, was for the consideration of the courts in which the litigation was pending. In like manner, after the decisions of the courts of New York were received in evidence, their meaning and scope became matters for the same consideration. While statutes and decisions of other states are facts to be proved, yet when proved their construction and meaning are for the consideration and judgment of the [127] courts in which they have been proved. Nor is the rule changed by the testimony given in the deposition of defendant's counsel, for, as he states, his opinion is based on the statutes, the articles of incorporation, and the decisions admitted in evidence, together with similar decisions of other states under like statutes, articles of incorporation, and by-laws. No witness can conclude a court by his opinion of the construction and meaning of statutes and decisions already in evidence. Laing v. Rigney, 160 U. S. 531, 40 L. ed. 525, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 366. The duty of the court to construe and decide remains the same. It must be remembered that the effort here made is to change the obligations which the defendant apparently assumed by the issue to plaintiff of its certificates of stock, and to justify such change by its articles of incorporation, the statutes of the state of New York under which it was created, and the decisions of the courts of that state. There is no suggestion of any peculiar local law in New York independent of that created by these articles and statutes and shown by its decisions, and their effect upon the terms of the contract was a matter for judicial construction by the courts of South Carolina. That the defendant so understood the matter is apparent from the instructions it asked.

The conclusion reached by the courts of South Carolina that the articles of incorporation and by-laws and the statutes of New York did not alter the apparent meaning of the contract was correct. The absolute promise was not so inconsistent with the articles of incorporation or by-laws as to be void. The by-laws at the time of making this contract contained no such provision as appears in Daley v. People's Bldg. Loan & Sav. Asso. 172 Mass. 533, 52 N. E. 1090. There the provision was that "whenever the dues paid and dividends declared shall equal the par value of the shares held by any shareholder, said shares of stock shall be canceled," and the shareholder "shall be entitled to receive . . . the par value of the shares named . . . and no more." Here "all shareholders shall pay or cause to be paid a monthly instalment of 75 cents on each share named in their certificate, until the same shall be fully paid." (Art. 14, § 14.) But in §§ 21 and 22 of the same article are these provisions for a different mode and amount of payment:

"Sec. 21. And it is hereby expressly [128] agreed between all shareholders and this association, that a payment of $100 per share, named in their certificate, that has been in force till maturity, shall be accepted as full payment of all claims on their certificate or against this association.

"Sec. 22. Paid-up and non-assessable stock may be issued and sold at the price of $50 per share, payable on date of issue. Any parties holding such paid-up stock, wanting to withdraw the same before maturity, may do so and receive 6 per cent annual interest from the date of issue of said stock."

Neither was the promise ultra vires the corporation. We are saved from the necessity of an extended discussion of these questions by a recent opinion of the court of appeals of New York in the case of Vought v. (this defendant), Eastern Bldg. & L. Asso. decided December 2, 1902, 172 N. Y. 508, 65 N. E. 496. It is true that the decision was not offered in evidence on the trial of this case in the South Carolina court. It had not then been announced. And it is also true that we do not take judicial notice of the decisions of the courts of one state in a case coming to us from the courts of another. Hanley v. Donoghue, 116 U. S. 1, 6, 29 L. ed. 535, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 242; Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Wiggins Ferry Co. 119 U. S. 615-622, 30 L. ed. 519, 522, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 398; Lloyd v. Matthews, 155 U. S. 222, 227, 39 L. ed. 128, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 70. But, nevertheless, we may properly refer to the opinion as a construction of the law, and the views therein expressed not only commend themselves to our judgment as intrinsically sound, but also, as the views of the law of New York entertained by the justices of its highest court, have a peculiar and persuasive appropriateness. Referring to the contention that the terms of the articles of incorporation were inconsistent with the absolute promise contained in this certificate, that court said:

"In other words, the defendant's contention is that those provisions were sufficient to change an absolute promise to pay into a conditional one, dependent upon the success of its enterprise. We find nothing in these provisions which would justify any such conclusion. The provision in paragraph 1, that the plaintiff should pay until the share is paid or withdrawn, is entirely consistent with the agreement for absolute payment for the shares by the defendant at the time named, as by its contract *it agreed that the [129] plaintiff's shares should mature at that time."

